THE EDITOR'S PREFACE

TO THE FOURTEENTH EDITION.

THE Fourteenth Edition of "Men and Women of the Time" makes its appearance, almost mournfully, in one of the closing years of the century, when death would seem to have been far busier than heretofore among the ranks of the great. Since our last edition more than four hundred well-known personalities have passed out of the world and out of these pages. Every week since 1891 has seen at least two celebrated men or women taken from the ranks of their contemporaries, and the last year or two have been peculiarly prolific in loss. We need only mention at random such names as those of Lord Randolph Churchill, M. Carnot, M. De Giers, Prof. von Helmholtz, Ernest Renan, Prof. Tyndall, Lord Tennyson, Mr. Pater, R. L. Stevenson, Prof. Froude, and Dr. Jowett to justify our assertion.

A new generation of notabilities is with us, and it has taxed the judgment of the present Editor to follow in his selection of new names the time-honoured traditions of a work which should be conducted upon lines of impartiality and historic proportion. The log-roller is abroad in our midst, and the voice of the faddist has been heard in the land, but the Editor of "Men and Women of the Time" must perforce turn a deaf ear to their blandishments, must confine his personal sympathies within due bounds, and record only those lives which are likely to interest a busy and rational public.

In carrying out this policy he has of course found his path beset by the usual grievous obstacles. A former editor of "Men of the Time" has confessed with something of stoical resignation that the "extremes of human conceit and human modesty" were constantly opposed to the proper performance of his task, but the present compiler is bound to confess that he has suffered far less from his correspondents' vanity than from a certain mistaken humility, which, though a praiseworthy and eminently Anglo-Saxon quality, renders a biographer's task well-nigh Sisyphean. It is no exaggeration to state that, though hundreds of courteously-worded requests for information have, as in former years, been issued to those whose biographies were desired in this work, only some fifteen per cent. received an adequate answer. Those who preferred to remain silent, or nearly so, may be divided into two classes. There are, in the first place, the indisputably eminent persons who, for various reasons, vouchsafe no reply to oft-repeated inquiries, and therefore necessarily drive the Editor to scanty, and perhaps misleading, sources for his information. And, in the second place, there are the many neophytes in the Temple of Fame who believe the Editor has the unworthy intention of puffing them, or that he has some cause or creed to serve in writing their lives, and are therefore, if not altogether silent, so guarded in all they tell him that he finds it hard to do them biographical justice.

The Editor of "Men and Women of the Time" would wish courteously to remind these timid correspondents that he has no desire to play the panegyrist or paragraphist. Indeed, he is simply seeking to record essential facts about eminent people, of whose lives and achievements the public has a legitimate desire—some would say a perfect right—to be informed.

Of the extremes of human conceit the Editor has only met with occasional, and, in some cases, genial reminders. Only a very few correspondents have sent him their lives, or the lives of their friends, without first having been invited to do so, and of these he has been glad to print one at least, which was both opportune and interesting. He is inclined to wish that more would launch out in imitation of this nameless autobiographer!

Despite, however, the above-mentioned drawbacks, the Editor has met with much cordial support, and desires to take this opportunity of thanking those numerous newspaper editors, compilers of works similar to his own, private correspondents, and personal friends, not excepting members of his own family circle, who have assisted him with their advice and active collaboration. Of these he would desire more especially to thank Mr. A. B. Chamberlain, late of the Times and Standard newspapers, for his valuable assistance in preparing lists of celebrities, in keeping the Necrology up to date, and in re-editing the text of this work from the spring of 1891 to the beginning of 1894. Nor should he forget to express his indebtedness to his collaborator Mr. L. E. Jones, of New York, who is responsible for the transatlantic biographies in the present edition.

At the beginning of 1894 it was suggested to the Editor that he should compile an alphabetical list of all the names in "Men and Women of the Time" which it was thought would prove useful as an index. But it was pointed out that such a list would take up many pages, and that the book is arranged alphabetically as it now stands. It has, however, been deemed expedient to compile a "Classified Index," which marshals, in a compendious form, all the names comprised in the present work, and is in itself a conspectus or census of different professions and forms of human activity. It has, of course, not proved easy to assign to each individual celebrity his or her proper category. "Authors" is necessarily rather a vague classification, and "Miscellaneous bears witness to the fact that many brilliantly-versatile celebrities cannot be assigned to any definite subdivision of the domain of human achievement.

It is hoped that this new feature in "Men and Women of the Time" will prove useful in a variety of ways. Another feature in this Fourteenth Edition is the "Key to Assumed Names," which has been revived in an enlarged form from the Twelfth Edition. In conclusion, it should be stated that the whole of the text, including the Necrology, has undergone a thorough and prolonged revision, and that some attempt has been made to assign to biographies their due proportions, except in those cases where abundance of information has justified amplitude of treatment.

Many celebrities have died while these pages have been passing through the press, and their names have been duly noted in the Necrology. The following, however, it has not been possible to omit from the text:—Bishop Atlay (ob. Dec. 24, 1894), Prof. Cayley (ob. Jan. 26, 1895), Prof. J. Stuart Blackie (ob. March 2, 1895), Admiral Sir G. T. Phipps Hornby (ob. March 3, 1895), Lord Aberdare (ob. Feb. 25, 1895), Waller Hugh Paton (ob. March 8, 1895), Charles Lanman (ob. March, 1895), Dr. W. Cox Bennett (ob. March 4, 1895), Hyde Clarke (ob. March 1, 1895), Frederick Douglass (ob. Feb. 20, 1895), Dr. Dale of Birmingham (ob. March 13, 1895), Cesare Cantu (ob. March 11, 1895), and the Right Hon. Sir R. W. Duff (ob. March 15, 1895).

"Thus led, my broodings leave the future and turn back on the past. Shapes rise before me in long array — the wild first-revel with the King, the rush with my brave Guardsmen, the night in the moat, the pursuit in the forest: my friends & my foes, the people who learned to love & honor me, the desperate men who tried to kill me. And, from amidst these last, comes one who alone of all of them yet moves on earth, and yet plans wickedness. Where is young Rupert of Hentzau — the boy who came so nigh to beating me? When his name comes into my head, I feel my hand grip and the blood moves quicker through my veins: and the hint of Fate seems to grow stronger and more definite, and to whisper insistently in my ears that I have yet a hand to play with young Rupert: therefore I exercise myself in arms and seek to put off the day when the vigor of youth must leave me":——

Anthony Hope.

MEN AND WOMEN OF THE TIME.

AARIFI PACHA was born at Constantinople in 1830, being the son of Shekib Pacha, a distinguished diplomatist. At the age of fifteen he was employed as a supernumerary in the offices of the Divan; and in 1847 he accompanied his father on a mission to Rome. Subsequently he went with his father to the embassy at Vienna, where he resided for two years. On his return to Constantinople he applied himself assiduously to the study of languages; and he was employed in various capacities in the ministry of Foreign Affairs. Some years later he accompanied Aali-Pacha to Vienna as First Secretary; and a year afterwards he went to discharge the same duty in Paris. His knowledge of the French language led to his appointment as First Translator in Paris to the Sublime Porte, and afterwards as First Interpreter to the Divan. The latter office he held till 1872. Subsequent to that date he occupied several important posts in Turkey, being successively Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and Surveyor of Ordnance, President of the Executive Chamber of Justice, and President of the Civil Chamber of the Court of Cassation. He next resumed his diplomatic career as Ambassador in Vienna; and in 1873 he returned to the office of First Interpreter to the Divan, and held it for about a twelvemonth. In 1874 Aarifi Pacha was nominated Minister of Public Instruction; three months later, Minister of Justice, and then, again, Ambassador in Vienna. On the establishment of the new Ottoman Constitution he was appointed President of the Senate, and soon afterwards received the portfolio of Foreign Affairs. He was accredited Ambassador of the Sublime Porte in Paris Nov. 5, 1877, in succession to Khalil Sheriff Pacha. On July 28, 1879, the Sultan issued a decree abolishing the post of Grand Vizier and appointing Aarifi Pacha Prime Minister, with Safvet Pacha as Minister of Foreign Affairs. The new ministry, however, had but a very brief tenure of office.

ABBAS PACHA, Khedive of Egypt, is the eldest son of the late Tewfik Pacha. He was born on July 14, 1874, and succeeded his father in January, 1892, when he was eighteen years of age. He had previously studied with his brother, Mehemet Ali, at the Theresianum Academy in Vienna, and was still there at the time of his father's death. He studied law and politics for which he displayed great aptitude. Prince Abbas Pacha was made Honorary K.G.C.B., by the Queen in 1892. His attitude towards Great Britain is not considered a friendly one, he having early in 1893 substituted statesmen of anti-English sympathies for those appointed by England. In July, 1893, he paid a visit of homage to the Sultan of Turkey.

ABBE, Cleveland, born in New York city, Dec. 3, 1838, is the son of George Waldo Abbe and Charlotte Colgate, both natives of the United States of America, and of purely English ancestry. The earliest American ancestry of this family was John Abbey, of Salem, Massachusetts, in 1637. Mr. Cleveland Abbe graduated in 1857 at the Free College of the city of New York; studied Astronomy under Brünnow at the University of Michigan, 1859-60, also under Gould at Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1860-64, and under Struve at Poulkova, 1865 and 1866. He took the degree of A.B. 1857, A.M. 1860, LL.D. (Michigan University) 1889, Ph.D. 1892; was Director of the Cincinnati Observatory, 1868-74, Professor of Meteorology in the Signal Service, and Assistant to the Chief Signal Officer, 1871 to 1891, and is now (1893) Senior Professor of Meteorology in the "Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture." He is a Member of the National Academy of Sciences, and of numerous other Scientific Societies in America and Europe; author of "The Weather Bulletin of the Cincinnati Observatory," 1869; "Annual Summary and Review of Progress in Meteorology," 1873 annually to 1889; "Report on the Signal Service Observations of the Total Eclipse of 1878;" "Treatise on Meteorological Apparatus and Methods," 1887; "Preparatory Studies for Deductive Methods in Storm and Weather Predictions," 1890; "The Mechanics of the Atmosphere," 1891; and numerous smaller memoirs. He was Delegate to the International Convention of 1893 in Washington on Prime Meridian and Standard Time; and to the International Conference of Meteorologists in Munich, 1891. As Meteorologist to the U.S. Scientific Expedition to the West Coast of Africa, 1889-90, he made the first extensive set of accurate observations at sea of the movements of upper and lower clouds—using a marine nephroscope devised by him for this purpose.

ABBEY, Edwin Austin, R.I., was born April 1, 1852, at Philadelphia, U.S.A.; and was a pupil of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. In 1871 he began drawing for the publications of Messrs. Harper Brothers. In 1876 he became a Member of the American Water Colour Society. In 1878 he removed to England. He has illustrated the following works:—"Selections from the Hesperides and Noble Numbers of Robert Herrick," 1882; "She Stoops to Conquer," 1887; "Old Songs," 1889; "Sketching Rambles in Holland," 1885 (in conjunction with G. H. Broughton, A.R.A.); "The Quiet Life," 1890 (in conjunction with Alfred Parsons). The following are his principal water-colour pictures:—"The Stage Office," 1876; "The Evil Eye," 1877; "The Sisters," 1881; "The Widower," 1883; "The Bible Reading," 1884; "An Old Song," 1886; "The March Past," 1887; "Visitors," 1890; "Mayday Morning," 1890, (an oil picture). He was elected Member of Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours in 1883, and received a second-class medal at the Munich International Exhibition in 1883, and a first-class medal at the Paris Exposition Universelle, 1889.

ABBOTT, The Rev. Edwin Abbott, D.D., born in London in 1838, was educated at the City of London School (1850-57), and at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow. (B.A., 7th Senior Optime and Senior in the Classical Tripos, 1861; first-class in Theological Tripos, 1862; M.A. 1864). He was Assistant Master in King Edward's School, Birmingham, from 1862 to 1864, and subsequently at Clifton College till 1865, when he was appointed Head Master of the City of London School. This school was at this time in Milk Street, Cheapside; it now possesses sumptuous new buildings on the Embankment at Blackfriars, and under the Head Master's guidance has taken a position as one of the most efficient day-schools in England. Dr. Abbott was twice Select Preacher at Cambridge; Hulsean Lecturer in that university, 1876; also Select Preacher at Oxford, 1877. The Archbishop of Canterbury conferred on him the degree of D.D. in 1872. Dr. Abbott has published the following theological works:—"Bible Lessons," 1872; "Cambridge Sermons," 1875; "Through Nature to Christ," 1877; "Oxford Sermons," 1879; the article on "Gospels" in the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica; and (in conjunction with Mr. W. G. Rushbrooke) "The Common Tradition of the Synoptic Gospels," 1884. His other works are a "Shakespearian Grammar," 1870; "English Lessons for English People" (written in conjunction with Professor J. R. Seeley), 1871; "How to Write Clearly," 1872; "Latin Prose through English Idiom," 1873; "The Good Voices, or, A Child's Guide to the Bible," and "Parables for Children," 1875; "An English Grammar," in two parts, entitled "How to Tell the Parts of Speech," and "How to Parse," 1875; an edition of Bacon's "Essays," 1876; "Bacon and Essex," 1877; a "First Latin Book," entitled "Via Latina," 1880; "Hints on Home Teaching," 1883; "Francis Bacon, an Account of His Life and Work," 1885; and a "First Latin Translation Book," entitled "The Latin Gate," 1889. Other works published anonymously, but subsequently acknowledged by Dr. Abbott, are "Philochristus," 1878; "Onesimus," 1882; "Flatland, or, A Romance of Many Dimensions," 1884; and "The Kernel and the Husk," 1886. Dr. Abbott resigned the Head-Mastership of the City of London School in 1889, and received a pension from the Corporation in 1890; since which he has published "Philomythus," 1891; "The Anglican Career of Cardinal Newman," 1892; and a "First Latin Construing Book," entitled "Dux Latinus," 1893.

ABBOTT, Lyman, D.D., son of the late Jacob Abbott, was born at Roxbury, Mass., Dec. 18, 1835. He graduated at the University of New York in 1853; studied law, and was admitted to the Bar in 1856. After practising that profession for a short time he abandoned it for the study of theology, and was ordained a Congregational minister in 1860. He was pastor of various churches until 1865, when he was appointed secretary of the American Union (Freedmen's) Commission, a position retained by him until 1868. For a portion of this time he was also pastor of the New England Church in New York, but he resigned in 1869, to devote himself to literature and journalism. He had charge of the "Literary Record in Harper's Magazine for several years, at the same time conducting the Illustrated Christian Weekly. Subsequently he was associated with Mr. Beecher in editing the Christian Union, of which he later became (and still is) the senior editor. On Mr. Beecher's death he was invited to fill temporarily the pulpit of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, and in 1889 was settled permanently over that church. In connection with his brothers Austin and Benjamin, he wrote two novels, "Cone-cut Corners," 1855, and "Matthew Caraby," 1858, which were published under the pseudonym of "Benauly," formed from the initial syllables of the authors' names. He is the author also of "Jesus of Nazareth, His Life and Teachings," 1869; "Old Testament Shadows of New Testament Truths," 1870; "A Dictionary of Bible Knowledge," 1872; "A Layman's Story," 1872; "Illustrated Commentary on the New Testament," 4 vols., 1875-1887; "Life of Henry Ward Beecher," 1883; "For Family Worship," 1883; "In Aid of Faith," 1886; and "Signs of Promise," 1889; in addition to which he has published a number of pamphlets, among them "The Results of Emancipation in the United States," 1867; and has also edited two volumes of sermons of Mr. Beecher, and a selection from Mr. Beecher's writings entitled "Morning and Evening Exercises." The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by the University of the City of New York in 1876 and by Harvard University in 1890.

ABD-UL-HAMID II., Sultan of Turkey, was born Sept. 22, 1842, being a younger son and the fourth child of Abd-ul-Medjid, the Sultan, who died in 1861. On August 31, 1876, he succeeded his brother, Mourad V., who was deposed, on proof of his insanity, after a reign of three months. Abd-ul-Hamid was solemnly girt with the sword of Othman, in the Eyoub Mosque, Constantinople, on Sept. 7. He is a Turk and a Mussulman of the old school, and though without allies, he fought Russia rather than submit to any conditions which should bring about a disintegration of the Ottoman Empire. On April 21, 1877, Russia declared war against the Porte, and in February, 1878, after the fall of Plevna and the passage of the Balkans, the Turks were compelled to sue for peace. Since the Treaty of Berlin, in 1878, the Sultan has shown no great anxiety to carry out the reforms, either in Europe or in Asia, which were therein stipulated, though in regard to Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia he has been fairly loyal to that Treaty. He was often praised by Lord Beaconsfield for his courage and ability; but of late years he has been given over to the fear of assassination, and his distrust of his ministers is proverbial. He has been at various times under English, German, and Russian influence; the last seems to be now prevailing. The Sultan has never ceased to protest against the proceedings of England in Egypt, and is believed to have secretly stimulated the rebellion of Arabi.

ABDULRAHMAN or ABDURRAHMAN KHAN, Ameer of Afghanistan, is a Barakzai, and was born about 1830. He is the eldest son of Afzul Khan, and nephew of the late Ameer Shere Ali. During the civil war in 1864, Abdurrahman played a leading part on the side of his father against his uncle, and gained several battles. The great victories of Shaikhabad and Khelat-i-Ghilzai were mainly due to his ability. He was intrusted with the Governorship of Balkh, where he made himself popular by his moderation, and by marrying the daughter of the chief of Badakshan. In 1868 he was unable, however, to offer a successful resistance to his cousin, Yakoub Khan, son of Shere Ali, who defeated him at Bajgah, near Bamain, and also finally at Tinah Khan. Abdurrahman then fled from the country, ultimately reaching Russian territory. General Kaufmann permitted him to reside at Samarcand, and allowed him a pension of twenty-five thousand roubles a year. He remained in Turkestan until 1879, when he slowly made his way through Balkh to the Cabul frontier, and in July of the following year he was formally chosen by the leading men of Cabul, and acknowledged by the British Indian Government as Ameer of Afghanistan. It has been pointed out by an eminent orientalist, "that he not only occupies the throne by right of heredity and national election, but that he is also a religious Sunni ruler, who reigns over a 'God-given' country by the consensus fidelium." He has still further strengthened this strong position by the firmness and vigour of his administration. From the British Government he receives a regular subsidy of £160,000 a year, with large gifts of artillery, rifles, and ammunition to improve his military force. On Dec. 26, 1888, he was shot at by a Sepoy, at Mazar-i-Sherif, but without injury. In September, 1893, the Ameer cordially received a British mission headed by Sir Mortimer Durand. His sympathies are British rather than Russian, and in letters written both before and after the Durand mission, to his friend Dr. Leitner, and published by the latter, he has expressed warm friendship for England. He suffered from a serious illness in the autumn of 1894, which caused considerable anxiety in England and India.

ABDY, John Thomas, LL.D., son of Lieut.-Colonel James Nicholas Abdy, was born July 5, 1822, and educated at the Proprietary School, Kensington, whence he proceeded to Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated as Senior in the Civil Law Tripos in 1844. In 1847 he took the degree of LL.B., and was created LL.D. in 1852. In 1850 he was elected a fellow of his college, and in January of that year was called to the bar by the Inner Temple. For a short time he went the Home circuit, but subsequently chose the Norfolk circuit. In 1854 he was appointed Regius Professor of the Civil Law in the University of Cambridge, and he held that office till the close of the year 1873. He is Lecturer on Law at Gresham College, London. In 1870 he was appointed Recorder of Bedford, and in the following year was promoted to be County Court Judge of Circuit No. 38. Judge Abdy has published "An Historical Sketch of Civil Procedure among the Romans," 1857; and an edition of "Kent's Commentary on International Law," 1866. In collaboration with Mr. Bryan Walker, M.A., he edited, translated, and annotated "The Commentaries of Gaius," 1870, and the "Institutes" of Justinian. He has retired from his judgeship.

A'BECKETT, Arthur William, youngest surviving son of the late Gilbert Abbott à Beckett, the well-known metropolitan police magistrate and man of letters (the descendant of an ancient Wiltshire family settled in West Lavington for centuries), by his wife Mary Anne, daughter of the late Joseph Glossop, Esq., of the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, was born at Portland House, Hammersmith, Oct. 25, 1844, and educated at Kensington and Felstead Schools. He entered the War Office, but left the Civil Service after three years' experience of it to become, at the age of 20, editor of the Glowworm, a London evening paper. During ten years he edited with much success several comic periodicals and monthly magazines. In 1870-71 he was special correspondent to the Standard and Globe during the Franco-German War. For the next two years he was private secretary to the Duke of Norfolk. Since 1874 he has been on the staff of Punch, to which periodical he has contributed, amongst other series, "Papers from Pump-handle Court, by A. Briefless, Junior;" published in a separate volume in 1889. In 1891 he accepted the editorship of the Sunday Times, an appointment he still holds. After serving for two years as Vice-President of the Newspaper Society, he was elected President for 1893-94 in succession to Sir Algernon Borthwick, Sir Charles Cameron, and Sir Edward Lawson. He is also a Captain (retired) of the 4th Battalion (Militia) of the Cheshire Regiment. Mr. à Beckett is author of several novels, and of two three-act comedies, "L.S.D." and "About Town;" a domestic drama in one act, "On Strike;" "Faded Flowers;" and "Long Ago." He has also dramatised (in conjunction with the late Mr. J. Palgrave Simpson) his novel "Fallen among Thieves," under the title of "From Father to Son." In 1887 he edited and in some parts rewrote his father's "Comic Blackstone," originally published in 1845, bringing it up to date. Having, in 1881, been called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of Gray's Inn, in 1887 he was appointed Master of the Revels of that Society by H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, Treasurer, and the other Masters of the Bench, and in that office edited and produced "The Maske of Flowers" in the Hall of Gray's Inn, in honour of Her Majesty's Jubilee. The performance was repeated in 1891 at the Inner Temple, when Mr. à Beckett had the unique honour of being licensed by the Lord Chamberlain (the Earl of Lathom) "sole and responsible manager of the Inner Temple Hall Theatre" for the purpose. Mr. à Beckett married in 1876 Susannah Frances, daughter of the late Forbes Winslow, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.P., D.C.L. (Oxon), and granddaughter of the late Capt. Thomas Winslow, of the 47th Regiment, by whom he has had four sons, two of whom survive.

ABEL, Carl, Dr. Ph., M.S.G.L., Professor under the Prussian Government Department of Public Instruction, the son of a Berlin banker, was born at Berlin, Nov. 25, 1837; studied Philology, National Psychology and History at the Universities of Berlin, Munich and Tübingen; travelled and stayed for the purposes of linguistic research in England, France, Switzerland, Italy, Russia, and America. He has devoted himself chiefly to the comparative study of significations and the more exact branches of national psychology dependent upon the appreciation of meanings; showed linguistic concepts to be distinctly national and their comparison the truest means of gauging the intellect and feelings of a race; examined the historical stages of significative development by an inquiry into sundry linguistic concepts of the English, French, German, Latin, Russian, Polish, Egyptian and Hebrew idioms; analysed the prehistoric origin of meanings through a combination of Indo-Germanic and Egyptian etymology; disclosed in the course of these labours an identity of roots, stems and primary phonetic and conceptional laws in the two families of speech; proved these common primary laws, while they did not interfere with the separate laws of later times, to reveal a much more ancient and more perspicuous period of etymology, which unfolds the prehistoric growth and history of reason; demonstrated the primitive variability of sound and sense, the inversion of both and the multiplicity of etymological connections and transitions resulting therefrom; extended his investigations to Semitic affinities; sifted, on the basis of facts established, the origin of language, the growth of signification and the theory of synonyms. Professor Carl Abel has acted as Ilchester Lecturer on Comparative Slavonic and Latin Lexicography at Oxford University; lectured on various etymological and semasiological topics at the Royal Asiatic Society, the Royal Literary Society, the Berlin Philological, Philosophical and Anthropological Society; taught, as Ordinary Docent, Philosophical and Comparative linguistics as well as English, French, German and Latin Synonymy in the Berlin Humboldt Academy of Science; was linguistic assistant to the German Foreign Office and the Berlin Law Courts; served as Berlin Correspondent to the Times and Standard; was a contributor to various English and German philological and general periodicals. Professor Carl Abel reads all European and several Oriental languages. The following is a list of his principal writings: "Linguistic Essays," London, 1880 (history and theory of signification, synonymy, countersense, origin of language, Latin order of words); "Sprachwissenschaftliche Abhandlungen," Leipzig, 1885 (an amplified German edition of the foregoing); "Slavic and Latin," Ilchester lectures on Comparative Lexicography delivered at the University of Oxford, London, 1881; "Gross- und Klein-Russisch. Aus Ilchester Vorlesungen übersetzt von R. Dielitz," Leipzig, 1882 (German translation of the foregoing); "Koptische Untersuchungen," Berlin, 1878, 2 volumes (grammatical and semasiological); "Einleitung in ein ägyptisch - indoeuropäisch - semitisches Wurzelwörterbuch," Leipzig, 1886, (Egyptian, phonetic and conceptual change, with specimen of application to the two other families of speech); "Wechselbezuchungen der ägyptischen, indoeuropäischen und semitischen Etymologie," Theil 1, Leipzig, 1889 (Comparative Egyptian and Indo-European analysis of the root "ker," crooked, with generic conclusions); "Ägyptisch-Indoeuropäische Sprachverwandtschaft," Leipzig, 1890 (concise summary of the foregoing, with amplified general conclusions); "Ägyptisch und Indogermanisch Vorlesung vor den Sprachwissenschaftlichen Sectionen des Frankfurter Freien Deutschen Hochstifts," Zweite Auflage, Frankfort, 1890 (introductory and defensive); "Zur Geschichte der Hieroglyphenschrift. Nach dem Holländischen des Dr. W. Pleyte," Leipzig, 1890; "L'Affinité étymologique des langues égyptiennes et indo-européennes, Mémoire destiné au Congrès International des Orientalistes," Lisbonne, 1892; "Letters on International Relations contributed to the Times," London, 1871, 2 volumes; and "Russland und die Lage," Leipzig, 1888 (linguistic and national psychology applied to history).

ABEL, Sir Frederick Augustus, C. B., D.C.L., F.R.S., was born in London, in 1827, and is known principally in connection with chemistry and explosives. His published works are: — "The Modern History of Gunpowder," 1866; "Gun Cotton," 1866; "On Explosive Agents," 1872; "Researches in Explosives," 1875; and "Electricity Applied to Explosive Purposes," 1884. He is also joint-author with Colonel Bloxam of a "Handbook of Chemistry." Sir Frederick Abel has been President of the Institute of Chemistry, the Society of Chemical Industry, and the Society of Telegraph Engineers and Electricians. He was appointed Associate Member of the Ordnance Committee in 1867; and is Chemist to the War Department and likewise Chemical Referee to the Government. In 1883 he was one of the Royal Commissioners on Accidents in Mines. He has been Organising Secretary of the Imperial Institute from 1887, and is at present also its Director. He was President of the British Association at the Leeds meeting, 1890. He was created C.B. in 1877, and Hon. D.C.L., Oxford, in 1883, and was knighted in the same year.

ABERDARE (Lord), The Right Hon. Henry Austin Bruce Pryce, is the second son of the late Mr. John Bruce Pryce, of Duffryn St. Nicholas, Glamorganshire, who assumed the name of Bruce in lieu of his patronymic Knight, in 1805, and the name of Pryce in 1837. He was born at Duffryn, Aberdare, on April 16, 1815. At the age of six years he was taken by his family to France, where he remained till 1827. Returning to England in that year, he began his regular studies at the Swansea Grammar School, and continued at that establishment till 1832, when he was removed to London, where he read for two years in the chambers of his uncle, the late Lord Justice Knight Bruce. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1837, but after practising for about six years, he withdrew in 1843 from the working ranks of the profession. He was Police-Magistrate of Merthyr-Tydvil and Aberdare, Glamorganshire, from 1847 till 1852, when he entered the House of Commons as Member for Merthyr-Tydvil. That borough he represented in the Liberal interest till the general election of December, 1868, when he lost his seat; but in the following month he was returned for Renfrewshire. Mr. Bruce was Under Secretary of State for the Home Department from Nov. 1862, to April, 1864; and Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education from the latter date to July, 1866. He was also in 1864 appointed a Charity Commissioner for England and Wales, and sworn a member of the Privy Council. From Nov. 1865, to Aug. 1866, he held the post of second Church Estates Commissioner. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet, in Dec. 1868, he took office as Secretary of State for the Home Department, and the following year he was appointed an Ecclesiastical Commissioner. In Aug. 1873, he was raised to the peerage by the title of Lord Aberdare, in order to enable him to hold the high post of Lord President of the Council, in the place of Lord Ripon, resigned. However, he was destined to retain that exalted position only a very short time, as he of course went out of office on the defeat of the Liberal party in Feb. 1874. He presided over the meeting of the Social Science Association held at Brighton in 1875, and has also been President of the Geographical Society. Lord Aberdare edited the "Life of General Sir Wm. Napier, K.C.B., author of 'History of the Peninsular War,'" 2 vols., 1864; and has published "National Education: an Address delivered to the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science," 1866; and his "Speech on the Second Reading of the Education of the Poor Bill," 1867. He is Governor of the Royal Niger Company, Chartered and Limited. He has been twice married: firstly, in 1846, to Annabella, daughter of Mr Richard Beadon (she died in 1852); and, secondly, in 1854, to Norah, daughter of the late Lieutenant-General Sir William P. Napier, K.C.B. His son and heir is Mr. Henry Campbell-Bruce, who was born in 1851.

ABERDEEN, the Right Hon. John Campbell Hamilton Gordon, Seventh Earl of, born August 3, 1847, is the grandson of the Earl of Aberdeen who was Prime Minister in 1854. He was educated at the College Hall, in connection with the University of St. Andrews, and at University College, Oxford, where he graduated M.A. in 1871. He succeeded to the title on the death of his brother, Jan. 27, 1870. He entered the House of Lords as a Conservative, but in the session of 1876 he disagreed with some of the principal measures of his party, and in 1878, when the Earls of Derby and Carnarvon resigned their offices, Lord Aberdeen heartily supported the views of these statesmen. In the debate on the Afghan war he voted against the government of Lord Beaconsfield. In 1875 he was a member and subsequently Chairman of a Royal Commission to enquire into the subject of Railway Accidents. In 1877–78 he was a member of the Committee of the House of Lords on Intemperance. In 1880, having by that time become a recognised member of the Liberal Party, he was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Aberdeenshire, and High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1881 and four succeeding years. In 1885 he was Chairman of the Royal Commission on Loss of Life at Sea. In 1886 he was appointed by Mr. Gladstone Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, with the mission of carrying out the Home Rule policy of the Government. In this capacity he was immensely popular in Ireland, and the scene in Dublin on the occasion of the "leave-taking" after the fall of the Gladstone Cabinet, is said to have been such as had never been witnessed there before, at least not since the departure of Lord Fitzwilliam in 1795. Subsequently Lord and Lady Aberdeen made a trip round the world, visiting India and the principal British Colonies. In May, 1893, Lord Aberdeen was appointed Governor-General of Canada. Lord Aberdeen has been largely connected with various religious and philanthropic associations, and is President of not a few such societies. He was married in 1877 to Isabel Maria, second daughter of the first Lord Tweedmouth, and has four children. Lady Aberdeen is well known for the interest she takes in all movements affecting the welfare of women and of the Irish peasantry.

ABERDEEN AND ORKNEY, Bishop of. See DOUGLAS, the HON. and RT. REV. ARTHUR GASCOIGNE.

ABNEY, Captain William de Wiveleslie, F.R.S., was born at Derby in 1843, and educated at Rossall, and privately, and at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. He was appointed lieutenant in the Royal Engineers in 1861, and captain in 1873. He was formerly Instructor in Chemistry to the Royal Engineers, Chatham, and is now Inspector for Science in the Science and Art Department. He was one of the scientific observers of the transit of Venus in 1874. His works are:—"Instruction in Photography;" "Emulsion Photography;" and "Thebes and its Five Greater Temples." He is the author also of many papers in the Philosophical Transactions, and the Proceedings of the Royal Society and the Philosophical Magazine. He obtained the Rumford Medal of the Royal Society in 1883, for his researches in photography and spectrum analysis.

ACLAND, The Right Hon. Arthur Herbert Dyke, M.P., Vice-President of the Council of Education, is the third son of the Right Hon. Sir Thomas Dyke Acland, Bart., and was born in 1847. He was educated at Rugby and Christ Church, Oxford, matriculating at the University in May, 1866, and taking his B.A. degree in 1870 and his M.A. in 1873. He was ordained about this time, but afterwards retired under the Clerical Disabilities Relief Act of 1870. At Oxford he was for long a prominent don, having been appointed successively Hon. Fellow and Senior Bursar of Balliol and Steward of Christ Church. His interest in economic questions and politics was always keen, and, when at Christ Church, he gathered round him a group of similarly-minded dons and undergraduates, who were known as "The Inner Circle." From 1875 to 1877 he was Principal of the Oxford Military School at Cowley. In 1885 he entered Parliament as Liberal member for the Rotherham Division of Yorkshire, and has, since 1886, continued to represent that constituency as a Gladstonian. He has been very prominent, in Parliament and out of it, in promoting the cause of Intermediate and Technical Education, and in August, 1892, was appointed Vice-President of the Council of Education. He is author of a "Handbook Political History of England" and of "Workingmen Co-operators."

ACLAND, Sir Henry Wentworth, Bart., K.C.B., F.R.S., Regius Professor of Medicine in the University of Oxford, Hon. D.C.L. of Cambridge, Edinburgh, Durham, and Hon. M.D. Dublin, C.R. Empire of Brazil, Member of various Medical and Scientific Societies in Athens, Christiania, and the United States, is the fourth son of the late Sir Thomas Dyke Acland, Bart. He was born in 1815, and educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford, and was elected, in 1841, to a fellowship at All Souls. He took the degree of M.D. at Oxford in 1848, having been appointed Lee's Reader in Anatomy in 1845. In that capacity, with several able Assistants, especially Professors Beale, Victor Carus, Melville, and Mr. Charles Robertson, he made the extensive Christ Church Physiological Series, on the plan of John Hunter, now in the Oxford University Museum—an institution to the foundation of which Dr. Acland's labours contributed not a little, his aim being to lay the foundation, on the widest basis, of a complete study of the Kosmos in the old classical university. He published, in 1859, with Mr. Ruskin, a short account of the aims of the Museum in "The Oxford Museum," republished in 1894, with additions by Mr. Ruskin and himself. He became Regius Professor of Medicine in 1858, and Radcliffe Librarian, and is Curator of the Oxford University Galleries and of the Bodleian Library. He was appointed a member of Mr. Gathorne Hardy's Cubic Space Commission in 1866, and of the Royal Sanitary Commission from 1869 to 1872. He represented the University of Oxford on the Medical Council from 1858 to 1875; has been President of the British Medical Association, of the Physiological section of the British Association and of the Public Health section of the Social Science Association. He published a treatise on "The Plains of Troy" in 1839, with a large careful drawing made on the spot in 1838. He has written several works on medical, scientific and educational subjects, including an important sanitary work under the title of "Memoir on the Visitation of Cholera in Oxford in 1854," and another called "Village Health," in 1884. He accompanied the Prince of Wales to America in 1860, and on his return was appointed honorary physician to his Royal Highness. Sir Henry Acland was also Physician to H.R.H. Prince Leopold during his Oxford career. He was President of the General Medical Council from 1874 to 1887, and was made K.C.B. in 1884.

ACLAND, The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Dyke, Bart., P.C., M.A., D.C.L., is the eldest son of the late Sir Thomas Dyke Acland, tenth Baronet, and was born at Killerton, Devon, May 25, 1809. He was educated at Harrow and at Christ Church, Oxford, where under the tutorship of Thomas Vowler Short, afterwards Bishop of St. Asaph, and Augustus Saunders, afterwards Dean of Peterborough, he gained a double 1st class. At Christ Church his principal friends were Mr. Gladstone, Sir Francis Doyle, the late Lord Blachford, Professor Austice, and the late Lord Elgin, and he also enjoyed the friendship of Frederick Denison Maurice, then at Exeter College. In 1837, while reading Law, he was invited to stand as a Conservative for West Somerset, and on being elected retained the seat for ten years; in these first years he was chiefly occupied in questions connected with the Church of England and Education, particularly in carrying out the plan of Diocesan Training Colleges for Teachers, originated by the late Gilbert Mathison. After the General Election of 1841, when Sir Robert Peel began his reform of Tariffs, Sir Thomas became much interested in the question of Free Trade and Protection; he steadily refused to join the Protectionist Organisation, and when the crisis of 1846 arrived, had no hesitation in supporting the Repeal of the Corn Laws, resigning his seat for West Somerset at the dissolution, 1847. He then applied himself diligently to the study of Agriculture, under Philip Pusey's advice, promoting with the help of Lord Portman and Sir W. Miles the extension of the Bath and West of England Society, the Journal of which he personally conducted for seven years, retaining his interest in general education, and being largely instrumental with Bishop Temple in establishing the system of Local Examinations. In 1859 he was invited by the Moderate Liberals of Birmingham to stand against Mr. Bright, but his candidature was unsuccessful. In the same year he began to take an active part in the Volunteer movement, helping to establish five corps of Mounted Rifles in Devonshire. He served on the Schools Inquiry Commission, 1864 to 1867. In 1865 he entered Parliament for the second time as a decided Liberal and a follower of Mr. Gladstone. He continued to represent North Devon until 1885, when he was returned for West Somerset. He was made Privy Councillor in 1883. In 1886 he again stood as a Gladstonian Liberal, but was defeated by Mr. Charles Elton, Q.C. (Conservative). Sir Thomas has two sons, C. T. Dyke Acland, late Liberal member for North-East Cornwall, who was Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade in 1885, and Second Church Estate Commissioner; and The Right Hon. Arthur H. Dyke Acland.

ACTON (Lord), The Right Hon. John Emerich Edward Dalberg Acton, D.C.L., son of Sir Ferdinand Richard Edward Acton, Bart., of Aldenham, Shropshire, by the only daughter of the Duke of Dalberg (afterwards wife of the second Lord Granville), was born at Naples, in 1834, and when about three years of age succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his father. For a few years he was a student in the Catholic College of St. Mary's Oscott, at the time when Dr. (afterwards Cardinal) Wiseman was at the head of that institution; but his education was mainly due to the renowned ecclesiastical historian, Dr. Döllinger, of Munich, with whom he lived for a considerable time. Sir John Acton represented Carlow in the House of Commons from 1859 to 1865. In the latter year he stood as a candidate for the borough of Bridgnorth, when he announced in a speech delivered to the electors, that he represented, not the body, but the spirit, of the Roman Catholic Church. He was successful at the poll by a majority of one, but, on a scrutiny, was unseated. In 1869, on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, he was created a peer of the United Kingdom by the title of Baron Acton of Aldenham. In the same year he repaired to Rome, on the assembling of the Œcumenical Council, and while there rendered himself conspicuous by his hostility to the definition of the doctrine of Papal Infallibility, and by the activity and secrecy with which he rallied, combined, and urged on those who appeared to be favourable to the views entertained by Dr. Döllinger. It is believed that he was in relation with the Allgemeine Zeitung, and that much of the news published by that journal on the subject of the Council was communicated by his lordship. Lord Acton may be regarded as the leader of the "Liberal Roman Catholics," who are more or less out of accord with the traditions of the Holy See. He was the editor of the Home and Foreign Review, a trimestral periodical, commenced in 1862, and carried on till 1864, when it ceased to appear, having been condemned by the English Roman Catholic hierarchy. At a later date he edited the Chronicle, a weekly newspaper, which for want of adequate support had but a brief existence; and still more recently he conducted the North British Review, formerly an organ of the Congregationalists, which expired under his management. His lordship also published in September, 1870, "A Letter to a German Bishop present at the Vatican Council" (Sendschreiben an einen Deutschen Bischof des Vaticanischen Concils, Nördingen, September, 1870). This elicited from Bishop Ketteler, of Mayence, a spirited reply, which has been translated into English. His lordship zealously advocated the cause of Dr. Döllinger, his former preceptor, and of the "Old Roman Catholic" party; and, consequently, upon the occasion of the Jubilee of the University of Munich, in August, 1872, the Philosophical Faculty conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor. In 1874 he rendered himself conspicuous by the prominent part he took in the controversy which was raised by the publication of Mr. Gladstone's pamphlet on the Vatican Decrees. His lordship, in a series of letters to the Times, brought grave charges against several of the Popes, although he said that there was nothing in life which he valued more than communion with the Roman Catholic Church. Lord Acton is the author of the article on "Wolsey and the Divorce of Henry VIII." in the Quarterly Review for Jan. 1877. A French translation of Lord Acton's two letters on Liberty was published with a preface by M. de Laveleye, under the title of "Histoire de la Liberté dans l'Antiquité et le Christianisme," 1878. In 1887 Lord Acton was made D.C.L. at Oxford, and in 1890 was elected to an honorary fellowship at All Souls' College, Oxford—a distinction shared only by Mr. Gladstone. He was made an Hon. LL.D. of Cambridge in 1888. In 1892 Lord Acton was appointed a Lord-in-Waiting.

ADAM, Mme. Edmond, née Juliette Lamber, was born at Verberie in 1836. She first married M. La Messine, and afterwards M. Edmond Adam, deputy for the Department of the Seine; he was Préfet de Police at the time of the Franco-German war, and during the siege of Paris remained in the city; he was created a life Senator, but died in 1877. Mme. Adam was with him, and afterwards recorded her experiences in "Le Siége de Paris: Journal d'une Parisienne," published 1873. Mme. Adam has published a number of works on political and social subjects, especially the position of women; amongst her other works are "Garibaldi," 1859; "Le Mandarin," "Mon Village," 1860; "Récits d'une Paysanne," 1862; "Voyage autour du Grand-Père," 1863; "Récits du Golfe Juan," 1865; "Dans les Alpes," 1867; "Saine et Sauve," 1870; "Laide," 1878; "Païnne," 1879; "Poëtes Grecs Contemporains," 1881; "La Patrie Hongroise; Souvenirs Personnels," 3rd ed., 1884; "Le Général Skobeleff," 1886; "Jalousie de Jeune Fille," 1889. In 1879 Mme. Adam started the Nouvelle Revue, which she continues to conduct with great ability, and personally contributes the fortnightly articles on Foreign politics.

ADAMS, Charles Francis, great grandson of John Adams, the second President of the United States, born in Boston, May 27, 1835, was graduated at Harvard College in 1856, and admitted to the Bar in 1858. At the breaking-out of the War of the Rebellion in 1861 he entered the army, in which he served until June, 1865, attaining the rank of Colonel of Cavalry. At the close of the war, he was brevetted Brigadier-general. Subsequently he identified himself with questions connected with the development of the railroad system, and in 1869 was appointed one of the Board of Railroad Commissioners of Massachusetts, which position he resigned in 1879. In June, 1884, he became President of the Union Pacific Railway Company, resigning therefrom in November, 1890. He has contributed a number of articles to the North American Review, and in connection with the subject of railroads is the author of "A Chapter of Erie," 1869; "The Railroad Problem," 1875; "Railroads, their Origin and Problems," 1878, and "Notes on Railroad Accidents," 1879. He delivered at Cambridge, in 1883, the Phi Beta Kappa oration, entitled "A College Fetich." Since resigning the presidency of the Union Pacific he has devoted himself to literature and historical research, publishing the "Life of Richard Henry Dana," in 1890, "Three Episodes of Massachusetts History," in 1892, and "Massachusetts, its Historians and its History," in 1893. In addition to the above he has contributed a number of papers on historical topics to the Proceedings of the Massachusetts Historical Society, of which society he is a Vice-President. In 1882 he was elected a member of the Board of Overseers of Harvard University, and re-elected in 1888.

ADAMS, Charles Kendall, LL.D., was born at Derby, Vermont, Jan. 24, 1835. A.B. (Univ. of Michigan), 1861. He was appointed Assistant Professor of History and Latin at the University of Michigan in 1863, becoming full Professor in 1868. In 1881 he was made Non-Resident Professor of History at Cornell University, where, in July, 1885, he succeeded to the Presidency on the resignation of President White. While at the former university he re-organised the methods of instruction in history substantially in accordance with the German system, and in 1869—70 founded an historical seminary, which was very efficient in promoting the study of history and political science. He was also made Dean of the School of Political Science on its establishment at the University of Michigan. In 1890 he was elected President of the American Historical Association. In 1892 he resigned the Presidency of Cornell University and accepted the Presidency of the University of Wisconsin. He has published "Democracy and Monarchy in France," 1874; "Manual of Historical Literature," 1882, 3rd edit., 1889; "Representative British Orations," 3 vols., 1884; "Christopher Columbus: His Life and Work," 1892, and in 1892 became Editor-in-Chief of "Johnson's Universal Cyclopædia." He is also the author of a large number of pamphlets and papers on historical and educational subjects.

ADAMS, William, F.R.C.S., was born in London February 1, 1820, his father being a surgeon in Finsbury Square. He was educated at Mr. W. Simpson's, Hackney, and afterwards at King's College, London. He was appointed in 1842 Demonstrator of Morbid Anatomy at St. Thomas's Hospital; in 1851 Assistant Surgeon; and in 1857 Surgeon to the Royal Orthopœdic Hospital; in 1854 Lecturer on Surgery at the Grosvenor Place School of Medicine; in 1855 Surgeon to the Great Northern Hospital; and in 1874 Surgeon to the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic. Mr. Adams was elected vice-president of the Pathological Society of London in 1867; president of the Harveian Society of London in 1873; and president of the Medical Society of London in 1876. He is the author of "A Sketch of the Principles and Practice of Subcutaneous Surgery," 1857; "On the Reparative Process in Human Tendons after Division," 1860; "Lectures on Pathology and Treatment of Lateral Curvature of the Spine," 1865, 2nd edit., 1882; "On the Pathology and Treatment of Club-foot," 1866 (being the Jacksonian prize essay of the Royal College of Surgeons for 1864), 2nd edit., 1873; "Subcutaneous Division of the Neck of the Thigh Bone, for Bony Anchylosis of the Hip-Joint," 1871; "On the Treatment of Dupuytren's Contraction of the Fingers; and on the Obliteration of Depressed Cicatrices by Subcutaneous Operation," 1879, 2nd edit., 1890; and "On Congenital Displacement of the Hip-Joint," 1890.

ADAMS, William Davenport, author and journalist, son of the late W. H. Davenport Adams, was born in 1851, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School and Edinburgh University. He contributed to boys' magazines at an early age, and began regular journalistic work in 1870. He has been editor of five newspapers, daily and weekly, and for the past nine years has been on the editorial staff of the Globe, besides contributing much to the press at large. As a literary and dramatic critic he is well known. His chief publications include "A Dictionary of English Literature," and "English Epigrams," 1878; "The Witty and Humorous Side of the English Poets," 1880; "By-Ways in Bookland," 1888; "A Book of Burlesque," 1891; "With Poet and Player," 1891; "A Dictionary of the Drama," and several anthologies in prose and verse.

ADAMS-ACTON, John, sculptor, born Dec. 11, 1836, at Acton, Middlesex, and educated at Ealing Grove School, was admitted to the Royal Academy in 1855, where he gained the first silver medal in each school and also the gold medal for an original composition in sculpture, subject—"Eve Supplicating Forgiveness at the Feet of Adam." He was sent to Rome by the Royal Academy as travelling student. His principal works in ideal sculpture produced in Rome and in England are: "The Lady of the Lake," "The First Sacrifice" (Abel), "Il Giuocatore di Castelletto," "Pharaoh's Daughter," "Zenobia," "Cupid," "Psyche," from Morris's "Earthly Paradise." Mr. Adams-Acton has executed portrait statues or busts of Mr. Gladstone (St. George's Hall, Liverpool), Lord Brougham (Reform Club and Fishmongers' Hall), Mr. Bright (Seaforth Hall, and the National Liberal Club, the last bust for which Mr. Bright gave sittings), Mr. Cobden, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, George Cruikshank, John Gibson (Royal Academy), George Moore, Charles Dickens, Dr. Jobson, and John Prescott Knight, R.A.; also the following statues and busts for India: The Prince of Wales, Lord Napier of Magdala, and E. Powell (for Madras). The most important monuments executed by him are the Angel of the Resurrection, Mausoleum of Sir Titus Salt at Saltaire, Memorial to John and Charles Wesley in Westminster Abbey, the Waldegrave Memorial in Carlisle Cathedral, Charles Prest, Rev. John Farrar, and Sir Francis Lycett in the City Road Chapel, a bust of Mr. George Routledge, J.P., and a half-length portrait of Mr. John Landseer, A.R.A., reading a book.

ADLER, Felix, Ph.D., was born at Alzey, Germany, August 13, 1851. He went to America when young, and graduated at Columbia College (N.Y.) in 1870, and subsequently studied at Berlin and Heidelberg, where he obtained the degree of Ph.D. in 1873. He was Professor of Hebrew and Oriental Languages and Literature at Cornell University from 1874 to 1876, and since then has been at the head of the Ethical Society of New York (the first of a number of similar societies now spread over the United States and other countries), a new religious society established by him, which he addresses every Sunday and which maintains a number of charities. His principal works are "Creed and Deed," 1877, and "The Moral Instruction of Children," 1892; in addition to which he has contributed many papers to periodical literature.

ADLER, The Rev. Hermann, Ph.D., M.A., son of Dr. Nathan Marcus Adler, was born in Hanover on May 29, 1839, and in 1845 accompanied his father to London, when the latter received his call as Chief Rabbi. He studied at University College, London, and subsequently at the Universities of Prague and Leipzig. He obtained his B.A. degree at the University of London in 1859, and that of Doctor of Philosophy at Leipzig in 1861. In 1862, having completed his theological studies under his father and the famous Rapoport, Chief Rabbi of Prague, he was ordained as Rabbi by the latter. In 1863 Dr. Adler was appointed Principal of the Jews' College in London, and in the following year Chief Minister of the Bayswater Synagogue. When the health of his father, the Chief Rabbi, began to fail in 1879, he was appointed his coadjutor, with the title of Delegate Chief Rabbi. In 1881 he served as a member of the Mansion House Committee constituted for the relief of the persecuted Jews of Russia. In this capacity he attended, in conjunction with Sir Julian Goldsmid, M.P., conferences of representatives of the principal Hebrew congregations in Europe and the United States, held in Paris and Berlin. In 1885 he went to the Holy Land, and visited several of the colonies founded there by Russian refugees. In 1888 he gave evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Lords on the sweating system. After the death of his father he was elected Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the British Empire by the unanimous vote of the Delegates of the various committees, and was installed at a solemn service held at the Great Synagogue on June 23rd, 1891. Dr. Adler has aided in the establishment of many benevolent and educational institutions in his community. He was one of the founders of the Bayswater Jewish Schools, has assisted in establishing religious classes in connection with the Board Schools in the East of London, and helped to start a fund for subventioning poor ministers in the provinces. He is President of the Jews' College for the Training of Ministers and Teachers, founded by his father, and one of the Vice-Presidents of the Anglo-Jewish Association, and of numerous other institutions. He is also a member of the Jewish Historical Society of England, recently founded. Dr. Adler is one of the Vice-Presidents of the Mansion House Council for the Dwellings of the Poor, and in this capacity he has formed a local branch for Paddington. He is an active member of the Hospital Sunday Fund, a member of the Mansion House Committee to consider the best means of dealing with the distress in London caused by lack of employment, and is one of the administrators of the People's Palace. He has also written much on religious, social, and literary themes. He is the joint author of "A Jewish Reply to Dr. Colenso's Criticism on the Pentateuch," 1865. He has published "Sermons on the Passages in the Bible adduced by Christian Theologians in Support of their Faith," 1869; "The Jews in England," "The Chief Rabbis of England," "Ibn Gabirol, the Poet Philosopher," "The Purpose and Methods of Charitable Relief," "Hebrew, the Language of our Prayers," "A Pilgrimage to Zion: A Father's Barmitzvah Exhortation," "The Sabbath and the Synagogue;" Sermons in memoriam of Sir George Jessel, Master of the Rolls, Sir Moses Montefiore, and the Baroness de Rothschild; "Is Judaism a Missionary Faith?" in answer to Professor Max

Müller; "The Ideal Jewish Pastor;" "The Functions of the Jewish Pulpit;" "The Nation's Lament in Memory of the Duke of Clarence;" "The Loss of H.M.S. Victoria," &c. The Chief Rabbi has published also many lectures and articles which have appeared in various periodicals, more especially in the Nineteenth Century, in which review he conducted a vigorous polemic against Professor Goldwin Smith, and vindicated his co-religionists against the charge of "incivism." He has taken part in Symposia on the Foundation of Belief in Immortality; on Irresponsible Wealth; and delivered lectures on the Wisdom and Wit of the Talmud; Sanitation as taught by the Mosaic Law; Jewish Wit and Humour; Menasse ben Israel; Moses Mendelssohn, &c. In 1867 he married Rachel, elder daughter of the late S. Joseph, by whom he has issue one son and two daughters.

ADYE, General Sir John Miller, G.C.B., son of the late Major James P. Adye, R.A., was born on Nov. 1, 1819, at Sevenoaks, Kent, and entered the Royal Artillery at the close of the year 1836. Throughout the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny he was Adjutant-General of the Royal Artillery. He also served in the Sitana Campaign of 1863–4, for which he received a medal; and he has received, besides the Crimean, Turkish, and Indian Mutiny medals, and the 4th Class of the Medjidieh. He was created a C.B. in 1855, and a K.C.B. in 1873. In Feb., 1874, the Queen granted to Sir J. M. Adye her royal licence and authority to accept and wear the insignia of Commander of the Order of the Legion of Honour conferred upon him by the President of the French Republic as a promotion from the class of Officer of the same Order which he received for his services during the Crimean War. He was Director of Artillery from 1870 to 1875, and was appointed Governor of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich in July, 1875. He became a Lieutenant-General in the army in 1879. In 1880 he resigned the post of Governor of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich on being appointed Surveyor-General of Ordnance. The following year he became Colonel-Commandant of the Royal Artillery. He was Chief of the Staff and second in command of the expeditionary force sent to Egypt in 1882, and for his services he received the Egyptian medal and Khedive's star, the thanks of Parliament, the Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, and the 1st Class of Medjidieh. In January, 1883, he was appointed Governor of Gibraltar, in succession to Lord Napier of Magdala, from which appointment he retired in November, 1886. Sir John Adye is the author of "The Defence of Cawnpore by the Troops under the Orders of Major-General C. A. Windham in Nov., 1857," 1858; "A Review of the Crimean War to the Winter of 1854–55," 1860; "Sitana: a Mountain Campaign on the Borders of Afghanistan in 1863," 1867. He married, in 1856, Mary Cordelia, eldest daughter of the late Vice-Admiral the Hon. Sir Montagu Stopford, K.C.B.

AIKINS, the Hon. James Cox, a Canadian statesman, was born in the township of Toronto, county Peel, Ontario, March 30, 1823. He was educated at Victoria College, Cobourg, and entered public life in 1854, by representing his native county in the Canadian Assembly, which he continued to do until 1861. In the following year he was elected a member of the Legislative Council for the "Home" Division, comprising the counties of Peel and Halton. He continued to sit in the Council until it was abolished by Confederation, after which he was raised to the Senate. In December, 1869, he became a member of the Privy Council, and entered the Macdonald Government as Secretary of State, remaining in that office until the fall of the Government in 1873. In 1872 he framed and carried through Parliament the Public Lands Act of that year, and subsequently organised the Dominion Lands Bureau, a department of government entrusted with the management of the lands acquired in the North-West, chiefly from the Hudson's Bay Company, a department which is now controlled by the Canadian Minister of the Interior. On the return of the Macdonald Government to power, in 1878, Senator Aikins resumed the portfolio of Secretary of State, exchanging it two years later for the Office of Minister of Inland Revenue. In 1882 he was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Manitoba and district of Keewatin, an office which he retained until his term expired in 1888.

AINSWORTH, William Francis, Ph.D., L.R.C.S., F.S.A., F.R.G.S., was born in 1807. Having travelled abroad, he became, in 1829, editor of the Journal of Natural and Geological Science. On the breaking out of cholera in Sunderland, in 1832, he was one of the first to repair thither in order to study the new epidemic, and he published the result of his observations in a work "On Pestilential Cholera." He was successively appointed surgeon to the cholera hospitals at St. George's, Hanover Square, and at Westport, Ballinrobe, Claremorris, and Newport, in Ireland. Whilst in that country he lectured on geology in Dublin and Limerick. In 1835 he was appointed surgeon and geologist to the Euphrates Expedition, and published "Researches in Assyria, Babylonia, and Chaldæa," 1838, in which year he was also sent by the Royal Geographical Society, and the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, to the Nestorian Christians in Kurdistan. His "Travels in Asia Minor, Mesopotamia, and Armenia," 1842, and "Travels in the Track of the Ten Thousand Greeks," of which an analysis was also given in Bohn's edition of Xenophon's "Anabasis," were the result of the two journeys, extending over a period of seven years. Dr. Ainsworth has edited "Claims of the Oriental Christians," "Lares and Penates; or, Cilicia and its Governors," "The Euphrates Valley Route to India," "On an Indo-European Telegraph by the Valley of the Tigris" (since carried out by the Turkish Government), "All Round the World," "The Illustrated Universal Gazetteer," &c. Dr. Ainsworth has also published "Personal Recollections of the Euphrates Expedition," 2 vols. 8vo., and "The River Karun an Opening to Commerce," sm. 8vo. Dr. Ainsworth is a member of many foreign societies. He was one of the founders of the "West London Hospital," of which he is at present the Treasurer and one of the Trustees.

AITCHISON, George, A.R.A., architect, was born at 52, Edgware Road, London, went to Merchant Taylors' School until his sixteenth year, was then articled to his father, George Aitchison, architect, and became student of the Royal Academy in 1847, and subsequently entered University College, London, where he gained prizes for mathematics, and graduated B.A. at the London University in 1850. From 1853 to 1855 he travelled in France, Switzerland, and Italy; was elected a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1862; subsequently became a member of the Council, and in 1889 was elected Vice-President. He was for several years one of the examiners for the Voluntary Architectural examination, and is also one of the examiners for the National Art Prizes at South Kensington. Mr. Aitchison gained medals at the following Exhibitions, viz., Philadelphia, 1876; Sydney, 1879; Adelaide, 1887, and two at Melbourne, a bronze in 1881, and silver in 1888; and one at Chicago in 1893; was made an Officer of Public Instruction by the French Government in 1879, having designed the fittings and furniture for the British Art section of the Paris Exhibition, 1878. On June 2, 1881, he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy. He gave lectures on architecture at the Royal Academy in 1882, '83, '84, '85, '86 and '87. In 1885 he was elected a corresponding member of the Société Centrale des Architectes Français, in Paris; was elected Professor of Architecture at the Royal Academy in 1887; in 1888 he gave the Cantor Lectures on Decoration at the Society of Arts, and lectured on Renaissance Architecture at the South Kensington Museum in 1893. He decorated Kensington Palace for H.R.H. the Princess Louise, and the house and Arab hall for Sir Fred. Leighton, P.R.A., and did the coloured décoration of the Living Hall for the Goldsmiths' Company. He has added to, altered, and decorated houses for the Duke of Montrose, Lord Hillingdon, the Duchess of Newcastle, Lord Leconfield, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., Sir S. Waterlow, M.P., and others, and has built Founders' Hall, and the Royal Exchange Assurance Office, 29, Pall Mall, London. He is one of the contributors to the "Dictionary of National Biography."

AITCHISON, Brig.-Surgeon James Edward Tierney, M.D., C.I.E., LL.D. Edin., F.R.S., son of the late Major James Aitchison, H.E.I.C.S.; was born in 1835; M.D. Edin., 1856; F.R.C.S. Edin., 1863; M.R.C.P. Edin., 1868; F.R.S. Edin., 1882; F.R.S. London, 1883; LL.D. Edin., 1889; entered the Bengal Medical Dept., 1858; became surgeon 1870; surgeon-major 1873; and brig. surgeon 1885; retired 1888. He was British Commissioner, Laduk, 1872; served with Kuram field force at the advance on and taking of the Pewar Khotal, 1878 (medal with clasp), and as botanist to the force 1879-1880. He was secretary to the surgeon-general H.M. Forces 1883-8, and naturalist with the Afghan Delimitation Commission 1884-85; and was created C.I.E., 1883. ALBANI, Madame. See GYE, MADAME.

ALBANY (Duchess of), H.R.H. Hélène Fredrica Augusta, the daughter of the Prince and Princess of Waldeck-Pyrmont, and sister of the Queen of the Netherlands, was born on Feb. 17, 1861. She married H.R.H. the late Prince Leopold, Her Majesty's youngest son, on April 27, 1882, and became a widow by his sudden death at Cannes, on March 28, 1884. The Princess lost her mother in 1888. She has two children, one of whom was born after the Prince's death; the Princess Alice Mary Victoria Augusta Pauline, born at Windsor Castle, Feb. 25, 1883; and the Prince Leopold Charles Edward George Albert, Duke of Albany, born at Claremont, July 19, 1884. The Princess receives a pension of £6,000 a year from the British Government.

ALBERT, King of Saxony, K.G., born April 23, 1828; succeeded his father Oct. 29, 1873. He received a thorough military education, and took part in the Danish war of 1848. He fought also on the side of the Austrians in the disastrous battle of Sadowa in 1866, and likewise in the Franco-German war in the operations before Metz, and in the operations which terminated in the surrender of Napoleon at Sedan, and the siege of Paris, when he held the right bank of the Seine. On the conclusion of the war he was made Field-Marshal and Inspector-General of the German Army. He married Caroline, the daughter of Prince Gustavus Vasa of Sweden. His heir is his brother, Prince George.

ALBERT (Archduke of Austria), Frederick Rodolph, born August 3, 1817, is the son of the late Archduke Charles and the Princess Henrietta of Nassau-Weilburg. He married, in 1844, the Princess Hildegarde of Bavaria, who died April 2, 1864, leaving two daughters. At an early age he entered the army, commanded a division in Italy in 1849, took an important part in the battle of Novara, received at the end of the campaign the command of the 3rd Corps d'Armée, and was afterwards appointed Governor-General of Hungary. During a leave of absence accorded to Field-Marshal Benedek, in 1861, he was appointed to the command of the Austrian troops in Lombardy and Venetia. During the campaign of 1866 he gained a victory over the Italian army at Custozza, and, after the battle of Sadowa, he was made (July 13, 1866) Commander-in-Chief of the Austrian army, which title he retained till March, 1869, when he exchanged it for that of Inspector-General of the army. He published, in 1869, a work on "Responsibility in War" (Uber die Verantwortlichkeit im Kriege). This has been translated into French by L. Dufour, captain of artillery, and an English translation of it is given in Capt. W. J. Wyatt's "Reflections on the Formation of Armies, with a View to the Reorganization of the English Army," 1869.

ALCESTER (Baron), The Right Hon. Frederick Beauchamp Paget Seymour, G.C.B., is the only surviving son of the late Sir Horace Beauchamp Seymour, M.P., by his first wife, Elizabeth Mallett, daughter of the late Sir Lawrence Palk, Bart.; and a grandson of Vice-Admiral Lord Hugh Seymour. He was born in Bruton Street, London, on April 12, 1821, was educated at Eton, and entered the Royal Navy in Jan., 1834, receiving his lieutenant's commission in March, 1842. He became a captain in 1854, rear-admiral in 1870, vice-admiral in 1876, and admiral in 1882. He served as a volunteer in the Burmese War of 1852–3 as aide-de-camp to General Godwin, and led the storming party of Fusiliers at the capture of the works and pagoda of Pegu. He was also present in numerous other engagements on land and water, was four times gazetted, and awarded the Burmese medal with the clasp for Pegu at the close of the campaign. In 1854 he served against the Russians in the operations in the White Sea, and is in receipt of the Baltic medal. A few years later, viz., 1860–1, as commodore in command of the Australian station, he took part in the operations of the Naval Brigade in New Zealand, again distinguishing himself, and receiving a severe wound on June 27, 1860. In 1861 he was awarded the Companionship of the Bath, and subsequently the New Zealand medal. In 1866 he was appointed an aide-de-camp to the Queen. From 1868 till 1870 he was private secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty, and he commanded the Detached Squadron from December, 1870, till May, 1872, from which date till March, 1874, he was one of the Lords of the Admiralty. From October, 1874, till November, 1877, when he was made a K.C.B., he commanded the Channel Squadron, and he was appointed Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean in February, 1880. In September of the same year he assumed the supreme command of the Allied Fleet of the European Powers, which made a naval demonstration off the Albanian coast in consequence of the refusal of the Porte to agree to the cession of Dulcigno to Montenegro. Eventually the Turks consented to the cession, and the object for which the European fleet had been assembled in the Adriatic having thus been achieved, it dispersed on Dec. 5. Sir Beauchamp Seymour received the thanks of Her Majesty's Government for the manner in which he performed his duty on this occasion, and he was created a Grand Cross of the Bath in the following year (1881). In the warlike operations in Egypt, in 1882, he took a conspicuous part as Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Fleet. On the 6th of July he demanded of Arabi Pasha the instant cessation of the works on the forts at Alexandria, under penalty of bombardment; and on the 10th he dispatched an ultimatum to the Egyptian Ministry, demanding not only the cessation of all defensive works, but also the surrender of the forts at the mouth of the harbour. This being refused, early on the morning of the 11th eight British ironclads and five gunboats advanced to the attack; and although the Egyptian gunners fought their guns exceedingly well, the forts were, in a few hours, laid in ruins or silenced, with slight loss on the British side and with trifling damage to the ships. For his services he received the thanks of Parliament, was voted the sum of £20,000, and was elevated to the peerage by the title of Baron Alcester of Alcester, in the county of Warwick. Lord Alcester was placed on the retired list of the Navy in April, 1886.

ALCOCK, Sir Rutherford, K.C.B., D.C.L., F.R.C.S., is the son of Mr. Thomas Alcock, and was born in 1809, and educated for the medical profession. He was on the medical staff of the British Auxiliary Forces in Portugal in 1832 in support of Maria II. against the Miguelists, and in Spain in 1835 in support of Isabella II., against the Carlists, and for his services in the Peninsula received honours and decorations from the Spanish and the Portuguese Governments. Subsequently he was Consul at Foo-chow (1844); at Shanghai (1846); and at Canton (1858). Thence he was transferred to the diplomatic service, and became Envoy Extraordinary, Minister Plenipotentiary, and Consul-General in Japan. Sir Rutherford Alcock was created K.C.B. in 1862; and in 1865 was transferred to Pekin as Envoy and Plenipotentiary and Chief Superintendent of Trade in China, and remained there till 1870. He is the author of "Notes on the Medical History of the British Legion in Spain," 1838; "Elements of Japanese Grammar," 1861; "The Capital of the Tycoon," 1863; and "Familiar Dialogues in Japanese," 1878; and a work on Japanese Art and Industries. In 1876 he was President of the Royal Geographical Society, and in 1882 presided over the Health Department of the Social Congress.

ALDRICH, Thomas Bailey, an American author, was born at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, Nov. 11, 1836. He has contributed prose and verse to various periodicals, most of which has subsequently been published separately. Among the collected volumes of verse are: "The Bells," 1855; "The Ballad of Baby Bell, and other Poems," 1856; "The Course of True Love Never Did Run Smooth," 1858; "Pampinea, and other Poems," 1861; a volume of "Poems," 1865; "Cloth of Gold, and other Poems," 1874; "Flower and Thorn," 1876; "Lyrics and Sonnets," 1880; "Friar Jerome's Beautiful Book," 1881; "Mercedes, and Later Lyrics," 1884; "Wyndham Towers," 1889; and "The Sisters' Tragedy, and other Poems." Among his prose writings are: "The Story of a Bad Boy," 1869; "Marjorie Daw," 1873; "Prudence Palfrey," 1874; "The Queen of Sheba," 1877; "The Stillwater Tragedy," 1880; and a volume of travels entitled "From Ponkapay to Pesth," 1883. From 1881 to 1890 he was the editor of the Atlantic Monthly, Boston, but he resigned that position in order to devote himself entirely to writing. Since his retirement from editorship he has published "Two Bites at a Cherry, with other Tales," and "An Old Town by the Sea," 1893.

ALEXANDER I. (Obrenovitch), KING OF SERVIA, was born on Aug. 14, 1876, and succeeded his father, the ex-King Milan, who abdicated in favour of his son, March 6, 1889, after divorcing his consort, Queen Natalie (q. v.). He was under the guardianship of two Regents till 1893 (April). When Crown Prince he accompanied his mother, Queen Natalie, into exile after her separation from the King, but was forcibly removed from her at Berlin, and conveyed back to Belgrade. In 1893 the prince suddenly dismissed his Regents, and assumed the reins of power. Under his rule Servia has suffered less from civil dissensions than during the Regency.

ALEXANDER, George (George Alexander Gibb Samson), was born at Reading in 1858, and is the son of an Ayrshire man who married an English wife. He was educated at the school of Dr. Benham, Clifton, then at the High School at Stirling, and subsequently studied medicine at Edinburgh; but after a short time went to London to take up a commercial life. Finally, however, after a good deal of amateur acting, he adopted the stage as his profession, first appearing in 1879 in Mr. Sydney Grundy's "The Snowball," at Nottingham. In 1881 Mr. Alexander joined Mr. Henry Irving at the Lyceum to play Caleb Deecie in "Two Roses," and afterwards Paris in "Romeo and Juliet." Then for a time he joined the Hare and Kendal Company at the St. James's and on tour. In 1883 he again joined Mr. Irving, and went with him to America, and then remained at the Lyceum until 1888, when he went to the Adelphi. On February 1, 1890, he opened the Avenue Theatre as manager with "Dr. Bill." The other productions at this theatre were "The Struggle for Life" and "Sunlight and Shadow." With the last-named play Mr. Alexander proceeded to the St. James's, which, under his management, has since been famous for such successes as "The Idler," "Lady Windermere's Fan," "Liberty Hall," and "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." In 1882 Mr. Alexander married Miss Florence Theleur.

ALEXANDER, The Right Rev. William, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Derry and Raphoe, son of a clergyman beneficed in the north of Ireland, and nephew of Dr. Alexander, late Bishop of Meath, and cousin of the Earl of Caledon, was born at Londonderry, April 13, 1824. He was educated at Tunbridge School, and at Exeter and Brasenose Colleges, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. and M.A. He graduated in classical honours (Honorary 4th, 1847). He won the Theological Prize Essay in 1850, and the Sacred Prize Poem in 1860, and was selected to recite a congratulatory ode to Lord Derby in the Sheldonian Theatre, 1853. Having entered Holy Orders, he served a curacy in the north of Ireland, and was preferred to one or two livings in the gift of the Bishop of Derry. He was formerly Rector of Camus-juxta-Morne, co. Tyrone, and Chaplain to the Marquis of Abercorn, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. In 1864 he was nominated to the Deanery of Emly, and in 1867 was an unsuccessful candidate for the chair of poetry at Oxford. He was appointed to the Bishopric of Derry and Raphoe, rendered vacant by the death of Dr. Higgin, July 12, 1867, being consecrated in Armagh Cathedral, Oct. 13 following. Before his elevation to the episcopal Bench he was created D.D. by diploma, and subsequently D.C.L. at the Encænia, 1876, at Oxford. The Bishop has been Select Preacher before the Universities of Oxford (1870-72 and 1882), Cambridge (1872 and 1892), and Dublin (1879). He is author of Commentaries on Colossians, 1st and 2nd Thessalonians, Philemon, and the three Epistles of St. John; vols. iii., iv., "Speaker's Commentaries;" of "The Witness of the Psalms, Bampton Lectures," 1876; of "The Great Question, and other Sermons," 1885; of "Epistles of St. John, Twenty-one Discourses," 3rd ed., 1892, and of other works of a similar character. In 1887 he published a volume of poems entitled, "St. Augustine's Holiday, and other Poems." He is also the author of a large series of single sermons, Charges, and Reviews, Essays, and Poems, in periodicals of the day. The Bishop has endowed his See permanently with £2,000 a year and the See House, for which he has received the thanks of the Diocesan Synod of Derry and Raphoe, and a recognition from the Diocesan Council of "gratitude for his large sacrifice of income." He is married to Miss Cecil Frances Humphreys, who is herself well known as the author of "Moral Songs," "Hymns for Children," and "Poems on Old Testament Subjects."

ALEXANDRA, Princess of Wales. See WALES, PRINCESS OF.

ALFONZO XIII., KING OF SPAIN, was born (posthumously) May 17, 1886; his mother, Maria Christiana, being appointed Queen-Regent.

ALFORD, The Right Rev. Charles Richard, D.D., formerly Bishop of Victoria, Hong Kong, was born in 1816 at West Quantoxhead, Somersetshire, of which parish his father was rector. From St. Paul's School he was sent to Trinity College, Cambridge, with a Camden Exhibition (B.A., 1839; M.A., 1842; D.D., 1867). After taking Orders he became incumbent of St. Matthew's, Rugby, in 1841; incumbent of Christ Church, Doncaster, in 1846; Principal of the Metropolitan Training Institution at Highbury, in 1854; and incumbent of Holy Trinity, Islington, in 1865, where he had a high reputation as an Evangelical preacher. He was consecrated Bishop of Victoria, Hong Kong, Feb. 2, 1867, in place of Dr. George Smith, who had resigned that See in the previous year. He himself resigned the See of Victoria in 1872. He was vicar of Christ Church, Claughton, near Birkenhead, from June, 1874, till September, 1877, when he accepted the incumbency of the new district of St. Mary, Sevenoaks, Kent. He was appointed Commissary of the diocese of Huron, Canada, in 1880, and retired in 1881. Dr. Alford is the author of "First Principles of the Oracles of God;" a "Charge" on China and Japan; and various sermons and pamphlets. He now resides at Tunbridge Wells.

ALGER, William Rounsville, was born at Freetown, Massachusetts, Dec. 28, 1822. He graduated at the Cambridge Divinity School, 1847, and became pastor of a Unitarian Church in Roxbury. In 1855 he removed to Boston, and in 1874 became minister of the Unitarian Church of the Messiah in New York, where he remained until 1879. Since then he has resided in Boston, engaged in literary work. He has published "A Symbolic History of the Cross of Christ," 1851; "The Poetry of the Orient," 1856 (five editions); "A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life," 1861 (14 editions); "The Genius of Solitude," 1866 (11 editions); "Friendships of Women," 1867 (10 editions); "Prayers Offered in the Massachusetts House of Representatives," 1868; "Life of Edwin Forrest," 1877; "The School of Life," 1881; and "Sources of Consolation in Human Life," 1892.

ALI PACHA, a Turkish diplomatist, commenced his political career by being one of the referendaries of the Imperial Divan. In 1858, when Fuad Pacha went to Paris as Plenipotentiary representing the Porte at the Conference which had assembled to draw up the conventions respecting the United Principalities, he attached Ali Bey to his mission, and the latter rendered himself conspicuous by his general intelligence and aptitude for diplomacy. In 1861 he was appointed First Secretary of the Ottoman Embassy in Paris, and when, in 1862, he went on leave of absence to Constantinople, the Government entrusted him with the delicate mission of Commissioner to Servia after the bombardment of Belgrade. Owing to his address and tact he succeeded in settling nearly all the difficulties. Whilst performing these functions, he was, in 1865, placed in charge of the political direction of the province of Bosnia. In 1868 he was appointed Member of the Council of State, and afterwards undertook several other missions. In 1869 he was nominated to the post of Under-Secretary of State at the Ministry of Public Works. He remained in that office until 1870, when he was made governor of Erzeroum, and afterwards of Trebizond, on which occasion he was raised to the dignity of Pacha. In 1872 he became Prefect of Constantinople, where he introduced several reforms, and in Sept., 1873, he was sent as ambassador from the Ottoman Porte to the French Republic. He was recalled in Jan., 1876, and appointed Governor-General of the Herzegovina. A few days before his deposition by the Softas (May 30, 1876), the late Sultan Abdul-Aziz appointed Ali Pacha Governor-General of Scutari, in Northern Albania.

ALISON, General Sir Archibald, Bart., K.C.B., son of Sir Archibald Alison, the first baronet, author of "The History of Europe," was born at Edinburgh, Jan. 21, 1826, and received his education in the Universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh. Entering the military service of his country in 1846, he became a captain in the 72nd Highlanders in 1853; brevet-major in 1856; lieutenant-colonel in 1858; and colonel in 1867. In the latter year he succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his father. He served in the Crimea at the siege and fall of Sebastopol; in India, during the Mutiny, as Military Secretary on the staff of the late Lord Clyde; and on the Gold Coast as Brigadier-General of the European Brigade, and second in command of the Ashantee Expedition in 1873-4. He commanded his brigade at the battle of Amoaful, the capture of Bequah, the action of Ordahsu, and the fall of Coomassie. He lost an arm at the Relief of Lucknow. Sir Archibald was Assistant Adjutant-General at Aldershot from Oct., 1870, to Oct., 1874, and Deputy Adjutant-General in Ireland from Oct., 1874, to Oct., 1877, when he was promoted to the rank of major-general. Subsequently he was appointed Commandant of the Staff College in Jan., 1878, and Chief of the Intelligence Department at the War Office in May, 1878. He commanded the 1st brigade, 2nd division, in the military expedition dispatched to Egypt in 1882. A few days after the bombardment of Alexandria by Sir Beauchamp Seymour (now the Right Hon. Baron Alcester), a small body of British troops was landed (July 17), under the command of Sir Archibald Alison, who was, however, neither able nor authorized to strike a blow at Arabi's army. He confined his proceedings at first to securing a position covering Alexandria, and occupying the line of railway which connected Alexandria with the suburb of Ramleh. At the decisive battle of Tel-el-Kebir he led the Highland brigade which fought so gallantly on that memorable occasion; and after Arabi's surrender, a British army of occupation, consisting of 12,000 men, under the command of Sir Archibald Alison, was left in Egypt to restore order and protect the Khedive. Sir Archibald was included in the thanks of Parliament for his energy and gallantry, and was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-general (Nov., 1882). In May, 1883, he relinquished the command of the army of occupation of Egypt, and returned home. In Aug., 1883, he was appointed to the command at Aldershot, and in Feb., 1885, he became adjutant-general. In Oct., 1885, he resumed the command at Aldershot on the return of Lord Wolseley from Egypt. He was promoted to the rank of general, Feb. 20, 1889. He published an able treatise, "On Army Organization," in 1869.

ALLBUTT, Thomas Clifford, M.A., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.S., F.L.S., J.P., D.L., is the son of the Rev. Thomas Allbutt, some time Vicar of Dewsbury, in Yorkshire, and afterwards Rector of Debach-cum-Boulge, in Suffolk. He was born at Dewsbury in 1836, and was educated by a private tutor at Ryde, in the Isle of Wight, and afterwards under Archdeacon Hey, at St. Peter's School, York. He went up to Caius College in 1856, took a scholarship in his first year, and subsequently three other scholarships in the college. Soon afterwards, however, he decided to enter the medical profession, and after a pass degree in Arts, went out in the Natural Science Tripos in the first class, with distinctions in chemistry and geology. On leaving Cambridge he entered at St. George's Hospital, and afterwards spent some time in the hospitals of Paris, and graduated in due course as M.A. and M.D. of Cambridge. After a brief stay in London, Allbutt removed to Leeds, where he was soon after elected physician to the Leeds Infirmary, and rapidly obtained a large consulting practice in medicine, and for the last fifteen years of his residence in Yorkshire had perhaps the largest purely consulting physician's practice ever carried on in the provinces. During the same time he contributed largely both to medical and general literature. His earliest works were concerned with the bodily temperature in health and disease, and by devising the "Short Clinical Thermometer," did much to forward clinical thermometry in hospital and general practice. His friendship with G. H. Lewes and Lockhart-Clarke engaged him in the study of the pathology of the nervous system, and in the "Pathological Transactions" and elsewhere he published researches on this subject, among which his demonstrations of the pathology of tetanus and hydrophobia are best known, the latter being the first observations of the kind. Dr. Clifford Allbutt was also an earlier worker in the field of medical ophthalmoscopy, and published a work on that subject in 1868, which included investigations on insanity, and the first demonstration of atrophy of the optic nerve in general paralysis. Other researches were published at various dates on diseases of the nervous system, of the stomach and kidneys, and on the nature and treatment of consumption, in which latter attention was drawn to the value of the climate of the high Alps in the cure of phthisis, then little recognized in England. In 1884 Dr. Clifford Allbutt delivered the Gulstonian Lectures at the Royal College of Physicians on Visceral Neuroses, which were published in the same year; and in 1885, in conjunction with Mr. Teale, he published a volume on the "Treatment of Scrofulous Neck." In 1888 he delivered the Address on Medicine to the British Medical Association at Glasgow, his subject being the Classification of Disease, and received the honorary degree of LL.D. of that University. In 1889 he retired from practice, and was appointed a Commissioner in Lunacy, an office which he held for three years, when he was appointed by the Crown to be Regius Professor of Physic in the University of Cambridge in succession to the late Sir George Paget. He was elected a Fellow of the Linnean Society, and of the Society of Antiquaries, in 1867, and a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1880. He is editor of the "System of Medicine," in course of publication by Messrs. Macmillan, the first volume of which will appear in the spring of 1895. He acted for some years as a Justice of the Peace for the West Riding of Yorkshire, and is a Deputy-Lieutenant for the West Riding and the city and county of York. He is at present a Justice of the Peace for Cambridgeshire.

ALLEN, Charles Grant Blairfindie, B.A., best known as Grant Allen, the second son of Joseph Antisell Allen, was born at Kingston, Canada, Feb. 24, 1848, and educated at Merton College, Oxford; matriculated Oct. 19, 1867; B.A. 1871. Mr. Allen began to write early, and soon established a reputation as one of the most popular of scientific authors. He has been called "The Darwinian St. Paul;" his expositions of the Darwinian theory being particularly vivid, clear, and captivating. Besides a multitude of contributions to periodical literature, he has written the following books on more or less serious subjects:—"Physiological Æsthetics," 1877; "The Colour Sense," 1879; "The Evolutionist at Large," 1881; "Anglo-Saxon Britain," 1881; "Vignettes from Nature," 1881; "Colours of Flowers," 1882; "Colin Clout's Calendar," 1883; "Flowers and their Pedigrees," 1884; and "Charles Darwin" (in Mr. Andrew Lang's series of "English Worthies"), 1885. In 1883, Mr. Allen began to attempt fiction, his first attempt in which line was "Strange Stories." Since that date he has produced the following works:—"Philistia," 1884; "Babylon," 1885; "For Maimie's Sake," 1886; "In All Shades," 1887; "The Devil's Die," 1888; "This Mortal Coil," 1888; "The Tents of Shem," 1889; "Dr. Palliser's Patient"; "Force and Energy"; "Dumarescq's Daughter"; "The Attis of Catullus"; "Science in Arcady"; and several others. He has also lately contributed a series of papers ("Post-prandial Philosophy") to the Westminster Gazette.

ALLIES, Thomas William, the son of a gentleman of Bristol, was born in 1813 and educated at Eton, where he obtained the Newcastle Scholarship. He afterwards became in succession Scholar and Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1832, taking a first-class in classics. He became examining chaplain to Dr. Blomfield, Bishop of London, who appointed him, in 1842, to the rectory of Launton, Oxfordshire, which he resigned in 1850, on becoming a Roman Catholic. He had previously published a volume of sermons, a work entitled, "The Church of England Cleared from the charge of Schism, upon the Testimonies of Councils and Fathers of the First Six Centuries," 1846, 2nd edit., 1848; and "Journal in France in 1845 and 1848," with "Letters from Italy in 1847—of Things and Persons concerning the Church and Education," 1849. To give the grounds of his conversion he wrote, "The See of St. Peter, the Rock of the Church, the Source of Jurisdiction and the Centre of Unity," 1850; preceded by "The Royal Supremacy viewed in reference to the Two Spiritual Powers of Order and Jurisdiction," 1850. He has since written "St. Peter, his Name and Office as set forth in Holy Scripture," 1852, 2nd edit., 1871; "The Formation of Christendom," 3 parts, 1865-75; "Dr. Pusey and the Ancient Church," 1866; "Per Crucem ad Lucem, the Result of a Life," 1879; and several other works. Mr. Allies was appointed Secretary to the Catholic Poor School Committee for Great Britain in 1853.

ALLINGHAM, Mrs. Helen, eldest child of Alexander Henry Paterson, M.D., was born near Burton-on-Trent, Sept. 26, 1848. The family removed to Altrincham, Cheshire, and, after Dr. Paterson's death, to Birmingham. At the beginning of 1867, Miss Patterson came to reside in London under the care of her aunt, Miss Laura Herford, who was an artist, and who, about five years previously, had practically opened the schools of the Royal Academy to women. Miss Paterson herself entered the Royal Academy schools in April, 1867. She afterwards drew on wood for several illustrated periodicals, and eventually became one of the regular staff of the Graphic. She also furnished illustrations to novels running in the Cornhill Magazine—"Far from the Madding Crowd," and "Miss Angel." In the intervals of drawing on wood she produced several water-colour drawings. "May," "Dangerous Ground," &c., were exhibited at the Dudley Gallery; "The Milkmaid," and "Wait for Me," at the Royal Academy, 1874. "Young Customers," 1875, attracted much attention; as did also "Old Men's Gardens, Chelsea Hospital," at the Old Water-colour Exhibition, 1877. In 1875 she was elected an Associate of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colour, and in 1890 to the honour of full membership. Mrs. Allingham has also exhibited "The Harvest Moon," "The Clothes-Line," "The Convalescent," "The Lady of the Manor," "The Children's Tea," "The Well," "Lessons," and many scenes of English rural life. Among her later works are several portraits of Thomas Carlyle. Special exhibitions of Mrs. Allingham's drawings were held in 1886, 1887, and 1889, at the rooms of the Fine Art Society, and had great success. Miss Paterson was married, Aug. 22, 1874, to the late Mr. William Allingham, the poet.

ALLMAN, Professor George James, M.D., LL.D., F.R.C.S.I., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., M.R.I.A., F.L.S., Corr. M.Z.S.L., Hon. F.R.M.S., member of the Royal Dublin Society, and honorary member of various British and foreign societies, is the eldest son of James Allman, Esq., of Bandon, and was born at Cork in 1812, and educated at the Belfast Academical Institution. Warmly attached to the principles of civil and religious liberty, he threw himself actively into the agitation which led to Catholic Emancipation; and, believing he could best promote its objects by engaging in the profession of the law, he resolved on studying for the Irish Bar. The love of natural science, however, which had at a very early age taken possession of him, caused him, before he had completed the required number of terms, to give up the profession of law for that of medicine. He graduated in Arts and Medicine in the University of Dublin in 1844; and in the same year was appointed to the Regius Professorship of Botany in that university, when he relinquished all further thought of medical practice. In 1854 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1855 he resigned his professorship in the University of Dublin on his appointment to the Regius Professorship of Natural History and Keepership of the Natural History Museum in the University of Edinburgh, which he held until 1870. Shortly after this the honorary degree of LL. D was conferred on him by the University of Edinburgh. His chief scientific labours have been among the lower organisms of the animal kingdom, to the investigation of whose structure and development he has specially devoted himself. For his researches in this department of biology the Royal Society of Edinburgh awarded to him in 1872 the Brisbane Prize; in the following year a Royal Medal was awarded to him by the Royal Society of London; and in 1878 he received the Cunningham Gold Medal from the Royal Irish Academy. He was one of the Commissioners appointed by Government in 1876 to inquire into the state of the Queen's Colleges in Ireland. Soon after his election to the Edinburgh chair he was nominated one of the Commissioners of Scottish Fisheries, an honorary post which he continued to hold until the abolition of the Board in 1881. On the resignation of Mr. Bentham, he was elected to the presidency of the Linnean Society, a post which he held until 1883, when he resigned it in favour of Sir J. Lubbock. In 1879 he was President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. On the completion of the exploring voyage of the "Challenger," the large collection of Hydroida made during that great expedition was assigned to him for determination and description—a service which he had already performed for the Hydroida collected during the exploration of the Gulf Stream under the direction of the United States Government. He has served on the council of the Royal Society of London and on those of the Royal Society of Edinburgh and of the Royal Irish Academy, and has filled the post of Examiner in Natural History for the Queen's University in Ireland, for the University of London, for Her Majesty's Army, Navy and Indian Medical Services, and for the Civil Service of India. Results of his original investigations are contained in memoirs published in the Philosophical Transactions, the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, and the Transactions of the Linnean and Zoological Societies of London; as well as in Reports presented to the British Association for the Advancement of Science, to the Mus. Comp. Zool. Harvard University, and to the Commission of the "Challenger" Exploration; and in communications to the Annals of Natural History, the Quarterly Journal of Microscopic Science, and other scientific journals. His more elaborate works are "A Monograph of the Freshwater Polyzoa," fol. 1856, and "A Monograph of the Gymnoblastic Hydroids," fol. 1871-72, both published by the Ray Society, and largely illustrated with coloured plates. Dr. Allman is a member of the Athenæum Club, to which he was elected by the Committee. He married Hannah Louisa, third daughter of Samuel Shaen, Esq., of Crix, J.P. and D.L. for the county of Essex.

ALMA-TADEMA, Lawrence, R.A., a distinguished painter, was born at Dronryp, in the Netherlands, Jan. 8, 1836. He was intended for one of the learned professions, and in training for it the works of the ancient classical writers of course engrossed much of his attention. In 1852 he went to Antwerp, and entered the Academy there as a student. Afterwards he placed himself with the late Baron Henry Leys, whom he assisted in painting several of the large pictures with which the Baron's name is associated. Subsequently he came to London, where he has resided for many years. He obtained a gold medal at Paris in 1864; a second class medal at the International Exhibition at Paris in 1867; a gold medal at Berlin in 1872, and the grand medal in 1874. Mr. Alma-Tadema became a member of the Academy of Fine Arts at Amsterdam in 1862; Knight of the Order of Leopold (Belgium) in 1866; Knight of the Dutch Lion in 1868; Knight First Class of the Order of St. Michael of Bavaria in 1869; member of the Royal Academy of Munich in 1871; Knight of the Legion of Honour (France) in 1873; member of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours in 1873; and member of the Royal Academy of Berlin in 1874. In Jan., 1873, he received letters of denization from the Queen of England, having resolved to reside permanently in this country. He was nominated a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour in 1873, and elected an Associate of the Royal Academy of London, Jan. 26, 1876. In the latter year he was also elected a Knight of the Third Class of the Golden Lion of Nassau; in 1877 a Knight of the Third Class of the Crown of Prussia, and an honorary member of the Royal Scottish Academy; in 1878 he obtained a first-class medal at the Paris International Exhibition, and he was nominated an Officer of the Legion of Honour in the same year. Mr. Alma-Tadema was elected a Royal Academician June 19, 1879. He is an honorary member of the Royal Academies of Madrid, Vienna, Stockholm, and Naples. The Emperor of Germany, in Jan., 1881, appointed him a foreign Knight of the Order Pour le Mérite (Art and Sciences Division); and in the following month the French Academy of Fine Arts elected him its London correspondent in the section of Painting. His principal paintings are:—"Entrance to a Roman Theatre," 1866; "Agrippina Visiting the Ashes of Germanicus," 1866; "A Roman Dance," 1866; "The Mummy," 1867; "Tarquinius Superbus," 1867; "The Siesta," 1868; "Phidias and the Elgin Marbles," 1868; "Flowers," 1868; "Flower Market," 1868; "A Roman Amateur," 1868; "Pyrrhic Dance," 1869; "A Negro," 1869; "The Convalescent," 1869; "A Wine Shop," 1869; "A Juggler," 1870; "A Roman Amateur," 1870; "The Vintage," 1870; "A Roman Emperor," 1871; "Une Fête intime," 1871; "The Greek Pottery," 1871; "Reproaches," 1872; "The Mummy" (Roman period), 1872; "The Improvisatore," 1872; "A Halt," 1872; "Death of the Firstborn," 1872; "Greek Wine," 1872; "The Dinner," 1873; "The Siesta," 1873; "The Cherries," 1873; "Fishing," 1873; "Joseph Overseer of Pharaoh's Granaries," 1874; "A Sculpture Gallery," 1874 "A Picture Gallery," 1874; "Autumn," 1874; "Good Friends," 1874; "On the Steps of the Capitol," 1874; "Water Pets," 1875; "The Sculpture Gallery," 1875; "An Audience at Agrippa's," 1876; "After the Dance," 1876; "Cleopatra," 1876; "The Seasons" (4 pictures), 1877; "Between Hope and Fear," 1877; "A Sculptor's Model" (Venus Esquilina), "A Love Missile," 1878; "A Hearty Welcome," "Down to the River," "Pamona Festival," "In the Time of Constantine," 1879; "Spring Festival," "Not at Home," "Fredegonda," 1880; "Sappho," 1881; "An Oleander," and "The Way to the Temple" (his diploma work), 1883; "The Emperor Hadrian visiting a British Pottery," 1884; "A Reading from Homer," 1885; "An Apodyterium," 1886; "The Roses of Heliogabalas," 1888; "At the Shrine of Venus," and "A Dedication to Bacchus," 1889; "Comparisons," 1893, and "At the Close of a Joyful Day," 1894. At the Grosvenor Gallery in 1876 he exhibited a series of three pictures —"Architecture," "Sculpture," and "Painting," also "Cherries." A special exhibition of his pictures was held at the Grosvenor Gallery in 1883. He received the Fine Art Medal of Honour at the Paris Exhibition, 1889. By his first wife he had two daughters, one of whom is the author of "Love's Martyr" and the other has lately made a brilliant début as a water-colour painter. His second wife, whom he married in 1871, is Laura, youngest daughter of Dr. George Epps. This lady is an accomplished artist, and has exhibited several pictures at the Royal Academy, at the Society of French Artists, at the Grosvenor Gallery, and New Gallery.

ANDERSON, Mrs. Elizabeth Garrett-, M.D., eldest daughter of Newson Garrett, Esq., of Aldeburgh, Suffolk, was born in London in 1836, and educated at home, and at a private school. Miss Elizabeth Garrett began to study medicine at Middlesex Hospital in 1860; completed the medical curriculum at St. Andrew's, Edinburgh, and the London Hospital; and passed the examination at Apothecaries' Hall, receiving the diploma of L.S.A. in Oct., 1865. She was appointed General Medical Attendant to St. Mary's Dispensary in June, 1866; obtained the degree of M.D. from the University of Paris in 1870, and in the same year was appointed one of the visiting physicians to the East London Hospital for Children and Dispensary for Women. On Nov.

29, 1870, Miss Garrett was elected a member of the London School Board, being returned by a large majority at the head of the poll for Marylebone. She was married Feb. 9, 1871, to Mr. J. G. S. Anderson, of the Orient line of steamships to Australia. In 1872 Mrs. Anderson aided in the establishment and organization of the New Hospital for Women, then at 222, Marylebone Road, and now at 144, Euston Road, of which the acting medical staff is composed entirely of women. Mrs. Anderson has been for some years its Senior Visiting Physician. She is also Dean and Lecturer on Medicine at the London School of Medicine for Women, Brunswick Square. She is on the Councils of Bedford College, and of the North London Collegiate School for Girls. In 1885 she visited Australia, and spent several months in New South Wales. Mrs. Garrett-Anderson continues to practise in London as a physician for women and children. She has written various papers on medical and social questions, and is a member of the British Medical Association.

ANDERSON, Dr. John, LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., F.R.G.S., &c., son of the late Mr. Thomas Anderson, Secretary to the National Bank of Scotland, Edinburgh, was born in that city on Oct. 4, 1833; educated at the George Square Academy and the Hill Street Institution, and finally at the Edinburgh University. He took the degree of M.D. in 1862, and received a gold medal for his thesis entitled "Observations in Zoology." Immediately after his graduation he was appointed Professor of Natural Science in the Free Church College, Edinburgh; but he resigned the office in 1864, having been offered the Curatorship of a Museum which the Government of India intended to found in Calcutta, and of which the Collections of the Asiatic Society of Bengal were to form the nucleus. He arrived in India in July, 1864, and in the following year was appointed Superintendent of the Indian Museum, and two or three years afterwards he was also given the Chair of Comparative Anatomy in the Medical College, Calcutta. In 1868 he was selected by the Government of India to accompany an expedition to Western China, viâ British and Independent Burmah, in the capacity of Scientific Officer. Again, in 1874, he was chosen by the Government of India to proceed once more to Western China in the same capacity as on the former expedition, and with instructions to advance from Bhamô to Shanghai. This expedition was attacked by the Chinese and was obliged to retreat to Burmah; Augustus Raymond Margary having been treacherously murdered at Manwyne. In 1881, Dr. Anderson was sent by the Trustees of the Indian Museum, Calcutta, to investigate the Marine Zoology of the Mergui Archipelago, off the coast of Tenasserim. In 1887 he retired from the service of the Government of India. Besides numerous papers on Zoology, a list of which is to be found in the Royal Society's Catalogue of scientific papers, Dr. Anderson is the author of the following independent works:—"A Report on the Expedition to Western China viâ Bhamô," published by the Government of India, 1871; "Mandalay to Momien," an account of the two expeditions to Western China, the first under Major (afterwards Colonel Sir Edward) Sladen, and the second under the command of Colonel Horace Browne, 1875; "Anatomical and Zoological Researches," including an account of the Zoological Results of the two expeditions to Western China, 1868-9 and 1875; 4to with 1 vol. plates, 1878; "Catalogue of the Mammalia in the Indian Museum," Part I. published by the Trustees of the Indian Museum, 8vo, 1879; "Handbook to the Archæological Collections of the Indian Museum, Calcutta," 2 vols., 8vo, published by the Trustees, 1881 and 1882. The scientific results of his researches in the Mergui Archipelago were published by the Linnean Society of London in Vols. 21 and 22 of their Journal, which were devoted exclusively to the subject; the various animal groups having been worked out by specialists. Dr. Anderson described the Mammals, Birds, Reptiles and Batrachia, and gave an exhaustive account of the Selungs, the human inhabitants of the islands, adding a vocabulary of their language. And in connection with the same Expedition to Mergui, a town which was once in Siamese Territory, he published in 1890, in Trübner's Oriental Series a full account of "English Intercourse with Siam in the Seventeenth Century." Dr. Anderson is a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, of the Linnean Society, and the Zoological Society of London, of the Royal Geographical Society of London, of the Society of Antiquaries of London and of Edinburgh, of the Royal Physical and Botanical Societies of Edinburgh, and of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. He is also a Fellow of the Calcutta University, and is a Corresponding Fellow of the Ethnological Society of Italy. In 1885 the University of Edinburgh conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D.

ANDERSON, Mary. See NAVARRO, MADAME ANTONIO.

ANDERSON, General William Warden, second son of the late Sir George Anderson, K.C.B., Governor of the Mauritius and of Ceylon, was born at Surat, in India, 1824, and appointed cornet in the 2nd Bombay Lancers in 1840. He served through the Punjaub campaign of 1848; and was present at the siege and capture of Mooltan, as well as the siege of Awah and of Kotah, 1857. He served throughout the Indian Mutiny, 1857, and was severely wounded in the engagement with the rebels at Gwalior. From 1858 to 1867 he acted as Assistant-Political Resident, and Superintendent of the Guicowar's contingent of horse in Katywar. From 1867 to 1874 he was Political Agent in that province. He was promoted to brevet-major for services at Gwalior, against the rebels, 1857 (Medal with Clasps), Major-General, 1878; Lieut.-General, 1882; General, 1888. He more than once received the thanks of the Governor-General of India for the efficient manner in which he had discharged the duties of Political Agent in Katywar.

ANDERSON, William, D.C.L., Director-General of Ordnance Factories, was born at St. Petersburg on Jan. 5, 1835. He obtained his early education at the High Commercial School in his native city, and when he left in 1849 he was head of the school, silver medallist, and, although a British subject, he had conferred upon him the freedom of the city of St. Petersburg. In 1849 Mr. Anderson became a matriculated student in the Applied Sciences Department of King's College, London, and went through the complete three years' course, taking many prizes, and leaving in 1851 with the degree of Associate, to become a pupil of the late Sir William Fairbairn at Manchester. He remained with Messrs. William Fairbairn & Sons for three years, and during that time was much employed in looking after important outwork. In 1855 Mr. Anderson entered into partnership with Messrs. Courtney & Stephens, of Dublin, and remained with them till 1864, being engaged chiefly in the construction of bridges, cranes, signals, and other fittings for railways. He devoted much attention to the theory of diagonally braced girders, then but little understood, and contributed several papers to the Institution of Civil Engineers of Ireland, of which body he became president in 1863. In the autumn of 1864 Mr. Anderson removed to London, joining the old-established firm of Easton & Amos, with the object of building new works on the Thames at Erith, the old premises in Southwark Street having been found inconvenient for large and heavy work. Mr. Anderson, under whose direct management the Erith works have been since their erection, became eventually the head of the firm of Easton & Anderson. He is a member of Council of the Institute of Civil Engineers, a vice-president of the Institute of Mechanical Engineers, a visitor of the Royal Institution, a vice-president of the Society of Arts, and has contributed numerous papers on a variety of subjects to these bodies. His knowledge of the Russian language has enabled him to abstract many interesting papers for the "Foreign Abstracts" published by the Institution of Civil Engineers. He has also translated the remarkable works of Chernoff on steel, and the researches of the late General Kalakontsky, on the internal stresses in cast-iron and steel. He was selected by the Institute of Civil Engineers to deliver one of the heat series of lectures, namely, that on the "Generation of Steam;" by the School of Military Engineering at Chatham, to lecture on "Hydraulic Machinery and on Hydro-pneumatic Moncrieff Gun-carriage"; and delivered for the Society of Arts, under the Howard Trust, a course of lectures on the "Conversion of Heat into Work." In August, 1889, he was appointed by Mr. Stanhope (Secretary of State for War) Director-General of the Royal Ordnance Factories, which comprise the laboratory, the carriage departments, and the gun factory at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, the Royal Gunpowder Factory at Waltham Abbey, and the small-arms factories at Enfield and Birmingham. The University of Durham has conferred on him the honorary degree of D.C.L., and he was in 1889 elected president of section G of the British Association.

ANDREWS, ST., Bishop of. See WORDSWORTH, THE RT. REV. CHARLES.

ANDREWS, Thomas, F.R.S., F.R.S.E., M.I.C.E., F.C.S., &c., was born in 1847 in Sheffield, and is the only son of the late Mr. Thos. Andrews of the same town. He was educated at Broomhank School by the late Rev. Thos. Howarth, M.A., and subsequently by private tuition, and was carefully trained in metallurgy, mining, and engineering by his father. On the death of his father, in 1871, he succeeded him as proprietor of the Wortley Iron Works (one of the oldest-established iron works in England), and the Wortley Silkstone Colliery. In addition to conducting and managing the iron works, Mr. Andrews has rendered excellent service to metallurgical, physical, and engineering science, by a series of original researches, extending over many years, and connected with various branches of the above sciences. He has determined the relative corrosibility of wrought-iron and modern steels in sea water and in tidal streams, and shown that iron corrodes much less than steels. He has made elaborate researches, published by the Institute of Civil Engineers, on the "Effects of Temperature on the Strength of Railway Axles, in an Investigation extending over Seven Years," and has therein determined, on a large experimental scale, the resistance of metals to sudden concussion at varying temperatures down to zero Fahrenheit; and indicated the influence of climatic temperature changes on the strength of railway material, and at the same time has ascertained some of the causes leading to accidental fractures on railways. He has also studied the influence of sudden chilling on the physical properties of metals. He has conducted numerous other original investigations on the electromotive force between vessels at high temperatures, &c., and also an intricate research on "Electro-chemical Effects on Magnetising Iron," Parts I., II., III.; the results of the latter research have shown that magnetised iron or steel is electro-positive to unmagnetised in certain chemical solutions. In another part of this research Mr. Andrews observed that a current was produced when the opposite poles of two electrically connected magnets of approximately equal strength were immersed in solutions of various chemical substances, the north pole being generally positive to the south pole. Mr. Andrews has written papers on the "Passive State of Iron and Steel," discovering in these researches that the passive state of iron was influenced by magnetism; and he also determined the relative passivity of the various modern steels, and the influence of chemical composition, physical structure, &c., on the passivity of the metals. Mr. Andrews has also experimented on the "Heat Dilatation of Metals from Very Low Temperatures." In the course of another research he has made determinations of the plasticity of ice, and also on the relative conductivity of ice and snow, and on the contractibility of ice at low temperatures. He has also contributed various articles to Iron, The Engineer, Chemical News, Nature, Poggendorff's Annalen, and other periodicals. The results of these numerous researches are embodied in about thirty-three papers, published in the "Proceedings" of the Royal Society, London; "Transactions and Proceedings" of the Royal Society, Edinburgh; "Proceedings" of the Institute of Civil Engineers; "Transactions" of the Society of Engineers; "Transactions" of the Midland Mining Institute; "British Association Reports"; "Transactions" of the Institute of Marine Engineers, &c. For some of these papers Mr. Andrews was awarded at different times by the Institute of Civil Engineers, a Telford Medal and three Telford Premiums successively, and also a premium by the Society of Engineers. He was, in 1888, elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, London, and has also been elected Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, Member of the Institute of Civil Engineers, Fellow o the Chemical Society, &c. Numerous quotations are made from his metallurgical researches in the recent valuable standard work on the "Metallurgy of Steel," by Henry M. Howe, Boston, U.S.A. He is patentee of an invention for hydraulic machinery in connection with the manufacture of iron. Mr. Andrews takes a practical interest in all Christian and educational labour, and has conducted large night schools. In 1870 he married Mary Hannah, eldest daughter of the late Mr. Charles Stanley, of Rotherham.

ANGUS, Joseph, D.D., was born Jan. 16, 1816, at Bolam, Northumberland, and educated at King's College, Stepney College, and Edinburgh, where he graduated in 1836, taking the first prizes in nearly all his classes. He was appointed Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society in 1840, and President of Stepney College in 1849, which college was removed to Regent's Park in 1857. Dr. Angus, who was for several years English Examiner to the University of London and to the Indian Civil Service, is the author of the "Handbook of the Bible," "Handbook of the English Tongue," "English Literature," "Christ our Life," and several other works. He has also edited Butler's "Analogy and Sermons," with notes, and Dr. Wayland's "Moral Science." He was a member of the New Testament Company for the Revision of the Scriptures," and for ten years a member of the London School Board. In recent years the college at Regent's Park has made provisions for largely extending its work; and, in addition to the foundation of several scholarships, the sum of £30,000 has been contributed to it, through Dr. Angus, for increasing its efficiency. Special chairs are founded, and more than one lectureship has been established.

ANNANDALE, Professor Thomas, F.R.S.E., M.D., F.R.C.S. London and Edinburgh, and member of many Foreign Societies, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Feb. 2, 1838, and educated at the Newcastle Infirmary and the University of Edinburgh. He became private assistant to the late Professor Syme, Demonstrator of Anatomy in the University of Edinburgh, and Surgeon and Lecturer on Surgery to the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary. Dr. Annandale's high reputation as a practical and operating surgeon and teacher of surgery led to his appointment in Oct., 1877, as Regius Professor of Clinical Surgery in the University of Edinburgh. He is Senior Surgeon to the Royal Infirmary, Consulting Surgeon to the Royal Sick Children's Hospital, and to the Royal Maternity Hospital; and is the author of "The Malformations, Diseases, and Injuries of the Fingers and Toes, and their Surgical Treatment," 1865, being the Jacksonian Prize Essay of the Royal College of Surgeons of London for 1864; "Abstracts of Surgical Principles," 1868-70, 2nd edit., 1876; "Clinical Surgical Lectures," 1874-75, reported in the Medical Times and British Medical Journal; "On the Pathology and Operative Treatment of Hip Disease," 1876; author of articles "Diseases of the Breast," "Internal Derangements of the Knee-joint, and their Treatment by Operation," "On the Removal of Bone to Promote Healing of Wounds," and numerous contributions to professional periodicals.

ANNENKOW, General Michael, son of General Michael Annenkow, constructor of the Russian Central Asian Railroad, was born in 1838, and educated in St. Petersburg. He received his first commission in 1863 in the mounted Pioneers of the Guard. He afterwards entered the Russian Staff College, and served as a staff-captain during the Polish insurrection; at the end of which he became colonel, though only twenty-eight years of age. He spent four years in Poland, in police service, and in 1870 was attached to the German armies during the campaign in France; and was afterwards given the chief direction of troops in Russia, and created the railway battalions. Not only the Samarcand line, but several other Russian strategic lines, are due to him. To him is due a project for the creation of a Trans-Siberian Railway, which is to extend from Moscow to the borders of China. During a sojourn in Paris in 1891 General Annenkow made his latest plans in this direction known to the French press.

ANSTEY, F. See GUTHRIE, THOMAS ANSTEY.

ARABI, Ahmed, the leader of the military insurrection in Egypt, 1882, was born of a fellah family, resident in a small village in the province of Charkièh, in the eastern portion of Lower Egypt, nearly on the borders of the desert. He was enlisted in the army during the reign of Said Pacha, who initiated the system of replacing the foreign officers by native Egyptians. Arabi was one of those thus selected, and he rose rapidly in rank; but the Viceroy was capricious, and one day he had Arabi punished with some hundred blows of a stick, and relegated him to half-pay. Arabi, who had learned to read and write, and had compatriots at Ezher, the religious university of Cairo, went thither to study science, and although he could not complete a course which requires about twenty years to accomplish, he learnt sufficient to enable him to pass for a savant among his colleagues in the army. Ismail Pacha restored him to the army, and from this time Arabi was regarded by his Egyptian colleagues as a pious and learned man, his conduct being, according to Mussulman morality, irreproachable. He married the daughter of the nurse of El Hami Pacha, son of Abbas Pacha, who had been brought up in the Prince's palace: this afforded him somewhat of a competence. During the Abyssinian campaign he managed to have the charge of the transport, and remained at Massama to forward the convoys. After the campaign he was employed in the transport of sugar from the Khedive's factories in Upper Egypt, and, having a quarrel with the manager of the Khedive's property, he returned to Cairo, and was again replaced in the army, being at the time lieutenant-colonel. He became the intimate councillor of Ali Bey El Roubi, who was the means of raising Arabi from his obscurity. During the years 1876-8 he organized a sort of secret society among the fellah officers, which was not noticed, in consequence of the events that were then engaging the attention of the Khedive and the State. Some weeks previous to the coup d'état of Ismail Pacha against the European Ministry, several officers, among whom were Arabi and El Roubi, went to Ali Pacha Moubarek, a fellah of Charkièh, and proposed to place him at their head to overthrow the Khedive and the European Ministry. Ali Pacha Moubarek, who was a member of the Ministry of Wilson and Blignières, related the whole to the Khedive, who had an interview with the society of El Roubi and Arabi, and with their aid made the famous revolution which brought about the fall of the European Ministry of 1879. Ismail Pacha would, doubtless, have suppressed the society had he remained a week or a fortnight longer in Egypt. At the accession of Tewfik, the bulk of the public were yet ignorant of the name of Arabi. In a short time afterwards the Khedive made him colonel and entrusted him with a regiment. Ali Bey El Roubi was sent to Mansourah as President of the Tribunal of First Instance; but the conspiracy could not be destroyed, especially because no one in the Government, except perhaps the Khedive himself, considered that it had any real importance. At this time began the intrigues of the ex-Khedive, of Halim Pacha, and the Porte, and each party endeavoured to get hold of the only power that appeared to remain in Egypt, that is to say, this conspiracy of officers, which had drawn to it a large number of non-commissioned officers, and even of soldiers, by promising them an increase of pay, with better clothing and rations. The tactics of Arabi were to awaken the interest of the people in the movement which he was preparing, and to which he gave the name of "The Awakening of the National Party." In Sept., 1881, Arabi appeared at the head of a military and popular revolt, compelling the Khedive, Tewfik Pacha, to dismiss his former Ministry, and to convene a sort of Parliament called the Assembly of Notables, which met about the beginning of 1882. The affair of Sept. 8 resulted in the overthrow of Riaz Pacha's Administration, which was unpopular because it was supposed to be too deferential to certain foreign interests. Cherif Pacha, who was thereupon appointed Prime Minister, pledged the Khedive to establish a Parliamentary Government. A manifesto was issued by the "National Party," on Dec. 18, 1881, containing an exposition of their views and purposes. They professed loyalty to the Sultan both as Imperial Suzerain and as Caliph of the Mussulman community, but would never suffer Egypt to be reduced to a Turkish Pachalic, and they claimed the guarantee of England and of Europe for the administrative independence of Egypt. They also professed loyalty to the Khedive, but would not acquiesce in a despotic rule, and they insisted upon his promise to govern by the advice of a representative assembly. At the beginning of 1882 the Khedive and Cherif Pacha called together the Assembly of Notables. Arabi was then appointed Under-Secretary for the War Department, and was raised to the rank of Pacha. The Assembly of Notables wanted to vote the budget. This claim was refused by the Khedive's Government on account of the financial Controllers, and hence arose the Egyptian crisis. Arabi and the army had, however, a monopoly of power. The Khedive was forced to accept a National Ministry, and the Organic Law, adopted in defiance of the protests of the Controllers, placed the budgets in the hands of the Notables, thus subverting the authority of England and France embodied in the Control. Arabi, now substantially Dictator, and supported almost undisguisedly by the Sultan, proceeded to more daring measures. Eventually the English Government felt obliged to intervene by armed force. Then followed the bombardment of Alexandria by the fleet under the command of Sir Beauchamp Seymour (July 11, 1882), and subsequently (Sept. 13), the decisive defeat of Arabi and his army at Tel-el-Kebir by the British troops under Sir Garnet Wolseley. Arabi and his lieutenant, Toulba Pacha, fled to Cairo, where they surrendered to General Drury Lowe. It was intended at first to charge Arabi with murder and incendiarism, but he was actually brought to trial on the simple charge of rebellion (Dec. 3). He pleaded guilty, and was condemned to death, but immediately afterwards the sentence was commuted by the Khedive to perpetual exile from Egypt and its dependencies. Ceylon having been chosen as the place of banishment, Arabi, with other leaders in the rebellion, were landed at Colombo, Jan. 16, 1883.

ARCH, Joseph, leader of the agricultural labourers' movement, was born at Barford, Warwickshire, on Nov. 10, 1826. His father was a labourer, and he himself had, from an early age, to work in the fields for his living. He married the daughter of a mechanic, and at her suggestion he added to his slender stock of book learning. He used often to sit up late at night reading books, whilst smoking his pipe by the kitchen fire. In this way he contrived to acquire some knowledge of logic, mensuration, and surveying. He likewise perused a large number of religious works, and for some years he occupied a good deal of his spare time in preaching among the Primitive Methodists. When the movement arose among the agricultural labourers, he became its recognised leader. In 1872 he founded the National Agricultural Labourers' Union, of which he became president. He went through the principal agricultural districts of England, addressing crowded meetings of the labouring classes, and afterwards he visited Canada to inquire into the questions of labour and emigration. Having once or twice offered himself unsuccessfully as a candidate for a seat in Parliament, Mr. Arch was elected in 1885 Liberal member for North-west Norfolk, but after the dissolution of 1886, he was defeated by his former Conservative opponent, Lord Henry Bentinck. At the 1892 election he was again returned for North-west Norfolk.

ARCHER, James, R.S.A., was born in Edinburgh, June 10, 1824, and educated at the High School in that city. He received his art education in the school founded by the Honourable Board of Trustees for Manufactures in Scotland, and was appointed an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1850, and a full Academician in 1858. Mr. Archer, who left Scotland for London in 1862, first exhibited in the Royal Academy a cartoon of a design of the Last Supper, followed by an oil picture of the same the year after. He made a series of pictures, from the "Mort d'Arthur," of which one was exhibited in the Royal Academy—"The Mystic Sword Excalibur," and painted a series of pictures of children in costume, exhibited in the Royal Academy, of which "Maggie, you're Cheating," is the chief. He became a portrait painter in 1871, exhibiting a portrait of Col. Sykes, M.P., from which time he painted many portraits, one of the principal being that of Professor Blackie. Since that he has painted four large subject pictures, the first "The Worship of Dionysus"; "Dieu le veult, Peter the Hermit Preaching the First Crusade"; "In the Second Century. You! a Christian?" and the fourth, "St. Agnes, a Christian Martyr." In 1884 he went for a few months to the United States, where he painted James G. Blaine, who that year was the defeated candidate for the Presidency; and also Andrew Carnegie, the well-known Pittsburg millionaire. In 1886 he went to India, where he remained for three years, spending the winters always in Calcutta. There he painted several of the native Rajahs, chiefly members of the well-known family of Ragore, one branch of which is an adherent to the reformed religious movement of the Brahmo Somaj. In Simla he painted Lady Dufferin in her silver-wedding dress, as well as her son, then Lord Clandeboye. There he also painted a posthumous portrait of Sir Charles Macgregor, and designed his commemorative medal. He returned to London in 1889.

ARCHER, William, was born in 1856, at Perth, Scotland, and is the son of Thomas Archer, C.M.G., late Agent-General for Queensland in London. Educated mainly in Edinburgh, he took the M.A. degree, Edinburgh University, in 1876. He commenced journalism as leader-writer on the Edinburgh Evening News from 1875 to 1878, with an interval of a year, during which he visited Australia. He published in Edinburgh "The Fashionable Tragedian," 1877; a pamphlet written in collaboration with Mr. Robert W. Lowe. He subsequently became dramatic critic of the London Figaro, then edited by Mr. James Mortimer, 1879 to 1881. He is best known as a translator of Ibsen. He translated from the Norwegian, with slight alterations, Henrik Ibsen's "Pillars of Society," produced at the Gaiety Theatre, London, by Mr. W. H. Vernon, December 15, 1880. This was the first production of a play by Ibsen in England. He was called to the Bar (Middle Temple) 1883. In 1884 he succeeded the late Dutton Cook as dramatic critic of the World—a post still retained in October, 1894. He translated "A Doll's House," by Henrik Ibsen, produced by Mr. Charles Charrington and Miss Janet Achurch at the Novelty Theatre, London, June 7, 1889, a production which excited general interest in Ibsen in England. He has also translated, in collaboration with Mr. Edmund Gosse, "The Master Builder," by Henrik Ibsen, produced at Trafalgar Square Theatre by Mr. Herbert Waring and Miss Elizabeth Robins, February 20, 1893, and "A Visit," from the Danish of Edrard Brandes, produced by the Independent Theatre Society (Royalty Theatre), March 4, 1892. His principal publications are "English Analyses of French Plays represented at the Gaiety Theatre," 1879; "English Dramatists of To-day," London, 1882; "Henry Irving, Actor and Manager: a Critical Study," 1883; "About the Theatre: Essays and Studies," 1886; "Masks or Faces? a Study in the Psychology of Acting," 1888; "William Charles Macready; a Biography" (Vol. I. of Eminent Actors Series), 1890; "Henrik Ibsen's Prose Dramas, Edited by W. A.," 5 vols., 1890-91; "Tales of Two Countries, from the Norwegian of A. Kielland," 1891; "Peer Gynt, Dramatic Poem by Henrik Ibsen, Translated by William and Charles Archer," 1892; "Eskimo Life, by Frithjof Nansen," 1893; "Hannele: a Dream Poem by Gerhart Hauptmann," 1894; "Dramatic Essays of Leigh Hunt and William Hazlitt" (2 vols.), edited by William Archer and Robert W. Lowe, 1894; "The Theatrical World for 1893," 1894.

ARDITI, Luigi, a musical composer, born July 22, 1822, at Crescentino, Piedmont, was educated as a violinist at the Conservatoire at Milan. After filling the post of musical conductor in various places in Italy and America, where he remained ten years, he came to London in 1857, and was appointed musical director at Her Majesty's Theatre. Since that time he has conducted Italian opera and other music at various great theatres and concert-rooms up to the present day. Whilst in Constantinople he received from the Sultan the Order of the Medjidieh in acknowledgment of his talent as a composer. In addition to numerous songs composed by Signor Arditi, may be mentioned the opera "La Spia," written in New York in 1856; "Il Bacio," written in London; and various pieces for the violin.

ARGYLL (Duke of), His Grace George Douglas Campbell, K.G., K.T., P.C., only surviving son of the seventh duke, was born at Ardincaple Castle, Dumbartonshire, in 1823, and, before he had succeeded his father, in April, 1847, had become known as an author, politician, and public speaker. As Marquis of Lorne he took an active part in the controversy in the Presbyterian Church of Scotland relating to patronage, and was looked upon by Dr. Chalmers as an important and valuable adherent. As early as 1842 he published a pamphlet which exhibited considerable literary ability, under the title of "A Letter to the Peers from a Peer's Son." His brochure, "On the Duty and Necessity of Immediate Legislative Interposition in behalf of the Church of Scotland, as determined by Considerations of Constitutional Law," was an historical view of that Church, particularly in reference to its constitutional power in ecclesiastical matters. In the course of the same year he published "A Letter to the Rev. Thomas Chalmers, D.D., on the Present Position of Church Affairs in Scotland, and the Causes which have led to it." In this pamphlet he vindicated the right of the Church to legislate for itself; but condemned the Free Church movement then in agitation among certain members of the General Assembly; maintaining the position taken up in his "Letter to the Peers," and expressing his dissent from the extreme view embodied in the statement of Dr. Chalmers, that "lay patronage and the integrity of the spiritual independence of the Church have been proved to be, like oil and water, immiscible." In 1848 the Duke published an essay, critical and historical, on the ecclesiastical history of Scotland since the Reformation, entitled "Presbytery Examined." It was a careful expansion of his earlier writings, and was favourably received. His Grace was a frequent speaker in the House of Peers on such subjects as Jewish Emancipation, the Scottish Marriage Bill, the Corrupt Practices at Elections Bill, the Sugar Duties, Foreign Affairs, the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill, the Scottish Law of Entail, and the Repeal of the Paper Duties. During the administration of Lord John Russell he gave the government a general support, at the same time identifying his political views with those of the Liberal-Conservatives. His Grace actively interested himself in all questions affecting Scottish interests brought before the Legislature, especially in the affairs of the Church of Scotland. In 1851 he was elected Chancellor of the University of St. Andrews. In 1852 he accepted office in the Cabinet of the Earl of Aberdeen, as Lord Privy Seal. On the breaking up of that ministry, in February, 1855, in consequence of the secession of Lord John Russell, and the appointment of Mr. Roebuck's Committee of Inquiry into the state of the British Army before Sebastopol, his Grace retained the same office under the Premiership of Lord Palmerston. In the latter part of 1855 he resigned the Privy Seal, and became Postmaster-General. In Lord Palmerston's Cabinet of 1859 the Duke resumed the office of Lord Privy Seal, which he exchanged for that of Postmaster-General on Lord Elgin being sent, in 1860, on his second special mission to China. He was re-appointed Lord Privy Seal in 1860, was elected Rector of the University of Glasgow in Nov., 1854; presided over the twenty-fifth annual meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, held at Glasgow, in Sept., 1855; and was elected President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1861. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet, in Dec., 1868, he was appointed Secretary of State for India, and he held that position till the downfall of the Liberal Government in Feb., 1874. In the ensuing session he warmly supported the measure introduced and carried by the Conservative Government for the transfer of the patronage in the Church of Scotland from individuals to congregations. He was appointed Lord Privy Seal for the third time in May, 1880, on Mr. Gladstone returning to power. That post he held till April, 1881, when he resigned it, in consequence of a difference with his colleagues in the Cabinet concerning some of the provisions of the Irish Land Bill. In announcing the circumstance to the House of Lords (April 8), he stated that in consequence of certain provisions of the Bill which, in his view, put the ownership of Irish property in commission and abeyance, he had felt obliged to resign his office in the Government, and his resignation had been accepted by Her Majesty. Since that time the Duke has taken an important part, by speech and pen, in political controversy, taking the Whig side; especially on the questions of Home Rule and those arising out of the Crofter agitation. His Grace is Hereditary Master of the Queen's Household in Scotland, Chancellor of the University of St. Andrews, a Trustee of the British Museum, and Hereditary Sheriff and Lord-Lieutenant of Argyllshire. In 1866 his Grace published "The Reign of Law," which has passed through numerous editions; in 1869 "Primeval Man; an Examination of some Recent Speculations"; in 1870, a small work on the History and Antiquities of Iona, of which island his Grace is proprietor; in 1874 "The Patronage Act of 1874 all that was asked in 1843, being a reply to Mr. Taylor Innes"; in 1877 (for the Cobden Club) observations "On the important Question Involved in the Relation of Landlord and Tenant"; in 1879 "The Eastern Question, from the Treaty of Paris to the Treaty of Berlin, and to the second Afghan War," 2 vols.; and in 1884 "The Unity of Nature," a work on the Philosophy of Religion; being a sequel to the "Reign of Law"; "An Economic History of Scotland," 1884; and "The Unseen Foundations of Society." He is a frequent contributor to scientific journals, chiefly on Geology, the Darwinian Theory, &c. He married, first, in 1844, the eldest daughter of the second Duke of Sutherland (she died May 25, 1878); and secondly, in 1881, Amelia Maria, eldest daughter of Dr. Claughton, Bishop of St. Albans, and widow of Colonel Augustus Henry Archibald Anson. His Grace's eldest son, the Marquis of Lorne, married, in 1871, the Princess Louise. (See LORNE.)

ARMSTEAD, Henry Hugh, R.A., sculptor, was born in London, June 18, 1828, and received his artistic education at the School of Design, Somerset House, Leigh's School, Maddox Street, Mr. Carey's School, and the Royal Academy. Among his masters were Mr. McManus, Mr. Herbert, R.A., Mr. Bailey, R.A., Mr. Leigh, and Mr. Carey. As a designer, modeller, and chaser for silver, gold, and jewellery, and a draughtsman on wood, he has executed a large number of works. Among those in silver, the most important are the "Charles Kean Testimonial," the "St. George's Vase," "Doncaster Race Plate," the "Tennyson Vase" (Silver Medal obtained for that and other works in Paris, 1855), and the "Packington Shield." His last important work in silver (for which the Medal from the 1862 Exhibition was obtained) was the "Outram Shield," always on view at the South Kensington Museum. His works in marble, bronze, stone, and wood, include the South and East sides of the podium of the Albert Memorial, Hyde Park, representing the musicians and painters of the Italian, German, French, and English Schools, and some of the greatest poets. There are also four large bronze figures on the Albert Memorial by Mr. Armstead, viz., Chemistry, Astronomy, Medicine, and Rhetoric. He also designed the external sculptural decorations of the New Colonial Offices—reliefs of Government, Europe, Asia, Africa, America, Australasia, and Education, statues of Earl Grey, Lord Lytton, Duke of Newcastle, Earl of Derby, Lord Ripon, Sir W. Molesworth, Lord Glenelg, and on the façade, reliefs of Truth, Fortitude, Temperance, and Obedience. Mr. Armstead designed the whole of the carved oak panels (beneath Dyce's Frescoes) in Her Majesty's Robing Room in New Palace, Westminster, illustrating the life of King Arthur, and the History of Sir Galahad; also the external sculpture of Eatington Park, Warwickshire, the large Fountain in the fore court of King's College, Cambridge, the marble reredos of the "Entombment of our Lord," at Hythe Church, Kent, and other works, including the effigies of the late Bishop of Winchester in Winchester Cathedral, of Dean Howard and Archdeacon Moore in Lichfield Cathedral, of Dean Close in Carlisle Cathedral, and of Lord Thynne in Westminster Abbey. The marble doorway in the crush-room of the Holborn Restaurant, including the wrought-iron screens for the fireplaces, &c., are also by him, as well as the exterior stone doorway and corbel of the Hôtel Métropole. One of his most important works is the "Street

Memorial," now in the central hall of the Law Courts, including life-size marble statue and alto relievo of the "Arts and Crafts required for the erection and due enrichment of a great public building." The following works also have been executed by him:—The effigy of Bishop Ollivant, now in Llandaff Cathedral, in marble, the bronze statue of Lieutenant Waghorn, R.N., the "Overland Route," erected at Chatham, and the memorial to Mrs. Craik in Tewkesbury Abbey, also the marble monument in St. Paul's Cathedral (in the crypt) containing the effigy of the late Rev. B. Webb, and a reredos for the St. Mary's Church, Aberavon, containing statuettes of Our Lord and the four Evangelists, erected in memory of the late Mr. Llewellyn of Baglau Hall. Mr. Armstead was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, Jan. 16, 1875, and an Academician, Dec. 18, 1879.

ARMSTRONG, Sir Alexander, K.C.B., F.R.S., LL.D., J.P., is a son of the late A. Armstrong, Esq., of Crahan, co. Fermanagh, Ireland. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and at the University of Edinburgh, where he graduated. Having entered the Royal Navy, he served in various parts of the world, including the Mediterranean, South America, North America, West Indies, Pacific stations, Africa, Asia Minor, in the exploring expedition to Xanthus in Lycia, and elsewhere, and for five years continuously in the Arctic regions. He is one of the few surviving officers who have circumnavigated the continent of America, and was frequently mentioned in the despatches connected therewith. He was present in H.M.S. Investigator at the discovery of the North-West Passage, having entered the Polar Sea viâ Behring's Strait, and returned to England through Baffin's Bay, with the surviving officer and crew of H.M.S. Investigator. During the Russian War he served in the Baltic, was present at the bombardment of Sweaborg, and also in two night attacks with a flotilla of rocket-boats, for which he was gazetted. He has been Deputy-Inspector-General of the Mediterranean fleet and the naval hospitals at Malta, Haslar, and Chatham; and he was promoted to be Inspector-General for special services in 1866. Three years later he became Director-General of the Medical Department of the Navy, from which office he retired in 1880. He was created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath, Military Division, in 1871, for his services. Sir Alexander Armstrong has received the Arctic, Baltic, and Jubilee medals; also Sir Gilbert Blane's gold medal. He is a Justice of the Peace for Middlesex, City and Liberties of Westminster, and County of London; and is the author of "A Personal Narrative of the Discovery of the North-West Passage," 1857; and "Observations on Naval Hygiene, particularly in connection with Polar Service."

ARMSTRONG, Professor George Francis, M.A., D.Lit., born in the county of Dublin, May 5, 1845, is the third and only surviving son of the late E. J. Armstrong, Esq., and Jane, daughter of the late Rev. Henry Savage, of Glastry, J.P., Incumbent of Ardkeen, co. Down. He received his early education partly in Dublin and partly in Jersey. In 1862 he made a long pedestrian tour in France with his elder brother, the poet, Edmund Armstrong. In the same year he obtained a civil appointment in Dublin, and matriculated in Dublin University. In 1864 he won the first Composition prize and the medal for oratory in the University Philosophical Society. In 1865 he gained the Vice-Chancellor's Prize for a poem on the subject of "Circassia"; and in the same year, on the death of his brother Edmund, he was elected his successor in the Presidential Chair of the Philosophical Society, and he brought out the first edition of his brother's "Poem." In 1866 he won the gold medal for composition in the Historical Society. In 1867 he was re-elected President of the Philosophical Society, and won its Gold Medal for essay writing. In 1869 he published a volume of "Poems, Lyrical and Dramatic." In 1870 appeared "Ugone; a Tragedy," written for the most part during his residence in Italy. In 1871 he was appointed Professor of History and English Literature in Queen's College, Cork, and a Professor of the Queen's University in Ireland; and the next year he was presented with the degree of M.A. by Trinity College, Dublin, in recognition of his "high literary character and attainments." In 1872 he published "King Saul" (the first part of the "Tragedy of Israel"), and new editions of "Poems, Lyrical and Dramatic" and "Ugone." In 1874 these were followed by "King David" (the second part of the "Tragedy of Israel"), and in 1876 by "King Solomon," which completed the Trilogy. In 1877 he published the "Life and Letters" of his brother Edmund, together with a volume of his "Essays," and a new and enlarged edition of his "Poetical Works." In 1882 he was presented with the degree of Doctor of Literature, honoris causâ, by the Queen's University, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal University of Ireland; and in the spring of the same year he published a volume of poems, under the title of "A Garland from Greece," suggested by travels in Greece and Turkey a year or two before. In 1866 Mr. Armstrong published a new volume of poems entitled "Stories of Wicklow"; in 1887 "Victoria Regina et Imperatrix: A Jubilee song from Ireland"; and in 1888 "Mephistopheles in Broadcloth: A Satire in Verse." In 1879 Mr. Armstrong married Marie Elizabeth, younger daughter of the late Rev. John Wrixon, M.A., Vicar of Malone, co. Antrim.

ARMSTRONG, Professor George Frederick, M.A., F.R.S.E., F.G.S., M.Inst.C.E., is the elder son of Mr. George Armstrong and of Mary Ann, daughter of Thomas and Phœbe Knowles, of Doncaster, Yorkshire, and was born May 15, 1842. He received his general education at private schools and at Jesus College, Cambridge. Having from an early age developed a strong taste for mechanical pursuits and a more than ordinary skill in constructive art, it was naturally thought that engineering would afford him a suitable career. He was accordingly educated professionally in the Engineering Department of King's College, London; in the Plant Works and Locomotive Shops of the Great Northern Railway; and in the office of the Engineer-in-Chief, Mr. R. Johnson, M.Inst.C.E., on whose staff he was subsequently employed for several years in the design and execution of many important works, and generally in the maintenance of the line. He was afterwards engaged in private practice in London, and in 1869 became Engineer to the promoters of the Isle of Man Railways, for whom he made all the requisite plans and surveys, and prepared designs for ways and works, and for the necessary rolling stock in connection with the lines then projected. In 1871 he was appointed first Professor of Engineering in the New Applied Science School at McGill University, Montreal; five years later he was offered and accepted the corresponding chair in the newly established Yorkshire College of Science at Leeds; and in 1885 was selected by the Crown to succeed the late Professor Fleeming Jenkin, F.R.S., as Regius Professor of Engineering in the University of Edinburgh; which appointment he still holds. He is also Engineering Adviser, under the Public Health Act, to the Local Government Board for Scotland. During his residence in Canada, Professor Armstrong served for some time in the Canadian Militia, being senior Captain of the University Companies of the 1st (Prince of Wales) Regiment. For many years Professor Armstrong has taken an active part in the promotion of technical education at home and in the colonies, and has been closely identified with its progress. His Inaugural Address at Edinburgh (which is published) was devoted to a consideration of the question in special relation to the education of engineers, and attracted considerable attention at the time of its delivery. He has at other times publicly dealt with the question in lectures, and in the columns of the Times. By intimately associating himself with the work of each of the International Exhibitions held in Edinburgh since 1885 (filling, in the Exhibition of 1890, the positions of Convener of the Engineering and Machinery Committee, and vice-chairman of the Executive Council), he has rendered acceptable service in the cause of industrial enterprise. He was President of the Sanitary Engineering Section of the British Institute of Public Health in Edinburgh in 1893, and delivered an address. He has also, in connection with their meetings in Edinburgh, acted as Local Secretary of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, the Institute of Mechanical Engineers, and the Iron and Steel Institute. Professor Armstrong is the author of a number of papers on professional as well as on general science subjects which have been read before various learned societies, or contributed to scientific publications. During the summer and autumn of 1879 he undertook an extensive series of observations and experiments with a view of determining the diurnal variation in the amount of carbon dioxide in the air, the results of which were communicated in a paper to the Royal Society, and have since been accepted as a standard of reference on the continent as well as in this country. In 1889, the Council of King's College, London, elected Professor Armstrong to the Fellowship of the College — the highest distinction the College is empowered to bestow on its alumni. He is an Examiner for Science Degrees in the Departments of Engineering, Public Health, and Agriculture in the University of Edinburgh; Hon. President of the East of Scotland Engineering Association; and a member of most of the professional institutes and societies.

ARMSTRONG, Lord, formerly Sir William George, C.B., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S., son of the late Mr. William Armstrong, a merchant and alderman of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, by the daughter of Mr. William Potter, formerly of Walbottle Hall, Northumberland, was born in 1810. He was educated at the school of Bishop Auckland, and afterwards articled to an eminent solicitor at Newcastle, who subsequently adopted him as a partner; but a strong bent for scientific pursuits eventually diverted him from the law. Early in life he began investigations on the subject of electricity, which resulted in the invention of the hydro-electric machine, the most powerful means of developing frictional electricity yet devised. For this he was elected, whilst a very young man, a Fellow of the Royal Society. He then invented the hydraulic crane, and, between 1845 and 1850, the "accumulator," by which an artificial head is substituted for the natural head gained only by altitude; and he extended the application of hydraulic power to hoists of every kind, machines for opening and closing dock gates and spring bridges, capstans, turntables, wagon-lifts, and a variety of other purposes. For the manufacture of this machinery he and a small circle of friends founded the Elswick Engine Works, near Newcastle. There, in December, 1854, he constructed the rifled ordnance gun that bears his name. In 1858 the Rifle Cannon Committee recommended the adoption of the Armstrong gun for special service in the field, and Mr. Armstrong, on presenting his patents to the Government, was knighted, made a C.B., and appointed Engineer of Rifled Ordnance, with a salary of £2,000 a year. Between the years 1858 and 1870 the Armstrong gun and the position of Sir W. G. Armstrong in reference to the Government underwent many changes; but the leading feature of the gun, whether rifled or smooth, muzzle-loading or breech-loading, is in the coiling of one wrought-iron tube over another until a sufficient thickness is built up. The Armstrong gun has been largely adopted by foreign Governments. Sir William Armstrong extended the system to guns of all sizes, from the 6-pounder to the 600-pounder, weighing upwards of 20 tons, and within three years introduced three thousand guns into the service. The Committee of Ordnance of the House of Commons, in their report, July, 1863, state that they "have had no practical evidence before them that even at this moment any other system of constructing rifled ordnance exists which can be compared to that of Sir W. Armstrong." In February, 1863, Sir William resigned his appointment, and rejoined the Elswick manufacturing company, which has since expanded to one of the largest and most important manufacturing establishments in Europe, and has taken a leading part in the further development of artillery and other implements of war. In the same year he acted as President of the British Association meeting held at Newcastle-on-Tyne. In that capacity he drew attention to the gradual lessening of our supply of coal, and the probability of actual exhaustion at some future time. The discussion suggested by this important address led to the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into all the circumstances connected with our national coal supply, and he was nominated a member of this Commission. He received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge in 1862, and the honorary degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford in 1870, and the honorary degree of "Master of Engineers" from the University of Dublin in 1892. Lord Armstrong is a Knight Commander of the Danish Order of the Dannebrog, of the Austrian Order of Francis Joseph, of the Spanish Order of Charles III., and of the Brazilian Order of the Rose. He was nominated a Grand Officer of the Italian Order of SS. Maurice and Lazarus in 1876. Lord Armstrong has taken an active part in the inquiries concerning the operation of the Patent Laws, he being very hostile to them in their present forms. He has been thrice President of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, as well as President of the British Association (1863), of the Inst.C.E. (1882), and of the Newcastle Literary and Philosophical Society. At the general election of 1886 Sir William Armstrong stood as a Unionist Liberal candidate for Newcastle, in opposition to Mr. John Morley, but was defeated. He was raised to the Peerage under the title of Baron Armstrong in 1887, the year of the Queen's Jubilee. He is a J.P. for Northumberland, of which county he was High Sheriff in 1873.

ARNOLD, Arthur, third son of Robert Coles Arnold, Esq., of Whartons, Framfield, Sussex, and Heath House, Maidstone, was born May 28, 1833. On the passing of the Public Works (Manufacturing Districts) Act, 1863, to meet the necessities of the cotton famine, Mr. Arnold was appointed Assistant-Commissioner, and in that capacity resided in Lancashire till 1866, during which time he wrote "The History of the Cotton Famine," of which the original edition was published in 1864, followed by a cheaper one in 1865. After two years of subsequent travel in the south and east of Europe and in Africa, Mr. Arnold returned to England in 1868, when he published "From the Levant," in two vols., containing letters descriptive of his tour. He then became the first editor of the Echo, which, under his direction and control, attained a great success. In 1873, the King of Greece conferred the Golden Cross of the Order of the Redeemer upon Mr. Arnold, with special reference to his work, "From the Levant." In the same year, upon the death of Mr. Baring, Mr. Arnold was an unsuccessful candidate for the representation of Huntingdon. He resigned his connection with the Echo in 1875, and passed a year in travelling through Russia and Persia. The notes of this journey appeared in 1877 under the title of "Through Persia by Caravan." In 1879-80 he issued two works: one entitled "Social Politics," and the other "Free Land." At the general election of 1880 he was returned to Parliament for Salford. In the same year, in succession to Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. Arnold was elected Chairman of the Greek Committee which was actively concerned in promoting the enlargement of the Hellenic kingdom in accordance with the suggestions of the Treaty of Berlin. In 1882, Mr. Arnold proposed in the House of Commons resolutions in favour of uniformity of franchise throughout the United Kingdom, and redistribution of political power, and upon a motion for adjournment, the policy of the resolutions was, for the first time, sanctioned by a large majority. In 1883, he moved for an elaborate return of electoral statistics which the Government adopted in connection with the Reform Bill of 1884. In 1885, Mr. Arnold established and was elected President of the Free Land League, which quickly obtained the support of a large number of members of Parliament. At the general election of that year and of 1886, he unsuccessfully contested the Northern Division of Salford. Upon the formation of the London Council in 1889, Mr. Arnold was elected a County Alderman for the double term of six years. In May, 1890, he accepted an invitation from the North Dorset Liberal Association to contest that division at the next election, but was defeated at the election in 1892. In 1867, Mr. Arnold married Amelia, only daughter of Captain H. B. Hyde, 96th Regiment.

ARNOLD, Sir Edwin, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., second son of Robert Coles Arnold, Esq., J.P. for the counties of Sussex and Kent, and brother of the above, born June 10, 1832, was educated at the King's School, Rochester, and King's College, London, and was elected to a scholarship at University College, Oxford. In 1852 he obtained the Newdigate prize for his English poem on the "Feast of Belshazzar," and was selected in 1853 to address the late Earl of Derby on his installation as Chancellor of the University. He graduated in honours in 1854. Upon quitting college, he was elected Second Master in the English Division of King Edward the Sixth's School, Birmingham, and subsequently appointed Principal of the Government Sanskrit College at Poona, in the Bombay Presidency, and Fellow of the University of Bombay, which offices he held during the Mutiny, and resigned in 1861, after having twice received the thanks of the Governor in Council. He had then contributed largely to critical and literary journals, and was author of "Griselda, a Drama," and "Poems, Narrative and Lyrical"; with some prose works, among which are "Education in India," "The Euterpe of Herodotus,"—a translation from the Greek text, with notes—"The Hitopades'a," with vocabulary in Sanskrit, English, and Murathi. The last two were published in India. Sir Edwin Arnold has published also a metrical translation of the classical Sanskrit work "Hitopades'a," under the title of "The Book of Good Counsels," a "History of the Administration of India under the late Marquis of Dalhousie," 1862-4, as well as a popular account, with translated passages, of "The Poets of Greece." Since 1861 he has been upon the editorial staff of the Daily Telegraph. On behalf of the proprietors of that journal he arranged the first expedition of Mr. George Smith to Assyria, as well as that of Mr. Henry Stanley, who was sent by the same journal, in conjunction with the New York Herald, to complete the discoveries of Livingstone in Africa. He is a Fellow of the Royal Asiatic and the Royal Geographical Societies of London, and Hon. Correspondent of that of Marseilles. He published in 1874 "Hero and Leander," a translation in heroic verse from the Greek of Musæus; and in the following year, "The Indian Song of Songs," being a metrical paraphrase from the Sanskrit of the Gita Govinda of Jayadeva. Upon the occasion of the proclamation of the Queen as Empress of India, on Jan. 1, 1877, he was named a Companion of the Star of India. In 1879 he produced "The Light of Asia," an epic poem upon the Life and Teaching of Buddha, which has since passed through more than sixty editions in England, and eighty in America. For this work the King of Siam decorated him with the Order of the White Elephant. In 1881 he published a volume of oriental verse under the title of "Indian Poetry," and he has printed several translations from the Sanskrit epic the Mahábhárata, and in 1883 "Pearls of the Faith, or Islam's Rosary; being the ninety-nine beautiful names of Allah, with comments in verse." Sir Edwin received the Second Class of the Imperial Order of the Medjidieh from the Sultan in 1876, and the Imperial Order of Osmanie in 1886. In January, 1888, he was created Knight Commander of the Indian Empire by the Queen, and in October of the same year published "With Sa'di in the Garden," or "The Book of Love," a poem founded on the 3rd chapter of the Bôstân of the Persian poet Sa'di, for which he subsequently received from the Shah of Persia the Order of the Lion and Sun. He also published in 1888 a volume comprising most of his previous English poems and some new ones, under the title of "Poems National and Non-Oriental." Recently there have appeared from his pen another epic, "The Light of the World"; a volume entitled "Potiphar's Wife, and other Poems"; two books of travel, "India Revisited" and "Seas and Lands," as well as "Japonica," a work on Japanese manners and customs, and "Adzuma," a Japanese tragedy. During his sojourn in Japan the Emperor conferred on him the Order of the Rising Sun, giving him the dignity of "Chokunin" of the empire. He was elected President of the Birmingham and Midland Institute for the year 1893.

ARNOLD, Thomas, M.A., is the second son of the late Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, and was born at Laleham, Staines, Nov. 30, 1823. Educated at Winchester, Rugby, and University College, Oxford, he took his degree (First Class Classics) in 1845. After serving for some time in the Colonial Office he went to New Zealand; passed thence to Tasmania in 1850, with the appointment of Inspector of Schools; and, on becoming a Roman Catholic, returned to this country in 1856. He became a Professor in the Roman Catholic University at Dublin, thence moved to the Oratory School, Birmingham, and thence to Oxford. He is the author of several works on English Literature, and editions of old texts, among them, "A Manual of English Literature" (now in a sixth edition); an edition of "Select English Works of Wyclif," 3 vols., 1869; "Selections from the Spectator"; "Clarendon, Book VI."; "Beowulf," text, translation, and notes; and, for the Master of the Rolls' Series, editions of "Henry of Huntingdon," and "Symeon of Durham." He is now engaged upon the "Chronicles of the Abbey of Bury St. Edmunds." On the establishment of the Royal University of Ireland Mr. Arnold was appointed a Fellow. He married in Tasmania Julia Sorell, granddaughter of a former Governor of the Colony. She died in 1888, and he has since married Josephine, daughter of the late James Benison, of Slieve Rassell, co. Cavan.

ASAPH, St., Bishop of. See EDWARDS, THE RIGHT REV. ALFRED GEORGE.

ASHBOURNE, Lord, The Right Hon. Edward Gibson, P.C., Lord Chancellor of Ireland, was born in Dublin in 1837, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where, on taking his degree, he obtained first gold medal. In 1875 he entered Parliament as member for Dublin University, and in 1877 was made Attorney-General for Ireland. He held his post until 1880, when he went out of office with his party, but continued to sit for Dublin University. During the Liberal rule from 1880 to 1885, Mr. Gibson was the chief spokesman of the Opposition on Irish questions, and the chief critic of the Irish Land Bill of 1881. On the accession of Lord Salisbury to office in 1885 Mr. Gibson was raised to the peerage with the title of Baron Ashbourne, and was made Lord Chancellor of Ireland, with a seat in the Cabinet, a post which he again filled under Lord Salisbury's second administration in 1886. He is responsible for Lord Ashbourne's Act (1885), for facilitating the sale of Irish holdings to tenants.

ASHBURNHAM, Bertram, 5th Earl of, Viscount St. Asaph, and Baron of Ashburnham, F.S.A., was born at Ashburnham, Oct. 28, 1840, being the son of Bertram, 4th Earl, by his wife Katherine Charlotte, daughter of George Baillie, Esq., of Millerstain and Jerviswood, and sister of George, 10th Earl of Haddington. He was educated at Westminster School, and at Fontainebleau in France. He was attached to the Marquis of Bath's special embassy to convey the Order of the Garter to the Emperor of Austria in 1867. He succeeded his father as 5th Earl in 1878. He presided over the first meeting held in England to advocate "Home Rule" for Ireland, and was elected Chairman of the British Home Rule Association in 1886. Lord Ashburnham is the chief representative of the Ashburnham family, which, in a direct male line, has continued at Ashburnham, in Sussex, from before the Norman Conquest, and is described by Fuller in the early part of the 17th century, as a "family of stupendous antiquity wherein the eminence hath equalled the antiquity." Lord Ashburnham is the owner of the collection of MSS. and printed books formed by the late Earl, some portions of which have of late years been sold to the British and Italian Governments.

ASHCOMBE, George, 1st Lord, is the eldest son of the late Mr. Thomas Cubitt. He was born in the year 1828, and graduated M.A. at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1854. He was elected M.P. for West Surrey in 1860, and continued to represent it until 1885, when he was elected for the Mid or Epsom division. He filled the unpaid post of Second Church Estates Commissioner from 1874 to 1879, and has served on other Royal Commissions. In 1880 he was sworn a member of the Privy Council, and in 1892 was raised to the peerage as Lord Ashcombe. He has taken special interest in church and educational questions, is a member of the House of Laymen, a Vice-President of the Church Schools Company, and was one of the founders of the large middle-class school at Cranleigh, Surrey. He is one of the Peabody trustees and a Governor of Guy's Hospital, &c. He passed the Act 41 & 42 Vict., c. 42, enabling all clerical impropriators to redeem tithe-rentcharge, and a speech delivered by him in 1872 on "Nonconformist Endowments," is among the publications of the Church Defence Institution.

ASHLEY, The Hon. Evelyn, son of the late Earl of Shaftesbury by his marriage with Lady Emily Cowper, eldest daughter of the 4th Earl Cowper, was born in July, 1836, and educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge, graduating M.A. in 1858. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Trinity Term, 1863, and joined the Oxford Circuit. Mr. Ashley, who is a magistrate for Dorset, for Hampshire, and for the county of Sligo, unsuccessfully contested the Isle of Wight in February, 1874; he was, however, elected for Poole in May of the same year, and continued to represent that borough down to 1880, when he was elected for the Isle of Wight. Mr. Ashley was formerly private secretary to the late Lord Palmerston, and from 1863 to 1874 he was a Treasurer of County Courts. When the Liberals returned to power in April, 1880, Mr. Ashley was appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade, and in May, 1882, was chosen by Mr. Gladstone to succeed Mr. Courtney in the office of Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies. He was also second Church Estates Commissioner. At the general election of 1885 Mr. Ashley was defeated in the Isle of Wight contest by Sir Richard Webster, Conservative. Mr. Ashley is the author of "The Life of Henry John Temple, Viscount Palmerston." He married in 1866 Sybella Charlotte, daughter of Sir Walter Rockliffe Farquhar, Bart.

ASHMEAD-BARTLETT, Sir Ellis, M.P., eldest son of the late Mr. Ellis Bartlett, a dissenting minister, was born at Brooklyn in 1849, and educated at Torquay and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took a first class in the final schools, and was President of the Oxford Union. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1877, and was for some time an examiner in the Education Department. In 1880 he entered Parliament as member for Eye; and in 1885, 1886, and 1892, was returned for the Eccleshall Division of Sheffield. In both Lord Salisbury's Administrations Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett has held the post of Civil Lord of the Admiralty. He has been a frequent and copious speaker in the House and on public platforms, especially on questions of foreign policy. His brother is married to Baroness Burdett-Coutts.

ASQUITH, Right Hon. Herbert Henry, Q.C., M.P., second son of the late J. Dixon Asquith, Esq., of Croft House, Morley, Yorks, was born at Morley, Sept. 12, 1852, and was educated at the City of London School and Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was Scholar, and afterwards Fellow. B.A. 1874; 1st class Classics, and Craven Scholar. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, June, 1876; appointed a Queen's Counsel, Feb. 1890; elected M.P. for East Fife in July, 1886, and again in 1892. Together with the Lord Chief Justice (then Sir C. Russell) he was engaged on behalf of the late Charles Parnell, M.P., during the Parnell Commission. In August, 1892, he was mover of the Amendment to the Queen's Speech which led to the division fatal to Lord Salisbury's Government, and, when Mr. Gladstone formed his Ministry, he was appointed Home Secretary and was sworn of the Privy Council, and placed on the Ecclesiastical Commission. During the Labour disputes of 1893 he took up a consistent attitude which commanded the approval of Parliament, and in 1894 acted as arbitrator in the London cab strike. In February, 1893, he was nominated for the Lord Rectorship of Glasgow. He married, in 1877, Helen, daughter of F. Melland, Esq., of Manchester (who died in 1891), and in May, 1894, Miss Margot Tennant, daughter of Sir Charles Tennant, Bart.

ASTOR, William Waldorf, was born in New York in 1848. He succeeded to the vast family estate in 1890, having for many years helped his father in the management of it. He was admitted to the Bar in 1875, after which he devoted three years to politics. In 1882 he was appointed United States Minister to Italy. He came to London in 1891, and in October, 1893, effected the purchase of the Pall Mall Gazette and Budget, which was the event of the journalistic year. (See COOKE.) During the same year he bought Cliveden, the Duke of Westminster's estate on the Thames.

ATKINSON, The Rev. John Christopher, D.C.L., was born at Goldhanger, in Essex, in 1814, and received his education at Kelvedon, in that county, and at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1838). He was appointed vicar of Danby, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, and Domestic Chaplain to the late Viscount Downe in 1847, and Chaplain to the High Sheriff of Yorkshire in 1851. Dr. Atkinson is the author of "Walks, Talks, &c., of Two Schoolboys," 1859; "Playhours and Half-holidays," 1860; "Sketches in Natural History," 1861; "Eggs and Nests of British Birds," 1861; "Stanton Grange; or, Life at a Private Tutor's," 1864; "A Glossary of the Cleveland Dialect," 1868; "Lost; or, what Came of a Slip from Honour Bright," 1869; besides many papers on archæological and philological subjects in the "Proceedings" of various learned societies. For some time he was engaged on "The History of Cleveland, Ancient and Modern," partly published, and he has since edited the Chartularies of Whitby, in two volumes, for the Surtees Society, the Chartulary of Rievaulx Abbey, for the same series, and the Furness Coucher Book, in three volumes. Previous to the completion of the Furness and Rievaulx Chartularies, he had issued "A Handbook of Ancient Whitby and its Abbey." In the year 1887 he had the honorary degree of D.C.L. conferred upon him by the University of Durham "in recognition of his many services to literature."

ATLAY, The Right Rev. James, D.D., Bishop of Hereford, was born at Wakerley, Northamptonshire, in 1817, and after a preliminary training at Grantham and Oakham Schools, entered St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a Fellowship. He was vicar of Madingley, near Cambridge, from 1847 to 1852, and Queen's Preacher at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, from 1856 to 1858. He occupied the position of a senior tutor in his college at the time he was elected to the vicarage of Leeds out of 38 candidates, by the trustees of the vicarage, who are 25 in number. This was in 1859, when the Rev. Dr. Hook, the former vicar of Leeds, was appointed to the deanery of Chichester. Dr. Atlay was appointed a Canon of Ripon in 1861; and in 1868 was nominated by the Crown to the See of Hereford, in succession to Dr. Hampden. He married in 1859 Frances Turner, younger daughter of Major William Martin, of the Bengal Army.

ATTFIELD, Professor John, M.A. and Ph.D. of the University of Tübingen, F.R.S., Professor of Practical Chemistry to the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, was born near Barnet, Hertfordshire, on Aug. 28, 1835. His first taste for science was given by the physical and chemical lectures of his schoolmaster, the Rev. Alex. Stewart, at Barnet. In 1850 he was articled to Mr. W. F. Smith, manufacturing pharmaceutical chemist, London. In 1853-4 he was a student in the Pharmaceutical Society's School, and First Prizeman in all subjects—chemistry, botany, pharmacy, and materia medica. From 1854 to 1862 he was Demonstrator of Chemistry at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and lecture-assistant and research-assistant to the Professors of Chemistry there, namely, to Dr. Stenhouse, F.R.S., for three years, and afterwards for five years to Dr. Frankland, F.R.S., at the hospital, and, concurrently, at the Addiscombe Military College and the Royal Institution. During the same period he wrote most of the chemical articles in "Brande's Dictionary of Art, Science, and Literature," and in the Arts and Sciences Division of the "English Cyclopædia," besides being a frequent scientific contributor to several journals and newspapers. In 1862 he took his University degrees, his thesis being an account of an original research "On the Spectrum of Carbon," a paper read before the Royal Society, and published in the "Philosophical Transactions." In the same year he was appointed to the Chair of Practical Chemistry in the Pharmaceutical Society's School, where he was the first Dean, and is now (1895) senior professor. From 1860 onwards he wrote frequently on the subject of "Fire," both in scientific treatises and in a series of long letters to the Times, resulting in useful legislation and other public action, and in many appeals to him as an authority on the origin and causes of conflagrations. Dr. Attfield has always advocated the displacement of our existing system of weights and measures by the metric decimal system, which is already legalised permissively in Great Britain, and is rapidly being adopted by civilised nations. He was for some time on the Council of the Metric Decimal Association. He is a Fellow, and was for several years on the Council, of the Chemical Society; is a Fellow, was one of the founders, and was for several years on the Council of the Institute of Chemistry of Great Britain and Ireland; is a Life Member, and on the General Committee, of the British Association for the Advancement of Science; is a Fellow of the Society of Chemical Industry; was for two years President of the Hertfordshire Natural History Society; was one of the five founders, for seventeen years Senior Secretary, and for two years President, of the British Pharmaceutical Conference, an organization for the encouragement of original research in pharmacy, each of his presidential addresses "On the Relations of Pharmacy and the State" drawing supporting editorial articles from the Times and from twenty or thirty other leading newspapers; the members, on his retirement, presenting him with an illuminated vellum and five hundred specially bound volumes of general literature. He was Secretary of the Food Jury at the International Health Exhibition in 1884, and, as some recognition of his services, the Council of the Exhibition presented him with eighteen bound volumes of their collected literature. He also wrote the Exhibition Handbook on "Water and Water Supplies," which has now reached a third edition. He has written largely on pharmaceutical education, and the relation of education to examination, his views, especially as regards compulsory public curricula, having gradually won the support of all leading pharmacists. The present chemical nomenclature of the Pharmacopœias of Great Britain and the United States was adopted on his recommendation and long advocacy. His great work is "A Manual of Chemistry: General, Medical and Pharmaceutical," of which there have been published fifteen large editions in twenty-six years, eight being adapted to British, and seven to American medical and pharmaceutical requirements. For this book he was awarded a gold medal at the Exhibition in Vienna in 1883. He was the author of published lectures on the first (1864) British Pharmacopœia; was appointed, by the General Council of Medical Education and Registration of the United Kingdom, one of the three editors of the "British Pharmacopœia of 1885;" has since been the Annual Reporter on the "Pharmacopœia" to the Council, and was sole editor of the 1890 Addendum to the "Pharmacopœia." In the production of the latter he successfully brought about the recognised co-operation of the followers of medicine on the one hand and pharmacy on the other, the General Medical Council representing the medical practitioners of Great Britain while the Pharmaceutical Society represented the body of chemists and druggists; co-operation that is to be maintained in the compilation of the next and doubtless all future editions of the great medicine-book. For this service he received the public thanks both of the Medical Council and of the Pharmaceutical Society. The Medical Council have appointed him sole editor of the next edition of the "British Pharmacopœia," and have adopted his suggestion to give the work imperial extension of usefulness in the Colonies and India. In the Royal Society's Catalogue Dr. Attfield appears as author of thirty-seven original scientific papers, mostly of pharmaceutical interest, published in the "Transactions" of the Royal, Chemical, and Pharmaceutical Societies. His scientific and educational work has gained for him not only the much coveted honour of being a Fellow of the Royal Society, but also the following twenty-three honorary distinctions:—Honorary Member of the Pharmaceutical Societies of Great Britain, Paris, St. Petersburg, Austria, Denmark, East Flanders, Switzerland, Australasia, New South Wales, and Queensland; of the American Pharmaceutical Association; of the Colleges of Pharmacy of Philadelphia, New York, Massachusetts, Chicago, Maryland, and Ontario; and of the Pharmaceutical Associations of New Hampshire, Virginia, Liverpool, Manchester, Georgia, and the Province of Quebec. At the Chicago College the chief lecture theatre is named "Attfield Hall," and his portrait in oils is hung on the College walls "in recognition of his aid in raising the College from its ashes after the great fire of 1871, and of his unselfish devotion to the cause of education." Professor Attfield is a chemical analyst and consultant, as well as teacher. He is the honorary consulting chemist and analyst to the London Orphan Asylum and the Ventnor Consumption Hospital. He resides at "Ashlands," Watford, Hertfordshire, and is a namesake and probable descendant of the John Attfield who flourished in "the Ville of Staundon" (now Standon), Hertfordshire, in the fourteenth century.—His son, Dr. Donald Harvey Attfield, M.A., M.B., B.C., Cantab., and holding the diploma of Public Health of the same University, was born on June 9, 1866, and is English Quarantine Medical Officer at the port of Suez, the adjacent Sanatorium of Moses Wells, and the Mecca and Medina Pilgrim Encampment at El Tor, on the Gulf of Suez. He is the author of published papers on "An Investigation of the Natural Solidified Sodium Sulphate Lakes of Wyoming, U.S.A.," "The Destruction of Bacteria in Polluted River Water by Infusoria," "The Treatment of Chronic Gastric Affections by aid of the Siphon Stomach Tube."

AUDIFFRET-PASQUIER, Edmé Armand Gaston, Duc d', a French politician, was born in 1823. His father, the Comte d'Audiffret, under the Restoration, was Director of Customs, Director of the National Debt, Councillor of State, and afterwards Receiver-General. His uncle, the Marquis d'Audiffret, was a Peer of France, and President of the Cour des Comptes. The name of d'Audiffret is that of an old family of Dauphiné, and their armorial bearings were to be seen in the Crusades. The Comte d'Audiffret, father of the present Duke, married the daughter of M. Pasquier, Director-General to the Tobacco Manufactories, and brother to the Chancellor Pasquier. It is from the latter, who died without issue, and who had adopted him in 1844, that the subject of this memoir derives his ducal title. In 1845 young d'Audiffret, scarcely 22 years old, entered the Council of State as Auditor, and married Mademoiselle Fontenilliat, daughter of the Receiver-General of the Gironde. Successive family afflictions deprived him of his children and induced him to wish for a retired life; and M. d'Audiffret went to live in Normandy on an estate which belonged to him. Here he passed 20 years of his life, occupied with agricultural and with political studies, in the midst of his books, the old library of the d'Audiffret family being one of the most ample literary collections which any individual could possess. In 1858 he presented himself for election to the Council-General, and in 1866 and 1869 to the Corps Législatif. On every occasion the battle was strongly contested. Victorious the first time, the candidate was beaten on the two other occasions by the efforts of official pressure. After the fall of the Empire he was elected to the National Assembly in the Conservative interest by the Department of the Orme (Feb. 8th, 1871), and voted with the Right Centre. He was nominated president of the Commission on Purchases, and in this capacity acquired sudden renown by the masterly way in which he encountered in debate M. Rouher, the champion of the fallen dynasty. By his eloquence he soon acquired a great and strong position in the Assembly. He was one of the principal originators of the downfall of M. Thiers, but he had assumed an attitude which would not permit of his being included in a ministry of which Bonapartists were members. After the check given to the proposed Monarchical Restoration, the Duke, as president of the Right Centre, was among those who supported the Septennate, and who powerfully contributed, in conjunction with his brother-in-law, M. Casimir-Perier, to the solution of Feb. 25, 1875. On the formation of the Buffet Ministry, he was elected President of the National Assembly. On Dec. 9, 1875, the Duc d'Audiffret-Pasquier who, a few days previous, had joined the Left Centre, was the first person who was elected a Life Senator by the Assembly, by a majority amounting to four-fifths of all the votes recorded. In the sitting of March 13, 1876, he was elected President of the Senate. He continued to hold that office till Jan., 1879, after the Senatorial elections, which gave the Republicans a majority in the Upper Chamber. On Dec. 26, 1878, he was elected to the seat in the French Academy lately filled by Mgr. Dupanloup. Of the 27 members present 22 voted for him, and 5 abstained from voting.

AUFRECHT, Professor Theodor, LL.D., M.A., an Orientalist, was born at Leschnitz, Silesia, Jan. 7, 1822, and educated in the University of Berlin. He was appointed Professor of Sanskrit and Comparative Philology in the University of Edinburgh in 1862. On April 21, 1875, that university conferred on him the degree of LL.D., and shortly afterwards he left Scotland for Bonn, where he had been appointed Professor of Sanskrit. Professor Aufrecht has published "A Complete Glossary to the Rig Veda, with constant reference to the Atharva Veda;" "De Accentu Compositorum Sanskritorum," 1847; "Halayudha's Abhidhanaratnamala; a Sanskrit Vocabulary, edited with a complete Sanskrit-English Glossary;" "The Hymns of the Rig Veda, transcribed into English letters," 2 vols.; and "Ujjvaladatta's Commentary, the Unadistras," from a manuscript in the Library of the East India House, 1859.

AUMALE (Duc d'), Henri-Eugène-Philippe-Louis d'Orléans, prince of the family of Orleans, born in Paris, Jan. 16, 1822, the fourth son of the late king Louis-Philippe and his queen Marie-Amélie, was educated, like his brothers, in the Collége Henri IV., and at the age of seventeen entered the army. In 1840 he accompanied his brother, the Duke of Orleans, to Algeria, took part in the campaign which followed, returning to France in 1841, and completed his military education at Courbevoie. From 1842 to 1843 he was again in Algeria, where, at the head of the subdivision of Medeah, he conducted one of the most brilliant campaigns of the war, capturing the camp and all the correspondence of Abd-el-Kader, together with 3,600 prisoners and an immense treasure, for which service he was made a lieutenant-general, and appointed to the command of the province of Constantine. In 1844 he directed the expedition against Biskarah, and in the same year married Marie Caroline Auguste de Bourbon, daughter of Prince Leopold of Salerno, who was born April 26, 1822. She died at Twickenham, Dec. 6, 1869. In 1847 the Duke succeeded Marshal Bugeaud as Governor-General of Algeria, which position he filled upon the surrender of Abd-el-Kader to the French authorities. On receiving the news of the revolution of Feb., 1848, he resigned his command to General Cavaignac, and joined the ex-royal family in England. With his brother, the Prince de Joinville, he protested against the decree banishing his family from France, and afterwards resided chiefly in England, devoting himself to literary pursuits. At the beginning of 1861, a pamphlet, addressed by him to Prince Jérôme Napoleon Bonaparte, excited great sensation, and led to a species of political persecution by the French authorities, who condemned the printer and publisher of it to fine and imprisonment. The duke challenged Prince Napoleon, whose refusal to meet him excited great indignation in France. The same year the Literary Fund of London invited the duke to preside at their annual dinner, on which occasion his speech also excited attention. The Duc d'Aumale, who, as heir to the great house of Condé, possesses an ample fortune, owns a beautiful seat on the banks of the Thames, near Twickenham, and a fine estate in Worcestershire, where he formerly occupied his time as a practical agriculturist. He is also the owner of a superb collection of works of art, and lately bought from the family of Lord Dudley "The Three Graces," a little picture by Raphael, for the enormous price of 25,000 guineas. Shortly before the elections for the National Assembly on Feb. 8, 1871, the Duc d'Aumale, who, during the Franco-German war, had in vain sought permission to serve in the French army, addressed from London a proclamation to the electors of the Department of the Oise, in which, while declaring his preference for a constitutional monarchy, he stated his willingness to bow to the national will, if a Liberal Republic were adopted as the form of government. His candidature was successful, but he did not return to France until after the law banishing the members of the Orleans family was repealed on June 8. He did not take his seat in the Assembly until Dec. 19, 1871. Previous to this, in Oct., 1871, he had been chosen President of the Council-General of the Oise. He was elected a member of the French Academy, Dec. 30, 1871, by 27 votes against 1, in succession to the illustrious Montalembert. The Duc d'Aumale was nominated a General of Division, Mar. 10, 1872, and in this capacity he presided over the Council of War before which Marshal Bazaine was arraigned. At the elections for the Assembly in Feb., 1876, the Duc d'Aumale declined to come forward again as a candidate in order that he might devote his undivided attention to his military command. The first two volumes of his "Histoire des Princes de la Maison de Condé," appeared in 1869, and were translated into English by Mr. Robert Brown-Borthwick. The Duc d'Aumale was elected a member of the Academy of Fine Arts, Feb. 14, 1880. His eldest son, Louise-Philippe-Marie-Léopold d'Orléans, Prince de Condé, born in 1845, died in June, 1866. His second son, François-Louis-Marie-Philippe d'Orléans, Duke of Guise, was born at Twickenham, Jan. 5, 1854, and died in France, July 25, 1872. After the passing of the Bill of Expulsion against the head of his family, the Duc d'Aumale was struck off the French Army List by the Minister of War, General Boulanger, and withdrew from France. Much sensation was caused soon afterwards by the publication of some letters in which the same General, on his promotion, had effusively thanked "Monseigneur" for his good offices. Soon after he had left France, it was discovered that he had given his château of Chantilly, with all the priceless treasures it contained, to the Institute, in trust for the French nation. The decree banishing the duke from France was revoked in March, 1889, and the Duc returned to Chantilly, in which he had reserved a life interest for himself. The same month he was elected President of the French Academy for three months. In 1891 he was made Hon. D.C.L. of Oxford. In 1889 appeared vol. v. of his history of the "Princes de Condé."

AUSTIN, Alfred, poet, critic, and journalist, was born at Headingley, near Leeds, May 30, 1835. His father was a merchant and magistrate of the borough of Leeds, and his mother was the sister of Joseph Locke, the eminent civil engineer, and M.P. for the borough of Honiton, of which he was lord of the manor. Both his parents being Roman Catholics, he was sent to Stonyhurst College, and afterwards to St. Mary's College, Oscott. From Oscott he took his degree at the University of London in 1853; and in 1857 he was called to the Bar of the Inner Temple. But the publication, though anonymously, of a poem called "Randolph," at the age of eighteen, showed the bent of his disposition; and it may be stated on the authority of Mr. Austin himself, that he ostensibly embraced the study of the law only in deference to the wishes of his parents, and from his earliest years was imbued with the desire and the determination to devote his life mainly to literature. The expression of this resolve may be found in a novel written and published while he was yet a minor. On the death of his father, in 1861, he quitted the Northern Circuit, and went to Italy. His first acknowledged volume of verse, "The Season: a Satire," appeared in 1861. A third and revised edition of "The Season" appeared in 1869. His other poetical productions are:—"The Human Tragedy: a Poem," 1862, republished in an amended form 1876, and again finally revised in 1889; "The Golden Age: a Satire," 1871; "Interludes," 1872; "Rome or Death!" 1873; "Madonna's Child," 1873; "The Tower of Babel," a drama, 1874; "Leszko the Bastard: a Tale of Polish Grief," 1877; "Savonarola," a tragedy, 1881; "Soliloquies in Song," "At the Gate of the Convent," "Love's Widowhood, and other Poems," "Prince Lucifer," and "English Lyrics," all published between the years 1881 and 1890. He has published three novels:—"Five Years of It," 1858; "An Artist's Proof," 1864; and "Won by a Head," 1866; also "The Poetry of the Period," reprinted from Temple Bar, 1870; and "A Vindication of Lord Byron," 1869, occasioned by Mrs. Stowe's article, "The True Story of Lord Byron's Life." He has written much for the Standard newspaper and for the Quarterly Review. During the sittings of the Œcumenical Council of the Vatican, he represented the Standard at Rome, and he was a special correspondent of that journal at the headquarters of the King of Prussia in the Franco-German War. His political writings include "Russia before Europe," 1876; "Tory Horrors," 1876, a reply to Mr. Gladstone's "Bulgarian Horrors;" and "England's Policy and Peril; a letter to the Earl of Beaconsfield," 1877. In 1883, in conjunction with Mr. W. J. Courthope, he founded The National Review, and continued to edit that periodical till the summer of 1893. In 1892, Messrs. Macmillan issued a collected edition of his poems in six volumes; since which time they have published "Fortunatus the Pessimist," and "England's Darling, and other Poems," and a prose work entitled, "The Garden that I Love."

AUSTRIA, Emperor of. See FRANCIS JOSEPH I.

AYLMER-GOWING, Mrs. Emilia, née Blake, daughter of an eminent Queen's Counsel of Dublin, who died when she was a child, is, through her mother, the representative of the second branch of the Aylmers, and was born in Bath, Oct., 1846. Miss Blake received a classical education under her mother's care, partly in Brighton, partly in Paris, where she early rose into note as a poet and reciter in French, under the auspices of Lamartine. While yet in her teens her "Leon de Beaumanoir," a Breton story in blank verse, met with favourable criticism, and was followed, after an apprenticeship to the stage in the provinces, by several dramas, of which "A Life Race," and "A Crown for Love," were successfully produced in London. She is also not undistinguished as a writer and reciter of dramatic verse. Her "Ballads and Poems," and "The Cithern," have become popular. Amongst a varied range of literary work, her two novels, "The Jewel Reputation," and "An Unruly Spirit," have made their mark. She published "Ballads of the Tower, and other Poems," in 1891. Miss Aylmer Blake was married, in 1877, to Mr. William Gowing, known in the artistic world as "Walter Gordon," who assumed, under family arrangement, the additional surname of Aylmer.

AYRTON, Professor W. E., F.R.S., born in London, 1847, is the son of the late Mr. E. N. Ayrton, M.A., Barrister. He was educated at University College School, where he gained numerous prizes, and entering subsequently into the College, gained the Andrews Exhibition in 1865 and the Andrews Scholarship in 1866. Passing the examination, with honours, for his first B.A. in 1867, Mr. Ayrton in the same year came out first in the Entrance Examination for the Indian Government Telegraph Service. He was then sent by the Secretary of State for India to study electrical engineering with Prof. Sir William Thomson (now Lord Kelvin), coming out first at the Advanced Examination for the Indian Government Telegraph Service, and won the Scholarship. When in India Prof. Ayrton acted first as the Assistant Electrical Superintendent, and subsequently as the Electrical Superintendent in the Government Telegraph Department, introducing, with the late Mr. Schwendler, throughout British India, a complete system of immediately determining the position of a fault in the longest telegraph line by electrically testing at one end. In 1872-3 Prof. Ayrton was on special duty in England on behalf of the Indian Government Telegraph Department, and in charge of the Great Western Telegraph Manufactory in London, on behalf of the Engineers, Prof. Sir William Thomson and the late Prof. Fleeming Jenkin. From the latter year until 1879 Prof. Ayrton was the Professor of Natural Philosophy and of Telegraphy at the Imperial College of Engineering, Japan, the largest English-speaking Technical University in existence at that date. In 1879 he was appointed Professor of Applied Physics at the City and Guilds of London Technical College, Finsbury, and in 1884 the Chief Professor of Physics at the Central Institution, South Kensington, of the City and Guilds of London Institute; in 1880 a Secretary of the Mathematical and Physical Section of the British Association; and in 1881 was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. Prof. Ayrton is a Past President of the Physical Society, a Past President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, a Member of Council of the Royal Society and of the British Association; he has been a Juror in the majority of the Electrical Exhibitions in England and abroad; was a Judge in the Electrical Department at the Chicago Exhibition; and one of the British Government Delegates to the Electrical Congress there; is joint editor of Cassell's "Manuals of Technology," and the author of "Practical Electricity," the most recently published work in this series, but already in its seventh edition. His lecture on the "Electric Transmission of Power," given at the meeting of the British Association at Bath, in 1888, was so much appreciated that, at the request of the town, this lecture was repeated to an audience of 3,000, the only time in the annals of the British Association that one of their lectures has been repeated. With Prof. Perry he is the joint inventor of the well-known Ammeters, Voltmeters, Electric Power Meter, Ohmmeter, Dispersion-Photometer, Transmission-Dynamometer, Dynamometer Coupling, Governed Electric Motor, Oblique Coiled Dynamo Machine, and Secohmmeter; and with the late Prof. Fleeming Jenkin and Prof. Perry, of the system of Automatic Electric Transport known as "Telpherage." Over 100 Papers published in the Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society, Physical Society, Institution of Electrical Engineers, and other societies have been contributed by Prof. Ayrton conjointly with Prof. Perry and others, of which some of the most important are:—"The Specific Inductive Capacity of Gases;" "The Contact Theory of Voltaic Action;" "A New Determination of the Ratio of the Electromagnet to the Electrostatic Unit of Quantity;" "A Duplex Partial Earth Test;" "Electricity as a Motive Power;" "Experiments on the Heat Conduction of Stone;" "On a Neglected Principle that may be Employed in Earthquake Measurements;" "The Magic Mirror of Japan;" "Electric Railways;" "Measuring Instruments used in Electric Lighting and Transmission of Power;" "Economic Use of Gas Engines;" "Electromotors and their Government;" "A New Form of Spring for Electric and other Measuring Instruments;" "The Gas Engine Indicator Diagram;" "The Most Economical Potential Difference to use with Incandescent Lamps;" "The Winding of Voltmeters;" "Economy in Electrical Conductors;" "Uniform Distribution of Power from an Electrical Conductor;" "Modes of Measuring the Coëfficients of Self and Mutual Induction;" "The Driving of Dynamos with Very Short Belts;" "Portable Voltmeters for Measuring Alternate or Direct Potential Differences;" "The Magnetic Circuit in the Dynamo;" "The Efficiency of Incandescent Lamps with Direct and Alternate Currents;" "Measurement of the Power given by any Current to any Circuit;" "Quadrant Electrometers;" "The Thermal Emissivity of Thin Wires;" "The Efficiency of Transformers and the Regulation of Transformers at Different Frequencies;" "Variation of the P. D. of the Electric Arc with Current, Size of Carbons and Distance Apart;" "The Design and Construction of Electrostatic Instruments." Professor Ayrton, with Prof. Perry, has also taken out twenty-six patents in Great Britain, several of them also in France, Germany, America, and other foreign countries, and he is also a co-patentee with Mr. Mather of their well-known Electrostatic Voltmeters and Moving Coil Galvanometers.

BAB. See GILBERT, WILLIAM SCHWENCK.

BABINGTON, Professor Charles Cardale, M.A., F.R.S., F.S.A., F.L.S., F.G.S., son of the late Rev. Joseph Babington, M.A., L.M., and grandson of Thomas Babington, Esq., of Rothley Temple, Leicestershire, was born at Ludlow in 1808, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1830; M.A. 1833). He is Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge, and he was elected to a professorial fellowship at St. John's College in Oct., 1882. Professor Babington is well known as a naturalist, and has published "Flora Bathoniensis," "The Flora of the Channel Islands," a "Manual of British Botany," which has passed through eight editions, "Flora of Cambridgeshire," "The British Rubi," also many botanical articles in the scientific journals. In addition to these works he has published "A History of the Chapel of St. John's College, Cambridge," 1874; and has contributed "Ancient Cambridgeshire" (1883), and other papers, to the publications of the Cambridge Antiquarian and other societies.

BACON, The Right Honourable Sir James, P.C., was born in 1798, and is the eldest son of the late Mr. James Bacon, barrister-at-law of the Middle Temple. He was called to the Bar at Gray's Inn, in 1827, and afterwards became a member of Lincoln's Inn, of which he is still a bencher. He obtained a silk gown in 1846, and in 1868 he was appointed Commissioner of Bankruptcy for the London District, and continued to hold that office till the end of 1869, when he was appointed Chief Judge in Bankruptcy. In August, 1870, he succeeded to the Vice-Chancellorship vacated by Sir William Milbourne James, and in 1875 was made a Judge of the High Court of Justice, Chancery Division. He continued in active work up to Nov., 1886, when he resigned the Vice-Chancellorship. As a Judge his sayings were often memorable, and his judgments seldom reversed. Sir James Bacon was appointed a Member of the Privy Council upon his retirement.

BADEN, Grand Duke of. See FREDERICK WILLIAM LOUIS.

BADEN-POWELL, Sir George Smyth, M.P., K.C.M.G., F.R.S., was born at Oxford on Dec. 24, 1847. His grandfather, Baden-Powell, of Langton, a much respected Kentish squire, was high sheriff of his county in 1832. His father was the well-known Rev. Baden-Powell, Professor of Geometry in the University of Oxford, whose magnum opus was written to demonstrate that Science and Revelation are in harmony rather than antagonistic. He was one of the most illustrious of the contributors to Essays and Reviews. Sir George's mother is a daughter of the distinguished Admiral W. H. Smyth, K.S.F., D.C.L., F.R.S. Sir George was educated at St. Paul's School; at Marlborough, under the present Dean of Westminster, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated in honours in 1876, winning the Chancellor's prize for the English Essay. In the interlude between his leaving Marlborough and taking up his residence at Balliol he spent three years in making a prolonged sojourn in India and Australia, and visiting the Cape and foreign lands, and the principal cities on the continent of Europe. The first year of his university career saw published his "New Homes for the Old Country: a Personal Experience of the Political and Domestic Life, the Industries, and the Natural History of Australia and New Zealand." This important book—which was truly of imperial interest—was very favourably and generally noticed by the press, the Times, in a review of three columns, pronouncing it "a standard work," and the Athenæum declaring it to be "an encyclopædia of Australian knowledge." He was also diligently applying himself to the study of the relations of the Upper and Lower Houses of Colonial Legislature; the effect of our tariff on the colonial wine industry; the defence of our colonies; and the questions involved in our commercial treaties with France and Spain. During these years he published his two well-known books on political economy, "Protection and Bad Times," and "State Aid and State Interference." In 1877 he was serving as private secretary to Sir George Bowen, Governor of Victoria. During 1880-81,

Sir George Baden-Powell went to the West India Islands to investigate for himself the actual effect of the Sugar Bounty System on West India Sugar Planting. In Nov., 1882, Mr. Gladstone's Government offered him the post of joint Commissioner with Col. Sir W. Crossman, R.E., to inquire into and report on the administration, revenues, and expenditure of our West India Colonies. Accepting this honourable task he again left England for the West Indies, returning home in the following summer to work out all the questions referred to the Commissioners, and the Report, contained in five Blue Books, concluded by Easter, 1884, is regarded as a complete summary of West Indian affairs. For this work he was created a C.M.G. In Jan., 1885, he went to South Africa, and joined Sir Charles Warren in Bechuanaland, assisting him in his diplomatic negotiations with the native chiefs; made a tour of investigation into the affairs of Basutoland, Zululand, and other places, and returned to England at the beginning of 1885. In the winter of 1886-7 Mr. Baden-Powell was in Canada and in the United States, drawing up a clear statement of all the facts and details of the Fishery Dispute, of which Mr. Chamberlain was subsequently commissioned to negotiate a final arrangement. In the autumn of 1887 Sir George was sent by the Government to Malta as the colleague of Sir George Bowen, G.C.M.G., as Special Commissioner to arrange the details of the new Malta Constitution. He was, at the same time, offered the honour of knighthood for his previous Colonial and especially his South African services. In 1885 he first stood for Parliament, becoming member for the Kirkdale Division of Liverpool. He was re-elected in 1886 and 1892. In Parliament he is a well-known authority on all matters of foreign, colonial, and naval policy. In June, 1891, Lord Salisbury appointed him British Commissioner in the complicated Behring Sea Inquiry, and he was several months in Alaska, Behring Sea, and Kamtchatka, making the necessary investigations. In Dec., 1892, he was appointed British Member of the Joint Commission in Washington, and, on returning to England in the spring of 1893, he was appointed to advise in the preparation and conduct of the British case then before the arbitrators in Paris. He is an industrious author, as the following more detailed list of his published writings will show:—"New Homes for the Old Country: A Personal Experience of the Political and Domestic Life, the Industries, and the Natural History of Australia and New Zealand," 1872; "The Political and Social Results of the Absorption of Small States by Large," 1876; "Protection and Bad Times," with special reference to the new British Empire, 1879; "State Aid and State Interference," 1882; "The Truth about Home Rule," essays on the Irish Question by leading Unionists, 1888; besides numerous articles in the Quarterly, Westminster, Nineteenth Century, Fortnightly, Contemporary, National, and Fraser, dealing with the Australian Constitutions; Imperial Defence; Import Duties; Fiscal Policy; various details of West Indian, South African, and Colonial Policy; Industries in the United States; Sugar Bounties; Canadian Commercial Policy; Imperial Federation; German Colonial Expansion; The Imperial Institute; Fifty Years of Colonial Growth; The Expansion of the Queen's Title; Practical Tory Administration; Coast Defence; Colonial Home Rule; Self Government versus Home Rule; and several series of articles and letters in the Times and other papers dealing with political, fiscal, and commercial affairs in our Colonies and the United States, and other similar subjects. Of his public addresses the following are the most notable:—"On Tariffs and Commercial Treaties," and "On Local Option," before the Social Science Congress, 1881; "Protectionist Victoria and Free Trade New South Wales," before the British Association, 1881; "Tariff Reform in the British Empire," before the British Association, 1882; "Scheme for the Complete Defence of the Empire," before the Royal Colonial Institute, 1882; "The Maintenance of the Political Unity of the Empire," before the Royal Colonial Institute, 1884; "Africa South of the Equator," before a Special Meeting of the London Chamber of Commerce, 1885; "War Risk at Sea," before the Colonial Exhibition Conference, 1886; "Emigration," before the Working Men's College, 1886; "The Commercial Relations of the Empire," before a Special Meeting, at the Mansion House, of the Colonial Conference Delegates, 1887; "Colonial Government Securities," before the Royal Colonial Institute, 1887; "Territorial Waters" and "Ocean Fishery Rights," before Conferences of the Association for the Modification of the Law of Nations, in 1887 and 1889.

BAILEY, Philip James, son of Thomas Bailey, author of the "Annals of Notts," who died in 1856, was born at Nottingham, April 22, 1816. Having been educated at various schools in his native town, he in 1831 matriculated at the University of Glasgow, where he studied for two sessions under Professors Buchanan, Sir D. K. Sandford, Thomson, and Milne. In 1833 he began to study the law, was admitted a member of Lincoln's Inn in 1835, and called to the Bar in 1840. Having little inclination for legal pursuits, Mr. Bailey before this time had carried on an extensive and varied course of reading in the libraries of the British Museum and Lincoln's Inn, as well as at home. He was accustomed to the composition of verse from early years. "Festus," conceived and planned originally in 1836, and published in 1839, was well received in this country and in America, where it has passed through many editions. The 11th, or Jubilee edition (so called, from the fact that it was issued fifty years after the first edition), with a prose preface explanatory of the purpose of the poem, was published by Messrs. Routledge in 1889. "The Angel World," 1850; "The Mystic," 1855; "The Universal Hymn," 1867; all since mainly incorporated with "Festus;" "The Age," a Satire, 1858; and a prose work on the international policy of the Great Powers, with a few minor and miscellaneous poems, comprise nearly the whole of Mr. Bailey's contributions to contemporary literature.

BAIN, Professor Alexander, LL.D., born at Aberdeen in 1818, entered Marischal College in 1836, where he took the degree of M.A. in 1840. From 1841 to 1844 he taught, as deputy, the class of Moral Philosophy in Marischal College; from 1844 to 1845 the Natural Philosophy Class. In 1845 he was elected Professor of Natural Philosophy in the Andersonian University, Glasgow, but retired at the end of a year. In 1847 he was appointed by the Metropolitan Sanitary Commissioners their Assistant-Secretary, and in 1848 became Assistant-Secretary to the General Board of Health, which post he resigned in 1850. From 1857 to 1862 he was Examiner in Logic and Moral Philosophy in the University of London. In 1858, 1859, 1860, 1863, 1864, 1868, and 1870, he acted as Examiner in Moral Science at the India Civil Service Examinations. In 1860 he was appointed by the Crown Professor of Logic in the University of Aberdeen. In 1864 he was re-elected Examiner in the University of London, and continued to hold that position till 1869. His first literary production was an article, in 1840, in the Westminster Review, to which he has since contributed at various times. In 1847-48 he wrote text-books on Astronomy, Electricity, and Meteorology, in Messrs. Chambers's school series, several of Chambers's "Papers for the People," and the articles on Language, Logic, the Human Mind, and Rhetoric in the "Information for the People." In 1852 he published an edition of the "Moral Philosophy of Paley," with dissertations and notes. "The Senses and the Intellect" appeared in 1855, and "The Emotions and the Will," completing a systematic exposition of the human mind, in 1859; both works are now in their third editions. "The Study of Character, including an Estimate of Phrenology," was published in 1861, an English Grammar in 1863, and a "Manual of English Composition and Rhetoric" in 1866. His more recent works are: "Mental and Moral Science," 1868; "Logic, Deductive and Inductive," 1870; "Mind and Body; Theories of their Relation," 1873; a collection of "The Minor Works of George Grote, with Critical Remarks on his Intellectual Character, Writings, and Speeches," 1873; "A Companion to the Higher English Grammar," 1874; "Education as a Science," 1879; "James Mill, a Biography," "John Stuart Mill, a Criticism, with Personal Recollections," 1882; and "Practical Essays," 1884. In 1880 he retired from the Logic chair of Aberdeen University. In 1881 he was elected, by the students, Lord Rector of the University, and again elected in 1884. In 1887 appeared Part I. of a revised and enlarged edition of the "Manual of Rhetoric," being devoted to the "Intellectual Qualities of Style;" accompanying which was a volume on "Teaching English." The year following, 1888, was published Part II. of the "Rhetoric," on the "Emotional Qualities."

BAIRD, Lieutenant-Colonel Andrew Wilson, R.E., F.R.S., A.I.C.E., F.R.G.S., born at Aberdeen, April 26, 1842, is the son of the late Mr. Thomas Baird, of Woodlands, Cults, and was educated at Marischal College and University, and was for some years a pupil of Dr. Rennet, LL.D., the Mathematical Tutor in Aberdeen. Entering Addiscombe College as a Cadet of the Hon. E. India Co.'s service in the beginning of 1860, he was transferred to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, at the end of the year, and obtained a commission in the Corps of Royal Engineers in Dec., 1861. After having finished his course of military engineering studies at Chatham, Lieutenant Baird proceeded to India in Feb., 1864, and served under the Bombay Government; he was employed as Special Assistant in the Harbour Defences at Bombay, and held charge of the construction of the Middle Ground and Oyster Rock Batteries at various times between April, 1864, and December, 1865, when he was appointed as Special Assistant Engineer in the Government Reclamations which were being carried out on the foreshore of the harbour. From January till July, 1868, Lieutenant Baird was employed as Assistant Field Engineer with the Abyssinian Expedition (medal), during which time he held the charge of Traffic Manager of the railway, and he was mentioned in despatches for zeal and management in bringing safely and expeditiously troops and baggage for embarkation. Shortly after his return to Bombay, Lieutenant Baird was appointed to the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India (in December, 1868). Employed successively on the triangulation in Kottywar and Guzerat, Lieutenant Baird suffered considerably from the trying work in the very hot weather, and was obliged to go on furlough to England in May, 1870, and while on furlough he was selected by General Walker, R.E. (then chief of the Great Trigonometrical Survey), and employed by order of the Secretary of State for India to study the practical details of tidal observations, and their reductions by harmonic analysis as carried on under the superintendence of Sir William Thomson for the British Association. On his return to India in April, 1872, Lieutenant Baird carried out a reconnaissance of the Gulf of Cutch, with a view to selecting sites for three Tidal Observatories, one at the mouth, and one at the head and as far into the "Runn" as possible, and one about the middle of the gulf. The tidal observatories, and the levelling operations in connection therewith, were carried out for special reasons in connection with the question of the depression of the great tract called the Runn of Cutch; and Captain Baird was sent to England to carry out the calculations for reducing the tidal observations. Returning to India in June, 1877, Captain Baird was appointed to the general superintendence and control of tidal observatories on the Indian coasts; these operations were gradually extended, until twenty tidal observatories (in India, Burmah, Ceylon, the Andaman Islands, and Aden) were working simultaneously, and as five years' work was completed at minor stations the observatories were removed to other places, and now over thirty stations have been observed at. In August and September, 1881, Captain Baird was sent as one of the Commissioners from India to the Venice Geographical Congress and Exhibition. Here the Survey of India exhibited a complete set of tidal and levelling apparatus, diagrams, &c., and was awarded a Diploma of Honour; and the Congress awarded Captain Baird a medal of the First Class for his works on tidal observations; the Secretary of State for India and the Government of India recorded their thanks to Captain Baird for his services at this Congress. After furlough in England, Major Baird returned to India in April, 1883, and resumed charge of the tidal and levelling operations until he was appointed to officiate as Mint Master of Calcutta in July, 1885; since then he has acted several times as Mint Master of Calcutta and Bombay, and in the intervals held the appointment of Assistant Surveyor-General. He was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel in December, 1888, and was confirmed as Mint Master, Calcutta, in August, 1889. For his services in the tidal research Colonel Baird was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in May, 1885. The following are the works of a public or official character which Colonel Baird has written:—Articles on the Gulf of Cutch, Little Runn, and Gulf of Cambay for the Bombay Gazeteer; Notes on the Harmonic Analysis of Tidal Observations, published by order of the Secretary of State, 1872; Paper on the Tidal Observations of the Gulf of Cutch, read before the British Association, 1876; Account of the Tidal Disturbances caused by the Volcanic Eruption at Krakatoa (Java) in August, 1883, presented to the Royal Society; Auxiliary Tables (two Pamphlets) to facilitate the calculations of Harmonic Analysis of Tidal Observations, published in India, 1879 and 1882; Joint Report with Professor G. H. Darwin, F.R.S., &c., of the results of the Harmonic Analysis of Tidal Observations, presented to the Royal Society and reprinted from their Proceedings, March, 1885; Account of the Spirit-Levelling Operations of the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India, read before the British Association in 1885, and afterwards printed among the supplementary papers of the Royal Geographical Society; Manual of Tidal Observations, published at the expense of the British Association; Tide Tables for India Ports, prepared annually by Major Baird and Mr. Roberts of the Nautical Almanac Office by order of the Secretary of State for India. Colonel Baird is also an Associate of the Institute of Civil Engineers, and a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society.

BAKER, John Gilbert, F.R.S., F.L.S., born at Guisborough, in Yorkshire, Jan. 13, 1834, was educated at schools belonging to the Society of Friends at Ackworth and York. He was appointed Assistant-Curator of the Herbarium of the Royal Gardens, Kew, in 1866, (which office he still holds,) and Lecturer and Demonstrator of Botany to the Apothecaries' Company in 1882. He was for many years Lecturer on Botany to the London Hospital, and one of the assistant editors to Seemann's Journal of Botany. Formally Mr. Baker was Curator, and afterwards Secretary, of the London Botanical Exchange Club. His works on descriptive botany are as follows: — "Synopsis Filicum," a descriptive catalogue of all known ferns, with plates of the genera—a work planned and commenced by the late Sir W. Hooker, 1868, 2nd edit. 1874; "Monograph of the Ferns of Brazil," in folio, 1870, with fifty plates; and since of the "Compositæ, Ampelideæ, and Connaraceæ," of the same country; "Revision of the Order Liliaceæ," 7 parts, 1870—80; "Monograph of the British Roses," 1869; "Monograph of the British Mints," 1865; Monographs of Papilionaceæ and other Orders in Oliver's "Flora of Tropical Africa," 1868—71; Descriptions of the Plants figured in Vols. I., III., and IV., of Saunders' "Refugium Botanicum," 1869—71; "Popular Monographs of Narcissus, Crocus, Lilium, Iris, Crinum, Aquilegia, Sempervivum, Epimedium, Tulipa, Nerine, and Agave," 1870—7; "Monograph of the Papilionaceæ of India," 1876; "Systema Iridacearum," 1877; "Flora of Mauritius and the Seychelles," 1877; "A Monograph of Hypoxidaceæ," 1879; "A Monograph of Selaginella," 1884—5; "On the Tuber-bearing Species of Solanum," 1884. The following are the titles of Mr. Baker's works on geographical botany, &c.:— "An Attempt to Classify the Plants of Britain according to their Geographical Relations," 1855; "North Yorkshire: Studies of its Botany, Geology, Climate, and Physical Geography," 1863; "A New Flora of Northumberland and Durham, with Essays on the Climate and Physical Geography of the Counties" (aided by Dr. G. R. Tate), 1868; "On the Geographical Distribution of Ferns through the World, with a Table showing the Range of each Species," 1868; "Elementary Lessons in Botanical Geography," 1875; many papers on the "Botany of Madagascar," containing descriptions of above 1,000 new species, 1881—1890; "A Flora of the English Lake District," 1885. In 1883 he edited, in conjunction with the Rev. W. Newbould, the first published edition of Watson's "Typographical Botany," 1887; "A Handbook of the Fern Allies," 1888; "A Handbook of the Amaryllideæ," 1892; and "A Handbook of the Bromeliaceæ," 1890.

BAKER, The Rev. William, D.D., Head Master of Merchant Taylors' School, youngest son of the late George Baker, Esq., of Reigate, was born at Reigate in Dec., 1841, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School and St. John's College, Oxford, of which he was some time Fellow and Tutor. He obtained a first class in classics at Moderations in 1862, and a second class in the Final Classical School in 1864, and was elected Denyer and Johnson Theological Scholar in 1866. He was appointed Head Master of Merchant Taylors' School, on the retirement of Dr. Hessey, at Christmas, 1870, and Prebendary of St. Paul's in 1880. He is the author of "A Manual of Devotion for School Boys," published in 1876; "Lectures on the Historical and Dogmatical Position of the Church of England," 1882; "A Plain Exposition of the Thirty-nine Articles," 1883; "Daily Prayers for Younger Boys," 1886.

BALFOUR, The Right Hon. Arthur James, P.C., LL.D., F.R.S., &c., son of the late James Maitland Balfour, Esq., of Whittinghame, and Lady Blanche Mary Harriet, daughter of the second Marquis of Salisbury, born July 25, 1848, educated at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A. 1873, Hon. LL.D. Edinburgh 1881, St. Andrews 1885, and Cambridge 1888); is a D.L. for East Lothian and Ross-shire; was private Secretary to the Marquis of Salisbury when Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, 1878-80; employed on special mission of Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury to Berlin, June, 1878; P.C., 1885; president of Local Government Board, June, 1885, to Jan. 1886; and secretary for Scotland, July, 1886, to March, 1887; chief secretary for Ireland, with a seat in the Cabinet from Nov. 1886 to August, 1892. After the death of Mr. W. H. Smith, Mr. Balfour succeeded him as leader of the House of Commons and First Lord of the Treasury. After the election of 1892 he became leader of the Conservative Party in the House of Commons, and as such led the opposition against the Home Rule for Ireland Bill. In April, 1893, he represented his uncle, Lord Salisbury, at the great Orange Demonstration at Belfast. He sat for Hertford Feb. 1874 to Nov. 1885, and since then he has sat for the Eastern division of Manchester. He was elected Lord Rector of St. Andrews University, Nov. 1886; was Keeper of the Privy Seal, Ireland, 1887; Chancellor of the Order of St. Patrick, 1887; vice-president of the Committee of Council on Education for Scotland; chairman of the Commission on Bi-Metallism, 1887; elected F.R.S., 1888; member of the Senate of London University, 1888; the Freedom of the City of London was conferred on him in 1888; and he was elected member of the Committee on Town Holdings, Procedure of the House of Commons, &c. He is the author of a "Defence of Philosophic Doubt," published 1879, the volume on "Golf" in the Badminton Series, and a volume of "Essays and Addresses," 1893, encyclopædic articles on musical subjects, and various magazine articles.

BALFOUR, Professor Isaac Bayley, Botanist, M.D. (Edin.), D.Sc. (Edin.), M.A. (Oxon.), F.R.S., F.R.S.E., F.L.S., F.G.S., and member of other British and foreign scientific societies, was born in Edinburgh March 31, 1853, being the second son of John Hutton Balfour, Professor of Botany in the University of Edinburgh, 1845-79. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and at the University of Edinburgh, where he was Baxter Natural Science Scholar, and graduated with honours in Science and Medicine. In 1879 he was appointed Regius Professor of Botany in the University of Glasgow, which chair he resigned on being elected in 1884 Sherardian Professor of Botany in the University of Oxford. This chair he resigned in 1888 on his receiving the appointment of Queen's Botanist in Scotland, Keeper of the Royal Botanic Garden in Edinburgh, and Regius Professor of Botany, having previously been elected Professor of Botany in the University of Edinburgh. These positions he now holds. In 1874 he was appointed, by the Royal Society, Naturalist to the Transit of Venus Expedition to Rodriguez. The natural history results of the Expedition are published in the Philosophical Transactions, vol. clxiii. (1879). In 1880 he undertook, on behalf of the Royal Society and the British Association, the exploration of the island of Socotra. Reports upon the results of the Expedition have appeared in publications of the British Association and of the Royal Institution. The botany of the island constitutes vol. xxxi. (1888) of the Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin. Prof. Balfour has contributed papers, chiefly on botanical subjects, to the various botanical journals and publications of scientific societies.

BALFOUR, The Right Hon. John Blair, Q.C., M.P., LL.D., P.C., is the son of the late Rev. Peter Balfour, minister of Clackmannan, by Jane Ramsay, daughter of Mr. John Blair of Perth. He was born at Clackmannan in 1837, and was educated at Edinburgh Academy and the University of Edinburgh. He was called to the Scottish Bar in 1861, and was appointed Solicitor-General for Scotland on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Administration in 1880. Mr. Balfour entered Parliament as M.P. for the counties of Clackmannan and Kinross, in Nov., 1880, in the place of the late Mr. W. P. Adam, on the appointment of the latter as Governor of Madras, and was again elected in Nov., 1885, in July, 1886, and in July, 1892. In Aug., 1881, he was appointed Lord Advocate for Scotland in the room of Mr. McLaren, who had been raised to the judicial bench; held the office till the resignation of Mr. Gladstone's Administration in June, 1885; was re-appointed Lord Advocate in Feb., 1886, and in 1892; was made Privy Councillor, 1883; elected Dean of the Faculty of the Advocates July, 1885, and again May, 1889, and Deputy-Lieutenant for the County of the City of Edinburgh. He is also Hon. LL.D. of the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews. Mr. Balfour has been twice married—first, in 1869, to Lilias Oswald, daughter of Lord Mackenzie (a Judge of Sessions of Scotland); and, secondly, in 1877, to the Hon. Marianne Eliza Wellwood-Moncreiff, younger daughter of Lord Moncreiff, late Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland.

BALL, The Right Hon. John Thomas, M.P., LL.D., D.C.L., eldest son of Major Benjamin Marcus Ball, was born at Dublin in 1815, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, graduating B.A. in 1836, and LL.D. in 1844. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1840, and became successively a Queen's Counsel, Queen's Advocate and Judge of the Provincial Consistorial Court of Armagh. At the general election of 1868 he was returned to the House of Commons in the Conservative interest by the University of Dublin, and for a few weeks in Nov. and Dec. of that year he was successively Solicitor-General and Attorney-General for Ireland under Mr. Disraeli's administration. In 1870 the University of Oxford conferred on him the honorary degree of D.C.L. Dr. Ball proved himself to be a ready and energetic debater by his numerous speeches on the Church Bill, the Land Bill, and other measures affecting Ireland. When the Conservatives came into power in Feb., 1874, Dr. Ball again became Attorney-General for Ireland, and at the close of that year he was appointed Lord Chancellor of Ireland. He took the oaths of office Jan. 1, 1875, and resigned in May, 1880. He has been Vice-Chancellor of the University of Dublin since Jan., 1880. He married, in 1852, Catherine, daughter of the Rev. Charles R. Elrington, Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Dublin.

BALL, Sir Robert Stawell, LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Dublin, July 1, 1840, and educated at Chester by Dr. Brindley. He was appointed University Student at Trinity College, Dublin, in 1861; Lord Rosse's Astronomer at Parsonstown in 1865; Professor of Applied Mathematics and Mechanism at the Royal College of Science for Ireland in 1867; Fellow of the Royal Society in 1873; Andrews Professor of Astronomy in the University of Dublin, Royal Astronomer of Ireland in 1874, and Lowndean Professor of Astronomy and Geometry in the University of Cambridge in 1892. He obtained the Cunningham Gold Medal of the Royal Irish Academy. He is author of the following works among others:—"The London Science Class-books on Astronomy and Mechanics," which have gone through several editions; "Theory of Screws," Dublin, 1876; "Story of the Heavens," 1885; "Time and Tide," 1889; besides many papers on mathematics, astronomy, and physical science in various publications. Several of his works have been translated into foreign languages. He has frequently lectured on Astronomy at the leading institutions in the United Kingdom. His most widely circulated work is the little volume entitled "Starland." It contains the Christmas Talks about the Stars with Juveniles at the Royal Institution of Great Britain. He is also the editor of the new Admiralty manual of scientific inquiry. He was Knighted on Jan. 25th, 1886.

BALL, Valentine, C.B., LL.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., M.R.I.A., was born in Dublin, July 14, 1843, and is the second son of the late Robert Ball, LL.D., and was educated at Dr. Brindley's, Chester, Dr. Fleury's and Dr. Benson's, Dublin, private schools, and at Trinity College, Dublin. He graduated in the University of Dublin, B.A., 1864; M.A., 1872; LL.D. (honoris causâ), 1889. He was elected Fellow of the Geological Society of London, 1874; Fellow of the Calcutta University (honoris causâ), 1875; Fellow of the Royal Society of London, 1882; and President of the Royal Geological Society of Ireland, 1882. He was appointed (1) Clerk in the Receiver Master's Office, Dublin, 1860-64; (2) to the staff of the Geological Survey of India, from 1864 to 1881 (seventeen years); (3) Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Dublin, from 1881 to 1883; (4) Director of the Science and Art Museum in 1883, which office he holds at present. Its duties include, besides the general management of the museum, the local administrative control, under the direction of the Science and Art Department, of the Metropolitan School of Art, the Royal Botanic Gardens, Glasnevin, and the National Library of Ireland. Dr. Ball is also Honorary Secretary of the Royal Zoological Society of Ireland; and Member of the Council of the Alexandra (Ladies') College, and of that of the Royal Irish Academy. In the year 1881, on the completion and opening to the public of the New Museum of Science and Art in Dublin, he was appointed by Her Majesty to the Companionship of the Bath. His published works are:—(1) "Jungle Life in India, or the Journeys and Journals of an Indian Geologist," 1880; (2) "The Diamonds, Coal and Gold of India," 1881; (3) "The Economic Geology of India," 1881; (4) an English translation of "Tavernier's Travels in India," with notes, appendices, &c., 1889. Besides numerous contributions to Learned Societies, he has published several Memoirs on the Geology of extensive tracts in India, and accounts of his visits to, and explorations in Afghanistan and Beluchistan, the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, the Himalayas, &c. As a collateral result of his explorations in the wild and then little known central regions of the Peninsula of India, where he first discovered several coal fields, he was enabled to suggest to the Government the most desirable line of route for a direct railway between Calcutta and Bombay. This route has now been adopted after several years spent in surveys of the various alternative routes. Several of his more important recent contributions to Societies are upon the "Identification of the Animals, Plants, and Minerals of India which were known to the Ancients." In the year 1884 he presented a Report to the Science and Art Department on the Museums of America, which he had visited in that year; it was subsequently published in the Department's Annual Report. Dr. Ball was married in the year 1879 to Mary, daughter of the late Mr. John Stewart-Moore, J.P., of Moyarget, County Antrim, by whom he has had five children.

BALLANTYNE, John, R.S.A., was born in Kelso, Roxburghshire, in 1815. His father, Alexander, was proprietor and editor of The Kelso Mail newspaper, and was an intimate friend of Sir Walter Scott. John was educated in the Edinburgh Academy, and received his first instruction in drawing and painting under Sir William Allan, P.R.S.A., and Thomas Duncan, A.R.A. In 1832 he went to London and studied in the Royal Academy for several years; he also studied in the Academies of Paris and Rome. In 1834 he exhibited a picture in the Royal Academy, and has continued, with intermissions, to exhibit there ever since. He frequently visited the picture galleries of the Continent, and made many copies there. He was elected a Member of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1845, and at the commencement of the volunteer movement was made Captain of the Artists' Company, and in 1860 Commandant of the Edinburgh Artillery Regiment. Mr. Ballantyne has painted many tableaux de genre, and a few historical pictures. Amongst his works may be mentioned a series of "Portraits of Celebrated Painters in their Studios," one of which, Sir Edwin Landseer's, has been presented to the National Gallery by Mr. Agnew.

BANCROFT, Squire Bancroft, actor and theatrical manager, born in London, May 14, 1841, made his first appearance on the stage at the Theatre Royal, Birmingham, in Jan., 1861. He afterwards accepted engagements in Dublin and Liverpool, playing almost every line of character, including important Shaksperian parts, with Charles Kean, Phelps, and G. V. Brooke. He made his début in London on the occasion of the opening of the Prince of Wales's Theatre, under the management of Mr. Byron and Miss Marie Wilton, April 15, 1865. Mr. T. W. Robertson's popular comedies, "Society," "Ours," "Caste," "Play," "School," and "M.P.," were brought out at this theatre, and in each of them Mr. Bancroft created one of the leading characters. In 1867 Mr. Bancroft married Miss Marie Wilton, and a large share of the management of the Prince of Wales's Theatre thenceforward developed upon him. Among other parts subsequently performed by him at that house were Sir Frederick Blount in "Money," Joseph Surface in the "School for Scandal," Triplet in "Masks and Faces," Sir George Ormond in "Peril," Dazzle in "London Assurance," Blenkinsop in "An Unequal Match," Count Orloff in "Diplomacy," and Henry Spreadbrow in "Sweethearts." Mr. Bancroft's successful career at the Prince of Wales's Theatre was brought to a close on Jan. 29, 1880. In Sept., 1879, he had become lessee of the Haymarket, and after expending nearly twenty thousand pounds on its internal rebuilding and decorations, he began his management of that theatre on Jan. 31, 1880. The first performance was Lord Lytton's comedy, "Money." "Odette" was produced in April, 1882, Mr. Bancroft taking the part of Lord Henry Trevene, with Madame Modjeska as Odette. This was followed by the "Overland Route" (Sept., 1882), and the farewell revival of "Caste" in 1883. M. Sardou's "Fédora," was produced with marked success in May of the same year, which was followed by Mr. Pinero's comedy "Lords and Commons," and an elaborate revival of "The Rivals." Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft, having realized a large fortune, retired from their exceptionally successful career of management on July 20, 1885. Mr. Bancroft reappeared on the stage in the autumn of 1889 at the Lyceum Theatre with Mr. Irving, acting with great success the part of the Abbé Latour in "The Dead Heart." Mr. Bancroft subscribed £1,000 towards General Booth's scheme for alleviating distress, foregoing his stipulation that ninety-nine others should subscribe the same amount. The Earl of Aberdeen was the first to follow suit. In Feb., 1893, Mr. Bancroft appeared at the Garrick Theatre in a revival of "Diplomacy," which had a notable success, being also acted before the Queen.

BANCROFT, Mrs., née Marie Effie Wilton, actress, who belongs to an old Gloucestershire family, is the eldest daughter of the late Mr. Robert Pleydell Wilton, and a native of Doncaster. After acting from early childhood in the provinces, chiefly at the old Theatre Royal, Bristol, she first appeared in London in Sept., 1856, at the Lyceum Theatre, as the boy in "Belphegor" and "Perdita the Royal Milkmaid." Subsequently she fulfilled various engagements at London houses, notably making the fortune of the celebrated burlesques at the Strand Theatre. Miss Wilton, in partnership with Mr. H. J. Byron, became manager of the Prince of Wales's Theatre, London, at Easter, 1865. Shortly afterwards she gave up burlesque acting, and devoted her entire attention to the production of English comedies, chiefly written by the late T. W. Robertson. She was married to Mr. S. B. Bancroft in Dec., 1867. Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft continued their successful career at the Prince of Wales's Theatre until January, 1880, when they migrated to the Haymarket, of which Theatre they had become the lessees. The characters with which Mrs. Bancroft's name is best associated are Polly Eccles, Naomi Tighe, Mary Netley, Peg Woffington, Jenny Northcote, Nan, Lady Franklin, and Lady Teazle. Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft retired from theatrical management in July, 1885, the occasion being a remarkable tribute to their popularity both before and behind the curtain. Mrs. Bancroft has since shown considerable power as a writer by her important share in the book of reminiscences called "Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft on and off the Stage." Except for occasional charitable morning performances Mrs. Bancroft did not again appear upon the stage until Feb., 1893, when she took part in Mr. Hare's revival of "Diplomacy" at the Garrick Theatre. On the occasion of the performance of "Diplomacy" before the Queen, Mrs. Bancroft was honoured by special marks of Her Majesty's favour.

BANGOR, Bishop of. See LLOYD, THE RIGHT REV. DANIEL LEWIS.

BANKS, Mrs. G. Linnæus, née Varley, a poet and novelist, was born in Oldham Street, Manchester, March 25, 1821. Her first contribution to the press (in the Manchester Guardian, April 12, 1837), was a sentimental poem entitled "The Dying Girl to Her Mother." She was barely eighteen when she succeeded to a long-established school for young ladies, at Cheetham, Manchester, which she carried on with success. In 1844 was issued her "Ivy Leaves; a Collection of Poems." Two years later, viz. Dec. 27, 1846, she was married at the Collegiate Church, Manchester, to Mr. George Linnæus Banks, of Birmingham, a poet and journalist. She greatly assisted her husband in his literary labours, and conjointly with him produced a volume of verse under the title of "Daisies in the Grass." Many of their songs have been set to music, and are extremely popular. Mrs. Banks's first publication after marriage was a "Lace Knitter's Guide," followed, after a long interval, by "Light Work for Leisure Hours." It was not until June, 1865, that she published her first novel, "God's Providence House." It established her reputation. Next in turn appeared a North Country story, "Stung to the Quick," 1867; "The Manchester Man," 1876; a Wiltshire story entitled "Glory," 1877; a Lancashire novel entitled "Caleb Booth's Clerk," 1878; "Wooers and Winners," a Yorkshire story, 1880; "Forbidden to Wed," 1883; and "In his Own Hand," 1885. A cheap and uniform edition of her novels was commenced in 1881. In addition to the foregoing novels, excepting "God's Providence House," the series includes the story, "More than Coronets," a number of stories entitled "Through the Night," and a second volume of short tales under the title of "The Watchmaker's Daughter, and Other Stories," and a third volume entitled "Sybilla, and Other Stories." In 1878 a collection of Mrs. Banks's later poems was published under the title of "Ripples and Breakers." Mrs. Banks has written much for the leading magazines, many of the Christmas Annuals, Holiday Numbers, &c. During her residence at Harrogate she lectured on "Woman as she was, as she is, and as she may be." She baptized the Shakespeare Oak, planted by Mr. Phelps, the tragedian, on Primrose Hill, at Shakespeare's tercentenary, and delivered an address on the occasion.

BANKS, Nathaniel Prentiss, was born at Waltham, Massachusetts, Jan. 30, 1816. While a boy he worked in a cotton factory, and afterwards learned the trade of a machinist. In time he became editor of a country newspaper, and received an appointment in the Boston Custom House. He also studied law, was admitted to the Bar, and in 1849 was elected to the lower branch of the Legislature of Massachusetts, of which he was chosen Speaker in 1851; and in the following year he was elected a member of Congress, nominally as a Democrat; but he soon formally withdrew from the Democratic party, and in 1854 was re-elected by the concurrent vote of the "American" and Republican parties. At the following meeting of Congress he was chosen Speaker on the 133rd ballot, after the longest contest in American Congressional history. He was also a member of the next Congress, and in 1857 was elected Governor of Massachusetts, and re-elected in 1858 and 1859. On the outbreak of the civil war he was made major-general of volunteers, was assigned the command of a corps in the army of the Potomac, and was subsequently placed at the head of the forces for the defence of the city of Washington. In December he succeeded General Butler in command at New Orleans, and in July, 1863, took Port Hudson on the Mississippi. In the spring of 1864 he made an unsuccessful expedition up the Red River, in Louisiana, and was in May relieved of his command. He again entered upon political life, and was re-elected to Congress from his old district in 1866, and again in 1868 and 1870. In 1872 he took an active part in favour of the election of Horace Greely to the presidency. In 1876 he was again elected to Congress by the votes of the Democrats and of that portion of the Republicans who were opposed to the policy of President Grant, but he acted with the Republican party.

From 1879 to 1888 he was U. S. Marshal for the district of Massachusetts, and from 1889 to 1891 was a Republican Representative in Congress. Since 1891 he has held no political office. He resides at Waltham, Massachusetts.

BANKS, William Mitchell, M.D., F.R.C.S., was born at Edinburgh in 1842, and was educated at the Edinburgh Academy, and at the University of Edinburgh. In 1864 he took the degree of M.D. with honours, gaining the University Gold Medal for an anatomical thesis on the Wolffian Bodies. After graduating, he acted as Demonstator of Anatomy in the University of Glasgow under the late Professor Allen Thomson for two years, and then settled in Liverpool as a consulting and operating surgeon. Mr. Banks has contributed numerous surgical papers to various journals and societies, but his name has been more especially associated with the advocacy of extensive operative measures for the removal of cancer of the breast, and with attempts to find the most suitable operation for the radical cure of rupture. His chief work, however, has been in connection with the resuscitation of the Medical School of Liverpool, and with the origination of the University College of that city, now one of the three colleges of the Victoria University. In the laying down of the original constitution of the college, and in the arrangements of the regulations for the medical degrees of the University, Mr. Banks's work has been of acknowledged service. He has also devoted much time and labour to the building of the new Liverpool Royal Infirmary, having endeavoured, by the introduction of the latest forms of construction, and the most recent improvements in building materials, to render this hospital a model of sanitary science. On the formation of the Liverpool Biological Society in 1886, Mr. Banks was appointed its first president, and at the present time he is president of the Liverpool Medical Institution, Senior Surgeon and Chairman of the Medical Board of the Royal Infirmary, and Representative of the Victoria University in the General Medical Council.

BAPTISTET. See DAUDET, ALPHONSE.

BARDSLEY, The Right Rev. John Wareing, D.D., Bishop of Carlisle, born in 1835, at Keighley, in Yorkshire, is the son of the late Rev. Canon Bardsley, M.A., Rector of St. Ann's, Manchester. He was educated at Burnley and Manchester Grammar Schools, and at Dublin University, M.A., D.D. He was Vicar of St. Saviour's, Liverpool, 1870-87; Archdeacon of Warrington, 1880-86; Archdeacon of Liverpool, 1886-87; and Bishop of Sodor and Man, 1887 to 1892, when he was translated to Carlisle. He is the author of "Counsels to Candidates for Confirmation," 1882; "The Origin of Man," 1883.

BARING-GOULD, The Rev. Sabine, M.A., of Lew-Trenchard, born at Exeter, in 1834, is the eldest son of Edward Baring-Gould, Esq., of Lew-Trenchard, Devon, where the family has been seated for nearly 300 years. He was educated at Clare College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A. in 1856. He was appointed Incumbent of Dalton, Thirsk, by the Viscountess Down in 1869, and Rector of East Mersea, Colchester, by the Crown in 1871. On the death of his father in 1872 he succeeded to the family property, and in 1881 to the Rectory of Lew-Trenchard. He is justice of peace for the County of Devon. Mr. Baring-Gould is the author of "Paths of the Just," 1854; "Iceland: its Scenes and Sagas," 1861; "Postmediæval Preachers," 1865; "The Book of Werewolves," 1865; "Curious Myths of the Middle Ages," 1st series, 1866, 2nd series, 1867; "The Silver Store," 1868; "Curiosities of Olden Times," 1869; "The Origin and Development of Religious Belief," vol. i. 1869, vol. ii. 1870; "The Golden Gate," 1869-70; "In Exitu Israel; an Historical Novel," 1870; "Lives of the Saints," 15 vols., 1872-77; "Some Modern Difficulties, a course of Lectures preached at St. Paul's Cathedral," 1874; "The Lost and Hostile Gospels: an Essay on the Toledoth Jeschu, and the Petrine and Pauline Gospels of the First Three Centuries of which Fragments remain," 1874; "Yorkshire Oddities," 2 vols., 1874; "Some Modern Difficulties," in nine lectures, 1875; "Village Sermons for a Year," 1875; "The Vicar of Morwenstowe," 1876; "The Mystery of Suffering," 1877; "Germany, Present and Past," 1879; "The Preacher's Pocket," 1880; "The Village Pulpit," 1881; "The Last Seven Words," 1884; "The Passion of Jesus," 1885; "The Birth of Jesus," 1885; "Our Parish Church," 1885; "The Trials of Jesus," 1886; "Our Inheritance," 1888; "Old Country Life," 1889; "Historic Oddities," 1889; "The Tragedy of the Caesars," 2 vols., 1893; "Strange Survivals," 1893. He was editor of The Sacristy, a quarterly review of ecclesiastical art and literature, 1871-73. Of late years Mr. Baring-Gould has won celebrity as a novelist. He is the author of "Mehalah," "John Herring," and "Court Royal," as well as of many short stories.

BARKER, Lady. See BROOME, LADY.

BARKLY, Sir Henry, K.C.B., G.C.M.G., is of Scottish extraction, being the only son of the late Æneas Barkly, Esq., of Ross-shire, an eminent West Indian merchant in London, where his son was born in 1815. Having received a sound commercial education at Bruce Castle School, Tottenham, he applied himself to business, in which he obtained that practical experience which has placed him in the foremost rank of our colonial administrators. In 1845 he was elected M.P. for Leominster, which constituency he represented till 1849, as a "firm supporter of Sir R. Peel's commercial policy." In 1849 he was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the settlement of British Guiana (where he owned estates), and during his governorship laid before Parliament some valuable information respecting the colony, advocating the introduction of Coolies and Chinese as labourers. Sir Henry also endeavoured to develop the resources of the colony by the introduction of railways, and by reconciling the factions which had retarded its advancement. As Governor of Jamaica, from 1853 to 1856, he was equally successful. Sir William Molesworth, Secretary of State for the Colonies, in 1856 appointed him to the important governorship of Victoria, for which his business habits and his large commercial experience peculiarly fitted him; and in 1863 he was appointed Governor of the Mauritius. In August, 1870, he was appointed Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, and he held that office till Dec., 1876. He was appointed High Commissioner for settling the affairs of the territories adjacent to the eastern frontier of the Cape of Good Hope in Nov., 1870. Sir Henry Barkly was created a K.C.B. (Civil division) in 1853, on returning home from British Guiana; and G.C.M.G. in 1874.

BARLOW, Jane, the daughter of the Rev. Dr. Barlow, Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, is the author of "Irish Idylls," published in Oct., 1892; "Bogland Studies," "Kerrigan's Quality," and "The Mockers of the Shallow Waters," 1893. She has also written a number of short stories for various magazines.

BARLOW, William Henry, F.R.S. (L. & E.), Past Pres. Inst. C.E., Hon. Member Société des Ingénieurs Civils, &c., born at Woolwich, 1812; is the son of Prof. Barlow; was educated at Woolwich; pupil of H. R. Palmer, M.I.C.E.; went to Constantinople in 1832 for Messrs. Maudslay & Field; erected the establishment for the re-construction of the Turkish Ordnance; and was employed to report on the lighthouses at the entrance of the Bosphorus in the Black Sea. For his services in Turkey he received the decoration of the "Nichan." Returned to England 1833, he became Assistant Engineer on the Manchester and Birmingham Railway; Resident Engineer on the Midland Counties; and Engineer to the Midland Railway on the formation of that Company. He took offices in London in 1857, and became Consulting Engineer of the Midland Company. He made many of the new lines of the Midland, including the London end of the line and the St. Pancras Station. He was Joint Engineer with Sir J. Hawkshaw for the completion of Clifton Bridge; was the Engineer of the New Tay Bridge; and acted jointly with Sir J. Fowler and Mr. T. Harrison to settle the design of the Firth of Forth Bridge; went to America as one of the Judges of the Centennial Exhibition; and was one of the Vice-Presidents of the Royal Society in 1881. After the labours of Bessemer and others had reduced the cost of obtaining steel, Mr. Barlow took an active part in obtaining the recognition, in the rules and regulations of the Board of Trade, of the superior strength of this material for structural purposes. He served in three Commissions appointed by the Board of Trade—(1.) To settle the co-efficient to be used for steel in engineering structures. (2.) To enquire into the cause of the fall of the former Tay Bridge. (3.) To report on the provision to be made to resist wind pressure in engineering structures. He was for many years a Director of the Indo-European Telegraph Company; was appointed a member of the Ordnance Committee in 1881, from which duty ill health compelled his retirement in 1888. He has contributed several papers to the "Philosophical Transactions," including one on the "Diurnal Variation of Electric Currents on the Surface of the Earth;" and several papers to the Institution of Civil Engineers. He married Selina Crawford, daughter of W. Caffin, of the Royal Arsenal.

BARNABY, Sir Nathaniel, K.C.B., was born in 1829, at Chatham, and belongs to a family which has produced many generations of shipwrights in the Royal Dockyard there. He was apprenticed to the trade of shipwright at Sheerness in 1843, and in 1848 he won, by competition, an Admiralty Scholarship in the School of Naval Architecture at Portsmouth. In 1854 he superintended the construction of the "Viper" and "Wrangler" gun-vessels built by contract for the Royal Navy. In 1855 he entered the designing office at the Admiralty, and during the thirty years he served there he was concerned in the design and construction of all but three of the entire list of sea-going fighting ships, armoured and unarmoured, which were in existence or were building at the date of his retirement, from ill-health, in October, 1885. The exceptions were the "Neptune," "Orion," and "Belleisle." He was appointed Chief Naval Architect in 1872, and afterwards, by change of title, Director of Naval Construction. He was the means of inaugurating the change in construction from iron to steel in shipbuilding in England, which has marked the last few years so notably. He initiated and was responsible for the formation of an Admiralty List of Merchant Ships, having considerable security against foundering in collision, and appreciable fighting value as auxiliaries in war. He was one of the four original founders of the Institution of Naval Architects in 1860, and has contributed many papers on professional subjects to its Transactions, as well as the articles on the "Navy" and "Shipbuilding" to the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He was made a Companion of the Bath in 1876 on the recommendation of Mr. Disraeli, and a Knight Commander of the Bath in June, 1885, on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone.

BARNARD, Henry, LL.D., American educator, was born at Hertford, Connecticut, Jan. 24, 1811. He graduated at Yale College in 1830, studied law, and was admitted to the Bar in 1835. From 1837 to 1840 he was a member of the Connecticut Legislature, and carried through that body a complete re-organization of the common school system, and was for four years (1838-42) a member and secretary of the Board of Education created by it. Displaced by a political change in 1842, he spent more than a year in an extensive educational tour through the United States, with a view to the preparation of a History of Public Schools in the United States. He was called from the prosecution of this work to take charge of the public schools of Rhode Island; and after five years returned to Hartford, in 1849. In 1850 a State Normal School was established in Connecticut, and he was appointed Principal, with the added duties of State Superintendent of Public Schools. After five years of severe labour he retired from this work, but soon began the publication of the American Journal of Education, Hartford, in 1855, which is still continued. In addition to this he has been engaged for many years in the publication of a Library of Education, which, in 53 vols., embraces about 800 separate works. He has been President of the American Association for the Advancement of Education, was elected in 1856 President and Chancellor of the University of Wisconsin, which office he resigned in 1859; he was President in 1865-7 of the St. John's College, Annapolis, Maryland, and United States Commissioner of the Department of Education in 1868-70. While secretary of the Board he established the Connecticut Common School Journal, and founded, when in Rhode Island, the Rhode Island School Journal. His own contributions to educational literature have been so numerous, that but few of them can be mentioned here:—"School Architecture," 1839; "Education in Factories," 1842; "National Education in Europe," 1851; "Normal Schools in the United States and Europe," 1851; "Tribute to Gallaudet, with History of Deaf Mute Instruction," 1852; "School Libraries," 1854; "Hints and Methods for the Use of Teachers," 1857; "English Pedagogy," 1862; "National Education," 1872; "Military Schools," 1872; "American Pedagogy," 1875.

BARNBY, Sir Joseph, musician, was born at York, Aug. 12, 1838; was Chorister in York Minster, 1846-52; Student at the Royal Academy of Music, 1854-57; Organist St. Andrew's, Well Street, 1863-71; Organist St. Ann's, Soho, 1871-86; Conductor of Oratorio Concerts at St. James's and Exeter Halls, 1865-72. He succeeded Gounod as conductor of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, 1872; and was appointed Precentor and Director of Musical Instruction at Eton College, 1875, but resigned the office on being elected Principal of the Guildhall School of Music in 1892. In August of that year he received the honour of knighthood. His compositions are:—Motett, "King all Glorious," produced at St. James's Hall, 1868; Oratorio, "Rebekah," produced in 1870; Cantata (Psalm xcvii.), Leeds Festival, 1883; and many hundreds of Services, Anthems, Part Songs, Trios, Songs, Hymn Tunes, Chants, &c. He conducted the first Passion Service in England at Westminster Abbey, 1871; State Receptions of the Shah at the Royal Albert Hall, 1873 and 1889; State Reception of the Czar, 1874; Opening of the Fishery and Colonial Exhibitions, and other Royal and State Functions.

BARNES, Hon. Sir John Gorell, a Judge of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty

Divisions, is the eldest son of the late Henry Barnes, Esq., of Liverpool, and was born in 1848. He was educated at St. Peter's College, Cambridge, and took his B.A. degree in 1868, and his M.A. in 1871. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1876; went on the Northern Circuit, and took silk in 1888. In 1892 he was appointed a Judge of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice, and received the honour of knighthood in the same year. He married, in 1881, the eldest daughter of the late Thomas Mitchell, Esq.

BARNETT, Rev. Canon Samuel Augustus, M.A., was born in 1844, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford, where he took a Second in Mods. and in 1865 a Second in History. He was ordained deacon in 1867, and priest in 1868, and was from 1867-72 curate of St. Mary's, Bryanston Square. He was then appointed Vicar of St. Jude's, Whitechapel. There has hardly been a scheme for the elevation or education of the people of East London which he and Mrs. Barnett have not initiated or supported. Their names are identified with Poor Law Reform, the Extension of University Teaching, Charity Organisation, the Children's Country Holidays Fund, and many other philanthropic movements. With the help of friends from Oxford and elsewhere, Canon Barnett built "Toynbee Hall," close to St. Jude's Church, a kind of college, dedicated to the memory of the late Arnold Toynbee, which forms a centre for university men who come and settle for a time to work among the poor. The success of his free exhibitions of loan-collections of pictures is attested by the increasing number of people—many of them of the humblest classes—who annually crowded to see them. In theology Canon Barnett belongs to the Broad Church School. In 1893 he became a Canon of Bristol, and was succeeded at St. Jude's by the Rev. Ronald Bayne.

BARODA, The Maharajah Gaekwar of. His Highness Maharajah Syagi Rao Gaekwar was born on the 10th of March, 1863, at the town of Kavalana in the Nassick District, and is the son of the late Rao Bhikaji Rao Gaekwar. He was educated at the "Maharajah's School" at Baroda, under the personal supervision and tuition of Mr. F. Elliot, of the Indian Civil Service. It will be in the memory of our readers how the late Gaekwar, Mulhar Rao, for his attempt to poison Colonel Phayre, the British Resident, and for continual and gross misgovernment, was, after being tried by a mixed commission of European officials and native chiefs, deposed from his government and sent into exile at Madras, where he died at the end of 1882. On Mulhar Rao's deposition, and with the consent of the Earl of Northbrook, then Viceroy of India, the Maharanee Jumna Bai adopted, on the 27th of May, 1875, the present Maharajah, who was on the same day installed on the guddee or throne. During the minority of the Maharajah the administration was carried on by a Council of Regency under the direction of the European representative; and Raja Sir Toujore Madhava Rao, Bahadoor, K.C.S.I., who was the Dewan to His Highness Maharajah Scindiah of Gwalior, was specially selected to fill the post of Prime Minister, together with a seat at the Regency Board. On the 28th December, 1881, and at the early age of eighteen, His Highness was invested with full and sovereign powers, and since he has held the reins of state, he has, with the assistance of Sir Madhava Rao, whom he has retained as his Prime Minister, given satisfaction by his aptitude for work and desire to introduce reforms. His Highness is an excellent English scholar, speaking the language as fluently as his own.

BARR, Mrs. Amelia Edith, née Huddleston, was born at Ulverston, Lancashire, March 29, 1831. She was educated at the Glasgow High School, and in 1850 married Mr. Robert Barr. In 1854 she went to the United States, and after residing for a few years at Austin, Texas, removed to Galveston, in the same state, where, in 1867, her husband and three sons died of yellow fever. She went to New York in 1869 with her daughters, and taught for two years, and then began writing for publication. In addition to newspaper and magazine contributions, she has published "Romance and Reality," 1872; "Young People of Shakespeare's Time," 1882; "Cluny McPherson," 1883; "Scottish Sketches," 1883; "The Hallam Succession," 1884; "The Lost Silver of Briffault," 1885; "Jan Vedder's Wife," 1885; "A Daughter of Fife," 1886; "The Last of the McAllisters," 1886; "The Bow of Orange Ribbon," 1886; "Between Two Loves," 1886; "The Squire of Sandal-Side," 1887; "Paul and Christina," 1887; "A Border Shepherdess," 1887; "Master of his Fate," 1888; "Remember the Alamo," 1888; "Christopher and other Stories," 1888; "Feet of Clay," 1889; "Friend Olivia," 1890; "A Rose of a Hundred Leaves," 1891; "A Sister to Esau," 1891; "Love for an Hour is Love for Ever," 1892; "A Singer from the Sea," 1892; and "Girls of a Feather," 1893.

BARRETT, Wilson, actor, is the son of a gentleman-farmer, and was born in Essex on February 18, 1846. He was educated at a private school, and entered the dramatic professsion by his own choice at an early age. Mr. Barrett first appeared on the stage at Halifax, and first essayed management as the lessee of the Burnley Theatre. In 1874 he took the Amphitheatre, Leeds. This house was destroyed by fire in 1876, and a limited company then build the Grand Theatre, Leeds, which was opened with Mr. Barrett as lessee in 1878. In 1879 he undertook the management of the Court Theatre, London. Here he produced "Heartsease;" an adaptation of Schiller's "Marie Stuart;" "Frou Frou;" "Romeo and Juliet;" "Juana," a poetical play by W. G. Wills, and "The Old Love and the New." In 1881 Mr. Barrett became sole lessee and manager of the Princess's Theatre, where he revived "The Old Love and the New." In the following September he produced Mr. G. R. Sims' drama, "The Lights o' London," and played Harold Armytage for 286 nights. "The Romany Rye," by the same author, was produced in 1882, and "The Silver King" in the same year. In this drama Mr. Barrett created the part of Wilfred Denver, which he played for 300 consecutive nights. In December, 1883, he created the part of "Claudian" in the poetical play of that name, and played it for 300 nights. In October, 1884, he made his first appearance in London as "Hamlet." "Hamlet" was played for 117 nights, and then Mr. Barrett appeared as "Junius Brutus" in the late Lord Lytton's tragedy, "Junius, or the Household Gods." This was followed by revivals of "The Silver King," and "The Lights o' London." In 1885 Mr. Barrett produced the drama, "Hoodman Blind," written by Mr. Henry A. Jones and himself, in which he played Jack Yeulett for 171 nights. Mr. Barrett is also part-author with Mr. Clement Scott of the modern drama, "Sister Mary," produced at Brighton in 1886, and with Mr. Sydney Grundy of the classical tragedy "Clito," which followed the "Lord Harry" at the Princess's. At the same theatre he produced the "Ben-my-Chree," an adaptation of Hall Caine's famous novel, "The Deemster," and subsequently "The Good Old Times," which was written in collaboration with Mr. Hall Caine; and in 1889 his own romantic drama "Now-a-Days." "The Golden Ladder" was produced by Mr. Barrett at the Globe Theatre. On May 18, 1889, he took farewell of his patrons for a long engagement in America. Since his return from that tour Mr. Barrett has written and played "Pharaoh," a four-act tragedy. He also revived "Othello" and "Virginius." In November, 1893, Mr. Barrett again sailed for America, and in December of that year produced his adaptation of Hall Caine's "Bondman" at the Chestnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia.

BARRIE, J. M. ("Gavin Ogilvy"), was born on May 9, 1860, at Kirriemuir, a small weaving town in Forfarshire. He attended school there, and afterwards went for five years to Dumfries Academy. Subsequently he took the art-classes at Edinburgh University, and graduated as an M.A. in 1882. He was for eighteen months leader-writer on a Nottingham paper; then became a journalist in London, writing chiefly for the St. James's Gazette, to which paper and the British Weekly, the Speaker, and the National Observer, he still frequently contributes. His first book, "Better Dead," a satire on London Life, appeared in 1887, and was followed by two more important works the year after, namely "Auld Licht Idylls," and "When a Man's Single." In 1889 he published "A Window in Thrums," and in 1890 "My Lady Nicotine." The "Thrums" of three of these stories is his native town. During 1891 "The Little Minister," his first long story, appeared in Good Words, and was shortly republished in book form. In 1892 "Walker, London," a comedy, by Mr. Barrie, the scene of which is laid on a house-boat, was produced at Toole's, and enjoyed a phenomenal run. This was followed by "Jane Annie," written in conjunction with Mr. Conan Doyle, and produced at the Savoy in May, 1893, and by "The Professor's Love Story," produced by Mr. Willard in America and at the Garrick Theatre, London, 1894.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS, Bishop of. See WARE, THE RIGHT REV. HENRY.

BARRY, The Right Rev. Alfred, D.D., D.C.L., late Bishop of Sydney, is the second son of the late eminent architect, Sir Charles Barry, and was born in 1826. He was educated at King's College, London, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. as fourth Wrangler, second Smith's prizeman, and seventh in the first class of the Classical Tripos in 1848, obtaining a Fellowship in the same year. Dr. Barry, who was ordained in 1860, was from 1851 to 1854 Sub-Warden of Trinity College, Glenalmond; and subsequently held from 1854 to 1862 the Head Mastership of the Grammar Schools at Leeds, which he raised to a very high position by his energy and ability; and in 1862 he was appointed to the Principalship of Cheltenham College. In 1868 he became Principal of King's College, London; in 1869 Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Bath and Wells; in 1871 was made a Canon of Worcester; in 1875 Honorary Chaplain, and in 1880 Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen; and in 1881 Canon of Westminster. He was also a member of the London School Board from 1871 to 1877. On Jan. 1, 1884, he was consecrated Primate of Australia, Metropolitan of New South Wales, and Bishop of Sydney, which office he resigned in May, 1889, and has since acted as Bishop Coadjutor in the diocese of Rochester. Dr. Barry is the author of an "Introduction to the Old Testament," "Notes on the Gospels," "Life of Sir C. Barry, R.A.," "Cheltenham College Sermons," "Sermons for Boys," "Notes on the Catechism," "Religian for Every Day; Lectures to Men," 1873; "What is Natural Theology?" being the Boyle Lectures for 1876; "The Manifold Witness for Christ," the Boyle Lectures for 1877, 1878, &c.

BARRY, Charles, F.S.A., is the eldest son of the late Sir Charles Barry, and was born in 1823. He showed an early desire to be an architect, and was educated for the profession in his father's office, and was for several years assisting him in various important works, both public and private, including the New Houses of Parliament. His health failing, in 1846 he went abroad and travelled through France, Germany, and Italy, studying the architectural works in those countries, and was absent 1½ years. He did not return to his father's office, but at his recommendation started practice on his own account, associating with him as partner the late Robert R. Banks, Esq., who had for some years been one of the principal assistants of Sir Charles. This association (which was founded on sincere personal friendship as well as artistic sympathy) remained unbroken till the death of Mr. Banks in 1872. During that time, and since, Mr. Barry has had an extensive and varied practice. In 1856, at the International competition for the "Government Public Offices," the design sent in by his partner and himself was placed second in merit by the assessors for the then projected Foreign Office; the work was, however, given (after strong remonstrances) to Sir Gilbert (then Mr.) Scott, whose design had obtained only the third place. Among his more public works may be named the New Burlington House, Piccadilly, the New College at Dulwich, and the large Industrial School at Feltham for the County of Middlesex. Among a large number of works for private clients may be mentioned "Bylaugh Hall," Norfolk, "Stevenstone," North Devon, for the Hon. Mark Rolle, and the almost rebuilding "Clumber House," Nottinghamshire, for the Duke of Newcastle. Mr. Barry has since 1858 held the office of architect and surveyor to the Dulwich estate, and has erected there several churches, and a large number of private residences, besides his work at the old college and the erection of the New College. In 1876 Mr. Barry was elected President of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and held that office for three years. In 1878 he was one of the Royal Commission for the French Universal Exhibition for that year, and acted therein as the sole representative British Member of the small International Jury of the Fine Arts Section for making the awards for Architecture from the various countries therein represented. In recognition of this service the French Government, at the instance of the Prince of Wales, conferred on him the distinction of the Cross of an Officer of the Legion of Honour. In 1877 Mr. Barry received from his colleagues of the Royal Institute of British Architects the Queen's Gold Medal of the Institute, which is awarded once in three years to an architect of eminence. He is an Honorary Member of the Academies of Fine Arts at Vienna and Milan, and was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of London in 1876, and is one of the original members of the Surveyors' Institution. Mr. Barry has been from its foundation a Member of Council of the City and Guilds of London Institute, and has always taken an active part in the proceedings of that body.

BARRY, The Right Hon. Charles Robert, born at Limerick, in 1834, received his academical education at Trinity College, Dublin, was called to the Irish Bar in 1845, was made a Queen's Counsel in 1849, and was the first Crown Prosecutor in Dublin from 1859 to 1865. Mr. Barry was law adviser to the Crown from 1865 to 1869, during which period he represented Dungarvan in the House of Commons. He was appointed Solicitor-General for Ireland in 1869, and Attorney-General in Jan., 1870, succeeding, in the latter office, Mr. Sullivan, who had been appointed Master of the Rolls in Ireland. In Dec., 1871, he was appointed a Judge of the Queen's Bench in Ireland, in the room of the Right Hon. John George, deceased. In Aug., 1878, he was nominated a member of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the provisions of the draft Code relating to Indictable Offences. In June, 1883, he accepted the office of Lord Justice of Appeal, vacant by the death of Lord Justice Deasy.

BARRY, John Wolfe, C.B., M.I.C.E., is the fifth and youngest son of the late Sir Charles Barry, R.A., and was born in 1836. He was educated at Trinity College, Glenalmond (where his elder brother, the Rev. Alfred Barry, afterwards Bishop of Sydney and Primate of Australia, was sub-warden), and at King's College, London. To acquire a practical knowledge of work, he was placed with Messrs. Lucas Brothers, and was afterwards articled to Mr. (now Sir John) Hawkshaw. While with Sir John Hawkshaw he was engaged as Resident-Engineer on the bridges over the Thames and the large stations at Charing Cross and Cannon Street. On leaving Sir John Hawkshaw's service in 1867, he commenced practice on his own account, and has carried out the Lewes and East Grinstead Railway; the Earl's Court Station, and the Ealing and Fulham Extensions of the Metropolitan District Railway; the St. Paul's Station and the new bridge over the Thames at Blackfriars; the railways for the completion of the "Inner Circle" (in conjunction with Sir John Hawkshaw); the Barry Dock, near Cardiff (the largest single dock in the United Kingdom), and railways connecting it with the South Wales coalfield; and very many less important undertakings. Mr. H. M. Brunel, son of the late I. K. Brunel, joined Mr. Barry in partnership in 1878, and has been associated with him in most of the above works. Mr. Barry has now finished carrying out for the Corporation of London the Tower Bridge, which work was commenced in conjunction with Sir Horace Jones, the City architect (since deceased), to whom were entrusted the architectural features of the bridge, as distinguished from the engineering work. On the completion of the bridge, in the summer of 1894, Mr. Barry was made a C.B. In 1872 Mr. Barry visited the Argentine Republic and laid out a railway from Buenos Ayres to Rosario. In 1886 the Government appointed Mr. Barry on the Royal Commission on Irish Public Works, and important legislation, based on the Reports of the Commission, has taken place on the subjects of drainage, light railways, and fishery harbours. In 1889 he was nominated by the Board of Trade, jointly with Admiral Sir George Nares, K.C.B., and Sir Charles Hartley, K.C.M.G., on a commission ordered by Parliament to settle certain important matters connected with the River Ribble; and, in December, 1889, he was appointed, by the Government, on the Western (Scottish) Highlands and Islands Commission, a commission having objects similar to those of the Royal Commission on Irish Public Works. Mr. Barry is a Member of Council of the Institution of Civil Engineers; a Member of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers; Associate of Council of the Surveyors' Institution; a Fellow of the Royal Institution; and a Lieut.-Colonel in the Engineer and Railway Volunteer Staff Corps. He is the author of a small volume, "Railway Appliances," in the Text-books of Science Series (Longmans, 1876), and of a course of lectures delivered at the School of Military Engineering, Chatham, in conjunction with Sir F. J. Bramwell, on the "Railway and the Locomotive," published in 1882.

BARTHÉLEMY-SAINT-HILAIRE, Jules, member of the Institution, was born in Paris, Aug. 19, 1805, and was at first attached to the Ministry of Finance in 1825; but this did not prevent him from writing in the Globe, and he signed the protestation of the journalists July 26, 1830. After the revolution he founded the Bon Sens, and, as a Liberal, he took an active part in politics writing with Carrel in Le National; but towards the close of 1833 he showed signs of a desire to renounce political life, and to apply himself to literature. In 1834 he was made tutor of French literature in the Polytechnic School, and undertook about the same time a complete translation of the works of Aristotle, which served as a pendant to the translation of Plato, published by Cousin. For this service he was in 1838 appointed to the chair of Greek and Latin Philosophy in the College of France, and in 1839 was admitted into the Academy of the Moral and Political Sciences. The revolution of February again drew him into the political arena, and he entered the Constituent Assembly, and became one of the chiefs of the Republican tiers-parti. He did not oppose the candidature of Louis Napoleon, and supported the administration of M. Odilon Barrot. After the coup d'état of Dec. 2, 1851, and the downfall of the parliamentary system, he refused to take the oath, and resigned the chair in the College of France. At the general election of 1869 he was returned to the Corps Législatif as deputy for the first circonscription of Seine-et-Oise. He voted with the extreme Left, and was one of those who signed the manifesto after the disturbances caused by the funeral of the Deputy Baudin. During the siege of Paris he remained in the capital, which he quitted after the armistice, in order to take his seat in the National Assembly, having been elected a deputy for the department of Seine-et-Oise. He was a zealous supporter of his old friend M. Thiers, to whom he acted as General Secretary. He was elected a Life Senator by the National Assembly, Dec. 10, 1875, and took his seat among the Republican minority. At the termination of the ministerial crisis, occasioned by the execution of the decrees against the unauthorised religious communities, he accepted the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, in succession to M. de Freycinet, in the Cabinet which was reconstituted under the presidency of M. Jules Ferry (Sept. 23, 1880). His principal works are a very important series of translations of the works of Aristotle; "De l'Ecole d'Alexandrie," report to the Institute, preceded by an "Essai sur la Méthode des Alexandrins et le Mysticisme," 1845; "Des Vedas," 1854; "Du Bouddhisme," 1855; "Le Bouddha et sa Religion," 1866; "Mahomet et le Coran," 1867; "Mémoire sur le Sânkhya, dans les Mémoires de l'Académie des Sciences morales et politiques," "Pensées de Marc-Aurèle," 1876; "L'Inde Anglaise," 1887; "La philosophie dans ses rapports avec les Sciences et la Religion," 1889; "François Bacon," 1890, etc.

BARTHOLDI, Auguste, was born at Colmar (Alsace), was intended for a lawyer, but Ary Scheffer, who was a friend of the family, recognised his latent artistic talent, and the use of Ary Scheffer's studio was the turning point of a life subsequently noteworthy for the production of the Lion de Belfort and the gigantic Liberté éclairant le Monde, which, constructed in copper, on an internal iron frame designed by M. Eiffel, was, in 1884, presented by the French Committee to the United States, and has since been erected at the entrance to the harbour of New York. It is by far the largest bronze statue in the world, being 150 ft. high, or higher than the column in the Place Vendôme at Paris.

BASSET, Alfred Barnard, M.A., F.R.S., is the only son of the late Mr. Alfred Basset of London, and was born on July 25, 1854. His father died during his childhood, and he was brought up by his grandfather. He was educated at Grove House School, Tottenham, entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in Oct., 1873, and was elected to a foundation scholarship in April, 1878. He graduated B.A. in 1877, having been 13th Wrangler in the Mathematical Tripos of that year. After leaving Cambridge, he studied law in the chambers of Mr. John Rigby, Q.C., and was called to the Bar on June 25, 1879; but after the expiration of a few years he gave up the practice of his profession, and resumed the study of Mathematics. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society on June 8, 1889, and is the author of a "Treatise on Hydro-dynamics," in two volumes, and also of several papers on Mathematical Physics.

BASTIAN, Professor Henry Charlton, M.D., F.R.S., F.L.S., was born at Truro, in Cornwall, April 26, 1837, and educated at a private school at Falmouth, and in University College, London. He graduated M.A. in 1861, M.B. in 1863, and M.D. in 1866; these degrees being conferred by the University of London. He was elected F.R.S. in 1868, and F.R.C.P. in 1871. Dr. Bastian is a Fellow of several Medical Societies; he is also a Corresponding Member of the Royal Academy of Medicine in Turin, and of the Soc. Psychol. Physiolog. of Paris. In 1866 he was appointed Lecturer on Pathology, and Assistant-Physician to St. Mary's Hospital. These posts he held until his appointment as Professor of Pathological Anatomy in University College, and Assistant-Physician to University College Hospital in Dec., 1867. He was elected a physician to this hospital in 1871; and in 1878, on taking charge of in-patients, a professorship of Clinical Medicine was conferred upon him. In 1887 he resigned the Chair of Pathological Anatomy at University College, and was elected Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine. Dr. Bastian was Dean of the Faculty of Medicine in University College during the sessions 1874-5 and 1875-6; he served as Examiner in Medicine to the Queen's University in Ireland for 1876-79, and he has discharged similar duties for the University of Durham, and for the Royal College of Physicians of London. In 1887 the honorary degree of M.D. was conferred upon him by the Royal University of Ireland, and he was elected an Honorary Fellow of the King and Queen's College of Physicians in Ireland. For some years past he has acted as one of the Crown Referees in cases of Supposed Insanity. Dr. Bastian has published the following works: – "The Modes of Origin of Lowest Organisms," 1871; "The Beginnings of Life," 2 vols., 1872; "Evolution and the Origin of Life," 1874; "Clinical Lectures on the Common Forms of Paralysis from Brain Disease," 1875; "The Brain as an Organ of Mind," 1880 (the latter work has been translated into French and German); and "Paralysis; Cerebal, Bulbar, and Spinal," 1886. He is also the author of "Memoirs on Nematoids: Parasitic and Free," in the Philosophical Transactions and the Transactions of the Linnæan Society. In his monograph on the Anguillulidæ he described 100 new species discovered by him in this country. Dr. Bastian is the author of numerous papers on Pathology and Medicine, in the Trans. of the Pathological and Medico-Chirurgical Societies; of papers on the more recondite departments of Cerebral Physiology in the Journal of Mental Science, Brain, and other periodicals; and of some joint articles with the editor in Dr. Reynold's "System of Medicine." Dr. Bastian was likewise one of the principal contributors to Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine" (1882), having written nearly the whole of the articles on Diseases of the Spinal Cord, as well as many others on Diseases of the Nervous System.

BATEMAN, Kate Josephine. See CROWE, MRS. GEORGE.

BATESON, William, M.A., F.R.S., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, was born at Whitby, Yorkshire, on the 8th of August, 1861. He is the son of the late Rev. W. H. Bateson, D.D., Master of St. John's College Cambridge. From Temple Grove School he obtained a foundation scholarship at Rugby, and thence proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge, graduating in the Natural Sciences Tripos in 1883 and 1884. Elected to a Fellowship at St. John's College in 1885, he became Balfour Student in 1887, and was awarded a Rolleston Prize in the University of Oxford in 1888. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1894. He has undertaken investigations in various departments of Zoology, and is the author of several memoirs on the subject. His first work was a study of the anatomy and development of Balanoglossus, material for this research having been collected in America during two visits to the Marine Laboratory of the Johns Hopkins University. The results appeared as a series of papers in the Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science in 1884-86. The importance of this investigation lay in the fact that it gave support to the view that Balanoglossus is a Chordate animal, and thus seemed to throw light on the ancestry of Vertebrata. In order to give expression to this view the group Hemicordata was instituted to include Balanoglossus. In 1886 and 1887 he undertook a journey to the Aral Sea, and to other salt, alkaline and bitter lakes in Western Central Asia, with the object of examining their fauna and with the hope of finding in these animals structural variations, correlated with the conditions of life to which they are exposed. The results of this journey were for the most part negative. Subsequently he has devoted himself to a study of the facts of Variation, and has published papers relating to the subject, in particular a collection of the evidence entitled, "Materials for the Study of Variation" (Macmillan, 1894).

BATH & WELLS, Bishop of. See KENYON, RIGHT REV. GEORGE WYNDHAM.

BATTENBERG, Prince Henry. See HENRY OF BATTENBERG (PRINCE).

BATTERSEA, Cyril, Lord (Cyril Flower), son of the late Mr. P. W. Flower, of Streatham, was born in 1843, and educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1870. In the Parliament of 1880-85 he sat as a Liberal for Brecknock, and in 1885 and 1886 was returned for the Luton division of Bedfordshire, and sat for the same till 1892. In Mr. Gladstone's short Government of 1886 Mr. Cyril Flower was one of the Junior Lords of the Treasury, or "Whips" of the party. In 1892 he was made a peer under the title of Lord Battersea. He married, in 1878, Constance, eldest daughter of the late Sir Anthony Rothschild. Both he and his wife are much interested in the welfare of their party, and have been warm supporters of the Eighty Club. They are devoted to the interests of the lower classes in London, and have done much for the People's Entertainment Society.

BAVARIA, King of. See OTTO.

BAVARIA, Regent of. See LUITPOLD, PRINCE CHARLES JOSEPH WILLIAM.

BAYARD, Hon Thomas Francis, American statesman, was born at Wilmington, Del., Oct. 29, 1828. He at first entered mercantile life, but abandoned it for the study of law, and was admitted to the Bar in 1851. In 1853 he was appointed U. S. District Attorney for Delaware, but resigned the office in 1854. From 1869 to 1885 he was U. S. Senator from Delaware, resigning the position in March, 1885, to enter President Cleveland's first Cabinet as Secretary of State. At the close of that administration (1889) Mr. Bayard retired to private life, where he remained until his appointment, early in President Cleveland's second administration (March, 1893), as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Great Britain. Mr. Bayard is the first Ambassador appointed by the American Government since the early days of the Republic, his predecessors ranking only as Envoys Extraordinary.

BAYER, Karl Emmerich Robert, an Austrian writer, generally known by his nom de guerre of Robert Byr, was born at Bregenz, in the Tyrol, April 15, 1835, and received his education in the Military Academy at Wiener-Neustadt, which he left on his appointment as lieutenant in the Count Radetzky's Hussar Regiment. In 1859 he was advanced to the rank of captain, and during the Italian campaign he was placed on the general staff. After the conclusion of peace, Bayer began his literary career by the publication of his "Sketches of Military Life" ("Kantonirungsbilder," 1860). In 1862 he retired from active service and settled in his native town, where he still continues to reside. Bayer is chiefly known to fame as a novelist. Military life he has described in his first work, already mentioned, in "Austrian Garrisons" ("Oesterreichische Garnisonen," 1863), and in "Quarters" ("Auf der Station," 1866). His "In the Years Nine and Thirteen" ("Anno Neun und Dreizehn," 1865), contain biographical sketches of actors in the German War of Independence. To another class of works belong the following novels: "The Home of a German Count" ("Ein Deutsches Grafenhaus," 1866); "With a Brazen Face" ("Mit eherner Stirn," 1868); "The Struggle for Life" ("Der Kampf ums Dasein," 1869); "Sphinx," 1879; "Nomaden," 1871; "Ruin" ("Trümmer," 1871); "Quatuor," a collection of tales, 1875; "Ghosts" ("Larven," 1876); and "A Secret Despatch" ("Eine geheime Depesche," 1880); and "Sesam," 1880; "The Path to the Heart" ("Der Weg zum Herzen," 1881); "Turn of Life" ("Am Wende punkt des Lebens," 1881); "Implacable" ("Unversöhnlich," 1882); "Lydia," 1883; "Andor," 1883; "Am I to do it?" ("Soll Ich?" 1884); "Castell Ursani," 1885; "Dora," 1886; "Villa Mirafior," 1886; "Will-of-the-Wisp" ("Irrneische," 1887); "The Path to Fortune" ("Der Weg zum Glück," 1889); "Woodidyl" ("Waldidyll," 1889). He has also written plays which have been performed in public.

BAYLEY, Sir Stuart Colvin, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., Secretary in the Political and Secret Department of the India Office, formerly Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, was educated at Haileybury, and arrived in India in 1856. His first post was that of assistant-magistrate and collector of the 24 Pergunnahs, and he subsequently rose through various grades till he was appointed Commissioner of the Dacca division in 1873. Four years later he was acting as personal assistant to the Viceroy for famine affairs. His more recent appointments have been—Chief Commissioner of Assam, June, 1880; Resident at Hyderabad (Nizam's dominions), March, 1881; a member of the Governor-General's Council, May, 1882; and Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, April, 1887.

BAYLY, Miss Ada Ellen, "Edna Lyall," is the youngest daughter of the late Robert Bayly, of the Inner Temple, barrister-at-law. She was born and educated at Brighton, and at an early age made up her mind to write. Her first story, "Won by Waiting," was published in 1879. This was followed by "Donovan," 1882; "We Two," 1884; "In the Golden Days," 1885; "Knight-Errant," 1887; "Autobiography of a Slander," 1887; "Derrick Vaughan, Novelist," 1889; "A Hardy Norseman," 1889; "Max Hereford's Dream," 1891; "To Right the Wrong," 1893; "Doreen: the Story of a Singer," 1894.

BAYNE, Peter, M.A., LL.D, born in the manse of Fodderty, Ross-shire, Scotland, Oct. 19, 1830, was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen, where he took his M.A. degree. He was the winner of a prize for a poem, open to competition by the whole university, and after taking his degree he won the Blackwell prize (£40) for a prose essay. He was appointed successively editor of the Glasgow Commonwealth, the Edinburgh Witness, the Dial, and the Weekly Review, the last two published in London. His biographical sketches in an Edinburgh magazine attracted attention, and led to the publication, in 1855, of "The Christian Life in the present Time," followed by two volumes of Essays published in America, 1857. A volume of Biographical and Critical Essays, a treatise on "The Testimony of Christ to Christianity," and an historical drama on "The Days of Jezebel," written by him, have been published in this country. His "Life and Letters of Hugh Miller" appeared in 1871. A volume on "The Chief Actors in the Puritan Revolution," appeared in 1878. He has since written "Lessons from my Masters," and "Two Great Englishwomen, with an Essay on Poetry." He has been a contributor to the Contemporary, Fortnightly, British Quarterly, London Quarterly Reviews, Fraser, Blackwood, Literary World, and other magazines. In 1879 the University of Aberdeen presented him with the degree of LL.D. For upwards of twenty years Dr. Bayne has occupied an important place on the staff of the Christian World, advocating liberal opinions both in theology and in politics. In the latter part of 1883, he became engaged in the composition of an original Life of Martin Luther, and the book was published in 1887.

BEACH, The Right Hon. Sir Michael Edward Hicks-. See HICKS-BEACH.

BEALE, Dorothea, daughter of the late Mr. Miles Beale, M.R.C.S., was born in London, 1831, and educated chiefly at home. She attended the opening lectures of Queen's College in 1848, when for the first time public examinations were thrown open to women. In 1850 she was appointed the first lady Mathematical Tutor, and was also appointed Latin Tutor under Dr. Plumptre. In 1858 she was elected Principal of the Ladies' College, Cheltenham, which, numbering at that time 69 pupils, has since risen to about 700. Miss Beale has published some school books, and has contributed many articles to the Journal of Education, Fraser, The Nineteenth Century, Atalanta, Parents' Magazine, Monthly Packet, &c. She edits the Ladies' College Magazine. Miss Beale has been largely instrumental in advancing the movement for the Higher Education of Women. The Ladies' College gained a gold medal at the International Exhibition, and Miss Beale received the title of Officier d'Académie. She is a member of the Société des Sciences et Lettres.

BEALE, Professor Lionel Smith, M.B., F.R.S., Physician to King's College Hospital, and Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine at King's College, London, lately Examiner in Medicine, Professor of Physiology and of General and Morbid Anatomy, and afterwards Professor of Pathological Anatomy, was born in London in 1828, and educated in King's College School, and in the Medical Department of King's College. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1859, is an Hon. Fellow of King's College, a Fellow of the Medical Society of Sweden, of the Microscopical Societies of New York and California, the Royal Medical and Chirurgical, the Microscopical, and the Pathological Societies; he was formerly President and is now Treasurer of the Royal Microscopical Society, and of the Quekett Club, member of the Academy of Sciences of Bologna, Corresponding Member of the Académie Royale de Médecine de Belgique, &c., and the author of several works on medicine, physiology, medical chemistry, and the microscope. Among these works are—"The Microscope in its Application to Practical Medicine;" "How to work with the Microscope," of which there have been several editions; "The Structure of the Tissues of the Body;" "Protoplasm; or, Life, Matter, and Mind;" "Disease Germs, their supposed and real Nature, and on the Treatment of Diseases caused by their Presence;" "Life Theories, their Influence upon Religious Thought," 1871; "The Mystery of Life: Facts and Arguments against the Physical Doctrine of Vitality, in reply to Sir William Gull," 1871; "Our Morality and the Moral Question," which is now in a 2nd edition; "The Liver," 1889; "On Life and on Vital Action in Health and Disease;" "The Anatomy of the Liver;" "Urine, Urinary Deposits, and Calculous Disorders," 4 editions; "Urinary and Renal Derangements and Calculous Disorders: Diagnosis and Treatment;" "One Hundred Urinary Deposits," in eight sheets; "On Slight Ailments;" "The Physiological Anatomy and Physiology of Man," in conjunction with the late Dr. Todd and Sir J. Bowman; and of other works. He has contributed several memoirs to the Royal Society, on the structure of the liver, on the distribution of nerves to muscle, on the anatomy of nerve-fibres and nerve-centres, &c., which are published in the "Philosophical Transactions," and in the "Proceedings" of the Royal Society. He was the editor of the "Archives of Medicine," and has also contributed to the Lancet, Medical Times and Gazette, Medical and Chirurgical Review, and the Microscopical Journal.

BEAUFORT (Duke of), Henry Charles Fitzroy Somerset, Marquis and Earl of Worcester, Earl of Glamorgan, Viscount Grosmont, &c., was born Feb. 1, 1824. His Grace, who is a Conservative in politics, and succeeded his father as eighth Duke, Nov. 17, 1853, is Lieut.-Colonel in the army, was Master of the Horse under Earl Derby's second administration, 1858-9, and was re-appointed to that office under Earl Derby's third administration, in July, 1866. He takes a great interest in horse-racing, and is President of the Four-in-Hand Club. He is one of the joint editors of the sporting books known as "The Badminton Library." His Grace married, July 3, 1845, Georgina Charlotte, eldest daughter of the late Earl Howe.

BEAUREGARD, Pierre Gustave Toutant, was born at New Orleans, Louisiana, in 1818. He graduated from West Point Military Academy in 1838, and was at first assigned to the artillery, whence he was subsequently transferred to the corps of engineers. He served in the Mexican war, and was twice wounded, and twice brevetted. He was promoted to a captaincy of engineers in 1853, and was on duty, superintending the erection of Government buildings in New Orleans, and fortifications on the Gulf coast till Jan., 1861, when he was for five days (Jan., 23-28) Superintendent of the United States Military Academy at West Point. He resigned Feb. 20, 1861, joined the Confederates, and began the civil war by the bombardment of Fort Sumter, April 12, 1861. He was in actual command of the Southern troops at Bull Run, July 21, 1861, in which the Federals experienced a defeat; for this service he was made a full general, the highest grade. He was second in command, under General Albert S. Johnston, at the battle of Shiloh, or Pittsburgh Landing, Tennessee, April 6-7, 1862, until General Johnston was killed on the afternoon of the first day, when General Beauregard succeeded him as commander-in-chief. From the summer of 1862 until the spring of 1864 he successfully defended Charleston and its outworks when besieged by General Gillmore. He was subsequently second in command in the army of Joseph E. Johnston in North Carolina up to the time of that General's surrender, April 26, 1865, which brought the war to a close. Since the termination of the war, General Beauregard has resided in Louisiana, one of the Southern States; he became President of the New Orleans, Jackson, and Mississippi Railroad; and for a number of years has been one of the managers of the Louisiana State Lottery, and was also Adjutant-General of Louisiana.

BECKER, Bernard Henry, author and journalist, born in 1833, was for years attached to All the Year Round, and has written a large number of original stories and sketches in that journal, as well as in the World and other papers, and was formerly on the staff of the Daily News. In 1874 he produced "Scientific London"—an account of the rise, progress, and condition of the great scientific institutions of the capital. Mr. Becker published in 1878 a book in two volumes, entitled "Adventurous Lives." Having in the winter of 1878-9 acted as the "Special Commissioner" of the Daily News in Sheffield, Manchester, and other distressed districts of the North and Midlands, he was sent in a similar capacity to Ireland in the autumn of 1880, when he discovered Mr. and Mrs. Boycott herding sheep, and wrote those letters on the state of Connaught and Munster, which have since appeared in a collected form as "Disturbed Ireland," and given rise to several discussions in the House of Commons. In 1884 Mr. Becker produced "Holiday Haunts," the title of which explains itself, like that of the more recent "Letters from Lazy Latitudes," published in 1886.

BECKLES, The Right Rev. Edward Hyndman, D.D., son of the late John Alleyne Beckles, Esq. (descended from the Beckles family, of Durham), was born in Barbados, in 1816, received his education at Codrington College, Barbados, and after holding different cures in the West Indies was consecrated Bishop of Sierra Leone in 1859. He resigned that See in 1870, being succeeded in it by Dr. Cheetham. In the same year he was appointed rector of Wooton, Dover, and in 1873 rector of St. Peter's, Bethnal Green, London. In Feb., 1877, he was appointed Superintending Bishop of the English Episcopalian congregations in Scotland.

BEDDARD, Frank E., M.A., F.R.S., son of the late John Beddard, was born at Dudley in 1858, and educated at Harrow and New College, Oxford. After taking his degree he was for some time a Demonstrator under the late Professor Rolleston, and afterwards became Assistant Editor of the "Challenger Reports." He is at present Prosector of the Zoological Society of London, Examiner in the Honours School of Morphology at Oxford, and Lecturer on Biology at Guy's Hospital. He was elected F.R.S. in 1892. Mr. Beddard is author of the following works:—"Report on the Isopods collected during the Voyage of H.M.S. Challenger;" "Animal Colouration;" "Contributions to the Anatomy of the Anthropoid Apes" (Zool. Soc. Trans., 1893); a "Monograph on the Oligochœta" (Clarendon Press); and numerous contributions to the Quarterly Journal of Micros. Science, and to the publications of the Royal Zoological Societies. He has also contributed popular articles on Zoological subjects to Blackwood's, and other magazines.

BEDDOE, John, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., born at Bewdley, in Worcestershire, Sept. 21, 1826, was educated at Bridgnorth School, University College, London, and the University of Edinburgh. He graduated B.A. in London in 1851, and M.D. in Edinburgh in 1853. Dr. Beddoe served on the civil medical staff during the Crimean war. Since then he has practised as a physician at Clifton, and held sundry hospital appointments, but is now residing at Bradford-on-Avon. He was President of the Anthropological Society in 1869 and 1870, and he was a member of the council of the British Association for several years. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1873, and is an honorary member of sundry continental and American scientific societies, and officer (1st Class) of the French Order of Public Instruction. Dr. Beddoe has written numerous papers, medical, statistical, and anthropological, and he has largely applied the numerical method to ethnology. In 1868 his Essay on the Origin of the English Nation took the first prize, £150, of the Welsh National Eisteddfod. It formed the basis of his principal work, "The Races of Britain," which was not published until 1885. His other most considerable works and papers are "Stature and Bulk of Man in the British Isles;" "Relations of Temperament and Complexion to Disease;" "On Hospital Dietaries;" "Comparison of Mortality in England and Australia;" and on the "Natural Colour of the Skin in certain Oriental Races." He is joint author of the "Anthropological Instructions for Travellers" of the British Association; and was elected President of the Anthropological Institute in 1889 and 1890. In 1891 he was given the LL.D. of the University of Edinburgh; and, as Rhind Lecturer for the year, delivered a course of lectures in Edinburgh on the Anthropological History of Europe. He married, in 1858, Agnes Montgomerie Christison, niece of the eminent physician of that name (or, of Sir Robert Christison, Bart.), who has since been well known in connection with various philanthropic movements, chiefly for the benefit of women.

BEDFORD, Bishop of. See BILLING, THE RIGHT REV. ROBERT CLAUDIUS.

BEESLY, Professor Edward Spencer, was born at Feckenham, Worcestershire, in 1831, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford. He was appointed Assistant-Master of Marlborough College in 1854, and Professor of History in University College, London, in 1860. At the General Election of 1885 he was the unsuccessful Liberal candidate for Westminster, and in 1886 he stood, also without success, for East Marylebone. Professor Beesly is the author of several review articles, pamphlets, &c., on historical, political, and social questions, treated from the Positivist point of view. He is one of the translators of Comte's "System of Positive Polity." A series of lectures by Professor Beesly on Roman history, entitled "Catiline, Clodius, and Tiberius," was published in 1878.

BEETON, Henry Coppinger, was born in London, May 15, 1827. He was appointed Agent-General for British Columbia, by order in Council, 1883. He was a Commissioner of the International Fisheries Exhibition, 1883, and of the Health Exhibition, 1884; a Royal Commissioner of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, 1886; on the Colonies Committee of the Chicago Exhibition, 1883. He is a Governor of the Imperial Institute, representing British Columbia on the governing body.

BELGIANS, King of the. See LEOPOLD II.

BELL, Alexander Graham, Ph.D., was born at Edinburgh, March 3, 1847. He was educated at the Edinburgh High School and Edinburgh University, and also studied for a time at the London University. He went to Canada in 1870, and thence, in 1872, to the United States. He had acquired prominence as a teacher of deaf-mutes before his inventions of the speaking telephone and photophone (first exhibited in 1876 and 1880 respectively) brought him wealth and fame. He is a member of various learned societies, and has published a number of papers on electrical subjects and the teaching of speech to deaf-mutes.

BELL, Charles Dent, D.D., Hon. Canon of Carlisle, son of Henry Humphrey Bell, Esq., landed proprietor, was born Feb. 10, 1819, at Ballymaguigan, County Derry, Ireland. He was educated at the Academy, Edinburgh, at the Royal School, Dungannon, County Tyrone, and entered Trinity College, Dublin, as Queen's Scholar, in 1839; received the Degree of B.A. and Divinity Testimonial, 1842; and was Vice-Chancellor's Prizeman for English verse, 1840, 1841, 1842;

M.A., 1852; B.D. and D.D., 1878; Deacon, 1843; Priest, 1844. The following have been his appointments:—Curate of Hampton-in-Arden, 1843—45; Curate of St. Mary's Chapel, Reading, 1845-46; Curate of St. Mary's-in-the-Castle, Hastings, 1846-54; Incumbent of St. John's Chapel, Hampstead, 1854-61; Vicar of Ambleside, and Rural Dean, 1861; Hon. Canon of Carlisle, 1869; Vicar of Rydal with Ambleside, 1872; Rector of Cheltenham, 1879; Surrogate of Cheltenham, 1884. He is the author of "Night Scenes of the Bible, and their Teachings," 1860; "The Saintly Calling," 1874; "Hills that bring Peace," 1876; "Voices from the Lakes," 1876; "Angelic Beings and their Ministry," 1877; "Roll Call of Faith," 1878; "Songs in the Twilight," 1878; "Hymns for Church and Chamber," 1879; "Our Daily Life, its Dangers and its Duties," and "Life of Henry Martyn," 1880; "Choice of Wisdom," and "Living Truths for Head and Heart," 1881; "Songs in Many Keys," 1884; "The Valley of Weeping and Place of Springs," and "Gleanings from a Tour in Palestine and the East," 1886; "A Winter on the Nile," 1888; "Reminiscences of a Boyhood in the early Part of the Century, a New Story by an Old Hand," 1889. Dr. Bell is one of the promoters of the Dean Close Memorial School, Cheltenham, Chairman of Committee, and a Trustee; Ex-Officio Chairman of the Committee of the Cheltenham Training College for Male and Female Students. During his Incumbency he has restored the fine old Parish Church of Cheltenham, and has built in the parish a large new church (St. Matthew's).

BELL, The Rev. George Charles, M.A., fifth in the succession as Master of Marlborough College, is the eldest son of George Bell, Esq., Merchant of London, and was born July 9, 1832 at Streatham. He was educated, 1842-51, at Christ's Hospital (the Bluecoat School), in London, where he carried off every prize and distinction that a boy could take. As a Grecian, he gained a scholarship at Lincoln College, Oxford, 1851, and went up to the University, having, in addition, the first scholarship of the school. In his second year he migrated to Worcester College, where he had again won a valuable scholarship, 1852. As an undergraduate, he acquired a familiarity with the language and literature of several European nations, and in addition made himself a musician of no small repute. In the last term of 1854 he took a First Class in the Final Mathematical School, and, in the following spring, a First in the Final Classical School. In 1857 Mr. Bell gained the Senior University Mathematical Scholarship, and was elected Fellow and Mathematical Lecturer of his College. He received Deacon's Orders in 1859, and six years later was appointed Under Master of Dulwich College. In 1868 Mr. Bell received his nomination as Head Master of his own old school, Christ's Hospital. In the following year he was ordained priest. Mr. Bell remained at Christ's Hospital for eight years, and in 1876, on the resignation of Archdeacon Farrar, he accepted the Mastership of Marlborough. While in London, Mr. Bell took an active part in supporting Mrs. William Grey's scheme for the education of girls: in recognition of this, he was appointed a Vice-President of the Girl's Public Day School Company. He has been an active member of the Head Masters' Conference since its foundation, and was Chairman of its Committee for three periods of three years each. He has also, for many years, been a member of the Council of the College of Preceptors. The folowing is a list of the various stages in Mr. Bell's career:—Scholar of Lincoln College, Oxford, 1851; Scholar of Worcester College, Oxford, 1852; First Class Mathematical Moderations, 1852; First Class Classics (Final Schools), 1854; First Class Mathematics (Do.), 1855, B.A., 1855; Senior Mathematical Scholar, 1857; Fellow of Worcester, 1857, and M.A.; Mathematical Lecturer of Worcester College, 1857-65; Mathematical Moderator, 1859-60; ordained Deacon, 1859, Priest, 1869, by Samuel Wilberforce, Bishop of Oxford; Mathematical Examiner, 1863; Select Preacher, 1867 and 1885; Second Master of Dulwich College, 1865-68; Head Master of Christ's Hospital, 1868-76; Master of Marlborough College, 1876; Prebendary of Sarum, 1886; has published nothing but two sermons, "The Increase of Faith," preached in Salisbury Cathedral, 1887; "Confidence in Christ," preached in Westminster Abbey, 1888. He married in 1870, Elizabeth, second daughter of Edward Milner, Esq., of Dulwich Wood.

BELL, Henry Thomas Mackenzie, poet and critic, is better known by his pen-name of Mackenzie Bell. He is the son of the late Thomas Bell, and nephew of the late Thomas Mackenzie, sometime Solicitor-General for Scotland, subsequently a Scottish judge under the title of Lord Mackenzie, and author of "Studies in Roman Law." He was born in Liverpool on March 2, 1856. During early childhood he had the misfortune to have a slight stroke of paralysis—the result of a fall owing to a nurse's carelessness. But for many years his health has been good, and he has done much literary work, and travelled a good deal. In 1884 he settled in London, and in the same year published his monograph on the novelist and poet, Charles Whitehead, and thereby attracted well-deserved attention to that early friend of Dickens who was originally asked to write the book afterwards famous as "The Pickwick Papers." A new edition of Mr. Mackenzie Bell's monograph, prefixed to which was an appreciation of Whitehead by Mr. Hall Caine, was issued in 1894, and received a cordial reception from the press. Mr. Mackenzie Bell has written numerous important critical articles in "The Poets and the Poetry of the Century," and has been a contributor to The Academy, The Speaker, Temple Bar, and other publications of repute. His "Spring's Immortality, and other Poems," appeared in the autumn of 1893.

BELL, Sir Isaac Lowthian, Bart., F.R.S., D.C.L., was born in 1816. After completing his studies of physical science at Edinburgh University, and the Sorbonne at Paris, he entered the chemical and iron works at Walker. In 1850 he became connected with the chemical works at Washington, in the county of Durham, then in the hands of his father-in-law, the late H. L. Pattinson, F.R.S. Under his direction they were greatly enlarged, and an extensive establishment was constructed for the manufacture of oxychloride of lead, a pigment discovered by Mr. Pattinson. In 1873 he ceased to be a partner in these works, which are now carried on by a grandson of Mr. Pattinson's. Mr. Bell, in connection with his brothers, Messrs. Thomas and John Bell, founded, in 1852, the Clarence Works on the Tees, one of the earliest, and now one of the largest iron-smelting concerns on that river, which these gentlemen carry on in connection with extensive collieries and ironstone mines. Recently, arrangements have been made for obtaining salt from a bed of the mineral, found at a depth of 1,200 feet at Port Clarence. Mr. Bell has been a frequent contributor to various learned societies on subjects connected with the metallurgy of iron, and has recently completed a very elaborate experimental research on the chemical phenomena of the blast-furnace. He has filled the posts of President to the Iron and Steel Institute, to the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, to the Mining and Mechanical Engineers of the North of England, and now is President of the Society of Chemical Industry. In recognition of his services as Juror of the International Exhibitions at Philadelphia in 1876, and at Paris in 1878 and 1889, he was elected an honorary member of the American Philosophical Institution and an Officer of the Legion of Honour. He has filled the office of Sheriff, and was twice elected Mayor of Newcastle-on-Tyne, the last time in order to receive the members of the British Association at their meeting in the year 1863. He was elected M.P. for Hartlepool in July, 1875, but ceased to represent that borough in 1880. Sir Lowthian Bell is the author of several important writings on the iron and steel industries.

BELL, James, C.B., D.Sc., Ph.D., F.R.S., born in 1825, is a native of the county Armagh; was educated principally by private tuition, and at University College, London, where he distinguished himself in chemistry and mathematics. He became Deputy-Principal of the Somerset House Laboratory, Inland Revenue Department, in 1867, and Principal in 1875. In connection with his official position, he was made, in 1868, Chemical Examiner of lime and lemon juice for the supply of the British merchant navy, and from 1869 he has acted as consulting chemist to the Indian Government, and several of the principal public departments. On the passing of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act in 1875, he became Chemical Referee under that act for the United Kingdom. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1884, and the degree of Doctor of Science was conferred upon him in 1886 by the Senate of the Royal University, Dublin. He obtained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy under the ordinary statutes of the University of Erlangen; and was President of the Institute of Chemistry of Great Britain and Ireland in 1888, and created a Companion of the Bath in 1889. As regards his scientific work, Dr. Bell is, perhaps, best known from his valuable series of chemical researches into the composition of articles of food, and the variations that occur in their constituents. The results of these original researches with improved methods of analysis, were elaborated and embodied by him in a work entitled "The Chemistry of Foods," and published in three parts, 1881-3. This work has since been translated into German, and published in Berlin. Among his other scientific work may be mentioned his study of the grape and malt ferments, published in the Journal of the Chemical Society, 1870, and also his laborious and interesting research on tobacco, the results of which were published in 1887, in the form of a pamphlet entitled "The Chemistry of Tobacco." In addition to his scientific labours, Dr. Bell has compiled two departmental books, partly educational and partly legal and technical.

BELL, John, sculptor, born in Norfolk, in 1821, exhibited at the Royal Academy, in 1831, a religious group, followed by "Psyche feeding a Swan," and other poetic works. In 1837 he exhibited the model of his "Eagle-slayer," a composition which was exhibited in Westminster Hall in 1844, and again at the International Exhibition in 1851. Reduced casts in bronze were subsequently executed for the Art Union. Mr. Bell took an active part in the original movement which culminated in the Great Exhibition of 1851, and gave rise to the South Kensington Museum and the Schools connected with it. In 1841 he exhibited his well-known and beautiful figure of "Dorothea." The first statue which Mr. Bell was commissioned to execute for the new Houses of Parliament was that of "Lord Falkland." Among his other works, which are almost wholly of the poetic class, may be mentioned "The Babes in the Wood," in marble, now in the South Kensington Museum, an "Andromeda," a bronze, purchased by the Queen, and "Sir Robert Walpole," in St. Stephen's Hall; also "Miranda," "Imogen," "The Last Kiss," "The Dove's Refuge," "Herod Stricken on his Throne," "Lalage," "The Cross of Prayer," "The Octoroon," "Una and the Lion," "Cromwell," at the South Kensington Museum, "James Montgomery," the poet, at Sheffield, and various busts and statuettes. He executed the Wellington monument at Guildhall, with colossal figures of Peace and War; and the marble statue of armed science at Woolwich. Among his public works are the "Guards Memorial" in Waterloo Place, Pall Mall, and the Crimean Artillery Memorial on the Parade at Woolwich. In 1859 he received the medal of the Society of Arts for the origination of the principle of Entasis and definite proportions applied to the obelisk; and he was one of the sculptors employed in the completion of the Prince Consort Memorial in Hyde Park, his portion being the colossal marble group of the United States directing the progress of America, a large copy of which, in terra-cotta, is now at Washington. He has for some years retired from the active practice of his art, but still continues executing small statues of a poetic class, and has been employed on the restoration of the lost Venus of Cnidus and the mutilated statue of the Venus of Melos. He has lately presented some of the original models of his larger statues to the Town Hall of Kensington.

BELLAMY, Edward, an American writer, was born at Chicopee Falls in Massachusetts, in 1850. He was educated at Union College and in Germany; studied law and was admitted to the Bar, but never practised his profession, as he preferred a literary life. During 1871-72 he was on the staff of the New York Evening Post, and for the five years following was an editorial writer and critic for the Springfield Union. His health failing him, he made a voyage in 1876-77 to the Sandwich Islands, and on his return founded, with others, the Springfield News. After two years more of journalism, he abandoned it in order to devote himself entirely to original writing. He has contributed many short stories to the magazines, and in addition, has published, "Six to One: a Nantucket Idyl," 1878; "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," 1880; and "Miss Ludington's Sister," 1884. His greatest success, however, has been in his socialistic novel, "Looking Backward," issued in 1888, and of which more than 300,000 copies were sold in America within two years of its first appearance. Mr. Bellamy still resides at Chicopee Falls, and interests himself in advancing the ideas of nationalism advocated in his book.

BELLOC, Marie Adelaide, only daughter of M. Louis Belloc, a French barrister, and of Madame Belloc (née Bessie Rayner Parkes), through whom she is descended from Dr. Joseph Priestly, was born in 1868. She is prominent among London lady journalists, and, having made a special study of French history and literature, is an authority in matters of contemporary French biography. She has published the "Life and Letters of Charlotte Elizabeth, Princess Palatine," 1889, and selections from the correspondence of "Edmond and Jules de Goncourt," 1894.

BELMORE (Earl), The Right Hon. Somerset Richard Lowry-Corry, P.C., K.C.M.G., fourth Earl of, son of the third Earl, whom he succeeded in 1845, was born in London in 1835, and educated at Cambridge. He was elected a representative peer for Ireland in 1857; was Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in Lord Derby's third administration, from July, 1866, to July, 1867; and was Governor of New South Wales from Jan., 1868, to Feb., 1872. He is a Privy Councillor in Ireland, 1867, and a Knight Grand Cross of St. Michael and St. George, 1890.

BENEDEN, Professor, Pierre J. Van, M.D., LL.D., was born at Malines, Dec. 16, 1809, and became Professor at the Faculty of Sciences at Louvain in 1836. He has devoted a long life to researches in many branches of anatomy, zoology, physiology, ichthyology (fossil and recent), and ethnology. Besides his larger works Professor Van Beneden has published nearly 300 memoirs in the transactions of various scientific societies. Professor Van Beneden is M.D. and D.Sc., LL.D., Edinburgh, member of the Academy of Science of Belgium, Foreign Member of the Royal Society of London, Member of the Institute of France, of the Academies of Berlin, Boston, Lisbon, Montpellier, Munich, and of numerous scientific societies, and Knight Commander or Grand Officer of Orders of Belgium, Brazil, Italy, and other countries.

BENEDETTI, Comte Vincent de, a French diplomatist, of Italian extraction, born in Corsica, about 1815, was educated for the consular and diplomatic service. After having been appointed consul at Palermo in 1848, he became first Secretary to the Embassy at Constantinople, until May, 1859, when he was appointed to succeed M. Bourée as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister at Teheran. M. Benedetti, who declined to accept the office, was some months afterwards named Director of Political Affairs to the Foreign Minister,—a position associated with the successful career of MM. de Rayneval and d'Hauterive, and with the names of Desages, Armand, Lefebvre, and Thouvenel. It fell to the lot of M. Benedetti to act as secretary and editor of the protocols in the Congress of Paris in 1856, and he was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honour in June, 1845, Officer in 1853, Commander in 1856, Grand Officer in June, 1860, and Grand Cross in 1866. Having been appointed Minister Plenipotentiary of France at Turin in 1861, on the recognition of the Italian Kingdom by the French Government, he resigned when M. Thouvenel retired from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and was appointed Ambassador at Berlin, Nov. 27, 1864. M. Benedetti obtained great notoriety in connection with the remarkable draft of a secret treaty between France and Prussia, which was published in the Times on the 25th of July, 1870, at the very beginning of the war between those two Powers. The document stated that the Emperor Napoleon III. would allow and recognise the Prussian acquisitions consequent upon the war against Austria; that the King of Prussia would promise to assist France in acquiring Luxemburg; that the Emperor would not oppose a Federal re-union of North and South Germany; that if the Emperor should occupy or conquer Belgium, the King should afford armed assistance to France against any other Power that might declare war against her in such case; and that the two Powers should conclude an offensive and defensive alliance. The publication of this extraordinary document caused great consternation and excitement throughout Europe. Its authenticity was not denied, but France declared that although M. Benedetti had written the document, he had done so at the dictation of Count Bismarck; whereas the latter statesman declared that through one channel or another France had incessantly demanded some compensation for not interfering with Prussia in her projects. Both statesmen agreed in saying that their respective sovereigns declined to sanction the treaty. On the outbreak of the war, M. Benedetti was of course recalled from Berlin; and since the fall of the Empire he has disappeared from public notice. In Oct., 1871, however, he published a pamphlet, in which he threw upon Count Bismarck the whole responsibility of the draft treaty, but the German Chancellor utterly crushed his opponent by a weighty reply. In 1872 he was elected a member of the Conseil Général of Corsica, and since then he has been an advocate at the Bar of Ajaccio.

BENHAM, The Rev. Canon William, B.D., was born at West Meon, Hants, Jan. 15, 1831, his father being the village postmaster, as his grandfather had been before him. He was educated at the village National School, and was favourably noticed by the rector, Archdeacon Bayley, who, being blind, took him to his house as his little secretary. He taught the youth Latin and Greek, and after his death in 1844, Mr. Benham was sent to St. Mark's College, Chelsea, to be trained for a schoolmaster. After working in that capacity for a few years, Archdeacon Bayley's family furnished him with the means of going through the Theological Department of King's College, London. He went out with a first-class, and was ordained by the late Archbishop of Canterbury, then Bishop of London, as Divinity Teacher to his old college at Chelsea. He remained there from 1857 to 1864, when he became Editorial Secretary to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and curate of St. Lawrence Jewry, under the present Dean of Exeter. In 1867 he was favourably noticed as a preacher by some members of Archbishop Longley's family, unknown to himself, and this led to the Archbishop offering him the vicarage of his own parish of Addington. He acted as the Primate's private secretary during the first Lambeth Conference, and passed the Resolutions through the press, and also his last charge. Archbishop Tait also made him one of the Six Preachers of Canterbury in 1872, and gave him the vicarage of Margate in the same year. His chief work there was the carrying out the restoration of the parish church. In 1880 he was appointed to the vicarage of Marden, and in 1882 to the rectory of St. Edmund the King, Lombard Street, in the City of London. In 1889 the present Archbishop conferred on him an honorary Canonry in Canterbury Cathedral. Canon Benham has published "The Gospel of St. Matthew, with notes and a commentary," 1862; "English Ballads, with introduction and notes," 1863; "The Epistles for the Christian Year, with notes and commentary," 1864; "The Church of the Patriarchs," 1867; the "Globe" edition of Cowper's works," 1870; Commentary on the Acts in the "Commentary of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge," 1871; "A Companion to the Lectionary," 1872; a new translation of Thomas à Kempis's "Imitatio Christi," 1874; "Memoirs of Catherine and Craufurd Tait," 1879; "Readings on the Life of our Lord and his Apostles," 1880; "How to Teach the Old Testament," 1881; "Short History of the American Church," 1884; an edition of "Cowper's Letters," 1885; "Diocesan History of Winchester," 1885; "Sermons for the Church's Year," 2 vols., 1885; and a "Dictionary of Religion." He is editor of Griffith and Farran's "Library of Ancient and Modern Theology." He has also contributed articles to "The Bible Educator," Macmillan's Magazine, and other periodicals.

BENNETT, William Cox, LL.D., is the son of Mr. John Bennett, watchmaker, of Greenwich, where he was born October 14, 1820. Whilst still a youth, he took an active part in the formation of a literary institution on the most popular basis, in connection with which he formed a library consisting of above 12,000 volumes. Perhaps best known as a song-writer, Dr. Bennett has since published "Poems," 1850; "Verdicts," 1852; "War Songs," 1855; "Queen Eleanor's Vengeance, and other Poems," 1857; "Song, by a Song-Writer," 1859; "Baby May, and other Poems on Infants," 1861; "The Worn Wedding Ring," &c., 1861; "The Politics of the People," Parts I. and II., 1865; "Our Glory Roll, National Poems," 1866; "Contributions to a Ballad History of England," 1868; "Songs for Sailors," 1872; republished with music by J. L. Hatton," 1878; "Prometheus, the Fire-giver," an attempted restoration of the lost First Part of the "Promethean Trilogy of Æschylus," 1877; "Sea Songs," 1878; "Songs for Soldiers," 1879. He edited a monthly periodical, "The Lark,—Songs, Ballads, and Recitations for the People," from Aug., 1883 to Sept., 1884. Dr. Bennett has been a frequent contributor to periodicals. A collected edition of his poems appeared in 1862, in "Routledge's British Poets." Dr. Bennett is also a political writer, and was attached to the staff of the Weekly Despatch, during the years 1869-70. The University of Tusculum conferred on him the degree of LL.D. in 1869.

BENNIGSEN, Rudolph von, born at Lüneberg, Hanover, July 10, 1824, studied jurisprudence at Göttingen and Heidelberg, and qualified as an advocate, but entered the judiciary and rose to the functions of a judge at Göttingen. In 1855 the city of Aurich elected him to the Second Chamber of the Hanover Legislature, but the King refused him the indispensable consent of the Crown to accept that legislative office. Thereupon he resigned his judgeship, took his seat in the Parliament (1856), and at once assumed a position as leader of the Opposition. In 1859 Bennigsen and Miguel, with a few others, drew up and issued a programme or scheme of German unity. In this document it was declared that only Prussia could be at the head of a united Germany, and in fact Bennigsen advocated at this period that which Prince Bismarck long afterwards accomplished. The National-Verein held its first sitting Sept. 16, 1859, at the invitation of Bennigsen, and he himself was chosen President. The Frankfort Assembly formed the permanent organisation of the National-Verein, and fixed its seat in the city of Coburg. At the time of its dissolution in 1866, it numbered 30,000 members, of whom 10,000 were from Prussia. In that year the organisation of the North German Confederation making inevitable and speedy realisation of the Empire, the Union had no further raison d'être, and it was accordingly dissolved. Bennigsen, who by the annexation of Hanover was made a Prussian, became a member both of the Prussian Lower Chamber and of the North German Reichstag. During the war in 1870 he was in confidential relations with the Prussian authorities, and undertook two important missions—one to the South German States, where he discussed the conditions of a possible unity; the other, to the camp of Versailles in the winter of 1871, where the same negotiations were afterwards carried out to a practical result. In 1873 he was elected President of the Prussian House of Deputies. At the elections of 1877 the Socialist party opposed his candidature, but without success. He was re-elected to the Reichstag, and endeavoured to effect an understanding between Prince Bismarck and the National Liberals, but the negotiations ended in the disruption of his party. In 1883 he retired from the Reichstag, but was again elected in 1887 and 1890.

BENSON, The Most Rev. Edward White, D.D., Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Metropolitan, son of Edward White Benson, Esq., of Birmingham Heath, and formerly of York, was born near Birmingham in 1829. He was educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was successively Scholar and Fellow, and where he graduated B.A. in 1852, as a First Class in classical honours, and Senior Chancellor's Medallist, obtaining also the place of a Senior Optime in the Mathematical Tripos. He graduated M.A. in 1855, B.D. in 1862, and D.D. in 1867, Hon. D.C.L. (Oxford), 1884. He was for some years one of the masters in Rugby School, and he held the head-mastership of Wellington College from its first opening in 1858 down to 1872. For several years he was Examining Chaplain to the late Bishop of Lincoln, by whom he was appointed Chancellor and Canon Residentiary of Lincoln, having been a Prebendary of the same cathedral for three years previous. He was Select Preacher to the University of Cambridge (1864, 1871, 1875, 1876, 1879, and 1882), and to the University of Oxford (1875-76), Hon. Chaplain to the Queen, 1873, and Chaplain in Ordinary, 1875-77. In Dec., 1876, he was nominated by the Crown, on the recommendation of the Earl of Beaconsfield, to the newly-restored Bishopric of Truro, and was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, April 25, 1877. The diocese, which was taken out of the diocese of Exeter, consists of the county of Cornwall, the Isles of Scilly, and five parishes of Devonshire, constituting the old Archdeaconry of Cornwall, with the church of St. Mary, Truro, as a Cathedral. During his occupation of the See he began the building of a new Cathedral at Truro (with Mr. J. L. Pearson as architect), of which the outward shell has cost over £100,000, much of that sum having been gathered through the energy of the Bishop. In Dec., 1882, Dr. Benson was appointed by the Crown, on Mr. Gladstone's recommendation, to the Archbishopric of Canterbury, in succession to Dr. Tait. Dr. Benson has published "Σαλπιστὴ. A memorial Sermon preached after the death of Dr. Lee, first Bishop of Manchester," 1870; "Work, Friendship, Worship," being three sermons preached before the University of Cambridge in 1871; "Boy-Life, its trial, its strength, its fulness, Sundays in Wellington College, 1859-72," Lond., 8vo, 1874; "Single-heart," 1877; "The Cathedral, its necessary place in the Life and Work of the Church," 1879; "The Seven Gifts," 1885; "Christ and his Times," 1889; "Living Theology," 1891; "Fishers of Men," 1893. Dr. Benson married, in 1859, Mary, daughter of the late Rev. William Sidgwick, of Skipton, Yorkshire.

BERESFORD, Lord Charles William de la Poer, second son of the Rev. John Beresford, fourth Marquis of Waterford, by Christiana Julia, fourth daughter of the late Colonel Charles Powell Leslie, of Glaslough, co. Monaghan, was born Feb. 10, 1846, at Philiptown, co. Dublin. He entered the Royal Navy in 1859, was appointed a Lieutenant in 1868, and advanced to the rank of Commander in 1875. He served successively in the "Marlborough," the "Defence," the "Clio," the "Tribune," the "Sutlej," the "Research," the Royal yacht "Victoria and Albert," the "Galatea," the "Goshawk," and "Bellerophon." In 1872 he was appointed Flag Lieutenant to the Commander-in-Chief at Devonport; and he accompanied the Prince of Wales as Naval aide-de-camp to India in 1875-76. In 1877 he joined the "Thunderer," and was commander of the Royal yacht "Osborne" from 1878 to 1881. His lordship received the gold medal of the Royal Humane Society, and of the Liverpool Shipwreck and Humane Society, for having on three occasions jumped overboard and saved lives at sea. On one of these occasions, when he rescued a marine who had fallen overboard at Port Stanley, Falkland Island, he was attired in heavy shooting clothes, and his pockets were filled with cartridges. At the time of the bombardment of the forts of Alexandria, Lord Charles Beresford was in command of the gunboat "Condor," and in the action of July 11, 1882, he greatly distinguished himself by his gallant conduct. The ironclad, "Téméraire," which got ashore at the beginning of the engagement, was safely assisted off by the "Condor." Then the formidable Marabout batteries, which constituted the second strongest defence of the port of Alexandria, were effectually silenced. This latter success was chiefly due to the gallant way in which the "Condor" bore down on the fort and engaged guns immensely superior to her own. So vigorous, indeed, was the attack on the big fort, that the Admiral's ship signalled "Well done, 'Condor.'" It was ascertained that the Khedive, who had taken refuge with Dervish Pacha at Ramleh, was in imminent danger. Arabi Pacha had sent a body of troops to guard the palace, and ordered them to kill the Khedive, but Tewfik and Dervish managed to bribe the men, and to communicate with Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, who despatched the "Condor" in shore to keep the Egyptian troops in check. The Khedive then succeeded in getting away, and drove to Ras-el-Tin. As the conflagration and looting continued in the city of Alexandria, the Americans were asked to land marines to assist in keeping order, and a regular police system was organised under Lord Charles Beresford, while Captain Fisher, of the "Inflexible," took command of the land forces. Strong measures were necessary to subdue the looters. Several of the scoundrels detected in the very act of setting fire to houses were summarily shot in the great square, and those caught plundering were flogged. Lord Charles Beresford was promoted to the rank of Captain (Aug. 7, 1882), for the services he had rendered at the Bombardment of Alexandria. In Sept., 1884, he was appointed on the staff of Lord Wolseley for the Nile Expedition, and assisted in the arduous work of getting the boats up to Korti. In command of the Naval Brigade with Sir Herbert Stewart across the Desert, he was the only man not killed of those in immediate charge of the machine gun at Abu Klea, and was subsequently left in charge of Zeraba when the troops marched on Gubat. In Feb., 1885, with the small river steamer "Safia," he rescued Sir Charles Wilson's party (who had been wrecked on their return from Khartoum), after having had the boiler of his steamer repaired while anchored for twenty-four hours under fire of the enemy's fort, which fire was kept down solely by the two machine-guns on board. His lordship sat in the House of Commons, as member for the county of Waterford, in the Conservative interest, from Feb., 1874, till April, 1880, when his candidature was unsuccessful. On many occasions he called attention to the state of affairs connected with the Navy, and several Naval Reforms were affected through his instrumentality. In Nov., 1885, he was returned for the Eastern Division of Marylebone by a majority of 944 over the late sitting member, and easily retained the seat at the election of 1886. He was appointed Junior Lord of the Admiralty on the accession of Lord Salisbury to power, which post he resigned in 1888 on a question affecting the strength of the Navy. He subsequently brought before the House of Commons detailed proposals for strengthening the fleet by 70 ships, at a cost of twenty millions. The Naval Defence Bill may be said to have resulted from these proposals. In Dec., 1889, he was appointed to the command of the first-class armoured cruiser "Undaunted," for service in the Mediterranean, having previously retired from Parliament. He married, in 1878, Mina, eldest daughter of the late Mr. Richard Gardner, M.P.

BERKLEY, George, Civil Engineer, was born in London on April 26, 1821, and educated at private schools, and apprenticed to Samuda Bros. in 1835, with whom he worked in the shops and on designs of atmospheric systems of working railways, steam-engines, &c. From 1841 to 1849 he was assistant to Robert Stephenson, during which period he was engaged on experiments with Locomotives, alteration of gauge and Rolling Stock of the Eastern Counties and North-Eastern Railways; inquiry into systems of working atmospheric Railways, question of gauge referred to Royal Commission in 1846, and other work. From 1849 to 1859, he was engaged on inquiry into the Water supply of Liverpool and neighbourhood for Robert Stephenson; Engineer to London and Blackwall Railway; North and South-Western Junction Railway and Branch to Hammersmith, Hampstead Junction Railway, Stratford and Loughton Railway, Wimbledon and Croydon, East Suffolk system of Railways; Wells and Fakenham and other lines, and from 1851—1859 represented Robert Stephenson as Engineer to the Great Indian Peninsula Railway and succeeded to the post on the death of Robert Stephenson. In 1874 he was appointed one of the Consulting Engineers to the Colonial Office for Railways in Natal, and viaducts and other work in the Cape Colony. In 1885, he was appointed Consulting Engineer to the Indian Midland Railway, and in 1887, in conjunction with his son, was appointed Engineer to the Argentine North-Eastern Railway. In 1845, he wrote a paper on the atmospheric system of Railways, and in 1870 a paper on the strength of Iron and Steel, for the Institution of Civil Engineers. He is senior Vice-President of the Institution of Civil Engineers; a member of the Athenæum Club, and has been for some years on the board of Managers of the Royal Institution.

BERNARD-BEERE, Mrs., is a daughter of Mr. Wilby Whitehead, and widow of Capt. E. C. Dering, a son of Sir Edward Dering, Bart. She was prepared for the stage by Mr. Hermann Vezin, and made her début at the Opera Comique, but soon after, on the occasion of her marriage, abandoned the profession. On her return to the stage she appeared as Julia, in "The Rivals," at the St. James's Theatre, and during her engagement there played Lady Sneerwell, Grace Harkaway, and Emilia. She subsequently took part in "The School for Scandal," and "The Rivals." On April 12, 1882, Mrs. Bernard-Beere represented Bathsheba Everdene, in "Far from the Madding Crowd," at the Globe. After this she proceeded to the Haymarket, where, on May 5, 1883, she was "cast for" the title part of Mr. Herman Merivale's version of "Fédora." Her next characters were Mrs. Devenish, in "Lords and Commons," and Countess Zicka, in "Diplomacy." During 1888 she appeared in a succession of plays at the Opera Comique Theatre, of which "As in a Looking-Glass," was the most remarkable.

BERNHARDT, Rosine (called Sarah). See DAMALA, MME.

BERRY, Sir Graham, was a shopkeeper in Chelsea, who went out to Victoria in 1852 in the height of the gold-digging fever, but instead of turning his attention to the gold mines he settled down to business at Melbourne. In 1860 he was elected to the Victorian Parliament as an advanced Liberal, and again in 1864, but was defeated in the next election, and then, devoting his energies to journalism, became proprietor and editor of the Geelong Register. He soon, however, re-entered Parliament, and in 1870 first took office as Treasurer, and five years later became Premier for a short time. In 1877 Sir G. Berry was returned at the head of an overwhelming majority, and once more took the Premiership. While in office he passed several important democratic measures, including a land tax on large estates, but failed to carry a proposal for a fundamental reform of the Legislative Council. Sir G. Berry then visited England in order to induce the Imperial Parliament to take up the matter, but failed, though through his efforts the question was eventually settled. On his return the general election of 1880 placed him in a minority, but he was subsequently restored to power, and carried some noteworthy reform measures. Again thrown out by want of confidence vote, Sir G. Berry entered a coalition Ministry, in which he was Chief Secretary. Early in 1886, Sir G. Berry, with Mr. Service, was Victorian delegate to the first Federal Council, and shortly afterwards he was appointed Agent-General in London for Victoria, which post he held until Feb., 1892. On returning to the Colony he accepted the office of Treasurer in the Shiels Ministry, which succumbed to a vote of a want of confidence in Jan., 1893. Sir Graham is at present the Speaker of the Protectionist Legislature in power in Victoria. The honour of knighthood was conferred in 1886 on Sir Graham Berry in recognition of his services to the colony. He was Executive Commissioner for Victoria at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition.

BERTHELOT, P. E. Marcelin, a French chemist, the son of a physician, was born at Paris, October 25, 1827. From a very early age he has devoted himself to scientific studies, and made special researches into the synthesis of fatty bodies and alcohol, and into thermo-chemistry. The degree of Doctor of Sciences was conferred upon him in April, 1854, and in 1861 the Academy of Sciences awarded him the sum of 3,500 francs for his researches. In 1859 he was appointed Professor of Organic Chemistry at the Superior School of Pharmacy, and in 1865 at the request of the Academy of Sciences a new chair of organic chemistry was created for him at the Collège de France. He was elected a Member of the Académie de Médecine in February, 1863, and entered the Académie des Sciences, March 3, 1873, in the place of Duhamel. He has since been elected Foreign Member of the Royal Society of London, and of most of the Academies of Europe and the United States. On September, 2, 1870, he was elected President of the Scientific Committee of Defence, and during the siege of Paris was engaged in the manufacture of guns and ammunition, and especially of nitro-glycerine and dynamite. Since 1878 he has been President of the Committee on explosives, to which body the new smokeless powder is due. On April 6, 1876, he was named Inspector-General of Higher Education. The labours of M. Berthelot have had for their object, principally, the reproduction of the substances which enter into the composition of organized beings, and his labours have opened a new field for science, which, up to his time, had limited itself almost entirely to analysis. The dyeing trade has benefited largely by his discoveries in extracting dyes from coal-tar. He has for forty years contributed extensively to the Annales de Chimie et de Physique, of which he is now editor, La Synthèse des Carbures d'Hydrogène, &c., and has written "Chimie Organique fondée sur la Synthèse," 1860; "Leçons sur les Principes Sucres," 1862; "Leçons sur les Méthodes Générales de Synthèse," 1864; "Leçons sur l'Isomérie," 1865; "Traité Élémentaire de Chimie Organique," "Sur la Force de la Poudre et des Matières Explosives," 1872 and 1889; "Vérification de l'Aréomètre de Baumé," 1873; "Les Origines de l'Alchimie," 1885; "Collection des anciens Alchimistes grecs," 1888, besides numerous scientific and philosophical articles for the Revue des Deux Mondes, the Revue des Cours Scientifiques, Le Temps, &c., which have been collectively published under the title "Science et Philosophie." He is one of the founders and the director of the "Grande Encyclopédie," of which the first volume was published in 1885. M. Berthelot was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1861, made an officer in 1867, commander in 1879, and grand officer in 1886, in which year he became, for a short time, a member of the French Cabinet. In 1889 he was elected Sécrétaire perpétuel de l'Académie des Sciences de Paris.

BERTRAND, Joseph Louis François, a French mathematician, born in Paris, March 11, 1822, evinced from a very early age an extraordinary taste for mathematics, and when eleven years of age on leaving the College of St. Louis, he entered the École Polytechnique. He was successively Professor at the Lycée Saint-Louis; Examiner for admissions at the Ecole Polytechnique, teacher of analysis at the same school, Assistant Professor of Mathematical Physics at the College of France, and Professor of Special Mathematics at the Lycée Napoleon. In 1856 he was admitted to the Académie des Sciences, in place of Sturm, and on the death of Elie de Beaumont, in 1874, was elected perpetual secretary. Besides his three great works, "Traité d'Arithmétique," 1849; "Traité d'Algèbre," 1856, and "Traité de Calcul Différentiel Intégral," 1864—1870, he has written a number of memoirs relative to physics, pure mathematics and mechanics, of which the following are the principal: "Sur les Conditions d'Intégralité des Fonctions différentielles;" "Sur la Théorie Générale des Surfaces;" "Sur la Similitude en Méchanique;" "Sur la Théorie des Phénomènes Capillaires;" "Sur la Théorie de la Propogation du Son," &c. He was made an officer of the Legion of Honour in August, 1867, and commander in Dec., 1881.

BESANT Mrs. Annie, née Wood, is of Irish parentage, but was born in London on Oct. 1st, 1847, and brought up at Harrow. In 1867 she married the Rev. Frank Besant, who was at that time a master at Cheltenham, and was subsequently Vicar of Sibsey in Lincolnshire. In 1873 she was legally separated from him. In 1874 her keen interest in political and social topics brought her into contact with the Secularists. She joined the National Secular Society, and published pamphlets under their auspices. On the publication of the notorious "Fruits of Philosophy," she was prosecuted in connection with the late Mr. Bradlaugh, M.P. (June, 1877), but the prosecution was a failure. In 1883 Mrs. Besant became deeply interested in Socialism. She was during three years a member of the London School Board. After a lifelong devotion to Free Thought she joined the Theosophical Society in 1889, and has carried on active Theosophical propaganda at home and in India and the United States. In March, 1893, she returned from a lecturing tour in the United States, where, as in India, to which she paid a lengthy visit in 1894, the Theosophical cult is very popular. She has now resumed her activities at home. She resides at the Theosophical European Head Quarters in St. John's Wood, N.W., and has of late years published her biography under the title of "Through Storm to Peace."

BESANT, Walter, was born at Portsmouth, in 1838, and educated at King's College, London, and Christ's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in high mathematical honours. He was intended for the Church, but abandoned this career. He was then appointed Senior Professor in the Royal College of Mauritius, but was compelled by ill health to resign, and returned to England, where he has since resided. In 1868 he produced his first work, "Studies in Early French Poetry." In 1873 he brought out "The French Humourists;" in 1877, "Rabelais," for the "Ancient and Foreign Classics;" and, in 1882, "Readings from Rabelais;" in 1879, "Coligny;" and in 1881, "Whittington" (Chatto & Windus). Mr. Besant acted for many years as secretary of the Palestine Exploration Fund, in which capacity he wrote, in 1871, a "History of Jerusalem," with the late Professor Palmer; and was editor of the great work entitled, "The Survey of Western Palestine." He has contributed to most of the magazines. In 1871 he entered into the partnership with the late Mr. James Rice, which produced the series of novels that bear their joint names. Mr. Besant has also written, under his own name, "The Revolt of Man," "The Captain's Room," "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," 1882, which led to the establishment of the People's Palace in the East End of London; "All in a Garden Fair," 1883; "Dorothy Foster," 1884; "Uncle Jack," 1885; "Children of Gibeon," 1886; "The World Went Very Well Then," 1887; "For Faith and Freedom," 1888; "The Bell of St. Paul's," 1889; "Armorel of Lyonnesse," 1890; "St. Katharine's by the Tower," 1891; "The Ivory Gate," 1892; "The Rebel Queen," 1893, and two or three volumes of short stories. He also, with Mr. Rice, put on the stage two plays, one performed at the Royal Court, a dramatic version of "Ready Money Mortiboy;" and the other, "Such a good Man," the play from which their story bearing the same title was written. He wrote a book on the people of London, 1892 (Chatto & Windus), and a small book on the history of London, 1893 (Longman). Mr. Besant has also written a biography of the late Professor Palmer, 1883, and "The Eulogy of Richard Jefferies," 1888. On the establishment of the "Incorporated Society of Authors," he was elected the First Chairman of the Executive Committee, and, in succession to the late Sir Frederick Pollock, he was re-elected to the same office which he held for four years. He is editor of The Author, a monthly paper devoted to the interests of literary men and literary beginners.

BESANT, William Henry, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., the son of a merchant at Portsmouth, was born at Portsmouth in 1828, and was educated at the Grammar School, and at a Proprietary School at Southsea, and proceeded, in 1846, to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1850, as Senior Wrangler, and First Smith's Prizeman. He was elected to a Fellowship at St. John's College in 1851, and was appointed Lecturer in 1853. The Fellowship ceased in 1859, but he was retained as Lecturer, and held that appointment until June, 1889. In 1856 he was Moderator, and in 1857 Examiner for the Mathematical Prizes, and 1885 he was again Moderator. From 1859 to 1864 he was one of the Examiners for the University of London. In 1871 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He is also a Member of the Royal Astronomical Society, and of the London Mathematical Society. In 1883 he received the degree of Doctor of Science, being the first D.Sc. created by the University of Cambridge. He has been very active as a Private Tutor, College Lecturer, and Examiner in Cambridge and elsewhere. In May, 1889, he was re-elected to a Fellowship at St. John's College. Dr. Besant has published treatises on "Hydro-Mechanics," "Elementary Hydrostatics," "Geometrical Conic Sections," "Dynamics," "Roulettes and Glissettes," and has written various papers in the Messenger of Mathematics, and in the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics.

BESIEGED Resident. See LABOUCHERE, H.

BESSEMER, Sir Henry, F.R.S., civil engineer and inventor, whose name is inseparably connected with the development of the steel industry in England and other countries, is the son of the late Mr. Anthony Bessemer, and was born in Hertfordshire in 1813. From his earliest youth he was fond of modelling and designing patterns, and, at the age of 20, he was an exhibitor in the Royal Academy; he, however, chose engineering as a profession, and, after taking out numerous patents for mechanical invention, he, in 1856, read before the British Association, at Cheltenham, his first paper on the manufacture of malleable iron and steel. His discovery of the means of rapidly and cheaply converting pig iron into steel, by blowing a blast of air through the iron when in a state of fusion, was the result of costly and laborious experiments which extended over a period of several years, and in which the ultimate result was attained only after many and disheartening failures. Prior to this invention, the entire production of cast steel in Great Britain was only about 50,000 tons annually; and its average price, which ranged from £50 to £60 per ton, was prohibitory of its use for many of the purposes to which it is now universally applied. The manufacture of steel by the Bessemer process in Great Britain alone, in the year 1889, amounted to no less than 2,140,791 tons, of which 943,083 tons were made into rails, having a mean selling price of £5 per ton, whereas cast steel bars, of a weight equal to a railway bar, had never been produced in Sheffield at a less cost than £50 per ton, prior to the introduction of Bessemer-steel. The quantity of steel produced by this process in Europe and America during the year 1891, averaged 33,653 tons in each working day, having a net value of £269,224 sterling, the production for the whole year being no less than 10,500,000 tons, which, in bulk, is equal to 52,500,000 cubic feet; the actual size presented to the eye of such a huge mass of metal is not easily imagined, but may be more readily appreciated by stating that it is sufficient to form a solid steel-wall round London 40 feet high, 5 feet in thickness and 49¾ miles in length, thus enclosing a circular space of 16 miles in diameter, having an area of 201 square miles. The value of this mass of metal taken at the low average of £8 per ton would be £94,000,000 sterling, and would weigh in British sovereigns, 657 tons. 17 cwt. 3 qrs. and 16 lbs. avoirdupois. The French review, Les Annales des Mines for 1892, has compiled from various official sources, complete statistics of the annual production of gold throughout the world, and gives the total amount as 206⅝ tons of gold, so that to pay for one year's production of Bessemer-steel in sovereigns would require considerably more gold than all the gold mines of the world produce in three years. It is also interesting to know that one year's production of Bessemer-steel effects a saving of 15 millions of tons of coal. In the United States, where 4,160,072 tons of this steel were made in 1892, no less than 1,458,743 tons of it were made into rails. Now taking these rails to weigh 84 lbs. per yard, they would lay a double track consisting of four lines of rails, a distance of 5,525½ miles, and when it is considered that the present market price of steel rails is only £4 10*s.* per ton, as against £7 per ton, the price of iron-rails prior to this invention, and when it is remembered also that a steel-rail will last in use for at least the time that will wear out six iron ones, the immense economy, both in first cost and in the maintenance of the road, cannot fail to be appreciated. Indeed it is to these facts that we owe the vast extension of cheap steel railway-lines throughout the United States, which have opened up her western corn-growing regions, bringing millions of acres into cultivation that could not otherwise have been settled, and which are now sending millions of quarters of corn and hundreds of thousands of barrels of flour and other bread-stuffs into this country, which reacting on our own markets have lowered the price of food in every household in Great Britain. The steel made by the Bessemer process, while it retains more than the toughness of the best iron, is at least 50 per cent. stronger, and is now rapidly superseding the use of iron for the construction of the hulls of ships, their masts, yards, and standing rigging; also for the construction of bridges, viaducts, girders, and large span roofs; while for steam-boilers, locomotive engines, and other railway purposes it has almost entirely banished the use of iron. It is difficult to realize the fact that an invention which has revolutionized the whole iron trade of the world in the short space of thirty years, was in its early infancy so pooh-poohed, cried down, and fought against, by the great steel trade of Sheffield, as to have been in danger of being wholly lost to the world; but Mr. Bessemer, with the courage and indomitable energy so characteristic of the man, determined, on the refusal of the trade to take up his invention, to become himself a steel manufacturer. With this object he built steel works in Sheffield, determined to beard the lion in his den, and force, by an irresistible competition, the trade to adopt and carry out his invention, and become Licencees under his Patents; in this he was eminently successful, and to-day there is manufactured in England by the Bessemer process more than forty-five times the quantity of steel that was made by the old process prior to his invention. The first honorary recognition of the importance of the Bessemer process in this country was made by the Institution of Civil Engineers about 1858, when that body awarded Mr. Bessemer the Gold Telford Medal, for a paper read by him before them on the subject. A knowledge of the new process soon spread to Sweden, Germany, Austria, France and America, and the inventor has received from these countries many honours and marks of distinction. In the early days of the invention Prince Oscar of Sweden travelled many miles to witness the process in operation, and, as a mark of his approval, made the inventor a member of the Iron-board of Sweden. In Austria the honour of Knight Commander of the Order of his Imperial Majesty Francis Joseph was presented to him by the Emperor, together with the gold and enamelled cross and ribbon of the order. The Emperor Napoleon desired to present him with the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour, but the British Government would not allow him to accept it. The Emperor in person presented him with a superb gold medal instead. He also received the Albert Gold Medal, which was awarded by the Council of the Society of Arts, presented to him by the Prince of Wales at Marlborough House. The King of Wurtemburg also presented to the inventor a handsome gold medal, accompanied by a complimentary testimonial. His Majesty the King of the Belgians, who has always taken a deep interest in the Bessemer process, has on several occasions honoured the inventor by personally visiting him at his residence on Denmark Hill. The Freedom of the City of Hamburg was also presented to him in due form. He was also made a member of the Royal Academy of Trade in Berlin, and a member of the Society for the Encouragement of National Industry of Paris, and in England he was made a member of the Royal Society of British Architects, and a member of University College, London, a member of the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders of Scotland, and of the Society of Mechanical Engineers of England and America. He succeeded the late Duke of Devonshire as President of the Iron and Steel Institute of Great Britain, and during his presidency he instituted the "Bessemer Gold Medal," which has since been awarded annually for the most important improvement in the iron and steel manufacture made during the year. He also instituted the Bessemer Bronze Medal and five guinea prize of books, annually presented to the most successful student at the Royal School of Mines at South Kensington. The Institution of Civil Engineers awarded him a splendid gold cup, being the Howard Quinquennial prize. He was also presented with the Freedom of the Cutlers Company of London, and the Freedom of the Turners Company, and, at a specially convened meeting at the Guildhall on May 13, 1880, Sir Henry Bessemer was presented with the Freedom of the City of London, beautifully illuminated, and contained in a massive gold casket, "in recognition of his valuable discoveries which have so largely benefited the iron industry of this country, and his scientific attainments, which are well known and appreciated throughout the world;" the same evening he was entertained at a banquet given in his honour at the Mansion House by the then Lord Mayor, Sir Francis Wyatt Truscott. But it may be truly said that in no part of the world has the Bessemer process been developed to the extent and with the energy that has marked its progress in America. In several different parts of the United States, where nature has richly endowed them with those aids to civilization, coal and iron, manufacturing cities have been established, to which by common consent they have given the name of Bessemer. Thus we have the rapidly increasing and important City of Bessemer, Gogebec County, Michigan, the City of Bessemer, chief town of the County of Bessemer, Alabama, with its mayor and corporation, its street tramways and electric lighting, and its large manufacturing works, public schools, and numerous churches. There is also the City of Bessemer, Lawrance County, Pennsylvania, the seat of the great Edgar Thompson steel works, the largest in America. There is also the City of Bessemer, Botetourt County, Virginia; the City of Bessemer, Natrona County, Wyoming, and the City of Bessemer, Gaston County, North Carolina.

BEST, William Thomas, organist and composer, son of a solicitor at Carlisle, was born there Aug. 13, 1826. He was educated in his native city under a private tutor. It was intended that he should adopt the profession of a civil engineer, but he chose music as a profession before the completion of his term in the former pursuit. He became Organist of the Panopticon, Leicester Square, in 1853; Organist of the chapel of Lincoln's Inn; Organist of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields; Organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool, in 1855 (a position he lately resigned); and Organist of the Royal Albert Hall, Kensington, in 1871. In 1840, English organs were unsuitable for the performance of Bach's great organ works, the functions of the separate or "obbligato" pedal not then being appreciated. Goss, Turle, and other well-known men of the same day played the organ as a clavier instrument, with an occasional holding-note on the pedals. Mr. Best, however, induced organ-builders to re-construct their instruments in accordance with Bach's system, in which the bass of organ music should be chiefly assigned to the pedals and not to the left hand. This requires a complete and separate organ for the feet, the same as the keyboards for the hands. Bach's System is now universal in England. Mr. Best has published the following organ works:—"Modern School for the Organ," 1854, a collection of original studies; "Art of Organ-Playing," 1870;

Sonatas, Preludes, and Fugues; Concert pieces in all styles, 1850-86; "Arrangements from the scores of the Great Masters," 5 vols., 1873; "The Organ Student," 2 vols., and several of Handel's works, including "Choral Fugues," 1856; "Organ Concertos," 1858-79; "Handel Album," 1880; and "Opera and Oratoria Songs," 1881. He has also composed some Pianoforte music, an Overture for orchestra, and Triumphal march, as well as many pieces of church music. In 1885 a complete English edition of Bach's organ works was begun under Mr. Best's editorship. In 1880 he received a Civil List pension of £100 per annum. Mr. Best retired from the Organistship of St. George's Hall, Liverpool, in 1894.

BETHAM-EDWARDS, Miss Matilda Barbara, was born at Westerfield, Suffolk, in 1836, and began to write when quite young. Her first effort in fiction, a story, "The White House by the Sea," published when she was nineteen, has been many times reprinted in popular editions, also translated into Norwegian and other languages; since that time she has devoted herself entirely to literature, contributing to Punch, the Graphic, the Pall Mall Gazette, Macmillan's Magazine, and other leading periodicals, and publishing numerous novels and novelettes. Amongst the most popular are; "John and I," "Doctor Jacob," "Kitty," "The Sylvestres," "Bridget," "Exchange no Robbery," "Disarmed," "Pearla," "Love and Mirage," "The Parting of the Ways," "Half-way," "A North Country Comedy," "A Dream of Millions," "Felicia," "Forestalled." Many of these stories originally appeared in American and English serials, and have been translated into French, German and Norwegian. They have also been re-issued in popular editions in America, Germany, and at home. Amongst Miss Betham-Edwards's miscellaneous contributions to literature, may be mentioned, "A Winter with the Swallows in Algeria," and "A Year in Western France." In 1885 she published a volume of "Poems," containing, among other reprints, "The Golden Bee," which attracted the attention of Charles Dickens, when the authoress was in her teens. In 1889 this writer issued a centennial edition of Arthur Young's "Travels in France," with notes, biography, and general sketch of France, the result of personal experience and observations; also, "The Roof of France, or, Travels in Lozère." In recognition of these works, the French Government in 1891 conferred upon Miss Betham-Edwards the dignity of Officer de l'Instructive Publique de France. She is the first Englishwoman thus honoured. In 1892 appeared vol. i. of "France of To-day." This writer's hymn "God make my life a little light," has now found a place in most hymnals, anthologies, &c., and is included in Dr. Julian's great dictionary of Hymnology recently issued. Miss Betham-Edwards' latest contribution to fiction is "The Curb of Honour," 1893.

BEVERLEY, Bishop of. See CROSSTHWAITE, THE RT. REV. ROBERT J.

BICKERSTETH, The Right Rev. Edward Henry, D.D., Bishop of Exeter, born at Islington, Jan. 25, 1825, son of the late Rev. Edward Bickersteth, Rector of Watton, was educated at Watton and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was Chancellor's English Medallist in 1844, 1845, and 1846; proceeded B.A. (Sen. Opt.) in 1847, Classical Tripos, 3rd Class; took the degree of M.A. in 1850; and gained the Seatonian Prize in 1854. Mr. Bickersteth became Curate of Bannington, Norfolk, in 1848; Curate of Christ Church, Tunbridge Wells, 1852; Rector of Hinton Martell, Dorset, in the same year; Vicar of Christ Church, Hampstead, in 1855; Chaplain to the Bishop of Ripon in 1861; and Rural Dean of Highgate in 1878; and Dean of Gloucester in 1884. On the translation of Dr. Temple to the See of London, Dr. Bickersteth was appointed Bishop of Exeter, and was consecrated in 1885. He is author of the following books:—"Poems," 1848; "Water from the Well-Spring," 1853; "The Rock of Ages; or Scripture Testimony to the One Eternal Godhead of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit," 1858; "Practical and Explanatory Commentary on the New Testament," 1864; "Yesterday, To-day, and for Ever: a Poem in 12 books," 1866; "The Spirit of Life; or, Scripture Testimony to the Divine Person and Work of the Holy Ghost," 1868; "The Hymnal Companion to the Book of Common Prayer," 1870; "The Two Brothers, and other Poems," 1871; "The Master's Home-Call," 1872; "The Reef and other Parables," 1873; "The Shadowed Home and the Light Beyond," 1874; and, "The Lord's Table," 1882. The "Hymnal Companion," of which a revised and enlarged edition, with tunes, appeared in 1876, is now in use in many thousands of churches in England and the Colonies.

BICKMORE, Albert Smith, was born at St. George's, Maine, March 1, 1839. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1860, and immediately began to study natural history under Agassiz, who, in the following year, placed him in charge of the department of Mollusca in his Museum of Comparative Zoology at Cambridge, Mass. He had, very early in his scientific career, determined to establish at New York a Museum of Natural History. Partly to make collections for this, and partly to supply some deficiencies in the Museum of Comparative Zoology, he sailed in 1865 for the East Indies. He spent one year making collections of shells and small animals in the East Indian Archipelago; then traversed a large portion of China; visited and explored Japan, crossed Siberia, visiting its mines, Central and Northern Russia, and other European countries, and returned to New York after an absence of about three years. In 1869 he published in London and New York a volume of his "Travels in the East Indian Archipelago," and a German edition at Jena. In 1870 he was elected Professor of Natural History in Madison University, Hamilton, New York. He has been a frequent contributor to the American Journal of Science, and the Journal of the Royal Geographical Society; and is now Professor in charge of the Department of Public Instruction of the Museum of Natural History, New York, which was inaugurated at the close of 1877.

BIDDULPH, General Sir Michael Anthony Shrapnel, K.C.B., is the second son of the late Rev. Thomas Shrapnel Biddulph, of Amroth Castle, Pembrokeshire, sometime Prebendary of Brecknock, by Charlotte, daughter of the Rev. James Stillingfleet, Prebendary of Worcester, and was born in 1825. He was educated at Woolwich, and entered the Royal Artillery in 1843 as a second lieutenant. He was promoted to first lieutenant in 1844; became captain in 1850, brevet major in 1854, brevet lieutenant-colonel in 1856, colonel in 1874, major-general in 1877, lieutenant-general in 1881, and general in 1886. General Biddulph served throughout the Eastern campaign of 1854-55, including the battles of Alma, Balaclava, and Inkerman, and the siege and fall of Sebastopol. He was Deputy Adjutant-General of Artillery in India from 1868 to 1871; and in 1876 he was appointed Brigadier-General in command of the Rohilkund district; he also commanded the Quettah field force in Afghanistan 1878-9. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath (military division) in 1873, and promoted to a Knight Commandership of that Order in 1879. In 1881 he was appointed to the divisional staff of the army in Bengal. Sir Michael Biddulph married, in 1857, Katherine, daughter of Captain Stamati, Commandant of Balaclava.

BIDDULPH, Gen. Sir Robert, G.C.M.G., C.B. is the son of the late Mr. Robert Biddulph, of Ledbury, Herefordshire, by Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. George Palmer, M.P., of Nazing Park, Essex. He was born in London, August 26, 1835, and educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. He was appointed second lieutenant in the Royal Artillery in 1853; captain in 1860; major in the army in 1861; lieutenant-colonel in 1864; colonel in 1872; brigadier-general in 1879; major-general in the army in 1883; and lieutenant-general in 1887. He was Deputy Assistant-Adjutant-General in India from 1858 to 1860; Military Secretary in China in 1860-61; Military Secretary in Madras from 1861 to 1865; and Deputy Assistant-Quartermaster-General at Woolwich from 1868 to 1871. He was one of the Assistant Boundary Commissioners under the Reform Act of 1867, and acted as private secretary to Mr. Cardwell when that statesman was Secretary for War, in 1871-73. From 1873 to 1878 he was Assistant Adjutant-General at headquarters; in March, 1879, he was nominated Her Majesty's Commissioner for arranging the payment due to the Turkish Government under the Convention concluded in the previous year; and in May, 1879, he was appointed High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief of the island of Cyprus, on the transfer of Sir Garnet Wolseley to Natal; Inspector-General of Recruiting, 1886-7; Quartermaster-General of the army in 1887; Director-General of Military education from March, 1888 to Jan., 1893. Under his administration the state of the island of Cyprus has very greatly improved; and to him is due much of the credit for the successful "locust war" urged against that deadly insect-plague. From Jan. to Oct., 1893, he was Quartermaster-General to the Forces at Head Quarters. In Oct., 1893, he was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Gibraltar. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath (military division) in 1877, and created a Knight Commander of the Order of SS. Michael and George in 1880, a G.C.M.G. in 1886. In 1892 he was promoted to the rank of General. He married, in 1864, Sophia, daughter of the Rev. A. L. Lambert, rector of Chilbolton, Hampshire, and widow of Mr. R. Stuart Palmer.

BIDWELL, Shelford, F.R.S., eldest son of the late Shelford Clarke Bidwell, Esq., J.P., was born on March 6, 1848, at Thetford, Norfolk, and was educated privately, and at Caius College, Cambridge. He graduated B.A. (Mathematical Tripos) in 1870, LL.B. (Law Tripos) in 1871, and M.A. in 1873, and was called to the Bar (Lincoln's Inn) in 1874. He has devoted much time to experimental scientific work, especially in relation to electricity and magnetism. Accounts of his researches are contained in numerous papers published in the "Philosophical Transactions" and the "Proceedings of the Royal Society," the "Proceedings of the Physical Society," the Philosophical Magazine, Nature, and other scientific journals. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1886, is a Vice-President of the Physical Society, and a member of the Institution of Electrical Engineers and other associations. He married, in 1874, Annie Wilhelmina Evelyn, daughter of the Rev. E. Firmstone, M.A., rector of Wyke, near Winchester, and has three children.

BIERSTADT, Albert, was born near Düsseldorf, in Germany, Jan. 7, 1830. His parents emigrated to the United States when he was two years of age, and settled in New England. He went to Germany in 1853, studied painting in Düsseldorf, spent a winter in Rome, made the tour of Switzerland and the Apennines, and returned to the United States in 1857. In 1859 he accompanied General Lander's expedition to the Rocky Mountains, where he spent several months in making sketches. He was made an Academician in 1860. In 1863 he produced his celebrated picture, "View of the Rocky Mountains, — Lander's Peak," which at once gave him a high reputation. Among his subsequent works, the most noticeable have been—"Sunlight and Shadow," "The Storm in the Rocky Mountains," "Domes of the Yosemite," "Laramie Peak," "Emigrants Crossing the Plains," "Mount Hood," "Mount Whitney," "Scene near Fort Laramie," "Geysers of the Yellowstone," "Great Trees of California," "Matterhorn," Rocky Mountain Sheep," "Settlement of California," "Discovery of the Hudson," "Last of the Buffalo," and "Landing of Columbus." He travelled in Europe in 1867, 1878, and 1883, and in 1863 and 1873 visited the Pacific coast, and in 1889 went to Alaska. In 1871 he was made a member of the Academy of Fine Arts of St. Petersburg. He has received medals in Belgium, Germany, Bavaria, and Austria, the Legion of Honour, the Russian Order of St. Stanislaus, and the Turkish Order of the Medjidieh. His house and studio at Irvington, New York, were destroyed by fire in November, 1882; but, though his loss was considerable, his more valuable pictures were fortunately at his studio in New York City, and so escaped destruction.

BIGELOW, John, American statesman and author, was born at Malden-on-Hudson, New York, Nov. 25, 1817. He graduated at Union College in 1835, was admitted to the Bar in 1839, became joint proprietor with William C. Bryant, and Managing Editor of the New York Evening Post in 1849, was appointed Consul at Paris by President Lincoln in 1861, Chargé d'Affaires in December, 1864, and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Court of France in April, 1865; he resigned, and returned to the United States in the beginning of 1867 to devote himself to literary pursuits. He was chairman of the commission organized at the request of Governor Tilden to investigate the management of the canals of the State of New York in 1874, in 1875 was elected Secretary of State of the State of New York, in 1884, was offered the position of Chamberlain of the City of New York, and in 1885 was appointed Assistant Treasurer of the United States at New York, both which he declined. During the years 1843-5 Mr. Bigelow was a frequent contributor to the Democratic Review. He was one of the five inspectors of the State prison at Sing Sing, 1845-8, and was the author of all their annual reports to the Legislature. He visited the island of Jamaica in 1850, and upon his return published "Jamaica in 1850; or the Effect of Sixteen Years of Freedom on a Slave Colony." During his residence in Paris he published "Les États Unis en 1863." Also while in Paris he became possessed of the original manuscript of the autobiography of Benjamin Franklin, from which he published, in 1868, the first correct copy ever printed of that famous story. Among his other writings are "Some Recollections of Antoine Pierre Berryer," 1869; "France and Hereditary Monarchy," 1871; a "Life of Benjamin Franklin," in 3 vols., 1875 (of which the third edition was issued in 1892); "The Wit and Wisdom of the Haytians," 1877; and "Molinos, the Quietist," 1882. He has been for many years an occasional contributor to Harper's, the Century, and Scribner's. He edited the "Writings and Speeches of Samuel J. Tilden," 2 vols., 1885; and "The Writings of Benjamin Franklin," in 10 vols., 1888. "Some Recollections of Laboulaye" were printed privately for him in 1889, and he contributed a "Life of William Cullen Bryant" to the "American Men of Letters" series in 1890. Mr. Bigelow is one of the executors of the will of the late Samuel J. Tilden, and is President of the Board of Trustees of the "Tilden Trust." In 1886 the New York Chamber of Commerce, in response to an invitation of M. de Lesseps, requested Mr. Bigelow to accompany him to visit the works of the Panama Canal Company and report their situation and prospects. Mr. Bigelow's report was published by the Chamber of Commerce, to which body he was immediately after elected an honorary member. He was appointed by President Cleveland sole Commissioner of the United States to the International Exposition of Sciences and Industry at Brussels in 1888, and in 1893 was nominated a delegate to the Convention to be held in May, 1894, to revise the Constitution of the State of New York.

BILCESCO, Mlle. Sarmisa, Doctor at Law, a Roumanian by birth, is the first lady who obtained the degree of a Doctor at Law in France. She was born in 1867 at Bucharest, where her father is Governor of the National Bank. When only sixteen she graduated as Bachelor of Letters, and the year after as Bachelor of Sciences. Encouraged by these early successes, Mlle. Bilcesco felt tempted to continue her studies in Paris, where she arrived with her mother in 1884. She at once put herself under the direction of M. Georges Bourdon, Secrétaire of the Chamber des Députés, and rédacteur of the journal Le Temps, who prepared her for all examinations. After having been admitted as student at the Sorbonne, Mlle. Bilcesco studied three years for the degree of a licentiate, and two years longer for that of a doctor. She passed all her examinations with honours, and took the first place among the licentiates of her year. But her crowning triumph was her examination for the degree of a doctor, which took place on June 12, 1890. The thesis she selected was "The Status or Position of Mothers under French and Roman Laws," a paper of 504 pages, which she read before a large audience, the jury congratulating her on the choice of the subject, and the remarkable manner in which she had treated the same. Mlle. Bilcesco, is not only a first-rate scholar, but likewise a talented muscian. She returns to Bucharest, where she proposes to claim admission to the Roumanian Bar, not so much to set up as a lawyer, as to decide the question of a woman's right to practise the profession of the law.

BILLING, The Rt. Rev. Robert Claudius, D.D., Oxon., Bishop of Bedford (suffragan of London), 1888; Prebendary of St. Paul's, Chaplain of the 2nd Brigade of the Tower Hamlets Royal Volunteers, and Rector of St. Andrew, Undershaft, E.C., was educated at Worcester College, Oxford (B.A., 1857; M.A., 1886; Hon. D.D., 1888). He was ordained in 1857, and was Curate of St. Peter's, Colchester, from 1857-60, and of Compton Bishop, Somerset, 1861. He was then for two years Associate Secretary of the C. M. S., York. From 1863 to 1873 he was Vicar of Holy Trinity, Louth, and from 1873 to to 1878, Vicar of Holy Trinity, Islington. He was Rector and Rural Dean of Spitalfields from 1878 to 1888, when he was appointed Rector of St. Andrew, Undershaft, and on July 15, consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral Bishop Suffragan of Bedford. The cure of the Archdeacon of London and the Deanery of Enfield are especially under his charge.

BINNIE, Alexander R., M.Inst.C.&M.E., F.G.S., F.R.M.S., &c., Engineer to the London County Council, was born in London in 1839, and was educated at various private academies. He was a pupil and assistant to the celebrated J. F. Le Trobe Bateman, F.R.S., who was president of the Institution of Civil Engineers, and Engineer to the Glasgow and Manchester Waterworks. In early life Mr. Binnie was engaged on railway construction in England and Wales. He entered the Public Works Department of India by open competition in 1868, and during his six years' service in that country was engaged in the exploration which led to the discovery of coal in the Central Provinces, for which he received the commendation of the Government of India; he successfully designed and constructed the whole of the works for the supply of the City of Najpur with water, for which he again received the commendation of Government; he was also engaged on railway work, and for a short period acted as Assistant Secretary, Public Works Department, to the Chief Commission of the Central Provinces. For fifteen years he was Engineer to the Bradford Corporation, during which period he designed and successively constructed many large works at a cost of over one million sterling, and among them the highest reservoir embankment (125 feet) in the United Kingdom; he also laid out and designed for the Corporation a large extension of the water works in the Nedd Valley at an estimated cost of £1,250,000. Mr. Binnie is the author of a paper on the Najpur water works, for which he received from the Institution of Civil Engineers a Telford medal and premium. He has been appointed on more than one occasion Lecturer on Water Works at the School of Military Engineering at Chatham, and his lectures have been published by Government, besides which he is the author of many valuable professional reports, and an address as President to the Bradford Philosophical Society on "Heat in its Relation to Coal."

BIRDWOOD, Sir George Christopher Molesworth, M.D., LL.D., C.S.I., K.C.I.E., eldest son of the late General Christopher Birdwood, 3rd Bombay Native Infantry, and Commissary-General, Bombay, was born at Belgaum, Bombay, Dec. 8, 1832. He was educated at Plymouth New Grammar School, and the University, Edinburgh, where he took the degree of M.D., and passed the usual examination of the College of Surgeons, in 1854. He was appointed to the Medical Staff of the East India Company on their Bombay Establishment in the same year. His first charge was of the Southern Mahratta Horse, Kalludghee, in 1855. Later he was transferred to the 1st Battery 2nd Brigade of Artillery at Sholapore, where he was also at different times in charge of the 8th Madras Cavalry, 3rd Bombay Native Infantry, and the Civil Station. In 1856 he was sent to the Persian Gulf in medical charge of the Company's steamship "Ajdaha," and on his return to Bombay in April, 1857, he was appointed Acting Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in Grant Medical College, and from that date to his leaving India continued to be connected with the college almost without interruption in the chairs successively of Anatomy and Physiology, and Botany and Materia Medica. In the same year Dr. Birdwood was appointed Curator of the Government Central Museum at Bombay. Later he was appointed Registrar of the University; and he also held the offices of Honorary Secretary to the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, and Honorary Secretary to the Agri-Horticultural Society of Western India. With the assistance of the late eminent Hindu physician, Dr. Bhau Daje, he was mainly instrumental in establishing the Victoria and Albert Museum, and the Victoria Gardens in Bombay. In 1864 he was appointed Sheriff of Bombay, and in 1868 Special Commissioner for the Government of Bombay at the International Exhibition held in Paris in that year. In 1869 he was forced finally to leave India, through permanently broken health. On the occasion of the proclamation of the Queen as Empress of India, Jan. 1, 1877, he was appointed to the Companionship of the Star of India; and the honour of knighthood was conferred on him in Sept., 1881. In 1887, he had conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D., Cambridge, and was decorated with the insignia of the Knight Companionship of the Order of the Indian Empire. He still maintains his official ties with India, having been appointed, about 1879, Special Assistant in the Revenue, Statistics, and Commerce Department of the India Office. He was a Royal Commissioner and Member of the Finance Committee of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition of 1886; and Chairman of the Committee of the British Indian Section of the Paris Exhibition of 1889; a Royal Commissioner for the Chicago Exhibition of 1893; and a Member of the London and Antwerp Consultative and Executive Committees for the British Section at the Antwerp Exhibition of 1894. He is the author of "Catalogue of the Economic Products of the Bombay Presidency (Vegetable)," 1st edit., 1862, 2nd edit. 1868; "The Genus Boswellia (Frankincense plants), with illustrations of three new species;" in "The Transactions of the Linnean Society," vol. xxvii.; the article "Incense," in the "Encyclopædia Britannica;" "The Perfumes of the Bible," in Cassell's "Bible Educator;" "Handbook to the British Indian section, Paris Exhibition of 1878;" the article "On an Ancient Silver Patera," in "The Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature," vol. xi. New Series, 1881; "Handbook on the Industrial Arts of India," 1880; "The Arts of India," 1881; "Austellung Indischer Kunst-Gegenstände, zu Berlin," 1881; "Indiens Konstslöjd en Kortfattad Skildring," Stockholm, 1882; "Indiens Kunstindustrie, Kjobenhaven," 1882; "Report on the Miscellaneous Old Records of the India Office," 1879, reprinted 1890; and "The First Letter Book of the (English) East India Company," 1893. He has also contributed introductions to "The Miracle Play of Hassan and Husain," by Sir Lewis Pelly, 1879; to "Eastern Carpets," by Mr. Vincent Robinson, 1882; to "The Dawn of the British Trade in the East," by Henry Stevens, 1886; to "Representative Men of India," by Sorabji Jehanghier, 1889; the "Catalogue of the Indian Section of the Edinburgh Forestry Exhibition," 1884; and an Appendix on "The Aryan Fauna and Flora," to Professor Max Müller's "Biographies of Words," 1888; a "Report on Spanish Chestnuts," 1892; and a Monograph on "The Antiquity of the Oriental Manufacture of Sumptuary Carpets," to the monumental work on "Oriental Carpets," published by the Royal and Imperial Ministry of Commerce, Worship, and Education, 1892-4; the English edition of which, edited by Mr. Caspar Purden Clarke, C.I.E., is now (1894) being issued in Vienna. He was a constant contributor to the Indian Press, and for some time editor of the Bombay Saturday Review. Letters by him on the opium trade, which had appeared in the Times, were republished in Mr. W. H. Brereton's "Truth about Opium," 1882. He is also the author of the article "Are we Despoiling India?—a Rejoinder, by 'John Indigo,'" in the National Review for September, 1883; and of a review of Sir Henry Yule's "Hobson Jobson," in the Quarterly Review, for 1887; and of the following articles in the Asiatic Quarterly Review:—"The Christmas Tree," Jan., 1886; "The Empire of the Hittites," Jan., 1888; "The Mahratta Plough," Oct., 1888; and "Leper in India," April 1890. He has been a contributor also to the Bombay Quarterly Review, the Journal of the East Indian Association, the Journal of the National Indian Association, the Journal of the Society of Arts, and the Journal of Indian Art. Sir George Birdwood married, in 1856, Frances Anne, eldest daughter of the late Edward Tolcher, Esq., R.N., of Harewood, Plympton St. Mary's, Devon.

BIRRELL, Augustine, M.P., youngest son of the Rev. C. M. Birrell, of Liverpool, and Harriett Jane Grey, daughter of the Rev. Henry Grey, D.D., of Edinburgh, was born Jan. 19, 1850, at Wavertree, near Liverpool. He was educated at Amersham Hall School, near Reading, and Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated with honours in Law and History in 1872. He was called to the Bar by the Inner Temple, Nov. 1875, and practises in the Chancery Division; is the author of "Obiter Dicta," two series, 1884 and 1887, and "Life of Charlotte Brontë," 1887. He contested the Walton Division of Liverpool in 1885, and the Widnes Division of Lancashire in 1886, both unsuccessfully. He was returned to Parliament for West Fife in July, 1889, on the retirement of the Hon. R. P. Bruce, and again in 1892. He married first, in 1878, Margaret, daughter of the late Archibald Mirrielees, formerly of St. Petersburgh (she died in 1879); and second, in 1888, Eleanor, widow of the Hon. Lionel Tennyson, and daughter of Frederick and Lady Charlotte Locker.

BISHOP, William Henry, American author, was born at Hartford, Connecticut, Jan. 7, 1847, and graduated at Yale College in 1867. He has been a frequent contributor to periodical literature, and in addition has published "Detmold," 1879; "The House of a Merchant Prince," 1882; "Choy Susan, and other Stories," 1884; "Old Mexico and Her Lost Provinces," 1884; "Fish and Men in the Maine Islands," 1885; "The Golden Justice," 1887; "The Brown Stone Boy, and other Queer People," 1883; "The Yellow Snake," 1891; and "A House-Hunter in Europe," 1893.

BISMARCK-SCHÖNHAUSEN, Count Herbert von, son of Prince Bismarck, was born at Berlin, Dec. 28, 1849. He has served the German Empire in various diplomatic capacities, and was Embassy Secretary in London, and Minister at the Hague. He has sat in the Reichstag as one of the members for Schleswig-Holstein, and in 1886 was Secretary of State and Assessor to the Chancellor. On his father's retirement he was provisionally charged with the direction of foreign affairs, but preferred to follow the Prince into private life. In Jan., 1889, the Emperor conferred on him the Order of the Red Eagle, First Class. He holds the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in the German Army. In June, 1892, he married the Countess Hoyos in Vienna.

BISMARCK-SCHÖNHAUSEN (Prince von) Karl Otto, statesman, born at Schönhausen, April 1, 1815; studied at Göttinggen, Berlin, and Griefswald; entered the army, and was afterwards a lieutenant in the Landwehr. He became a member of the Diet of the province of Saxony in 1846, and of the General Diet, in which he made himself remarkable by the boldness of his speeches, in 1847. On one occasion he argued that all great cities should be swept from the face of the earth, because they were the centres of democracy and constitutionalism. Nor did the events of 1848 modify his opinions. In 1851 he entered the diplomatic service, and was intrusted with the legation at Frankfort. Regarding Austria as the antagonist of Prussia, he was sent in 1852 to Vienna, where he proved a constant adversary to Count Rechberg. In 1853, a pamphlet entitled "La Prusse et la Question Italienne" appeared, the authorship of which was generally attributed to him. In this publication reference was made to the antagonism existing between Austria and Prussia, and a triple alliance between France, Prussia, and Russia was advocated. In March, 1859, M. von

Bismarck was sent as ambassador to St. Petersburg, which post he held until 1862, and having conciliated the Czar, was decorated with the order of Saint Alexander Newski. In May, 1862, he was appointed Ambassador to Paris, where he received the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour from the Emperor Napoleon, and he was made Minister of the King's House and of Foreign Affairs in Prussia, Sept. 22. The budget having been rejected by the Deputies, but adopted by the Upper Chamber, M. Bismarck, in the name of the King, dissolved the former after a series of angry altercations. The newspapers which protested against this despotic act were proceeded against with great severity, as were numerous public officials, magistrates, and others, who openly expressed views hostile to the Government. In Jan., 1863, he protested against an address which the Deputies presented to the King, in which he was accused of having violated the constitution. Shortly after, the affairs of Poland caused fresh difficulties. The Chamber of Deputies, by a majority of five to one, censured the Ministry for having concluded (Feb. 8) a secret treaty with Russia. After the close of the aggressive war waged by Prussia and Austria against Denmark, in which Austria had very reluctantly taken part, Bismarck thought the time had arrived for carrying out his long-cherished project of making Prussia the real head of Germany. His preparations for another aggressive war were completed, and aided by an alliance with Italy, in a campaign of a few weeks' duration, Austria and her allies were defeated. It is probable that dread of a still more formidable alliance induced M. von Bismarck to stop short in his career of victory, as the Emperor Napoleon, in his speech to the French Chambers, declared that he had arrested the conqueror at the gates of Vienna. A preliminary treaty of peace with Austria was concluded at Nikolsburg, July 26, 1866, as Austria consented to retire from Germany, the terms of a general pacification were arranged. M. von Bismarck was created a Count, Sept. 16, 1865, on which occassion he received from the King of Prussia a valuable estate in Luxembourg. He lost no time in turning to account the victory gained by Prussia over Austria, and in advancing his favourite scheme for the unification of Germany. Provinces and kingdoms were at once annexed. The free town of Frankfort received a Prussian garrison in spite of the indignant protests of the population; Hanover was incorporated in the Germanic Confederation; and at the close of the year 1866 Count Bismarck succeeding in concluding with Bavaria, Baden, and Wurtemberg treaties of peace and of alliance offensive and defensive, with a proviso that in the event of war the King of Prussia should have the chief military command. In 1867 Count Bismarck organised the North German Confederation, which comprised twenty-two States, representing a population of 29,000,000. The King of Prussia was at the head of this powerful Confederation, and a Federal Council composed of delegates of the different States was established, together with a Diet or common Parliament, the members of which were elected by universal suffrage. The new Federal constitution was adopted by the Prussian Chambers in June, and came into operation on the 1st of the following month, Count Bismarck receiving as the reward of his services the post of Chancellor of the Confederation and President of the Federal Council. The Luxemburg question now gave rise to serious differences between the Prussian and French Governments, and Count Bismarck strenuously opposed the projected cession of that province by Holland to France. Eventually the dispute was settled by the Luxemburg territory being neutralized, and the fortresses dismantled. After this both Powers declared their intention to be pacific, but nevertheless they both increased their already bloated armaments. Ill-health compelled Count Bismarck to retire from public life for a short period in 1868, but he returned to Berlin in October of that year, and resumed the direction of affairs. On the 1st of January he entered on his functions as Foreign Minister of the North German Confederation. In July, 1870, it transpired that General Prim had sent a deputation to Prussia to offer the Crown of Spain to Prince Leopold of Hohenzollern. The French people were greatly agitated at the receipt of this intelligence. Some of their leading statemen declared that France would never consent to see a Prussian prince seated on the throne of Spain, and explanations were demanded from the Berlin cabinet. It was alleged by Count Bismarck that the King of Prussia gave his consent to the acceptance of the crown by the prince only as the head of the Hohenzollern family, and not as an act of the Government. A few days later the withdrawal of the prince's candidature was announced; but in spite of this, France declared war against Prussia, and the campaign began, the latter Power receiving great assistance from the troops sent into the field by the King of Bavaria and the Dukes of Baden and Würtemberg. This is not the place to record the complete successes of the German armies. Suffice it to say, that Count Bismarck accompanied the King throughout the campaign, and that after the capitulation of Paris he dictated the terms of peace, which were adopted by the Assembly then sitting at Bordeaux. He succeeded in uniting Germany, and on January 18, 1871, he had the satisfaction of seeing King William of Prussia crowned Emperor of Germany in the Palace of the French kings, at Versailles. In the same month he was appointed by his Imperial master Chancellor of the German Empire, and in the following March raised to the rank of Prince. In September of the same year he was present at the memorable meeting of the German and Austrian emperors at Gastein. Subsequently Prince Bismarck greatly offended the Roman Catholic party throughout Germany by promoting the legal measures which were directed against the freedom of the Church, and which resulted in the expulsion of the Jesuits, and the incarceration of several bishops. In Dec., 1872, he resigned the presidency of the State Ministry, although he continued to confer with the Emperor on the affairs of the empire and its foreign policy. The Emperor also authorized him, in the event of his being unable to appear personally at a meeting of the Ministry of State, to give his vote on matters concerning the interests of the empire through the President of the Imperial Chancellery. On this occasion Prince Bismarck received from the Emperor the Order of the Black Eagle, set in diamonds. In Oct., 1873, he was re-appointed as Prussian Premier. Two attempts have been made on the life of the Chancellor, the first on May 7, 1866, by a step-son of Karl Blind; and the second on July 13, 1874, as the Prince was driving in the country at Kissingen, when he was fired at by a man named Kullman, and slightly wounded by a shot which grazed his right wrist. The culprit was apprehended, and eventually sentenced to fourteen years' hard labour, with further ten years' loss of civil rights, with police inspection, and costs. An attempt was made to prove that Kullman was connected with the clerical party, and a statement to that effect made by Prince Bismarck himself afterwards led to an exciting scene in the German Parliament. Towards the close of 1874, at the instigation of Prince Bismarck, Count Arnim was imprisoned, and tried on the charge of having abstracted documents from the archives of the German embassy at Paris. Prince Bismarck presided over the Congress of the representatives of the Great Powers which assembled at Berlin to discuss the provisions of the Treaty of St. Stefano in 1878. In Prussia he has made peace with the Roman Catholic Church, and has done much (by laws of National Insurance, &c.) to establish a system of State Socialism, intended to counterwork the schemes of the Social Democrats. He has striven to found a German Colonial Empire; and if he has not succeeded in establishing any prosperous settlements, he has done a great deal to spread German trade all over the world. In foreign policy, his aim was to strengthen the Austro-German Alliance, and to secure the Czar against any temptation that France might offer for the formation of a Franco-Russian alliance against Germany. The Prince retired into private life in March, 1890, when the Emperor conferred on him the title of Duke of Lauenburg. Up to his retirement, his activity was as great and as unceasing as of old. Nor has it decreased. After his retirement it became known that deep personal differences had latterly arisen between him and the Emperor, and that the ex-Chancellor felt an aggrieved party. His complaints, indeed, in the press and elsewhere, were frequent and often apparently querulous. He became leader or type of a kind of ultra-Prussian opposition to William II., and in 1891 was induced to stand for the Reichstag, to which he was returned as member for Geestemünde with a majority of 5058 over his Socialist opponent. The Prince left his retirement at Friedrichsruhe, his country seat, on June 14, 1892, in order to be present at the wedding of Count Herbert Bismarck in Vienna. He enjoyed a magnificent reception at Dresden and in Vienna, and announced that he would never again hold any office. Subsequently he allowed himself to be freely interviewed, and his criticisms on Government were quoted in the press until the Reichsanzeiger published the instructions sent to the various Prussian embassies abroad at the time of his retirement in 1890. From these it appeared that the Emperor distinguished between the Bismarck of the past and of the present. He further deprecated the attachment of "any practical importance to the press publications claiming to reproduce Prince Bismarck's views." In a despatch to Prince Reuss, German ambassador at Vienna, he further announced that the Prince "would never regain any influence in the conduct of public affairs." Prince Bismarck's opposition to the Government policy still continued in his own journals, and in 1892 and 1893 he severely criticised the German Army Bills. In April, 1893, he condemned the Anti-Semitic movement, and in the same year fell very ill at Kissingen, whither he had gone to drink the water. His recovery from the illness was marked by an interchange of courtesies with the Emperor. In December, 1894, the Prince lost his wife, the Princess Bismarck, his life-long sympathiser and helper, whom he married in the days of his stormy youth, when he was a leader of the young "Ritter," or country gentleman, party in Prussia. Books about Bismarck exist without number in Germany: those most generally known are Poschinger's edition of Prince Bismarck's "Frankfort Letters and Despatches;" his Correspondence by Köppen, his Political Life and Labours, and his Speeches by Hahn; his Biography by Hezekiel, and the works of Dr. Busch (q.v.), entitled, "Bismarck and his People." The Emperor Frederick's Diary, published in 1888, seems to deprive Prince Bismarck of the glory of having originated the idea of German Unity, the late Emperor claiming to have proposed this policy in face of much opposition from the ex-Chancellor.

BISSELL, Hon. Wilson Shannon, American Postmaster-General, was born in New London, Oneida County, New York, Dec. 31, 1847. When he was five years old his parents removed to Buffalo, where he attended the public schools. He prepared for college in a private school in Newhaven, and subsequently was graduated with honour from Yale University. At the age of twenty-one he commenced the study of law, and in 1872 formed a law partnership in Buffalo with Lyman K. Bass, to which firm about a year later Grover Cleveland was admitted. Upon the removal of Mr. Bass to Colorado, and the election of Mr. Cleveland as Governor of New York (in 1883), the firm was re-organized, and for several years bore the name of Bissell, Sicard & Goodyear. The special character of Mr. Bissell's practice has been that of counsel for corporations, in a number of which he is a director. He served as Presidential-Elector-at-large in 1884, and has been a delegate to several State conventions. In 1890 he was a member of a Commission to propose amendments to the judiciary article of the constitution of the state of New York. Since the beginning of Mr. Cleveland's second Presidential term (March, 1893), Mr. Bissell has been Postmaster-General. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Yale College in June, 1893.

BJÖRNSEN, Björnstjerne, a Norwegian novelist and dramatic poet, born Dec. 8, 1832, is the son of a country pastor, and first became known in consequence of some articles and stories which he contributed to newspapers, especially the Folkeblad, an illustrated journal, in the columns of which appeared his "Aanum," "Ole Stormsen," and "En munter Mand." The years 1856 and 1857 he passed at Copenhagen, where he studied the works of Baggesen, of Œlenschläger, and of the principal Danish writers. Afterwards he published in Faedrelandet (Fatherland), his novel of "Throng," which was followed by "Arne" and "Synnœve Solbakken." As a Christiania editor and journalist Björnsen expressed strong republican opinions, which aroused considerable public excitement. He was finally condemned to a year's imprisonment for treason, but escaped to Germany, and did not return to Christiania until 1882, when he once more began the work of agitation against the Government and the union of the two Scandinavian kingdoms. He has produced some notable tragedies and other pieces for the stage. These are "Halte Hulda," "Mallem Slagene," "Kong Swerre," the trilogy of "Sigurd Slembe," some translations of French plays, and the tragedy of "Mary Stuart." His comedy "En Hanske" was translated by Mr. Osman Edwards for the English stage in 1894. The following works of his have been translated into English:—"Arne: a Sketch of Norwegian Country Life," translated from the Norwegian, by A. Plesner and S. Rugeley Powers, 1866; "Ovind: a Story of Country Life in Norway," translated by S. and E. Hjerleid, 1869; "The Fisher Maiden," a Norwegian tale translated from the author's German edition, by M. E. Niles, 1869—also translated from the Norwegian, under the title of "The Fishing Girl," by A. Plesner and F. Richardson, 1870; "The Happy Boy: a Tale of Norwegian Peasant Life," translated by H. R. G., 1870; "The Newly-married Couple," translated by S. and E. Hjerleid, 1870; and "Love and Life in Norway," translated from the Norwegian, by the Hon. A. Bethell and A. Plesner, 1870. In recent years, "In God's Way" and "The Heritage of the Kurts," both very powerful novels, have appeared in Mr. Edmund Gosse's International Series.

BLACK, William, was born at Glasgow in 1841, and received his education at various private schools. His youthful ambition was to become an artist, and he studied for a short time in the Government School of Art in his native city, but eventually he drifted into journalism, becoming connected with the Glasgow Weekly Citizen while yet in his teens. In 1864 he came to London, and wrote for magazines. He was attached, in the following year, to the staff of the Morning Star, and was special correspondent for that paper during the Prusso-Austrian war of 1866, scenes from which appeared in his first novel, "Love or Marriage," published in 1867. This novel dealt too much with awkward social problems, and was not successful, but the author's next work of fiction was favourably received. It was entitled "In Silk Attire," 1869, and a considerable portion of it was devoted to descriptions of peasant life in the Black Forest. Then followed "Kilmeny" and "The Monarch of Mincing Lane," the former dealing mostly with Bohemian artistic life in London. But his first real hold of the novel-reading public was obtained by "A Daughter of Heth," 1871, which went through many editions. Next came "The Strange Adventures of a Phaeton," 1872, which literally described a driving excursion that the author made from London to Edinburgh with a thread of fiction interwoven. It is said that a good many Americans, amongst others, have adopted this plan of exploring the English Counties, and have taken the "Adventures" as a sort of guide-book. In 1873 was published "A Princess of Thule." It was followed by "The Maid of Killeena and other Stories," 1874; "Three Feathers," 1875, the scene of which was laid in Cornwall; "Madcap Violet," 1876; "Green Pastures and Piccadilly," 1877; "Macleod of Dare," 1878; "White Wings: a Yachting Romance," 1880; "Sunrise: a story of these Times," 1881; "The Beautiful Wretch," 1882; "Shandon Bells," 1883; "Yolande," 1883; "Judith Shakespeare," 1884; "White Heather," 1885; "Sabina Zembra," 1887; "The Strange Adventures of a House-Boat" (a sequel to the Phaeton Adventures), 1888; "In Far Lochaber," 1889; "The New Prince Fortunatus," and "Stand Fast, Craig-Royston!" 1890; "Donald Ross of Heimra," 1891; "Wolfenberg," 1892; and "The Handsome Humes," 1893. For four or five years Mr. Black was assistant editor of the Daily News, but he practically ceased his connection with journalism over fifteen years ago.

BLACKBURN (Baron), The Right Hon. Colin Blackburn, second son of the late John Blackburn, Esq., of Killearn, co. Stirling, by Rebecca, daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Gillies, was born in 1813, and educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. as a high Wrangler in 1835. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple, and for some years went the Northern circuit. For about eight years he conducted, with the late Mr. Ellis, the regular recognised Reports in the Court of Queen's Bench, and the eight or ten volumes of "Ellis and Blackburn" are of high authority. He published an excellent legal work "On Sales." At Liverpool he had secured a large amount of business in heavy commercial cases, when, in 1859, he was made a puisne judge of the Queen's Bench. On that occasion he received the honour of knighthood. In Oct., 1876, he was made a Lord of Appeal under the provisions of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act (1876), and created a peer for life under the title of Baron Blackburn. In Aug., 1878, he was nominated a member of the Royal Commission appointed to consider the provisions of a draft Code relating to Indictable Offences. Baron Blackburn retired in 1886.

BLACKBURN, Henry, son of Mr. Charles Blackburn, B.A., of Cambridge, was born at Portsea, February 15, 1830, and educated at King's College, London; he was appointed private secretary to the Right Hon. E. Horsman, M.P., in 1853. He is a foreign correspondent and art critic for London papers and reviews. Mr. Blackburn visited Spain and Algeria in 1855, 1857 and 1864, and delivers illustrated lectures on these subjects. He was appointed editor of London Society in 1870, but resigned that post in 1872. He also held an appointment in the Civil Service Commission. Mr. Blackburn wrote, and partly illustrated, the following works; "Life in Algeria," 1864; "Travelling in Spain," 1866; "The Pyrenees," (illustrated by Gustave Doré) 1867; "Artists and Arabs," 1868; "Normandy Picturesque," 1869; "Art in the Mountains: the Story of the Passion-Play in Bavaria," 1870; "Hartz Mountains," 1873; "Breton Folk," 1879; "Memoir of Randolph Caldecott," 1887; "Artistic Travels in Normandy," &c., 1892; and "The Art of Illustration," 1894. Mr. Blackburn is the originator of the system of Illustrated Catalogues of Exhibitions, with Facsimiles of Sketches drawn by the artists. He is editor of the annual Academy Notes and New Gallery Notes, and is a lecturer on Art.

BLACKIE, John Stuart, formerly Professor of Greek in the University of Edinburgh, son of a banker in Aberdeen, was born at Glasgow in July, 1809, and was educated at Aberdeen and Edinburgh. During two years passed in Göttingen, Berlin, and Rome, he devoted himself to the study of German, Italian, and classical philology. In 1834 he published a metrical translation of Goethe's "Faust," with notes and prolegomena, 2nd edit., 1880, and was called to the Scottish Bar. In 1841 he was appointed to the newly-formed chair of Latin Literature in Marischal College, Aberdeen. This post he held for eleven years. He contributed several philological articles to the Classical Museum, published in 1850, then edited by Dr. L. Schmitz, and a metrical translation of Æschylus, which led to his appointment, in 1852, to the Greek chair in the University of Edinburgh. This was followed by an essay on the "Pronunciation of Greek, Accent and Quantity," 1852; a "Discourse on Beauty, with an Exposition of the Theory of Beauty according to Plato appended," 1858; "Songs and Legends of Ancient Greece," 1857, 2nd edit., 1880; and another volume of Poems, English and Latin, 1860. He is the author of various articles in the North British Review, an article on Plato in the "Edinburgh Essays," and the article "Homer" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica." Professor Blackie has been very active as a popular lecturer, and made himself somewhat conspicuous as a warm advocate of Scottish nationality. In 1886 he published "Homer and the Iliad," containing a translation of the Iliad in ballad measure, a third volume of Critical Dissertations, and a fourth of Notes Philological and Archæological; and in 1869 "Musa Burschicosa," a volume of songs for students and university men. In 1870 he put forth a volume of "War Songs of the Germans," with historical sketches. In 1872 he published "Lays of the Highlands and Islands." Professor Blackie also appeared as a lecturer in the Royal Institution, London, where he combated the views of Mr. John Stuart Mill in moral philosophy, of Mr. Grote in his estimate of the Greek sophists, and of Professor Max Müller in his allegorical interpretation of ancient myths. His principal philological papers appeared in a collected form in 1874, under the title of "Horæ Hellenicæ;" and in the same rear he put forth a little volume of practical advice to young men, entitled "Self-Culture," which had a large sale in England, India, and America. His more recent works are "The Wise Men of Greece," 1877; "The Natural History of Atheism; a defence of Theism against modern Atheistic and Agnostic tendencies," 1877; "Lay Sermons: a series of discourses on important points of Christian doctrine and morals," 1881; "The Language and Literature of the Highlands of Scotland, with poetical translations of some of the most popular pieces of Gaelic poetry," 1875; "Altavona; or, fact and fiction from my life in the Highlands," 1882. The foundation of a Celtic chair in the University of Edinburgh, for which by four years' considerable exertion he collected a sum of £12,000, is mainly owing to Professor Blackie. He resigned the chair of Greek in the University of Edinburgh in Aug., 1882. In 1883 he put forth his ripe views on the character and influence of Goethe, in "The Wisdom of Goethe." Then he published "The Scottish Highlanders" and "The Land Laws," 1885; also "What History Teaches," 1886; in 1887 a "Life of Robert Burns," in the Great Writer series; in 1888 a volume on his favourite theme of "Scottish Song," with biographical notices and the music; and in 1889 "A Song of Lewes," being a series of historical ballads on the persons of representative men from Abraham to Wellington and Nelson; and in 1890 "Essays on subjects of Moral and Social Interest," in which he gives his life, conclusions on education, religion, politics, and other topics of the day. Latterly he has resumed his philological mission in behalf of Modern Greek; has lectured on this subject at Oxford, Cambridge and Haileybury; and to the same effect has published papers in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, Edinburgh, in the Nineteenth Century, and in the Scottish Review. Professor Blackie celebrated his golden wedding on April 21, 1892.

BLACKLEY, The Rev. Canon William Lewery, M.A., is the second son of the late Travers R. Blackley, Esq., of Ashtown Lodge, co. Dublin, and Bohogh, co. Roscommon. He was born at Dundalk, Ireland, Dec, 30, 1830, and received part of his early education on the Continent. Having entered Trinity College, Dublin, in his sixteenth year, he obtained his B.A. degree in 1850, and his M.A. in 1854, in which year he was ordained to the curacy of St. Peter's, Southwark; shortly after, he became curate of Frensham, where he remained thirteen years, and was then promoted by Bishop Sumner in 1867 to the rectory of North Waltham, Hants; whence, in 1883, he was preferred, by Bishop Harold Browne, to the vicarage of King's Somborne, in the same county, and to an Honorary Canonry in the Cathedral of Winchester,

In 1889 he was appointed by the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, to the vicarage of St, James's the Less, Westminster, which he now holds. In 1857 he published his metrical translation from the Swedish, of Bishop Tegner's famous poem, "The Frithjof Saga." This was followed by the publication of his "Practical German Dictionary," which, in its original and abridged forms, has passed through many editions. In 1867 he published his "Critical English New Testament;" and his volume on "Word Gossip" followed in 1869. He also, besides frequent contributions to all the leading Reviews, wrote, for the National Society, the Teacher's Manual, "How to Teach Domestic Economy," 1879; and "The Social Economy Reading Book," 1881; and his book on "Thrift and Independence, a Word to Working Men," was published by the S.P.C.K. in 1883. In Nov., 1878, he published an article in the Nineteenth Century, under the title of "National Insurance, a cheap, practical and popular way of preventing Pauperism," which immediately attracted public attention. A sermon, preached by Canon Blackley in Westminster Abbey, in Sept., 1879, on "Our National Improvidence," also attracted much notice. The National Provident League was formed in 1880, for the purpose of educating public opinion on the subject of National Insurance. Canon Blackley's proposals have reached far beyond this country, with the result that movements more or less upon his lines have been started in France, Switzerland, Italy, and New Zealand; while a complete system of National Insurance has been established throughout the whole German empire, securing sick pay, accident pay, and old age pensions to all workers.

BLACKMORE, Richard Doddridge, novelist, son of the Rev. John Blackmore, was born at Longworth, Berkshire, in 1825. His maternal grandmother was a granddaughter of Dr. Doddridge. He was educated at Tiverton School, and Exeter College, Oxford, where he obtained a scholarship and graduated B.A. in 1847, taking a second class in classics. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1852, and afterwards practised as a conveyancer. He is the author of "Eric and Karine," "Epullia," "The Bugle of the Black Sea," and the following novels:—"Clara Vaughan," 1864; "Cradock Nowell: a Tale of the New Forest," 1866; "Lorna Doone: a Romance of Exmoor," 1869; "The Maid of Sker," 1872; "Alice Lorraine: a Tale of the South Downs," 1875; "Cripps the Carrier: a Woodland Tale," 1876; "Erèma: or, My Father's Sin," 1877; "Mary Anerley," 1880; "Christowell; a Dartmoor Tale," 1882; "Tommy Upmore," 1884; "Springhaven;" "Kit and Kitty," and "Perlycross." Mr. Blackmore has also published "The Fate of Franklin," a poem, 1860; "The Farm and Fruit of Old," a translation of the first and second Georgics of Virgil, 1862; and a translation of "The Georgics of Virgil," 1871. Mr. Blackmore is a successful market gardener on a large scale, and in the autumn of 1894 contributed interesting letters to The Times on the subject of fruit-growing.

BLACKWELL, Elizabeth, was born in Bristol, Feb. 3, 1821. Her father, in 1832, removed to the United States, where he died in 1838, and, through misfortune, left his widow and nine children almost penniless. Miss Blackwell aided in their support by teaching, and studied medicine at Charleston and Philadelphia. She applied for admission to a number of medical schools, but was refused by all, except those of Castleton, Vermont, and Geneva, New York, and at the latter she matriculated in 1847, and in 1849 received the first medical degree conferred upon a woman in the United States. After her graduation she spent a year and a half in the Maternité Hospital at Paris, and that of St. Bartholomew in London, and in 1851 established herself as a physician, mainly in the treatment of women and children, at New York, where, in 1857, she founded the Infirmary for Women and Children. She has published "The Laws of Life," 1852; "Counsel to Parents on the Moral Education of their Children," 1879; and other professional works. In 1859 she again visited England, and delivered a course of medical lectures. In 1868 she returned to England, where she has since resided. She is connected with the Women's Medical College in London, and has taken an active part in other organizations for moral and social effort.

BLAIKIE, Professor William Garden, D.D., LL.D., F.R.S.E., son of an eminent lawyer, who afterwards was Lord Provost of Aberdeen, was born at Aberdeen in 1820, and educated at the Grammar School and University of his native town. As soon as he was qualified, he received an appointment to the parish of Drumblade; but on the Disruption in 1843 he and his congregation joined the Free Church of Scotland. After a short ministry in the country he was invited to go to Edinburgh, and there, in company with other young men of zeal, founded a Mission Church. In 1864 the University of Edinburgh conferred on him the degree of D.D., and a few years later he received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Aberdeen. In 1868 he was appointed Professor of Apologetics and Pastoral Theology in New College, Edinburgh. In 1888, as "Cunningham Lecturer," he delivered a course of lectures on "The Preachers of Scotland," afterwards published. Dr. Blaikie was one of the chief promoters of "The Alliance of Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian system," commonly called "The Pan-Presbyterian," and was one of the chief secretaries at each of the four meetings in Edinburgh, Philadelphia, Belfast and London. He was President of the meeting at Toronto in 1892. In the same year he was chosen Moderator of the General Assembly of the Free Church. He has edited various periodicals, including the North British Review, Sunday Magazine, Catholic Presbyterian, &c. He has also written "Better Days for Working People," "Personal Life of David Livingstone," "The Work of the Ministry," "Personal Ministry and Pastoral Methods of our Lord," three volumes of the "Expositor's Bible," "Heroes of Israel," &c. He has contributed to many magazines and journals, including the Quiver, the Expositor, Harper, Macmillan, Good Words, Sunday at Home, &c.

BLAINE, Hon. James Gillespie, American statesman, was born at West Brownsville, Washington County, Pennsylvania, Jan. 31, 1830. He entered the preparatory department of Washington College in his thirteenth year, and graduated in 1847 at the head of his class. He then went to Kentucky, where he was Professor of Mathematics in a military institute. Here he met his wife, who was from Maine, and at her persuasion removed to Augusta, Maine, where he has since resided. Adopting journalism as a profession, he became part owner and editor of the Kennebec Journal in 1854, and editor of the Portland Daily Advertiser in 1857. He was one of the organizers of the Republican party in Maine, and served in the State Legislature from 1858 to 1862, the last two years being Speaker. In 1862 he was elected a Representative in Congress, and was re-elected for each successive term until 1876. He was Speaker of the House of Representatives from 1869 to 1874, and was again the Republican candidate in 1875, but was not elected, as the Democrats were then in control of that body. In 1876 Mr. Blaine was appointed U.S. Senator from Maine to fill a vacancy, and was subsequently elected for the term expiring in 1883. This position he resigned in March, 1881, to accept the Secretaryship of State offered him by Mr. Garfield. The assassination of the latter caused Mr. Blaine, with the rest of the Cabinet, to tender his resignation to Mr. Arthur, which was accepted, Dec. 1881. At the Republican National Convention in 1884, he was nominated for the Presidency, but owing to dissensions in his party, his Democratic opponent, Mr. Cleveland, was elected. During the administration of the latter, Mr. Blaine held no public office, but occupied himself in completing the writing of his recollections of "Twenty years in Congress" (2 vols., 1884-86) begun by him on leaving the Cabinet, and in travelling in Europe. He returned to America in time to take part in the Presidential campaign of 1886, in which he had declined to be himself a candidate, in favour of the Republican nominee, Gen. Harrison. On the election of President Harrison, Mr. Blaine was offered and accepted the position he had previously held in Mr. Garfield's Cabinet, the Secretaryship of State, an office which he held till June, 1892.

BLAIR, Lieut.-General, James, C.B., V.C., entered the army on June 80, 1844; Lieut., Mar. 19, 1848; Captain, Oct. 23, 1857; Major, June 10, 1864; Lieut.-Col. June 10, 1870; Colonel, June 10, 1875; Major-Gen., July 2, 1885; Lieut.-General, Jan. 9, 1889. Lieut.-General J. Blair served throughout the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1857-59, and was present at the siege of Neemuch, siege and assault of Kotah, and pursuit of Tantia Topee (Medal with clasp, and Victoria Cross); he received the V.C. "for having on two occasions distinguished himself by his gallant and daring conduct. First, on the night of Aug. 12, 1857, at Neemuch, in volunteering to apprehend seven or eight armed mutineers, who had shut themselves up for defence in a house, the door of which he burst open. He then rushed in among them, and forced them to escape through the roof; in this encounter he was severely wounded. In spite of his wounds, he pursued the fugitives, but was unable to come up with them in consequence of the darkness of the night. Second, on Oct. 23, 1857, at Jeerum, in fighting his way most gallantly through a body of rebels, who had literally surrounded him. After breaking his sword on one of their heads, and receiving a severe sword cut on his right arm, he rejoined his troop. In this wounded condition, and with no other weapon than the hilt of his broken sword, he put himself at the head of his men, charged the rebels most effectually, and dispersed them."

BLAKE, The Hon. Edward, Q.C., LL.D., Canadian statesman, was born at Adelaide, Ontario, Oct. 13, 1833, and became M.A. of Toronto University, 1858. He began the practice of law in 1859, and in 1864 became a Queen's Counsel. In 1867 he was elected to the Ontario Legislature and also to the Dominion Parliament, and in 1871-72 was Premier of Ontario. This position he retained for only one Session, being obliged to resign it on account of the passage of the dual representation Act. He became a member, in 1873, of the Canadian Cabinet under the Mackenzie administration, serving for various periods as Minister of Justice and as President of the Council. The Chancellorship of Ontario and the Chief Justiceship of the Supreme Court of the Dominion were offered to him, but he declined both. In 1878 he, with many other members of his party, was defeated for re-election, but he re-entered the parliament in the following year, and was from that time until 1887 generally recognized as the leader of the Liberal party. He was chosen Chancellor of the University of Toronto in 1876, and has held the office ever since. The honour of knighthood was declined by him in 1877. In 1887 he resigned the position of leader of the Liberal party; but retained his seat in the Dominion Parliament until 1891, when he retired from Canadian political life. He entered the British House of Commons in 1892 as member for South Longford, Ireland, having contested that constituency at the request of the leaders of the Irish Nationalist party; and has since taken an active part in advancing the cause of Home Rule for Ireland. He is a member of the Nationalist Parliamentary Committee. In 1889 the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Toronto.

BLAKE, Henry Arthur, K.C.M.G., F.R.G.S., born at Corbally, Limerick, Jan. 18, 1840, is the eldest son of Peter Blake, Esq., County Inspector of Irish Constabulary, second son of Peter Blake, Esq., of Corbally Castle, Co. Galway (see title "WALLSCOURT," Burke's Peerage), and Jane, daughter of John Lane, Esq., of Lanespark, Co. Tipperary (Capt. 17th Light Dragoons). He was educated at Dr. St. John's academy, Kilkenny, and Santry College; entered the Royal Irish Constabulary Feb., 1859; Resident Magistrate, 1876; was one of the five Special Resident Magistrates (now Divisional Commissioners) selected in Jan., 1882, to concert and carry out measures for the pacification of Ireland; had executive charge of the following counties—Kildare Co., Queen's Co., Meath, Carlow, Galway East and Galway West; was Governor of Bahama 1884 to 1887; Governor of Newfoundland 1877 to 1888, in which year he was appointed Governor of Queensland, but resigned his commission on return to England. He was appointed Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of Jamaica, Jan., 1889, where he presided over the Legislative Council till Feb. 1893, when Dr. Philipps was appointed in his place. He has contributed from time to time articles in The Westminster Review, The Nineteenth Century, The Fortnightly, The St. James's Gazette, &c.; and has published "Pictures from Ireland," by Terence M'Grath. He married, 1st, in 1862, Jane, eldest daughter of Andrew Irwin, Esq., Ballymore, Co. Roscommon; she died in 1866; 2nd, 1874, Edith, eldest daughter of Ralph Bernal Osborne, Esq., of Newton Anner, Co. Tipperary.

BLASHILL, Thomas, Capt. H.A.C., son of Henry Blashill, Esq., of Sutton-on-Hull; was educated at Hull and Scarborough, and professionally in London, offices, and at University College. He is the Superintending Architect of Metropolitan Buildings, and Architect to the London County Council, is a Member of Council of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and of the British Archæological Association; a Past President (1862) of the London Architectural Association; a Fellow of the Surveyors' Institution, and F.Z.S. He was elected a District Surveyor of Metropolitan buildings, 1876, and Superintending Architect, 1887. He has published a "Guide to Tintern Abbey," 1879, and has read papers "On Health, Comfort, and Cleanliness in the House," before the Society of Arts; on "Oak and Chestnut in Old Timber Roofs," before the Institute of Architects; on "Party-walls, &c.," before the Architectural Association; on "Shoring," "The Growth and Seasoning of Timber," and on "English and Continental Doors," before the Carpenters' Company; and on "The Influence of the Public Authority on Street Architecture" before the Congress at Edinburgh in 1889.

BLIND, Karl, was born at Mannheim, Sept. 4, 1826, and studied jurisprudence and ancient Germanic literature at Heidelberg and Bonn. Active among students, working men, gymnastic associations, and the army, as a leader of Democratic circles, he was in 1846 and 1847 tried and imprisoned in Baden and Bavaria on charges of high treason, but acquitted. In 1848, at Karlsruhe, he took a leading part in the preparations for a national rising. Arrested while endeavouring to expand the movement into one for a German Commonwealth, he was freed by the successes of the Revolution. During the Provisional Parliament at Frankfort, he insisted, at mass-meetings, on the abolition of the Princely Diet, and the election of a provisional revolutionary executive. Wounded in a street-riot, he was proscribed after participating in the Republican rising led by Hecker. From Alsace he agitated for a new levy. Falsely accused of being implicated in the Paris Insurrection of June, he was imprisoned at Strassburg, and transported in chains to Switzerland; the Mayor of St. Louis generously preventing his surrender to the Baden authorities, which had been planned by the French police. During the first Schleswig-Holstein war, he, with Gustav von Struve, led, in Sept., 1848, the second Republican Revolution in the Black Forest. At the storming of Staufen, he fought on the barricade, and was among the last who left the town. Being made a prisoner through the treachery of some militiamen, he was court-martialled: his life being saved by the secret sympathy of two of the privates who were members of the Court. Sentenced, after a State trial, lasting ten days, to eight years imprisonment in the spring of 1849, he was being secretly transported to the fortress of Mainz, when he was liberated by the people and soldiers breaking open the prison at Bruchsal. Heading the same day a hastily formed number of free corps, he endeavoured, with Struve, to take Rastatt, and then entered the capital of Baden. He was a firm opponent of Brentano, the chief of the new Government, whom he accused of being in occult connection with the ejected dynasty—a fact afterwards proved when Brentano was declared a "traitor" by the Constituent Assembly. With Dr. Frederick Schütz he was sent on a diplomatic mission to Paris, accredited to Louis Napoleon, the then President of the Republic. There, in violation of the law of nations, he was arrested as being implicated in Ledru-Rollin's rising for the protection of the Roman Republic, and threatened with being surrendered to the Prussian courts-martial if he continued to uphold his diplomatic quality. He refused to yield, and after several months of imprisonment, was banished from France. After this, he lived in Belgium, with his wife, who has made many sacrifices for the popular cause, and also undergone imprisonment. New prosecutions induced him to come with his family to England, whence he carried on a Democratic and National German Propaganda. After an amnesty in 1862, the House of Deputies at Stuttgart gave him a banquet. He was the speaker of the London Germans at Garibaldi's entry. He promoted the Schleswig-Holstein movement in connection with leaders of the Schleswig Diet, whose confidential communications he transmitted to the English Foreign Office; and he was at the head of the London Committee during the war of 1863-64. At Berlin, his step-son met with a tragic death in the attempt on the life of Prince Bismarck on May 7, 1866. For many years, Karl Blind operated with Mazzini, Garibaldi, and other European leaders, and supported the cause of Hungary, Poland, the American Union, and the American Republic; for which thanks were expressed to him by President Lincoln, and President Juarez. During the war of 1870-71, he supported his country's cause. In England he has been a member of Executive Committees on Transvaal, Egyptian, and other affairs. Many political writings, and essays on history, mythology, and Germanic literature, published in Germany, England, America, Italy, and Spain, have proceeded from his pen. He has asserted himself to bring about the national testimonial for the philosopher Feuerbach, and the monuments for the great minne-singer Hans Sachs, and for the famed minne-singer, Walther von der Vogelweide.

BLIND, Mathilde, was born on March 21, 1847, and received her education chiefly at a London girls' school, where Miss Rosa D. Carey, the novelist, was one of her companions. She finished her studies in Zurich, where she took lessons in Latin and Mediæval German and literature of Professor Schweitzer. During her stay there she endeavoured to persuade some of the Professors to admit women to their lectures, a suggestion then considered as abnormal, though Zurich was afterwards one of the first Universities which opened its doors to female students. On her return to London Miss Blind came in contact with Mazzini, whose personality and teaching were an education in themselves. Her first literary effort to attract attention was a critical essay on the Poetical Works of Shelley, which appeared in the Westminster Review in 1870, and was based on Mr. William Rossetti's edition of the poet. This was followed in 1872 by a sketch of the Life and Writings of Shelley, introductory to a selection of his poems for the Tauchnitz edition. A lecture on "Shelley's View of Nature contrasted with Darwin's," read to the Shelley Society, completes her studies of this poet's works. She also edited a selection of Lord Byron's Letters, with an Introductory notice for the Camelot Classics, and a selection of his poems in two volumes, with a full Memoir, for Walter Scott's Canterbury Series. Her translation of Strauss's "The Old Faith and the New," appeared in 1873, and went through many editions. One of these contained the first brief biography of Strauss, which appeared in this country immediately after his death. At this period, and for many years, Miss Blind contributed literary criticisms to The Athenæum, and the now extinct Examiner, and Dark Blue. She made some translations of Goethe's "Maxims and Reflections," for Fraser's Magazine, and wrote various papers and essays, among others on Mary Wollstonecraft, Trelawny, and "The Tale of Tristram and Iseult." In 1883 Miss Blind opened the Eminent Women Series, edited by Mr. J. H. Ingram, with her "Life of George Eliot," which was the first connected narrative of the career of the great novelist. "Madame Roland," with its condensed survey of the French Revolution for a background, was written for the same series and published in 1886. Shortly before this, in 1885, her "Tarantilla," a romantic novel in two vols. appeared. It has been reissued by Mr. Fisher Unwin in a shilling edition. Miss Blind, who is primarily a poet, issued "The Prophecy of St. Oran, and other Poems," in 1881, and in 1886, "The Heather on Fire," which is a protest against the wrongs inflicted on the Crofters during the Highland Clearances. "The Ascent of Man," her chief work, appeared in 1889. This poem treats imaginatively of the modern evolutionary idea: tracing the progress of man from a savage stage to his present condition. "Dramas in Miniature," followed in 1892, the keynote of the volume being the misery entailed on women by a one-sided morality. Miss Blind first drew public attention in England to Marie Bashkirtseff, by two articles contributed to the Woman's World in 1883, and published the "Journal of Marie Bashkirtseff," with an introduction, in 1890. Miss Blind contributed to the Fortnightly Review for May, 1891, her "Personal Recollections of Mazzini," written from notes taken by her at the time. In 1893 appeared a selection of her lyrical work, chiefly taken from that portion entitled "Love in Exile," and published under the title of "Songs and Sonnets." Miss Mathilde Blind has always been a warm supporter of the modern movement to improve the education and the economical and political position of Women. She was at one time a lecturer on the subject, and is one of the originators of ladies' clubs. Miss Blind has travelled much in the South and in Egypt.

BLOMFIELD, Arthur William, Kt., M.A., A.R.A., F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A., was born at Fulham Palace, on March 6, 1829. He is the fourth son of the late Rt. Rev. Charles James Blomfield, D.D., Bishop of London (1828-57), and of Dorothy, daughter of Charles Cox, Esq. He was educated at Rugby and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained his M.A. degree in 1854, afterwards studying Architecture under the late P. C. Hardwick, Architect to the Bank of England, whom he eventually succeeded in that post. He was elected an Hon. Member of the Royal Academy of Arts at Copenhagen, and received the order of the Danebrog (3rd Class) from the King of Denmark, in 1887, on the occasion of the consecration of the English Church of St. Alban, built by him at Copenhagen. In 1888 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and received the honour of knighthood in 1889. In 1891 he received the gold medal of the Royal Institute of British Architects presented annually by the Queen, on the recommendation of the Institute, to some one who has rendered distinguished service to Architecture by his work or writings.

BLOUËT, Paul, "Max O'Rell," was born in Brittany (France) on March 2, 1848; educated in Paris, and took his degrees of B.A. and B.Sc. in 1864 and 1865. He received his commission in the French army in 1869; fought in the Franco-Prussian war; was made a prisoner at Sedan on Sept. 3, 1870; fought against the Commune: was severely wounded, and pensioned. He came to England as newspaper correspondent in 1873; was appointed Head French Master of St. Paul's School in 1876; and resigned his Mastership in 1884. In 1883 he published "John Bull and his Island," which took Paris and London by storm, and was soon translated into English, and also into most European languages. In 1884 he, published "John Bull's Daughter;" in 1885, "The Dear Neighbours;" in 1886, "Drat the Boys!" in 1887, "Friend MacDonald;" in 1889, "Jonathan and his Continent;" in 1891, "A Frenchman in America." He has also written several educational works, amongst which is, "French Oratory" (Oxford, 1883). Several orders, French and others, have been conferred on "Max O'Rell." During the years 1887, 1888, 1889 and 1890, he gave lectures in the United Kingdom and in America. In 1891, he started on a two years' tour round the world, during which he gave 446 lectures in the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. All the works of "Max O'Rell" have been translated into English by his wife.

BLOWITZ, Henri Georges Stephane Adolphe Opper de, Times correspondent in Paris, was born of Jewish stock at the château of Blowitz, Pilsen, Bohemia, on Dec. 28, 1825. By a decree of May 6, 1860, he was permitted to assume the present form of his name, which in France and Germany implies noble rank. On Oct. 5, 1870, he was naturalised as a Frenchman, having for many years been employed as a teacher of German at various French lycées, and as a literary and political journalist. In the latter capacity he wrote for the Gazette du Midi, and sent a weekly letter to the Lyons journal, La Decentralization. After the war of 1870, he gave M. Thiers his warmest support, and was of the greatest assistance to General Espivent de la Villeboisnet in his efforts to suppress the Commune at Marseilles. At the general's request he was decorated with the Legion of Honour in June, 1871. Soon afterwards he became temporary correspondent to the Times, and three years later was appointed their chief Paris representative. His communications to the Times have often been of European importance. He was one of the originators of what is now known as the "interview," and Thiers, Gambetta, Prince Bismarck, and the late Sultan at various times made use of him in his capacity of interviewer in order informally to gauge public opinion, or to influence it in their own favour. M. de Blowitz was promoted to be an officer of the Legion of Honour on July 30, 1878. Besides of late years writing almost daily for the Times, he has published "Feuilles Volantes," 1858; a comedy entitled, "Midi à Quatorze Heures," "Le Mariage Royal d'Espagne," 1878, and several other political pamphlets.

BLUMENTHAL, Field-Marshal Leonard Count von, Chief of the General Staff of the Prussian Army, was born on July 30, 1810, at Schweldt, on the Oder. He was, like the majority of the leaders of the Prussian army, a soldier from childhood. Educated from 1820 to 1827 in the military academies of Culm and Berlin, he was entered on July 27, 1827, as Second Lieutenant in the Guard Landwehr regiment (the present Fusilier Guards), attended from 1830-33 the general military school in Berlin, was from 1837-1845 Adjutant to the Coblenz Landwehr battalion, and became for the first time in 1846 Premier Lieutenant in the topographical division of the General Staff. In order that he might be thoroughly acquainted with technical military science, Blumenthal had been ordered for service during the following years to the Artillery Guards and the division of the Pioneer Guards. He had already, in March, 1848, taken part as Lieutenant in the Fusilier battalions of the 31st Infantry Regiment in the street-fights in Berlin. Some months later, Blumenthal was transferred as Captain (Jan. 1, 1849) to the General Staff, to which he has, with slight interruptions, belonged for about twenty-five years. In 1849 he took, as a member of the staff of General von Bonin, part in the Schleswig-Holstein campaign, and fought in the skirmishes at Auenbüll and Beuschau, in the battle of Colding, and in the affairs at Alminde, Gudsöe, and Tauloo-Church, and took, in the siege and battle of Fredericia, so active and conspicuous a part, that he was, on May 14, 1849, promoted as Chief of the General Staff of the Schleswig-Holstein Army. His capabilities were regarded as being so brilliant, that in the following year (1850) he was named as General Staff officer of the Mobile Division under General von Tietzen in the electorate of Hesse. He was next sent, intrusted with special military propositions, to England, and was rewarded with the Order of the Red Eagle (fourth class, with swords). On June 18, 1853, advanced to the rank of Major in the Grand General Staff, Blumenthal was, as military companion and as General Staff officer of the 8th Division, appointed to take part in the spring exercises of that year in Thuringia and at Berlin. His linguistic and departmental knowledge led to his being intrusted with further commissions to England. In 1859 he was named the personal Adjutant of Prince Frederic Charles. On July 2, 1860, he became Colonel and Commander of the 31st, later of the 71st, Infantry Regiment. In 1861 he accompanied General von Bonin to the British Court, and became then the conductor of the foreign officers at the autumn manœuvres on the Rhine, and military Companion of the Crown Prince of Saxony at the coronation in Königsberg. Colonel von Blumenthal had been for some time Chief of the Staff of the Third Army Corps, when, on Dec. 15, 1863, he was nominated the Chief of the General Staff of the combined Mobile Army Corps against Denmark, and then had the first opportunity of exhibiting his splendid abilities. The part which he took in that war, especially at Missunde, in the storming of the trenches at Düppel, and the passage on to the island of Alsen, was so extremely important, that on June 25, 1864, he was promoted to be Major-General, and received the Order pour le Mérite. After the peace, General von Blumenthal commanded first the 7th and next the 30th Infantry Brigade. In the Austrian war of 1866 he was Chief of the General Staff of the Second Army of the Crown Prince, and for his distinguished services received the Oak-leaf of the Order pour le Mérite (one of the rarest distinctions in the army) and the Star of Knight Commander of the Order of the House of Hohenzollern. On Oct. 30, 1866, he was designated Commander of the 14th Division in Düsseldorf, and accompanied the Crown Prince in the autumn of 1866 to St. Petersburg. When, on the outbreak of the war with France, the Crown Prince was intrusted with the supreme command of the Third Army, General von Blumenthal was requested to accept the important post of Chief of the General Staff; and his Imperial Highness, when presented by the Emperor of Germany with the Iron Cross, declared that the same distinction was equally due to General von Blumenthal. In 1871 he was sent to England to represent the German Empire at the autumn manœuvres at Chobham. Von Blumenthal was made Field-Marshal in 1888, and Count in 1883, and is recognized as one of the most distinguished strategists of modern Germany.

BLUNT, Arthur Cecil (known on the stage as Arthur Cecil), the son of a well-known solicitor, was educated at East Sheen, and at first intended for the army. But he soon displayed a great talent for music and acting, and first appeared as an amateur at the little theatre on Richmond Green, which had once witnessed the triumphs of Kean, and the début of Helen Faucit. In 1869 he appeared at the "Gallery of Illustration" in Mrs. German Reed's company, as Mr. Churchmouse in "No Cards," and as Box in the musical version of "Box and Cox." He acted for five years in Mrs. German Reed's company, and it was here that he attained that power of disguise of face and manner which has always been one of his chief characteristics. Mr. Cecil's principal parts on the stage proper have been Dr. Downward in Wilkie Collins's "Miss Gwilt;" Sir Woodbine Grafton in "Peril;" The Rev. Noel Haygarth in "The Vicarage;" John Hamond, M.P., in "Duty;" Baron Verduret in "Honour;" Baron Stein in "Diplomacy;" Ned Guyon in the "Millionaire;" and Mr. Posket in the "Magistrate." Mr. Cecil was joint manager with Mr. John Clayton of the old Court Theatre, Sloane Square, from 1883 to 1887. At the New Court Theatre he has appeared under Mrs. John Wood's management in "Mamma" "Aunt Jack," "The Cabinet Minister," &c.

BODDA-PYNE née Louisa Pyne, a popular English singer, daughter of a well-known singer, Mr. G. Pyne, was born in 1832, and was at a very early age the pupil of Sir George Smart, and made her first appearance about 1842. She sang in Paris with great success in 1847, appeared in opera in 1849, performed at the Royal Italian Opera in 1851, and visited the United States, where she was enthusiastically received, in 1854. After an absence of three years she returned to her native land, and was, in conjunction with Mr. Harrison, joint lessee for a short season of the Lyceum and Drury Lane, and from 1858 till 1862 of Covent Garden Theatre. The enterprise having failed, she transferred her services to Her Majesty's Theatre, and has frequently performed at Her Majesty's Concerts at Windsor Castle and Buckingham Palace. She is married to Mr. Frank Bodda.

BODICHON, Mdme., whose maiden name was Barbara Leigh Smith, the eldest daughter of the late Mr. Benjamin Smith, many years M.P. for Norwich, was born April 8, 1827, at Watlington, Sussex, and at an early age took a deep interest in social questions. In 1855-56 she started, in conjunction with some personal friends, a movement having for its object to secure to married women their own property and earnings; and although their efforts did not prove successful in obtaining directly from Parliament the measure they desired, they led to a change in the law of marriage and divorce. Miss Smith established at Paddington a school for the education of the daughters of artisans. In July, 1857, she married M. Eugène Bodichon, M.D. (now deceased), and has since resided in Algeria. Madame Bodichon, by her efforts and munificent donation of £1,000, was mainly instrumental, with Miss Emily Davies, in founding the now flourishing and well-known College for Women at Girton, near Cambridge, where precisely the same course of academical instruction which is afforded to men in the university is given to female students. It is, however, as a water-colour artist that Madame Bodichon is best known to the public, her collection of water-colour drawings having been exhibited several times in London, at the Royal Academy and Dudley Gallery, also in Paris and elsewhere.

BODY, George, D.D., Canon Missioner of Durham, was born at Cheriton Fitzpaine, Devonshire, on January 7, 1840, and was educated at Blundell's School, Tiverton, under the head mastership of Rev. T. B. Hughes, M.A. From this school he passed as a Diocesan Student, from the Diocese of Exeter, to St. Augustine's Missionary College, Canterbury. Through ill-health he had to give up his purpose of undertaking foreign missionary work, and passed from Canterbury to St. John's College, Cambridge, in October, 1859. In Lent, 1863, he was ordained Deacon, his first Curacy being at St. James's, Wednesbury, in the Diocese of Lichfield. From Wednesbury he went to the Curacy of Sedgley, in the same Diocese, and from Sedgley to Wolverhampton. In 1870 he was appointed Rector of Kirby Misperton, on the nomination of the Earl of Feversham, which benefice he held until 1884. In 1883 he was called to the Diocese of Durham as Canon Missioner. From 1880-85 he represented the Archdeaconry of Cleveland in the Convocation of York. In 1885 he was made D.D. of Durham (honoris causâ), and in 1890 was elected a Vice-President of the Society of the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts as a recognition of his interest in foreign mission work. He has published many Sermons and two volumes of Lectures: (1) "The Life of Justification," in 1870, and (2) "The Life of Temptation," in 1870, each of which is in its 7th edition. Recent works of his are "Activities of the Ascended Lord," 1891; "The School of Calvary," 2nd edit. 1891; and "The Life of Love," 1893.

BOISSIER, Professor Marie Louis Gaston, born August 15, 1823, at Nîmes, was educated at the Lycée of that town, and at the Collège Louis-le-Grand, Paris. In 1846 he became Professor of Rhetoric at Angoulême, and ten years later was called to Paris as supplementary professor at the Lycée Charlemagne. In 1861 he proceeded to the Collège de France, as Professor of Latin Oratory. On June 8, 1876, he was elected a member of the French Academy. M. Boissier has written "Le Poète Attius," 1856; "Une Étude sur Terentius Varron," 1859; "Cicéron et ses Amis," 1866; "La Religion Romaine d'Auguste aux Antonins," 1875; "Madame de Sévigné, and many critical papers in the Revue des Deux Mondes, and the Revue de l'Instruction Publique.

BOND, Edward Augustus, C.B., LL.D., F.S.A., son of the Rev. Dr. Bond, of Hanwell, Middlesex, was born Dec. 31, 1815. He was educated in his father's house, and at Merchant Taylors' School, London. In 1832 he received an appointment under the Commissioners of Public Records. In 1838 he entered the British Museum as an Assistant in the Department of Manuscripts. He was appointed Librarian of the Egerton MSS. in 1852, Assistant-Keeper of the MSS. in 1854, and Keeper of the Department in 1866. In Aug., 1878, he was appointed Principal Librarian of the British Museum, and resigned the office in July, 1888. As Keeper of the MSS., Mr. Bond designed, and, with the help of his staff, completed in 1870, a Class-Catalogue of the several collections of manuscripts in the British Museum, and subsequently he published a Catalogue of all the Manuscripts, Papyri, and Charters acquired during the years 1854-75, in two 8vo volumes; also a series of Facsimiles of Anglo-Saxon and other Ancient Charters in the Museum, with exact Readings, in four parts. He has contributed papers to the Archæologia of the Society of Antiquaries, including an "Account of Money-lending Transactions of Italian Merchants in England in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries," 1839. He passed through the press, for the Oxford Commissioners, the "Statutes of the University," in 3 vols. 8vo, 1853; edited for the Hakluyt Society, in 1856, Dr. Giles Fletcher's "Russe Common Wealth," and Sir Jerome Horsey's "Travels in Russia;" edited for Government "The Speeches in the Trial of Warren Hastings," 4 vols. 8vo, 1859-61; and for the Rolls Series of Chronicles, the "Chronicon Abbatiæ de Melsâ," in 3 vols. In 1870, conjointly with his colleague, Mr. E. Maund Thompson, he founded the Palæographical Society, of which he is President, and, in collaboration with that gentleman he has edited the series of "Facsimiles of Ancient Manuscripts and Inscriptions," produced by the Society. The University of Cambridge conferred on Mr. Bond the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1879. He was made a Companion of the Bath in the year 1885; and he has received the Order of the Crown of Italy. In the year 1847 he married Caroline Frances, eldest daughter of the Rev. Richard Harris Barham, author of the "Ingoldsby Legends."

BOND, The Right Rev. William Bennett, M.A., LL.D., Bishop of Montreal, was born at Truro, in 1815. He received his education in various public and private schools in Cornwall and in London, and at an early age emigrated to Newfoundland, where he studied for the ministry with Archdeacon Bridge; and at Montreal, to which he had meantime repaired, was, in 1840, ordained a deacon, and in 1841 a priest. For several years, under the direction of the late Bishop Mountain, of Quebec, he organised many mission stations in the Eastern Townships of the Province of Quebec; was incumbent of Lachine for a number of years; and assistant minister in St. George's, Montreal, of which he finally became incumbent. He maintained his connection with this parish for the long period of thirty years, successively becoming Archdeacon of Hochelaga and Dean of Montreal. On the resignation of Bishop Oxenden, he was in 1879 elected by the synod of the diocese to the Bishopric of Montreal. Bishop Bond is President of the Theological College of the Diocese of Montreal, and is an LL.D. of the University of McGill College.

BON GAULTIER. See MARTIN, SIR THEODORE.

BONGHI, Ruggiero, Italian writer and statesman, was born at Naples, March 20, 1828. At the age of eighteen he published a translation of Plotinus, which was followed in 1846 by a translation, with critical notes, of Plato's "Philibe." At the begining of the revolutionary movement of 1848 he established a journal in Florence, Il Nazionale, and took an active part in the events up to 1849, for which he was exiled from the kingdom of Naples. He then formed a close friendship with Manzoni and Rosmini, and again took up his philosophic studies. In 1857 he published an important translation of Aristotle's Metaphysics, and 1858 a new edition of the works of Plato. In 1859 he was made Professor of Philosophy at the new Academy at Milan, and the following year entered the Italian Parliament. In 1863 he started at Turin a journal, La Stampa, in the cause of moderate democracy, and in 1864 was appointed Professor of Greek Literature in the University of that city. The next year he went to Florence as Professor of Latin, and became a member of the Superior Council for Teaching. Subsequently he returned to his Chair at the Academy at Milan, and there edited La Perseveranza. From Milan he went to the University at Rome as Professor of Ancient History, and thence to Naples in 1872 to assume direction of the Unità Nazionale. On the 3rd October, 1874, Signor Bonghi was appointed Minister of Public Instruction in the Minghetti Cabinet, an office which he retained till the Depretis Cabinet came into power in 1876. He has done much to promote education in Italy, and has written much and admirably on the questions of Church and State. In 1891 he presided over the Peace Congress in Rome. Besides the works already mentioned, he is the author of "Lettere critiche sul perchè la letteratura italiana no è popolare in Italia," 1873, 3rd edit.; "Storia della finanza italiana," 1864-68; "La Vita e i Tempi di Valentino Basini," 1869; "Frati, Papi e Rè," 1873; "Leone XIII. e l'Italia," 1878; "Il Congresso di Berlino e la crisi d'Oriente," 1878; "Francesco d'Assisi," 1884; "Roma Pagana," 1886, &c. Quite recently he composed the inscription for the Shelley Statue near the Bay of Lerici.

BONHEUR, Mademoiselle Rosalie, called Rosa, an artist unrivalled amongst her own sex for the minute and spirited delineation of the various forms of animal life, was born at Bordeaux, March 22, 1822. The daughter of a French artist of some distinction, she profited by the instructions of her father, who was her sole adviser in the mechanism of painting. As the avocations of her family compelled them to reside in Paris, the indulgence of her own particular tastes in the choice of subjects for study was somewhat difficult of attainment, and she derived her early instruction from a study of such animal life as could be seen by her in the streets and abattoirs of Paris. In 1841 she entered upon her career by exhibiting two pictures, "Chèvres et Moutons" and "Les Deux Lapins," which established her reputation. These were followed by a succession of highly-finished compositions, amongst which may be cited the celebrated "Labourage Nivernais," which was completed in 1849, and has been added to the collection in the Luxembourg. She attends the horse-markets both in France and abroad, adopting the masculine garb, which is not ill-suited to the decided character of her face, and enables her to inspect and to purchase her subject with less interruption and remark. She has fitted up an antechamber divided only by a partition from her studio, as a stable for the convenience of the various animals domesticated therein, and has established a small fold in its immediate vicinity for the accommodation of sheep and goats. It is owing, in a measure, to this conscientious examination of the developments of animal life that she has produced such masterpieces of representation as the "Horse Fair," a picture which formed the chief attraction at the French Exhibition of pictures in London during the season of 1855, and which almost monopolized for a time the attention of artists and connoisseurs. In 1885 she sent to the Universal Exhibition in Paris a new landscape of large dimensions, "The Haymaking Season in Auvergne." Rosa Bonheur has evinced in her works a wonderful power of representing spirited action, which distinguishes her from other eminent animal painters of the day, and which endows her pictures as compositions with extraordinary interest. Several of this lady's productions have been engraved for the English public. Since 1849 she has directed the gratuitous School of Design for Young Gir's of Paris. She obtained a first-class medal in 1848, and another in 1855. She was decorated with the Legion of Honour, June 10, 1865, and in 1868 she was appointed a member of the Institute of Antwerp. During the siege of Paris in 1870-71, her studio and residence in Fontainebleau were spared and respected by special order of the Crown Prince of Prussia. Two important pictures by this artist, "A Foraging Party," and "On the Alert," were exhibited at the Antwerp Academy in 1879, and in London in 1881. "The Lion at Home," exhibited in London, 1882, was a result of the painter's study of a fine couple of Nubian lions which were presented to her by a friend. In Jan., 1880, the King of the Belgians conferred the Leopold Cross on Mdlle. Rosa Bonheur, who was the first lady to receive this distinction; and in the following month she received from the King of Spain the Commander's Cross of the royal Order of Isabella the Catholic, this being the first instance in Spain of such a distinction being conferred upon a woman. In April, 1894, she was appointed by the late President Carnot Officer of the Legion of Honour.

BONNAT, Léon, a French painter and Member of the Institute, was born at Bayonne, June 20, 1833, was a pupil of Madrazo and Léon Cogniet, and in 1857 obtained the second prize at Rome for his "Résurrection de Lazare." Since that time he has been a constant exhibitor at the annual Salons. Among his works may be mentioned "Le bon Samaritain," 1859; "Adam et Eve trouvant Abel mort," 1861; "Pèlerins dans l'église Saint Pierre de Rome," 1864; "Ribèra dessinant à la porte de l'Ara Cœli à Rome," 1867. After a tour in the East he produced the "Assumption," 1869; "Femme fellah et son enfant," 1870; "Femmes d'Ustaritz," 1872, and many others which have been rendered popular through engravings. M. Bonnat obtained two medals of the second class in 1861 and 1867, and the Medal of Honour in 1869. In 1867 he was decorated with the Legion of Honour. For many years he has confined himself to portraiture, and his best portraits, such as those of Thiers and Victor Hugo, Jules Ferry and President Carnot (1890), have gained him celebrity.

BONNEY, Professor, The Rev. Thomas George, D.Sc. (Cantab.), Hon. LL.D. (Montreal), Hon. D.Sc. (Dublin), F.R.S., F.S.A., F.G.S., &c., son of late Rev. T. Bonney, M.A., was born July 27, 1833, at Rugeley, and educated at Uppingham School and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated as 12th Wrangler and 16th in second class classics in 1856. He was elected in 1859, to a Fellowship, which he still holds. From 1856 to 1861 he was Mathematical Master at Westminster School, but returned to Cambridge in the latter year. During his residence there he was active in securing for Natural Science a due place in Academic studies and promoting reforms in the University. He was appointed a tutor of the College in 1868, and was lecturer in Geology. In 1877 he was elected Professor of Geology at University College, London, and in 1881, on being appointed Secretary of the British Association, finally quitted Cambridge to reside at Hampstead. He resigned the latter post in 1885, was President of the Geological Section at the Meeting in 1886, and delivered one of the Evening Discourses in 1888. He was for six years Secretary of the Geological Society, and afterwards President. In 1889 he received the Wollaston Medal. He has been also President of the Mineralogical Society. In Geology, Prof. Bonney has chiefly devoted himself to Petrological and Physical questions, and has written numerous papers printed in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, the Geological Magazine, the publications of the Royal Society, &c., as well as a book entitled "The Story of our Planet." He is a member of the Alpine Club, and has been its President. On Alpine subjects, he is the author of "Outline Sketches in the High Alps of Dauphiné," 1865; "The Alpine Regions," 1868; besides furnishing the text to several illustrated works on the Alps, Norway, &c. He has also contributed largely to several works of descriptive topography, such as "Picturesque Europe," "Our own Country," "English Cathedrals," &c., and translated Pierotti's "Jerusalem Explored," 1864; and "Customs of Palestine," 1864. Ordained in 1857, Professor Bonney was one of the Cambridge Preachers at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, 1876-8, and has been five times a special preacher before the University of Cambridge, on the last occasion being Hulsean Lecturer. These lectures, "On the Influence of Science on Theology," have been published (1885), besides two other small volumes and several detached sermons. He was Bayle Lecturer in 1890-1, publishing the lectures in volumes entitled "Old Truths in Modern Lights," and "Christian Doctrines and Modern Thought." He is an Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Manchester, and an Honorary Canon of that Cathedral.

BOOTH, The Rev. William, "General" of the Salvation Army, was born at Nottingham, April 10, 1829, and educated at a private school in that town. He studied theology with the Rev. Wm. Cooke, D.D., became a minister of the Methodist New Connexion in 1850, and was appointed mostly to hold special evangelistic services, to which he felt so strongly drawn that when the Conference of 1861 required him to settle in the ordinary circuit work, he resigned, and began his labours as an evangelist amongst the churches wherever he had opportunity. Coming in this capacity to the East End of London he observed that the vast majority of the people attended no place of worship, and he started "The Christian Mission" in July, 1865. To this mission, when it had become a large organization, formed upon military lines, he gave in 1878 the name of "The Salvation Army," under which it soon became widely known, and grew rapidly until it had in Dec., 1885, 1,322 corps, at stations established in the United Kingdom, France, the United States, Australia, India, the Cape of Good Hope, Canada, and Sweden. 3,076 officers or evangelists are entirely employed in and supported by this Army, under the General's absolute direction, and they hold upwards of 25,496 services in the open air and in theatres, music halls, and other buildings every week. The General has published several hymn and music books, volumes entitled "Salvation Soldiery," "Training of Children," and "Letters to Soldiers," describing his views as to religious life and work. "Holy Living," and "Orders and Regulations for the Salvation Army," are some of the smaller publications issued by him for the direction of the Army as to teaching and services. He also contributed an article on "The Salvation Army" to the Contemporary Review for Aug., 1882. Mrs. Booth shared largely in all the General's efforts, and further explained their views in "Practical Religion," "Aggressive Christianity," "Godliness," "Life and Death," and "The Salvation Army in relation to Church and State." She died of cancer, in Oct., 1890, after a painful illness borne with Christian fortitude. The General's eldest son is his Chief of Staff, managing all his business, his eldest daughter with her husband directs the work in France, the second son commands the forces in America, the third son is in charge of the work in Great Britain, the second daughter, together with her husband, supervises the operations in India and Ceylon, the third daughter, as Field Commissioner, conducts mass meetings in the chief English cities, the fourth daughter is at the head of the Women's Training Depôts established in various parts of London, so that each member of the family is actively employed in some branch of the Army's service. The General established The War Cry as a weekly gazette of the Army in 1880. It is now published weekly in England, similar papers being published at each Colonial and Foreign head-quarters, so that there are now 28 weekly War Cry's, with a circulation of over 558,000. En Avant appears in Paris, Stridsropet in Stockholm, the Jaygi Pokar (Gujarati) edition in Gujarat, a Tamil one in Madras, a Singhalese one in Ceylon, and an English and Marathi edition in Bombay. Belgium, Holland, and Germany also publish separate editions in their respective languages. In Nov., 1890, he published a volume entitled "In Darkest England and the Way Out," containing a scheme for the enlightenment and industrial support of the lowest classes. The General appealed for £100,000 with which to begin the work of social rescue, and subsequently started forty-eight rescue homes for fallen women, and sixty-three "slum posts," besides a system of Labour Bureaux, and food depôts, shelters, factories, and homes for inebriates. In May, 1892, General Booth again stated that £30,000 a year would be necessary in order to carry out the "Darkest England" scheme. The appeal was endorsed by such well-known public men as the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord

Compton, Mr. H. H. Fowler, Mr Labouchere, and Archdeacon Farrar Subsequently General Booth submitted the working of the scheme to a commitee of inquiry consisting of the Earl of Onslow, Sir Henry James, M.P., Mr. E. Waterhouse (Pres. Institute of Chartered Accountants), Mr. Walter Long, and Mr. C. E. Hobhouse, M.P. These gentlemen reported favourably as to the working of the scheme and the application of the funds thereto subscribed.

BORTHWICK, Sir Algernon, Bart., M.P., is the son of the late Mr. Peter Borthwick, formerly member for Evesham. When a young man he went to Paris as correspondent to the Morning Post (with which his father was connected), and was present at the Coup d'État in Dec., 1851. On the death of his father in 1853 he came to London and undertook the management of the Morning Post, subsequently becoming owner of the property. Sir Algernon was the chief promoter of the Owl, a paper which appeared during the parliamentary session of 1864, and created a great sensation on account of the bold way in which State secrets were revealed and discussed. The authorship was kept a secret for many years, and the paper itself came to an end in 1870. In 1880 Mr. Borthwick offered himself as a Conservative candidate for the borough of Evesham, formerly represented by his father; he was, however, defeated by a small majority and did not enter Parliament till 1885, when he was returned for South Kensington. At the general elections of 1886 and 1892, Sir Algernon was returned for South Kensington. He is President of the Press Fund, and also of the Newspaper Society; Vice-President of the Institute of Journalists, and a Fellow of King's College, London. He was knighted in 1880, and created a baronet in 1887. Sir Algernon married, in 1870, Alice Beatrice, youngest daughter of the late Lady Theresa Lewis, and niece of the Earl of Clarendon and of Earl Russell.

BOSISTO, Joseph, C.M.G., was born March 21, 1827, at Hammersmith. He became a druggist, and emigrated to Adelaide, South Australia, in 1848, where he remained for three years, and established the wholesale business of Messrs. Faulding & Co. After a short attack of the gold fever in 1851, he went to Melbourne, and began business at Bridge Road, Richmond. The business, at first almost purely a pharmaceutical one, soon developed into a regular manufacturing concern, and upon its founder discovering the remarkable antiseptic properties of the eucalyptus trees, it developed into a large undertaking. The Pharmaceutical Society of Victoria was founded by Mr. Bosisto in 1857, with the aid and cordial co-operation of a few of the chief pharmaceutists of Victoria, and has proved to have exerted a highly beneficial influence in the development of pharmaceutical and therapeutical knowledge throughout the Colony. Mr. Bosisto sat as a Municipal Councillor for over 12 years, in the course of which time he held the office of Mayor for two consecutive periods. He was elected Chairman of the Richmond Magisterial Bench for five years successively, was returned to Parliament in 1874, and has always been placed at the head of the poll in the elections until 1886. Mr. Bosisto was appointed President of the Royal Commission of Victoria at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, 1886.

BOTTOMLEY, James Thomson, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., F.C.S., was born at Fortbreda, County Down, Ireland, on Jan. 10, 1845. His father was William Bottomley, merchant of Belfast, and Justice of the Peace; his mother was second daughter of the late Dr. James Thomson, Professor of Mathematics in the University of Glasgow, and a sister of Sir William Thomson, F.R.S., and Professor James Thomson, F.R.S., both Professors in Glasgow University. Mr. Bottomley was educated partly at a private school and partly at the Royal Belfast Academical Institution. His parents intended that he should enter the then Established Church in Ireland, and he was sent to Trinity College, Dublin, with that object; but when he had passed through half of his undergraduate course, the desire of following a scientific career became so strong that he was permitted to pursue his bent. He then became a pupil, and subsequently an assistant, of the late Dr. Thomas Andrews, F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry in Queen's College, Belfast, studying with him Chemistry and Chemical Physics, and devoting much attention at the same time to Mathematics and Natural Philosophy. He finally took the degree of B.A. in Trinity College, Dublin, and the degrees of B.A. and M.A., with first-class Honours and Gold Medals in Natural Philosophy and Chemistry, in the Queen's University in Ireland. After a year's residence in Glasgow, with his uncle, Sir William Thomson, where he studied Chemistry under the late Dr. Thomas Anderson, and Physics in the Natural Philosophy Laboratory, Mr. Bottomley was appointed Demonstrator in Chemistry at King's College, London, under the late Dr. W. A. Miller, F.R.S. He held this office only one year; for, to his great disappointment, his health became injuriously affected in the Chemical Laboratory, and he was glad, with the consent of Dr. Miller, and at the wish of Professor W. G. Adams, to be transferred to the post of Demonstrator in Natural Philosophy in King's College. In 1870 he removed to Glasgow to take part in the teaching of the Natural Philosophy Class in the University, under a special arrangement made for that purpose, Sir William Thomson being at that time actively engaged in the great work of laying some of the submarine cables; and Mr. Bottomley has continued to assist, and when necessary represent, Sir William Thomson since that time. He is the author of original papers on "Conduction of Heat," "Radiation of Heat," "Elasticity of Wires," &c., which have been published in "The Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society," "The Proceedings of the Royal Society," Philosophical Magazine, "Proccedings of the British Association," and elsewhere. He is also the author of elementary textbooks on "Dynamics," and on "Hydrostatics," and of "Four Figure Mathematical Tables." He is Fellow of the Royal Society, of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and of the Chemical Society, Member of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, and of the Physical Society.

BOUGHTON, George Henry, A.R.A., was born in Norfolk, in 1833. His family went to America about 1836, and he passed his youth in Albany, New York, where he early developed an artistic taste. In 1853 he came to London, and passed several months in the study of art. Returning to America, he settled in New York, and soon became known as a landscape painter. In 1859 he went to Paris, where he devoted two years to study, and in 1861 he opened a studio in London. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, June 19, 1879. Among his best works are:—"Winter Twilight," "The Lake of the Dismal Swamp," "Passing into the Shade," "Coming into Church," "Morning Prayer," "The Scarlet Letter," "The Idyl of the Birds," "The Return of the Mayflower," "Counsellors of Peter the Headstrong," "A Morning in May, Isle of Wight," and "The Ordeal of Purity" (1894). Mr. Boughton has of late years made a study of the picturesque aspects of the old Puritan life of New England, and many of his recent works have illustrated it. He has also visited Holland, and painted a number of Dutch scenes, and, with Mr. Edwin Abbey, is the author of "A Sketching Tour in Holland," 1885. He has frequently exhibited at the National Academy of New York, and was made a member of that Academy in 1871.

BOUGUEREAU, Adolphe William, a French painter, and Member of the Institute, was born at La Rochelle, Nov. 30, 1835. He began life in a business house at Bordeaux, but obtained permission to attend the drawing school of M. Alaux for two hours a day. His fellow-pupils treated him with contempt on account of his business connections, and when, at the end of the year, he gained the first prize, the excitement was so great that a riot ensued, and a formal protest was made by the pupils against his receiving it, but without effect. He then turned all his attention to painting, and entered the studio of Picot, in Paris, and later entered the École des Beaux Arts, where his progress was rapid. In 1850 he went to Rome, and in 1854 exhibited "The Body of St. Cecilia borne to the Catacombs," since which time he has occupied a leading position among the artists of the Modern French School. His next great work was "Philomela and Procne," 1861. Both these pictures are now in the Luxembourg. "Mater Afflictorum," or "Vierge Consolatrice," 1876, was purchased by the French Government for 12,000 francs. Among his pictures exhibited at the Salon may be mentioned "The Bather," 1870; "Harvest Time," 1872; "The Little Marauders," 1873; "Homer and his Guide," 1874; "Flora and Zephyrus," 1875; "Pietà," 1876; "Youth and Love," 1877; "The Scourging of Our Lord," 1880; "The Virgin with Angels," 1881; "Slave Carrying a Fan," 1882; "The Youth of Bacchus," and "Byblis," 1885; "Love Disarmed," 1886; "Love Victorious," 1887; "Baigneuses," 1888; "Psyche and Love," 1889; "L'Amour Mouillé," 1891. M. Bouguereau executed the mural paintings in the St. Louis Chapel of the Church of St. Clotilde, and in the Church of St. Augustine. Many of his pictures have been engraved by François.

BOULENGER, George Albert, F.R.S., F.Z.S., was born at Brussels on Oct. 19, 1858. In 1882, after having served a short time as Aide-Naturaliste in the Royal Belgian Museum, he was appointed first class Assistant in the Zoological Department of the British Museum, and there took charge of the collections of Reptiles and Fishes. On these groups of animals he has published very numerous memoirs and papers, from 1877 to the present day. He is the author of the British Museum Catalogues of Reptiles (6 vols., 1885-94) and of Batrachians (2 vols., 1882), which are the standard works for the determination of these animals. He is now engaged on a new "Catalogue of Percoid Fishes." Since 1880 he has prepared the annual reports on Reptiles and Fishes for the "Record of Zoological Literature."

BOURGET, Paul, French poet and novelist of the psychological school, was born at Amiens on Sept. 2, 1852. His father, a learned mathematician, was afterwards Rector of the Academies of Aix and Clermont. M. Bourget was educated at Clermont, at the Sainte-Barbe College in Paris, and at the Collège des Hautes Études. In 1872 he began writing for the Renaissance journal, and in 1873 published an article in the Revue des Deux Mondes, characteristically entitled "Le Roman réaliste et le Roman piétiste." His first volume of poems, "La Vie inquiète," appeared in 1874. Among his best known books we may mention:—"Études et Portraits," 1888; "Portraits d'Écrivains;" "Études Anglaises;" "Pastels, dix portraits de femmes," 1889; "Nouveaux Pastels," 1891; and the following novels: "Cruelle Énigme," 1885; "Mensonges," 1887; "Le Disciple," 1889, a study of the scientific and pessimist tendencies of the age; and "Cosmopolis," which contains a study of the present Pope. His poems were published in two volumes in 1885-87. M. Bourget is a traveller, and admires England and the English.

BOWEN, The Right Hon. Sir George Ferguson, G.C.M.G., Hon. D.C.L. and Hon. LL.D., the eldest son of the late Rev. Edward Bowen, born in 1821, was educated at the Charterhouse and Trinity College, Oxford, where he obtained a scholarship in 1840, and graduated B.A. as first class in classics in 1844. In the same year he was elected to a fellowship of Brasenose College, and became a member of Lincoln's Inn. He was Chief Secretary to the Government of the Ionian Islands from 1854 to 1859, and was appointed in that year the first Governor of the new colony of Queensland, in Australia, comprising the north-eastern portion of the Australian Continent. He was appointed, in 1868, Governor of New Zealand; and in May, 1873, Governor of Victoria. He was Governor of Mauritius from 1875 to 1883, when he was appointed Governor of Hong Kong. He retired on his pension in 1887; but, in 1888, he was appointed Royal Commissioner at Malta to make arrangements respecting the new Constitution granted to that island. Sir George is the author of "A Handbook for Travellers in Greece,"—one of Murray's Handbooks; "Mount Athos, Thessaly, and Epirus: a Diary of a Journey from Constantinople to Corfu," 1852; "Ithaca in 1850;" and "Imperial Federation," 1886, &c. A full account of his public services will be found in "Thirty Years of Colonial Government," being a selection from the "Despatches and Letters of the Right Hon. Sir G. F. Bowen, G.C.M.G., Hon. D.C.L. Oxford, Hon. LL.D. Cambridge. Edited by Stanley Lane-Pool." Sir George Bowen is a member of the Governing Bodies of the Imperial Institute and of Charterhouse School, and married, in 1856, the Countess Roma, only surviving daughter of Count Roma, G.C.M.G., then President of the Senate of the Ionian Islands.

BOWER, Frederick Orpen, D.Sc., F.R.S. (1891), F.C.S., F.R.S.Ed., was born on Nov. 4, 1855, at Ripon, Yorkshire. He is the younger son of Abraham Bower, Esq., J.P., of Elmcrofts, Ripon, Yorks. Educated at Ripon Grammar School, Repton School, and Trinity College, Cambridge, he graduated in the first class of the Nat. Sci. Tripos in 1877. Having served as assistant to the Professor of Botany in University College, London, he was appointed first Lecturer in Botany at the Normal School of Science (now Royal College of Science), South Kensington, in 1882, and in 1885 Regius Professor of Botany in the University of Glasgow. He acted as Examiner in the University of London in 1885-89. He has co-operated with Dr. D. H. Scott in translating the "Comparative Anatomy of Phanerogams and Ferns," by De Bary (Clarendon Press, 1884), and with Professor Vines in the production of a "Course of Practical Instruction in Botany," now in its third edition. He is the author of numerous memoirs published by the Roy. Soc., the Linn. Soc., in the Q. J. M. S., and "Annals of Botany."

BOWRING, Edgar Alfred, C.B., a younger son of the late Sir John Bowring, was born in 1826, and educated at University College, London. He entered the Civil Service in the Board of Trade in 1841, and filled in succession the post of private secretary to the Earl of Clarendon, to Earl Granville, and to Lord Stanley of Alderley. He was appointed Précis Writer and Librarian to that department in 1848, and Registrar in 1853, but retired from the service on the abolition of his office at the end of 1863. He acted as Secretary to the Royal Commission for the Great Exhibition of 1851, and held that appointment until his election as M.P. for Exeter at the general election of 1868. His services were so highly appreciated by the late Prince Consort, the President of the Commission, that, immediately after H.R.H.'s decease, her Majesty was pleased to nominate Mr. Bowring a companion of the Order of the Bath, Civil Division. Mr. Bowring lost his seat for Exeter at the general election of Feb., 1874. He is the author of an English poetical version of "The Book of Psalms," English versions of the poetical works of Schiller, Goethe, and Heine, and (jointly with Lord Hobart) of a reply to the "Sophisms of Free Trade," by Mr. Justice Byles. Besides having been a frequent contributor to periodical literature, he is understood to have translated two small volumes of German hymns, selected by the Queen, and privately printed for her Majesty's use, one volume on the death of the Duchess of Kent, and the other on that of Prince Albert.

BOYD, The Rev. Andrew Kennedy Hutchison, D.D. and LL.D., born at Auchinleck, Ayrshire, of which parish his father was incumbent, Nov., 1825, was educated at King's College, London, and at the University of Glasgow, where he obtained the highest honours in philosophy and theology, and was author of several prize essays, taking the degree of B.A. in April, 1846. He was ordained in 1851, and has been incumbent successively of the parishes of Newton-on-Ayr, Kirkpatrick-Irongray, in Galloway, St. Bernard's, Edinburgh, and of the University city of St. Andrews, which he still holds. He first became known as a writer, by papers which appeared in Fraser's Magazine, under the signature of A. K. H. B. Of these, the most important have been reprinted; the best known of these being "The Recreations of a Country Parson" (three series). Dr. Boyd is also the author of many volumes of sermons, under the titles of "The Graver Thoughts of a Country Parson," and "Counsel and Comfort spoken from a City Pulpit," "Present-day Thoughts: Memorials of St. Andrews Sundays," 1870; "Towards the Sunset," 1883; "What Set Him Right," 1885; and "The Best Last," in 1888. He received the degree of D.D. from the University of Edinburgh in 1864, and of LL.D. from the University of St. Andrews in 1889. In May, 1890, he was elected Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. His latest work is "Twenty-five Years of St. Andrews," published in 1892. He is a member of the Middle Temple, and studied for two years for the English Bar.

BOYESEN, Professor Hjalmar Hjorth, was born at Frederiksvaern, Norway, Sept. 23, 1848. He went to the United States in 1869, and became a Professor of Latin and Greek at Urbana University, Ohio. From 1874 to 1880 he was Professor of German at Cornell University; and since 1881 has held a similar position at Columbia College, New York; and is now (1890) Professor of Germanic Languages and Literature. He has published "Tales from Two Hemispheres," 1876; "Gunnar," 1873; "A Norseman's Pilgrimage," 1875; "Goethe and Schiller," 1878; "Falconberg," 1878; "Ilka on the Hill-top," and "Queen Titania," 1881; "Idyls of Norway," 1882; "A Daughter of the Philistines," 1883; "The Story of Norway," 1886; "The Modern Vikings," 1887; "Vagabond Tales," and "The Light of Her Countenance," 1889; "Against Heavy Odds," 1890; "The Mammon of Unrighteousness," 1891; "The Golden Calf," 1892; "Essays on German Literature," 1892; "Boyhood in Norway," 1892; "Social Strugglers," 1893; "A Commentary on the Plays of Henrik Ibsen," 1893; and is also the author of a play, "Alpine Roses," 1883, which ran for 100 nights at the Madison Square Theatre, New York.

BOYLE, The Very Rev. George David, Dean of Salisbury, is the eldest son of the late Right Hon. David Boyle, Lord Justice-General and President of the Court of Session in Scotland, by his second marriage with Camilla Catherine, eldest daughter of the late Mr. David Smythe, of Methven, Perthshire, and was born in 1828. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy, the Charterhouse, and at Exeter College, Oxford (B.A. 1851, M.A. 1853). Between 1853 and 1860 he held in succession curacies in Kidderminster and Hagley. He was incumbent of St. Michael's, Handsworth, from 1861 to 1867, and rural dean of Handsworth, 1866-67. He was appointed vicar of Kidderminster in 1867, and rural dean in 1877, and he was honorary canon of Worcester from 1872 till 1880, when he was appointed Dean of Salisbury. Dean Boyle is the author of "My Aids to the Divine Life," "Richard Baxter," and editor of "Characters and Episodes of the Great Rebellion from Clarendon." He married, in 1861, Mary Christiana, eldest daughter of the late Mr. William Robins, of Hagley, Worcestershire.

BOYS, Charles Vernon, F.R.S., was born at Wing, near Oakham, Rutland, and is the youngest son of the Rev. Charles Boys. Mr. C. V. Boys was educated at Marlborough College and at the Royal School of Mines, of which he is an Associate. He was appointed Demonstrator in 1881, and Assistant-Professor of Physics in 1889, at the Normal School of Science and Royal School of Mines, South Kensington and Jermyn Street. He is the author of several papers published by the Royal Society, the Physical Society, the Royal Institution, and the Society of Arts; of which the more important, or the best known, are on integrating and other calculating machines, on quartz fibres, on the "radio-micrometer," and other instruments for measuring radiant heat, and on the "Cavendish" experiment. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, Officer of Public Instruction of France, Hon. Demonstrator and Librarian of the Physical Society of London, and Member of the Royal Institution, London.

BRACKENBURY, Lieut.-General Henry, C.B., R.A., born at Bolingbroke, Lincolnshire, Sept. 1, 1837, was educated at Tonbridge, Eton, and Woolwich. He was appointed to the Royal Artillery in April, 1856; and served in the suppression of the Indian Mutiny in 1857-58. Subsequently he was appointed to the staff of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, first as officer for discipline, then as Instructor in Artillery, finally as Professor of Military History. He served throughout the Franco-German war as chief representative of the British National Society for aid to sick and wounded in war, received the Iron Cross from the Emperor of Germany, and was made Officer of the Legion of Honour by the French Government, and Knight of the First Class of the Bavarian Order of St. Michael. Being appointed Military Secretary to Sir Garnet Wolseley, he served with him throughout the Ashanti Campaign, 1873-4. He served as a member of a special mission to Natal in 1875; was Assistant Adjutant-General to the Cyprus Expeditionary Force in 1878; and raised and organised the Cyprus Military Police. In 1879 he accompanied Sir G. Wolseley to South Africa as Military Secretary, and later succeeded Sir G. Colley as Chief of the Staff, in which capacity he served throughout the closing operations of the Zulu war and the campaign against Sekukuni. In 1880 he was appointed Private Secretary to the Viceroy of India, and returned to England with the Earl of Lytton, on his resignation. He was Military Attaché to the British Embassy at Paris from Jan., 1881, to May, 1882, when he was appointed Assistant Under-Secretary for Ireland, to deal with all matters relating to police and crime in that country. He resigned the latter post, however, on July 19, 1882. In 1884 he was appointed Deputy Adjutant-General of the Nile Expeditionary Force; and subsequently Brigadier-General and second in command of the River Column of the Expedition. When General Earle was killed during the action of Kirbekan, General Brackenbury assumed command of the Column, and conducted it to near Abu Hamed, whence it was recalled by Lord Wolseley, down the rapids to Korti. He was promoted to be a Major-General, June 15, 1885, for distinguished service in the field, and Lieut.-General, April 1, 1888. He was appointed head of the Intelligence Department of the War Office, 1st Jan., 1886, and retained this position till March, 1891. In 1888 he was appointed a member of a Royal Commission under the Chairmanship of Lord Hartington to inquire into the administration of the Naval and Military Departments of the State. In April, 1891, he was appointed an ordinary member of the Council of the Governor-General of India. He is the author of "Fanti and Ashanti," 1873; "Narrative of the Ashanti War;" "The River Column;" and of several military pamphlets.

BRADDON, The Hon. Sir Edward Nicholas Coventry, son of Henry Braddon of Skirdon Lodge, Cornwall, was born June 11, 1829; educated at private schools and by private tutor, and at the London University; went to India in 1847 to the mercantile house of his cousins, Messrs. Bagshaw and Co. (afterwards Braddon and Co.), Calcutta. After eight years spent in mercantile pursuits he was engaged in civil engineering in charge of an Assistant Engineer's length of the East India Railway, during which time he led a small force of volunteers against the insurgent Santhals; he subsequently served as a volunteer with the 7th N.I. against the rebels, and on the close of the rebellion pursued and captured 14 of the leading Santhals implicated in the murder of several Europeans and natives. As some recognition of these services he received the appointment of Assistant Commissioner in charge of the Deoghur District, Santhal Pergunnahs, Oct., 1857. He served under Sir George Yule as a volunteer against the rebel Sepoys in the Purneah and adjoining districts (Mutiny medal and favourable mention in dispatches). Raised a regiment of Santhals, for which service he was thanked specially by the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal. In April, 1862, Mr. Braddon was promoted to be superintendent of Excise and Stamps, Oudh; subsequently made Inspector-General of Registration, and Superintendent of Trade Statistics in that Province, and during 18 months acted in addition as Revenue Secretary to the Financial Commissioner. Retired from the service, Mr. Braddon made Tasmania his home. He arrived there in May, 1878, and was elected in July, 1879, a member of the House of Assembly for West Devon. That seat he retained through four elections until he left Tasmania as Agent-General. In 1886 he was appointed leader of the Opposition. In 1887 he took office in a new Administration as Minister of Lands and Works and Education. On Oct. 29, 1888, he was appointed Agent-General for Tasmania, but was succeeded in that office by Sir Robert Herbert, K.C.B., in 1893. In 1891 he was made a K.C.M.G. Sir E. Braddon has contributed many articles to reviews, magazines, and newspapers. His one published work, "Life in India," came out in 1870.

BRADDON, Mary Elizabeth. See MAXWELL, MRS. JOHN.

BRADFORD, Col. Sir Edward Ridley Colborne, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., Commissioner of Police in succession to Mr. Munro, is a son of the late Rev. W. M. K. Bradford, rector of West Meon, Hants, by Mary, daughter of the late Rev. H. C. Ridley, and he was born in 1836. He entered the Madras Army in 1853, became lieutenant in 1855, captain in 1865, major in 1873, lieutenant-colonel in 1879, and colonel in 1883. Sir Edward Bradford has the Persian medal, and served with the 14th Light Dragoons in the Persian campaign from Feb. 21 till June 8, 1857; in the Jubbulpore district during 1857, and afterwards in the North-Western Provinces, with General Michel's force in Mayne's Horse against Tantia Topee in 1858. He was present at the general action of Scindwha and the action and pursuit at Karai, and served with General Napier's columns in Mayne's Horse from Dec., 1858, to Sept., 1859, and was present in several actions with the enemy, gaining the medal, and being twice thanked in despatches. The new Commissioner has held the position of General Superintendent of the operations for the suppression of Thuggi and Dacoity, was Resident First Class and Governor-General's Agent for Rajpootana, and has been Chief Commissioner in Ajmere. He has since his return to this country been Secretary of the Political and Secret Department of the India Office. Sir Edward, who was appointed A.D.C. to the Queen in the year 1889, accompanied H.R.H. the late Duke of Clarence and Avondale on his visit to India. He has lost his left arm, the result of an encounter with a tiger some years ago.

BRADLEY, Professor Andrew Cecil, son of the Rev. Charles Bradley, of St. James's, Clapham, was born at Clapham, March 26, 1851. He was educated at Cheltenham College, whence in 1869 he passed as an Exhibitioner to Balliol College, Oxford. Having taken his degree, with a first class in honours, in 1873, he was in the following year elected to a fellowship in Balliol College, and soon afterwards gained the Chancellor's prize for an English Essay. He was elected to a lectureship in philosophy, and continued as a teacher at Balliol until the beginning of 1882, when he became Professor of Modern Literature and History at the newly-founded University College, Liverpool. Here he remained until July, 1889, when, on the resignation of Professor Nichol, he was appointed Regius Professor of English Language and Literature in the University of Glasgow. Besides various literary and philosophical articles and addresses, he is the author of an essay on Aristotle's Conception of the State, published in Mr. Evelyn Abbott's "Hellenica." He is also the editor of the "Prolegomena to Ethics," a work left unfinished by Professor Green, who was his tutor at Oxford.

BRADFORD (Earl of), The Right Hon. Orlando George Charles Bridgeman, was born April 24, 1819, succeeded his father as third earl, March 22, 1865, and married, April 30, 1844, Selina Louisa, youngest daughter of the first Lord Forrester. His Lordship is Captain of the South Salopian Yeomanry Cavalry, has been Vice-Chamberlain to the Queen's Household, and held the office of Lord Chamberlain of the Household under Lord Derby's third Administration, from July, 1866, to 1868. He held the office of Master of the Horse to the Queen from Feb., 1874, to May, 1880 and again under Lord Salisbury's first Administration from June, 1885, to Jan., 1886.

BRADLEY, The Very Rev. George Granville, D.D., LL.D., Dean of Westminster, is one of the sons of the Rev. Charles Bradley, who was for many years vicar of Glasbury, in the county of Brecon, and some time incumbent of St. James's Episcopal Chapel at Clapham, Surrey.

He was born in 1821, and educated under Dr. Arnold at Rugby, from which school he was elected to an open scholarship at University College, Oxford, where he was a favourite pupil of Dean Stanley, who at that time was tutor. He took his bachelor's degree in Easter Term, 1844, as a First Class in Classical Honours, and in 1845 obtained the Chancellor's prize for a Latin essay, his subject being "The Equestrian Order in the Roman Republic." Having been elected to a Fellowship in 1844, he proceeded M.A. in 1847. Mr. Bradley was one of the assistant masters of Rugby School for some years, under Dr. Tait and his successor, Dr. Goulburn, and was elected in 1858 to the Headmastership of Marlborough College, on the preferment of his predecessor, Dr. Cotton, to the bishopric of Calcutta. Mr. Bradley was ordained deacon in 1858 by the Bishop of London, and priest in the same year by the Bishop of Salisbury. In Dec., 1870, he was elected to the mastership of University College, Oxford, in the place of the late Dr. Plumptre. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of St. Andrews, Feb. 25, 1873. He was appointed Examining Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1874; was Select Preacher at Oxford, 1874-75; held the post of Honorary Chaplain to the Queen 1874-75; and of Chaplain in Ordinary 1876-81. In Oct., 1880, he was nominated a member of the Oxford University Commission, in the place of Lord Selborne, resigned. He obtained a canonry in Worcester Cathedral in Feb., 1881; and in Aug. the same year he was appointed by the Crown to the Deanery of Westminster, in succession to the late Dean Stanley. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him at Oxford, Oct. 28, 1881. In 1882 he delivered at Edinburgh a series of lectures, afterwards published under the title of "Recollections of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley," 1883. On the death of Mr. Theodore Walrond, Dr. Bradley undertook the task of preparing for publication the biography of Dean Stanley, which was finally completed by Mr. R. E. Prothero at the close of the year 1893. In 1885 he published a volume of Westminster Abbey Lectures on the Book of Ecclesiastes, and in 1887 a similar volume on the Book of Job. He is also the writer of two books on Latin Prose, which have had a large circulation. Dr. Bradley married, in 1849, Marian Jane, fifth daughter of the Rev. Benjamin Philpot, formerly Rector of Great Cressingham, Norfolk. One of his daughters, Margaret L. Woods, wife of the President of Trinity College, Oxford, is the authoress of "A Village Tragedy," 1887. Another daughter, now Mrs. A. Murray Smith, is the authoress of the "Life of Lady Arabella Stuart," published in 1886, and, with a third sister, of the "Deanery Guide" to Westminster Abbey.

BRADY, Professor George Stewardson, born in 1832, at Gateshead-on-Tyne, was educated at Ackworth School, Yorkshire, Tulketh Hall, Lancashire, and at the University of Durham College of Medicine, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; M.D., and LL.D. (hon.) St. Andrews; F.R.S.; Corresponding Member of the Zoological Society of London, and Academy of Nat. Science, Philadelphia, &c.; Professor of Natural History in the Durham College of Science, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Hon. Physician to the Sunderland Infirmary. His principal published works are as follows:—"A Monograph of the Recent British Ostracoda," in Transactions of the Linnean Society, 1868; "A Monograph of the Post-Tertiary Entomostraca of Scotland and Parts of England and Ireland" (Palæontographical Society, 1874—jointly with H. W. Crosskey and D. Robertson); "A Monograph of the fossil Ostracoda of the Antwerp Crag" (Transactions of the Zoological Society of London, 1875); "A Monograph of the free and semiparasitic Copepoda of the British Islands," 3 vols. (Ray Society, 1877-80); "Report on the Ostracoda of the 'Challenger' Expedition" (1880); "Report on the Copepoda of the 'Challenger' Expedition" (1884); "A Monograph of the Marine and Fresh-water Ostracoda of the North Atlantic and of North-Western Europe: Section 1, Podocopa" (Transactions of the Royal Dublin Society, vol. iv. 1889—jointly with the Rev. Canon Norman, D.C.L.), besides numerous contributions to Medical and Scientific Journals.

BRAHMS, Johannes, musical composer, was born May 7, 1833, at Hamburg, where his father played the double-bass in the orchestra. He received his first instructions in music from his father, and then studied under Eduard Marxsen. Schumann's warm recommendation in the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik (Oct. 28, 1853) called the attention of musicians, of the public, and of the publishers to the young man, who subsequently made slow but constant progress on the road to permanent artistic fame. After several years of activity as director of music at the court of Lippe-Detmold he devoted a considerable period of time to assiduous study and composition in his native town. Thence he proceeded, in 1862, to Vienna, which city became his second home; for although he quitted it after holding for one year the post of director of the Singing Academy (1864), he never felt at ease in the other towns which he visited—Hamburg, Zürich, Baden-Baden—and accordingly, in 1869, he returned to the Austrian capital. He conducted, from 1872 to 1874, the concerts of the Society of Amateur Musicians, until Herbeck, who had in the meantime resigned his post of Court Director of Music, resumed the functions of that office. Brahms then resided for some time away from Vienna, chiefly near Heidelberg, but returned in 1878. Undoubtedly Brahms is entitled to rank among the greatest composers now living. At first he followed the "New German" school which had been inaugurated by Schumann in the journal mentioned, but when the heated judgment of youth had been succeeded by calmer reflection, he inclined more to the classical school, so that now he is criticised by the Bairenther Blatter, and recognised by conservative institutes as a classical composer. In fact he combines in himself the different styles, and may be claimed both by musical progressists and by classicists as belonging to them. Although Brahms attracted public notice in consequence of Schumann's recommendation, the recognition of his genius in wider circles dates only from the year 1868, when his "Deutsches Requiem" (Op. 45) was produced. Among his later works are "Rinaldo," a cantata; "Schicksalslied;" "Triumphlied;" "Rhapsodie" from Goethe's "Hartzreise;" besides string-quartets, symphonies, and a great number of songs, duets, choruses, concertos, motets, trios, sextetts, &c. His songs, in which he mainly follows Schumann's style, have become popular all over the world, as are those compositions in which he embodies Hungarian national melodies. A sonata of his in D minor, Op. 108, for piano and violin, was performed for the first time in London in May, 1882.

BRAMWELL, Sir Frederick Joseph, Bart., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., Past-President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, youngest son of the late George Bramwell, banker, was born in the year 1818. From his earliest boyhood he showed great interest in mechanics, as evinced by his endeavours to repeat, in a rough model, the steam engines and winding machinery which he had seen at the age of nine in use in the construction of the St. Katharine's Dock. In 1834 he was apprenticed to one of the old school of mechanical engineers, John Hague, with whom he served his time, and with whom he continued for a few years as principal draughtsman; then, after a varied experience in the employment of others, in 1853 he began business on his own account as a civil engineer. In 1856 he was elected an Associate of the Institution of Civil Engineers; in 1862 was transferred to full membership of that body; in 1867 was elected a Member of its Council, and in 1884-85 had the honour of filling the position of President, having previously been, in the years 1874-75, President of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers. In 1881, on the formation of the present Ordnance Committee, he was appointed one of the two lay members of that Committee. He has also, in the exercise of his profession, and at the instance of the Government, served on several committees which have been appointed for various purposes. Having been for some years a member of the British Association, he was, in 1872, made President of Section G (Mechanical Section), and was selected to refill this office on the occasion of a visit of the Association to Montreal in 1884, and was elected President of that body for the year commencing with the Bath meeting, Sept., 1888. In 1873 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in the year 1878 served on its Council. Having been a member of the Board of Managers of the Royal Institution for some time, he was, on the retirement of Sir William Bowman, in 1885, appointed to the position of Honorary Secretary of that body. In 1884 he was nominated by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales to the position of Chairman of the Executive Council of the Inventions Exhibition which was held in the following year. On the formation of the City and Guilds of London Institute for the Advancement of Technical Education, he was appointed by the Goldsmiths Company as one of their representatives, being at that time Prime Warden of the Company, and was elected by the Executive Committee of the Institute to be their Chairman. In 1881 he received the honour of knighthood in connection with his services in the promotion of technical education, and, in 1886, the honorary degree of D.C.L. from Oxford. In 1889 he was created a Baronet, and in 1891 was made an honorary LL.D. of Cambridge.

BRAMWELL, John Milne, M.D., born at Perth, N.B., May 11, 1852, is the son of James Paton Bramwell, M.B., of Perth, and was educated at Perth Grammar School, and the University of Edinburgh, where he took the degree M.B. and C.M., 1873. Immediately after graduating, he was appointed surgeon in the Liverpool, Brazil and River Plate Mail S.S. Co., remained a year in the Company, made three voyages to Brazil and River Plate, then settled in Goole as partner with Malcolm Morris (now Lecturer on Skin Diseases, St. Mary's Hospital, London); subsequently he was appointed Assistant-Surgeon at the Perth City Infirmary. He has recently devoted much study to Hypnotism, to which his attention was first drawn by seeing, when a child, hypnotic experiments performed by his father. He read Dr. Gregory's book on the subject, and a translation from the German book by Reichenbach, and never lost interest in the subject; but he commenced its serious study not many years ago, and has read all important Continental literature bearing upon it. In 1890 he visited Nancy, and observed the methods employed there, and at La Salpétrière at Paris. Their methods of inducing hypnosis differ. He combined the two methods, and found the result far more successful than that obtained by either of the French Schools, and pushed hypnotic practice more boldly after returning from France, and has treated many cases. On March 28, 1890, he gave to medical men at Leeds demonstration of hypnotism as an Anæsthetic, a report of which was published in The Lancet and The British Medical Journal of April 5, 1890. Mr. Bramwell's publications are:—"Extractions under Hypnotism;" The Journal of the British Dental Association, March 15, 1890; an article in Health on Hypnotism, May 16, 1890; "Successful Treatment of Dipsomania, Insomnia, &c. &c., and Various Diseases by Hypnotic Suggestion," 1890-92; and "Alterations in the Special Senses and Induction of Anæsthesia for Operative Purposes by Suggestion in the apparently Waking State," 1892. He has been for some time engaged in writing a book on "Hypnotism," in which the statistics, &c., differ widely from any hitherto published.

BRANDES, George, a Danish author of Jewish family, was born at Copenhagen, Feb. 4, 1842. He studied in the University of his native city, 1859-64, applying himself first to Jurisprudence and then to philosophy and æsthetics. In 1862 he gained the gold medal of the University by an essay on "Fatalism among the Ancients," and afterwards passed the examination for his degree with the highest distinction. As soon as he had graduated he left Denmark and spent several years in different countries on the Continent. He was at Stockholm in 1865; passed the winter of 1866-67 at Paris; was in Germany in 1868; and in France and Italy in 1870-71. He published "Dualismeni von nyeste Filosofi" ("The Dualism of the Philosophy of the Present Time") in 1866, with reference to the relations between science and faith—a work which exposed him to violent attacks from the orthodox party; "Æsthetic Studies," 1868; "Criticisms and Portraits," 1870; and "French Æsthetics at the Present Day," 1870. On returning from his travels he became a private tutor in the University of Copenhagen, and delivered the series of lectures which were published at Copenhagen in 5 vols., 1872-82, under the title of "Hovedströmninger i det 19 Aarhundredes literatur" ("The Great Literary Currents of the Nineteenth Century"), and were subsequently translated into German by himself. He has given Danish translations of John Stuart Mill's essay on the "Subjection of Women," 1869, and his "Utilitarianism," 1872; and edited "Sören Kierkegaard," 1877; and "Danske Digtere" (Danish Poets), 1877. In Oct., 1877, Brandes left Denmark and settled in Berlin, where he diligently studied and made himself master of the German language. At Berlin he composed the biographies "Esajas Tegnér" and "Benjamin d'Israeli," both published in 1878. In the spring of the year 1883 he returned to Denmark, his fellow-countrymen having guaranteed him an income of 4,000 crowns for ten years, with the single stipulation that he should deliver public lectures on literature at Copenhagen. He has further published "Ferdinand Lassalle," 1881; "Men and Works," 1883; "The Men of the modern Literary Revival," 1883; "Ludwig Holberg," 1884; "Berlin," 1885; "Impressions of Poland," 1888; "Impressions of Russia," 1888; and 2 volumes of "Essays," 1889. English translations of his works, edited in England and America, are "Lord Beaconsfield," 1880; "Eminent Authors of the Nineteenth Century," 1886; and "Impressions of Russia," 1889.

BRANDIS, Sir Dietrich, Ph.D., K.C.I.E., F.R.S., son of Dr. Christian August Brandis, Professor of Philosophy at the University of Bonn, by Caroline, daughter of Bernhard Housmann, of Hanover, was born at Bonn on March 31, 1824. He was educated at the high school (gymnasium) of Bonn, and from 1837 to 1839, while in Athens (where his father had been called to assist in organizing the University), was educated by Dr. Ernst Curtius, now Professor at Berlin. He studied at the Universities of Copenhagen, Göttingen, and Bonn; took his degree as Doctor of Philosophy at Bonn in 1848, was lecturer of Botany at that University from 1849 to 1855; was appointed by Lord Dalhousie, then Governor-General of India, Superintendent of Forests in Pegu, which appointment he gained in January, 1856. The charge of the Forests of Tenasserim and Martaban was added in 1857. On the amalgamation of the provinces he was appointed Superintendent of Forests in British Burmah. In November, 1862, Dr. Brandis was called to Calcutta to organize Forest administration in the provinces immediately under the Government of India, and in 1864 he was appointed Inspector-General of Forests to the Government of India. On several occasions he was deputed to assist in the organization of Forest business in the minor Presidencies, viz.: to Sind in 1868, to Bombay in 1870, and to Madras in 1881. While on furlough to recruit his health, Dr. Brandis published (in 1874) a Forest Flora of North-West and Central India. In 1878 he founded the Indian Forest School at Dèhra Dün, in North-West India, for the education of natives of India for the post of forest rangers. In 1883 he retired from the service. Of his numerous official publications the most important are a "Report on the Attaran Forests," published at Calcutta in 1861, and a "Report on the Forest Administration in the Madras Presidency," published at Madras in 1883. In 1878 Dr. Brandis was created a Companion of the Indian Empire, and in 1887 the honour of a Knight Commander of the same Order was conferred upon him. In 1874 Dr. Brandis was made an Honorary Member of the Scottish Arboricultural Society, and in 1875 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. Of the numerous papers contributed by him to scientific periodicals may be mentioned: "On the Distribution of Forests in India," "Ocean Highways," 1872; "Progress of Forestry in India," "Transactions," Scottish Arboricultural Society, 1884; "Regen und Wald in Indien," Deutsche Meteorologische Zeitschrift, October, 1887.

BRASSEY, (Lord) Thomas, K.C.B., first Baron, son of Thomas Brassey, the well-known contractor for public works, was born at Stafford in 1836, and educated at Rugby and University College, Oxford, graduating in honours in the Modern Law and History School. He was elected for Devonport in 1865, has represented Hastings from 1868 to 1886, and was appointed Civil Lord of the Admiralty in 1880, and Secretary to the Admiralty in 1884. He is the author of "Work and Wages," "Lectures on the Labour Question," "English Work and Foreign Wages," "British Seamen," "The British Navy," in 5 volumes, and "The Naval Annual," a serial publication, commenced in 1886. He has published numerous pamphlets on political, economical, and naval questions. Lord Brassey began his career in Parliament by seconding a motion by Mr. Thomas Hughes in 1869 for an inquiry into the Labour Laws. In 1871 he began the first of a series of speeches on Naval Administration. The subjects dealt with have included the defence of the commercial harbours, the organization of the Comptroller's Department of the Admiralty and of the Dockyards, the principal reform advocated being a more decentralized management. In treating of ship-building policy, the objections to extreme dimensions have been strongly urged. The question of the Naval Reserves was brought forward by Lord Brassey in Parliament on several occasions, and he succeeded in obtaining the consent of the Admiralty to the enrolment of a second class reserve, for which the fishing population would be eligible. The present strength of the force is 10,000. He also took an active part in establishing the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers. Lord Brassey moved for a select committee on the Euphrates Valley Railway in 1871, and for a Royal Commission on Marine Insurance in 1875. In 1879 he seconded Mr. Chaplin's motion for the appointment of a Royal Commission on Agriculture. In 1874-5 he served on the Royal Commission on Unseaworthy Ships, in 1885 he was appointed a member of the Commission on the Defence of Coaling Stations, and in 1893-4 he acted as the President of the Royal Commission on Opium, which held its inquiry in India and Burmah. As a yachtsman, Lord Brassey has made many distant voyages. In 1876-7 he went round the world in the "Sunbeam." In 1884 he visited the West Indies, and in 1886-7, India, Australia, and the Cape. A series of letters by him on the state of the defences of the coaling stations on the route to Australia by the Suez Canal, and to India by the Cape of Good Hope, was published in the Times. He was the first yachtsman who obtained a Board of Trade certificate for competency to navigate as master. The late Lady Brassey was the author of the well-known work, "Voyage of the 'Sunbeam,'" and other popular books of travel. She died at sea, Oct. 14, 1887. At the general election of 1886 Lord Brassey withdrew from Hastings and offered himself as a Gladstonian Liberal for one of the divisions of Liverpool. He was defeated, and on the resignation of Mr. Gladstone's Government he was raised to the peerage. Lord Brassey has taken an active part in the organization of the Imperial Federation League. He introduced the deputation to Lord Salisbury at whose instance the convening of the Colonial Conference of 1887 was considered by the Government. On Sept. 8, 1890, Lord Brassey married the Hon. Sybil de Vere Capell, youngest daughter of the Viscountess Malden, and sister of the present Earl of Essex.

BREAL, Michel Jules Alfred, a French philologist, was born at Landau, Bavaria, of French parentage, March 26, 1832. He received his early education in France, and studied Sanskrit at Berlin, under Professor Weber. Returning to Paris, he joined the staff at the Bibliothèque Impériale, and in 1862 obtained the Academy's prize for his "L'Étude des Origines de la Religion Zoroastrienne." In 1864 he was made Professor of Comparative Grammar at the College of France. M. Bréal was elected a Member of the Institute Dec. 3, 1875, and made Director at the Ecole des Hautes Etudes. In 1879 he was appointed Inspector-General of Public Instruction for high-class teachers. Among his works are: "Hercule et Cacus, Étude de Mythologie comparée," 1863; translation of the "Grammaire comparée des Langues Indo-Européennes," 1867-72; "Quelques Mots sur l'Instruction publique en France," 1872; "L'Enseignement de la Langue Française," 1878; "Excursions pédagogiques," 1880; "La Réforme de l'orthographie Française," 1890.

BREITMANN, Hans. See LELAND, CHARLES GODFREY.

BRETT, Hon. Reginald Baliol, was born in London June 30, 1852, and is the eldest son of Lord Esher, Master of the Rolls. He was educated at Cheam School, in Surrey, and at Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1874, and took his M.A. degree in 1877. At the end of that year he was appointed Private Secretary to the Marquis of Hartington, then the leader of the Liberal party. At the general election in 1880, Mr. Brett was returned to Parliament for Falmouth, defeating Sir Julius Vogel, the late Prime Minister of New Zealand. Mr. Brett continued for a time to act as unpaid secretary to the Marquis of Hartington, who was appointed Secretary of State for India in Mr. Gladstone's Government. At the general election of 1885, Mr. Brett contested Plymouth, and was defeated by Sir Edward Clarke, M.P. Mr. Brett is the author of "Footprints of Statesmen," and of many articles on historical and political subjects in the Fortnightly Review and the Nineteenth Century. He has also written letters to the Times which have attracted attention. In Sept., 1879, he married Eleanor, the youngest daughter of M. Sylvain Van de Weyer, one of the founders of Belgian independence, a member of the Provisional Government of 1830, and for many years subsequently Belgian Minister at the Court of St. James.

BREWER, The Rev. E. Cobham, LL.D., second son of John Sherren Brewer, Esq., "A Man of Kent," was born May 2, 1810, in Russell Square, London, and educated by private tutors. He proceeded to Trinity Hall, Cambridge, in 1832, obtained the Freshmen's Prizes for Latin and English Essays, and took his degree in the Civil Law, First Class, in 1835. He was ordained deacon in 1834, priest in 1836, proceeded to the degree of LL.D. in 1840, and devoted himself to literature. In 1850 was published his "Guide to Science," which soon attained a large circulation, and was translated by himself into French. Dr. Brewer has published also a "Dictionary of Phrase and Fable" (25th edition, 1894); "Reader's Handbook" (12th edition, 1888); "Theology in Science," "History (political and literary) of France" (8th edition, 1893); "History (political and literary) of Germany," 1881; "Dictionary of Miracles," 1884; "Historic Note Book," 1890; about thirty educational books, and a number of pamphlets under various pseudonyms.

BRIALMONT, General Alexis Henri, a Belgian military engineer, and writer on military subjects, son of General Laurent Mathieu Brialmont, was born at Venloo, in the province of Limburg, May 25, 1821. He quitted the military school at Brussels with the rank of sub-lieutenant in 1843. Being connected, as an engineer officer, with the management of the fortifications, he was appointed to carry out the works at the fortress of Diest. From 1847 to 1850 he was private secretary to General Chazal, then Minister of War. In 1855 he left the corps of engineers and became a member of the staff, attaining to the rank of Captain in 1857. In due course he became Major-General, and in 1877

Lieutenant-General. He was appointed Inspector-General of Fortifications and of the Sappers and Miners in Belgium in 1875. Lieut.-General Brialmont has written many works on military history and tactics. The following are the principal:—"Éloge de la Guerre, ou réfutation des doctrines des Amis de la Paix," 1 vol. in 12mo, 1849; "Précis d'Art militaire," 4 vols. in 12mo, 1850; "Considérations politiques et militaires sur la Belgique," 3 vols. in 8vo, 1851-52; "Histoire du Duc de Wellington," 3 vols. in 8vo, 1856; "Agrandissement général d'Anvers," 1 vol. in 8vo, with atlas, 1858; "Complément de l'Œuvre de 1830," 1 vol. in 8vo, 1860; "Études sur la Défense des États et sur la Fortification," 3 vols. in 8vo, with atlas, 1863; "Études sur l'Organisation des Armées," 1 vol. in 8vo, 1867; "Traité de Fortification polygonale," 2 vols. gr. 8vo, with atlas, 1869; "La Fortification à fossés secs," 2 vols. gr. in 8vo, with atlas, 1872; "La Fortification improvisée," 1 vol. in 12mo, 1870; "Études sur la Fortification des Capitales et l'investissement des Camps retranchés," 1 vol. gr. in 8vo, 1873; "La Défense des États et les Camps retranchés," 1 vol. in 8vo, 1876; "La Fortification du champ de bataille," 1 vol. gr. in 8vo, with atlas, 1879; "Manuel de Fortification de Campagne," 1 vol. in 8vo, 1879; "Étude sur les Formations de Combat de l'Infanterie, l'attaque et la défense des positions retranchés," 1 vol. in 8vo, 1880; "Tactique des trois Armées," 2 vols. in 8vo. with atlas, 1881; "Situation militaire de la Belgique, travaux de défense de la Meuse," 1 vol. in 8vo, 1882; "Le général Todleben, sa vie et ses travaux," 1 vol. in 12mo, 1884; "La Fortification du temps présent," 2 vols. gr. in 8vo, with atlas, 1885; "Influence du Tir plongeant et des Obus-torpilles sur la Fortification," 1 vol. gr. in 8vo, with atlas, 1888; "Les régions fortifiées," 1 vol. gr. in 8vo, with atlas, 1890; and forty pamphlets on political and military subjects, published from 1846-90. General Brialmont made the principal fortifications of Antwerp in 1858; the fortifications of Bucharest in 1883, as well as those of Liège, and of Namur in 1887.

BRIDGE, John Frederick, Mus.D., Organist at Westminster Abbey, was born Dec. 5, 1844, at Oldbury, Worcestershire, educated at Rochester Cathedral School, under John Hopkins, and afterwards became a pupil of Sir John Goss. He was appointed Organist of Holy Trinity Church, Windsor, in 1865; of Manchester Cathedral in 1869; Professor of Harmony at Owens College, Manchester, in 1871; Permanent Deputy Organist of Westminster Abbey in 1875; and succeeded to the full offices of Master of the Choristers and Organist in 1882. He is also Professor of Harmony and Counterpoint at the Royal College of Music. Dr. Bridge has composed the oratorio "Mount Moriah;" a cantata "Boadicea;" "Hymn to the Creator" (the song of St. Francis), produced at the Worcester Festival, 1884; "Rock of Ages" (Latin translated by Mr. Gladstone), produced at the Birmingham Festival, 1885; "Callirhoë" at the Birmingham Festival, 1889; church music and part songs. He is the author of theoretical works on Counterpoint, Double Counterpoint, and Canon, and "Organ Accompaniment"—all published in Novello's series of Primers. He was appointed Gresham Professor of Music in 1891. His last work is a Primer, entitled "Musical Gestures," which is a new system of teaching the rudiments of music by Manual Exercises. He wrote an oratorio for the Worcester Festival of 1890, and has composed "The Incheape Rock" and other works for various societies.

BRIDGMAN, Frederic Arthur, figure painter, was born at Tuskegee, Alabama, Nov. 10, 1847. His father died when he was three years of age, and when ten his mother took him North, and he lived for a few years in Massachusetts. He then entered the American Bank Note Company (New York) to learn engraving, residing at Brooklyn, where he studied painting in evening art-schools. Although he made rapid progress as an engraver, he preferred to adopt painting as his art, and so resigned his position in the Bank Note Company; and in 1866, assisted by friends, went to Paris, where he studied under Gérôme in the École des Beaux-Arts for three years. From 1866 to 1871 he spent some time in Brittany. In 1871 he passed six months in London, and the next two years in the Pyrenees, on the Spanish border. The winter of 1872-73 was passed in Algiers, and that of 1873-74 in Egypt, Nubia, and on the Nile. In 1877 he received a medal in the Paris Salon, and also one at the International Exhibition of 1878. Soon after he was made a Member of the Legion of Honour. An exhibition of his works was held at New York in 1881, and again in the spring of 1890. For twenty years pictures by him have appeared at nearly every exhibition of the Royal Academy, London. "Winters in Algeria," written and illustrated by him, appeared in 1889.

BRIGGS, Charles Augustus, D.D., was born in New York City, Jan. 15, 1841. He was educated at the University of Virginia (1857-60), and at the Union Theological Seminary, New York City (1861-63), studying afterwards at the University of Berlin under Dorner and Rödiger (1866-69). From 1870 to 1874 he was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Rosselle, N.J., and since 1874 he has held a Professorship at the Union Theological Seminary. On his transferral in 1891 from the chair of Hebrew and Cognate Languages to that of Biblical Theology he made an Address on "Authority of Holy Scripture" that provoked considerable controversy on the inerrancy of the Bible, and ultimately (in 1893) caused his suspension by the American Presbyterian Church from the ministry. He retains his Professorship, however, as the trustees and faculty of the seminary have sustained him in the controversy. His principal publications, in addition to contributions to periodicals, are:—"Biblical Study" (1883); "American Presbyterianism" (1885); "Messianic Prophecy" (1886); "Whither?" (1889); "Biblical History" (1890); and "Authority of Holy Scripture" (1891). He was one of the translators of the Commentaries on the Psalms and Ezra in the "American Lange Series."

BRIGHT, Jacob, M.P., son of the late Mr. Jacob Bright and brother of the late Right Hon. John Bright, was born in 1821 and educated at the Friends' School, York. He sat for Manchester from 1867 to 1874, and again from 1876 to November, 1885, when he was defeated; he was returned in 1886, and again in 1892, for the South-West Division of Manchester. Mr. Jacob Bright has identified himself with the chief Radical movements of his time, and has for many years been in favour of Home Rule for Ireland. He obtained the Municipal vote for women in 1869, and has always supported their efforts to obtain the Parliamentary vote. In 1883 he succeeded in preventing the ratification of a treaty which proposed to give both banks of the Congo to Portugal. Mr. Gladstone then made the unprecedented promise that the treaty should not be ratified without the consent of the House of Commons. Nothing more was heard of the treaty, and shortly afterwards freedom of commerce on the Congo was secured by the African Conference at Berlin. Mr. Jacob Bright is a director of the Manchester Ship Canal.

BRIGHT, The Rev. William, D.D., was born at Doncaster, Dec. 14, 1824. From Rugby School he was elected scholar of University College, Oxford, where he graduated in the first class in classics in 1846. The next year he was elected a fellow of his college, and gained the Johnson Theological Scholarship and the Ellerton Theological Prize, and in 1849 he proceeded M.A. Applying himself to the study of divinity, he was ordained deacon in 1848, and priest in 1850, and in the succeeding year became theological tutor in Trinity College, Glenalmond. He returned to Oxford in 1859, and was afterwards appointed tutor of University College. He was promoted in 1868 to the Regius Professorship of Ecclesiastical History, and to the canonry of Christ Church, which is attached to that chair. The University conferred upon him the degree of D.D. in 1869. He became Proctor for the Chapter in Convocation in 1878, and on subsequent occasions, and was Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Lincoln 1885-1893. Dr. Bright's works are:—"Ancient Collects selected from various Rituals," 1857, 1867; "A History of the Church, from the Edict of Milan to the Council of Chalcedon," 1860, 1888; "Select Sermons of St. Leo on the Incarnation, with his 'Tome,' translated with notes," 1862, 1886; "Faith and Life: Readings from Ancient Writers," 1864, 1866. In 1865 he published, in collaboration with the Rev. P. G. Medd, M.A., a Latin version of the Book of Common Prayer; "Hymns and other Verses," 1866 and 1874; reprints of "Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History," "St. Athanasius's Orations against the Arians," "Socrates' Ecclesiastical History;" "Select Anti-Pelasgian Treatises of St. Augustine," and "St. Athanasius's Historical Writings," with introductions, in 1872, 1873, 1878, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883, 1893; "Chapters of Early English Church History," 1878, 1888; "Later Treatises of St. Athanasius, translated, with Notes and Appendix," in the "Library of the Fathers," 1881; "Notes on the Canons of the First Four General Councils," 1882, 1892; "Private Prayers for a Week," 1882; "Family Prayers for a Week," 1885; "Iona, and Other Verses," 1886; "Addresses on the Seven Sayings from the Cross," 1887; "The Incarnation as a Motive Power," 1889, 1891; "Lessons from the Lives of Three Great Fathers," 1890-91; "Morality in Doctrine," 1892; "Waymarks in Church History," 1894.

BRISSON, Eugène Henri, a French politician, born July 31, 1835, at Bourges, is the son of a lawyer in that city, studied law in Paris, and entered the profession in 1859. He wrote for the Temps and the Avenir National, and established in 1868, in conjunction with MM. Lacour and Allain-Targé, the Revue Politique. As a democratic candidate at the elections in 1869 he was unsuccessful in obtaining a seat in the Corps Législatif, but after the Revolution of Sept. 4, 1870, he was appointed Deputy Mayor of Paris by the Government for the National Defence. This position he resigned on Oct. 3. On Feb. 8, 1871, he was elected as representative of the Seine in the Assembly, and submitted a proposition of amnesty for all political crimes. At the General Elections in February, 1876, he was elected for the 10th arrondissement of Paris, and followed in the new Chamber the same political line. He was one of the 363 deputies who refused a vote of confidence to the Broglie Cabinet. At the opening of the session of 1879 M. Brisson was elected Vice-President, and was named President of the Budget Commission on Feb. 27 of the same year. He succeeded M. Gambetta as President of the Chamber Nov. 3, 1881, and was re-elected in 1883. He accepted the office of Prime Minister on the fall of M. Ferry in 1885, but after a few months gave place to M. de Freycinet. At the elections of September, 1889, he was the only Republican candidate elected in Paris, "au premier tour du scrutin." In the autumn of 1890 he put forward proposals for compelling religious bodies to pay up considerable arrears due from them under the new laws relating to church property. These proposals caused considerable discussion in the newspapers. In 1892 he brought forward a plan for completely reorganizing the French naval forces, but the Naval Budget Committee refused to support him against the existing Ministry. He was one of the candidates for the Presidency of the French Republic in June, 1894, and stood second in the poll, receiving 195 votes to M. Casimir-Périer's 451.

BROADHURST, Henry, M.P., son of a journeyman stonemason, was born at Littlemore, near Oxford, in 1840, and received some education at a village school there. He worked as a journeyman stonemason up to the year 1872, when he became Secretary of the Labour Representation League. In 1875 he was appointed Secretary of the Parliamentary Committee of the Trades Union Congress. During the agitation on the Eastern Question he took a leading part in the organization of meetings, &c., in support of Mr. Gladstone's policy. He was elected Member of Parliament for Stoke-on-Trent in 1880; was a member of the Royal Commission on Reformatories and Industrial Schools in 1881-2; served on the Royal Commission on the Housing of the Working Classes in 1884-5; and at the general election of 1885 he was returned for the Bordesley Division of Birmingham. In February, 1886, he was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in Mr. Gladstone's Ministry. At the general election of 1886 he successfully stood for West Nottingham, but was not re-elected in 1892. He took a leading part in the passing of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and many other measures affecting the industrial classes. He is the author of the Leasehold Enfranchisement Bill, and during the sessions of 1884-5 he had charge of the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill. He is also a prominent advocate of Old Age Pensions. He was elected Member of Parliament for Leicester in 1894, on the occasion of the double vacancy caused by the retirement of Sir T. Whitehead and Mr. T. A. Picton.

BROCK, Thos., R.A., sculptor, was born in 1847, at Worcester, where his father was a decorator. He was educated first at the Government School of Design in that city, then came to London and studied at the Royal Academy, where he obtained both silver and gold Medals. He became a pupil and afterwards an assistant of the late J. H. Foley, the sculptor. After Mr. Foley's death he completed the numerous works left unfinished by him, the chief of these being the O'Connell monument in Dublin. Among Mr. Brock's ideal works may be mentioned "Salmacis," "Hercules Strangling Antæus," statuettes of Paris and Œnone, and a large equestrian group, "A Moment of Peril," purchased for the nation by the Royal Academy. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1889 "The Genius of Poetry." Among portrait statues may be named Richard Baxter, Robert Raikes, Sir Rowland Hill, Sir Richard Temple, Sir Erasmus Wilson, and the poet Longfellow (the latter for the Westminster Abbey Memorial). He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy Jan. 16, 1883.

BRODRICK, The Hon. George Charles, LL.B., D.C.L., Warden of Merton College, Oxford, is the second son of the late Viscount Midleton, formerly Dean of Exeter, and was born at Castle Rising, Norfolk, May 5, 1831. He was educated at Eton School, and at Balliol College, Oxford, taking his degree in 1854, and being elected a Fellow of Merton College in 1855. He obtained a double first-class at Oxford, as well as the English Essay Prize and the Arnold Historical Prize. He also carried off, in 1858, the Law Scholarship at the University of London, where he took the degree of LL.B. In 1885 he was created D.C.L. of Oxford by a University decree. He was called to the Bar from Lincoln's Inn in 1859, and for some years practised as a barrister on the Western circuit. In conjunction with Mr. Fremantle, he edited in 1865 "The Ecclesiastical Judgments of the Privy Council." In 1877 Mr. Brodrick was unanimously elected by the School Board for London to fill a death vacancy, being the first member so elected. He long served on the Council of the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching, and he is a member of the governing body of Eton College. He took an active part in promoting the University Tests Act, and other measures academical, and generally of educational interest. In February, 1881, he was elected Warden of Merton College in the place of the late Dr. Bullock-Marsham. Mr. Brodrick is known to have contributed largely, but for the most part anonymously, to the daily Press and leading periodicals. A selection of articles published under his own name, together with two more elaborate treatises on "Primogeniture" and "Local Government," and other occasional essays, were republished in a volume entitled "Political Studies" in 1880. In the following year he published a work entitled "English Land and English Landlords," being an inquiry into the origin, structure, and proposed reform of the English Land system; and he afterwards discussed the Irish Land question, and the claim of Tenant-right for British farmers, in three articles which appeared in Fraser's Magazine for 1881-2. Mr. Brodrick is also the author of articles on "The Progress of Democracy in England," and "Democracy and Socialism," which appeared in the Nineteenth Century during 1883 and 1884. His latest contributions to literature are mainly connected with academical history, including a volume entitled "Memorials of Merton College," a compendious "History of the University of Oxford," and several papers on kindred subjects.

BRODRICK, Hon. William St. John Fremantle, M.P., eldest son of Viscount Midleton, and nephew of the Hon. G. C. Brodrick, Warden of Merton College, was born in 1856 and educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. 1879, and M.A. 1882. He was also President of the Oxford Union Debating Society. He represented West Surrey in the parliaments of 1880-85, and after the passing of the Redistribution Act successfully stood for the Guildford Division of the county, which he still represents. He served on the Royal Commission on Prisons in Ireland, 1883-1885. In Lord Salisbury's second Administration, 1886-1892, Mr. Brodrick was appointed Financial Secretary to the War Office. He married Lady Hilda Charteris, third daughter of the Earl of Wemyss.

BROGLIE, Charles Jacques Victor Albert, Duc de, eldest son of the eminent French statesman Achille Charles Léonce Victor, Duc de Broglie (who died Jan. 25, 1870), was born in Paris June 13, 1821. He was educated in the University of Paris, where, at an early age, he gained a high reputation as a publicist, and became one of the editors of the Correspondant, in which journal he defended Roman Catholic interests and the doctrines of moderate constitutional liberalism. He was elected a member of the French Academy in 1862. He was secretary of the French embassies in Madrid and Rome, prior to the revolution of 1848; he then retired from public life, in consequence of his political opinions, until February, 1871, when he was elected Deputy for the department of the Eure, and nominated by M. Thiers's Government French Ambassador in London. On his retirement from the ambassadorship, he, as the acknowledged leader of the Conservative party in the National Assembly, moved the order of the day which led to the resignation of M. Thiers and the acceptance by Marshal MacMahon of the Presidency of the Republic, April 24, 1873. The Duc de Broglie then became Minister of Foreign Affairs and President of the Council; and for more than a year he directed the policy of the new Government, but having undertaken the project of a new Constitution, including the establishment of a Grand Council or Second Chamber, which was to be invested with the power of dissolving the Assembly, he was defeated on a question of procedure, and resigned with his Ministry, May 16, 1874. At the elections of Jan. 30, 1876, M. de Broglie was elected a Senator by the department of the Eure: his term of office expired in 1885, when he was not re-elected. On May 17, 1877, he succeeded M. Jules Simon as President of the Council of Ministers, Keeper of the Seals and Minister of Justice, which posts he resigned in December of the same year after the elections had given a large majority to the Republican party. As a writer, the Duc de Broglie is well known by a translation of Leibnitz's "Religious System," 1846; his "Etudes Morales et Littéraires," 1853; "L'Église et l'Empire Romain au Quatrième Siècle," 6 vols., 1856, a work which passed through five editions; "Une Réforme administrative en Algérie," 1860; "Questions de Religion et d'Histoire," 1860; "La Souveraineté Pontificale et la Liberté," 1861; "La Liberté Divine et la Liberté Humaine," 1865; "Le Secret du Roi: Correspondance Secrète de Louis XV. avec ses Agents Diplomatiques," 2 vols., 1878; "Frédéric II. et Marie Thérèse," 1882; "Frédéric II. et Louis XV., d'après des documents nouveaux," 1885; "Marie Thérèse Impératrice," 2 vols., 1887; "Mémoires de Talleyrand" (vols. I.-IV., 1891); and "La Société de l'Abbaye de Saint-Germain des Près au XVIII. Siècle" (2 vols., 1891).

BROOKE, The Rev. Augustus Stopford, born in Dublin in 1832, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he gained the Downe prize and the Vice-Chancellor's prize for English verse. He graduated B.A. in 1856 and M.A. in 1858. He was curate of St. Matthew, Marylebone (1857-59); curate of Kensington (1860-63); minister of St. James's Chapel, York Street, St. James's Square (1866-75); and became minister of Bedford Chapel, Bloomsbury, June, 1876. He was appointed a Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen in 1872. Mr. Brooke is the author of "Life and Letters of the late Frederick W. Robertson," 1865; "Theology in the English Poets," 1874; "Primer of English Literature;" and four volumes of "Sermons," 1868-77; "The Early Life of Jesus;" a volume of poems, 1888; a "History of English Poetry," and a study of Tennyson, 1894. In 1880 he seceded from the Church of England, his reason for this step being that he had ceased to believe that miracles were credible, and that, since the Established Church founded its whole scheme of doctrine on the miracle of the Incarnation, disbelief in that miracle put him outside the doctrines of the Church of England. Mr. Brooke has joined the Unitarian Church, and officiates at Bedford Chapel, Bloomsbury.

BROOME, Sir Frederick Napier, K.C.M.G., son of the late Rev. F. Broome, rector of Kenley, Shropshire, was born in Canada in 1842, educated at Whitchurch Grammar School in the above county, and emigrated to Canterbury, New Zealand, in 1857. Visiting England in 1864, he married Mary Anne, relict of the late Sir George Barker, R.A., K.C.B. [q. v.], and returned to his "sheep station" in New Zealand the following year, but in 1869 he came back to England. Almost immediately on his arrival in London, Mr. Broome was employed by the Times, and was for five years a general contributor, reviewer, and art-critic to that journal, which he represented in Russia at the marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh, and on many other important occasions. He has contributed prose and verse to the Cornhill, Macmillan, and other magazines, and has published two volumes of poetry, "Poems from New Zealand," 1868, and "The Stranger of Seriphos," 1869. In 1870 Mr. Broome was appointed Secretary to the Fund for the Completion of St. Paul's Cathedral; in 1873, Secretary to the Royal Commission on Unseaworthy Ships; in 1875 Colonial Secretary of Natal, to which Colony he proceeded as a member of Lord (then Sir Garnet) Wolseley's special mission, and in 1877, Colonial Secretary of the Island of Mauritius. He was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the latter colony in 1880; and Governor of Western Australia in 1882. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of SS. Michael and George in 1877, and a Knight Commander in 1884. In 1885 Sir Frederick visited England, and read before the Royal Colonial Institute a paper on Western Australia, which attracted much notice. For the first time on such an occasion at the Institute, H.R.H. The Prince of Wales took the chair, and a very large and distinguished audience was present. In 1890, Sir Frederick again came to England to give evidence upon the Western Australia Constitution Bill before the House of Commons. The mission, undertaken at the request of the Legislature of the Colony, concluded Sir Frederick's seven years of office in that Government. During this period the Colony had been greatly advanced by his exertions, and the departure of Lady Broome and himself from Western Australia was the occasion of a remarkable manifestation of the esteem and affection of the Colonists. In 1891 Sir Frederick was appointed Governor of Trinidad.

BROOME, Mary Ann, Lady (formerly Lady Barker, under which name most of her books were published), is the eldest daughter of the late W. G. Stewart, Esq., Island Secretary of Jamaica, in which island she was born. Sent to England at two years old, she returned to Jamaica in 1850. In 1852 she married Captain (afterwards Colonel) G. R. Barker, Royal Artillery, who distinguished himself very highly in the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny, and was made K.C.B. for services in the field. Lady Barker went to India to join Sir George in 1860, but he died that year, and she returned to England. In 1865 Lady Barker married Mr. Frederick Napier Broome, [q. v.] then of Canterbury, New Zealand, and accompanied him back to the Middle Island. In 1869 Mr. Napier Broome and his wife returned to England. "Station Life in New Zealand," from her pen, was published in that year, and its success encouraged the author to write, in the following year, a small volume for children called "Stories About." This second work was soon followed by "A Christmas Cake in Four Quarters," "Spring Comedies," "Travelling About," "Holiday Stories," "Ribbon Stories," "Sybil's Book," "Station Amusements in New Zealand," "Boys," "The White Rat," &c., besides many articles for magazines. In 1874 she published also a little book called "First Principles of Cooking," of which the circulation has been large; and almost immediately after its appearance she accepted the post of Lady Superintendent of the National Training School of Cookery, South Kensington. She was also for some years editor of Evening Hours, a family magazine. Mr. Napier Broome having entered the Colonial service in 1875, her next experiences were of South Africa and Mauritius. Her life in the former country is described in "A Year's Housekeeping in South Africa," 1877. In 1883, her husband having been appointed Governor of Western Australia, she went to that Colony, which is described in her last published book, "Letters to England," 1885. On leaving Western Australia in 1890, Lady Broome received an affectionate farewell from the people of the colony, by whom she was greatly beloved. She now (1894) resides in Trinidad, of which island her husband, now Sir Frederick Broome, has been Governor since 1891.

BROUGH, Lionel, comedian, was born at Pontypool, Monmouthshire, March 10, 1836, being the fourth son of Mr. Barnabas Brough, and a younger brother of the well-known comic authors, "The Brothers Brough." His first employment was in the capacity of office-boy to Mr. J. Timbs, in the Illustrated London News office, in Douglas Jerrold's time. Subsequently he published the first number of the Daily Telegraph, and for five years he was connected with the Morning Star. Going to Liverpool with other members of the Savage Club to give amateur theatrical performances in aid of the Lancashire Relief Fund, he achieved so decided a histrionic success that he was offered a regular engagement by Mr. A. Henderson, and accordingly made his first professional appearance at the Prince of Wales's Theatre at Liverpool in 1864. His first appearance in London was at the Queen's Theatre in 1867. Mr. Brough was manager of Covent Garden Theatre for Mr. Dion Boucicault during the season in which "Babil and Bijou" was produced. He afterwards became, for a short time, joint lessee of the Novelty Theatre, Great Queen Street. For the last 30 years he has played a round of the principal "low comedy" parts in almost every important theatre in London and the provinces; in comic opera, farce, burlesque, plays, &c., and particularly in most of the "Old Comedy" revivals. It is on record that he has played Tony Lumpkin in "She Stoops to Conquer," 776 times. He has also played in America, and some years ago played a répertoire of thirty-eight pieces through all the principal towns in South Africa. One of his latest performances was at the Comedy Theatre, as Dr. Barlow in Burnand's musical "skit," "Sandford and Merton."

BROUGHTON, Miss Rhoda, a popular English novelist, is the daughter of a clergyman, and was born Nov. 29th, 1840, in North Wales. Her principal works are:—"Cometh Up as a Flower," 1867; "Not Wisely, but Too Well," 1867; "Red as a Rose is She," 1870; "Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye," 1872; "Nancy," 1873; "Tales for Christmas Eve," 1873 (republished in 1879 under the title of "Twilight Stories"); "Joan," 1876; "Second Thoughts," 1880; "Belinda," 1883; and "Doctor Cupid," 1886. More recently she has published "Alas," 1890 (2nd edit. 1891); "Mrs. Bligh," 1892; and "A Beginner," 1894.

BROWN, Pisistratus. See BLACK, WILLIAM.

BROWN, Sir Alexander Crum, M.A., M.D. (Edin.), D.Sc. (Lond.), Hon. LL.D. (Aberd.), F.R.S., F.R.S.E., F.R.C.P.E., F.C.S., F.I.C., son of the Rev. John Brown, D.D., of Broughton Place Church, was born in Edinburgh on March 26, 1838. He was educated at the Edinburgh High School and at Mill Hill, and at the Universities of Edinburgh, Heidelburg, and Marburg. In 1863 he was appointed Lecturer and in 1869 Professor of Chemistry in the University of Edinburgh, and in 1891 was elected President of the Chemical Society of London. He retired from this latter position in 1893. He is the author of many papers in scientific journals, and in the publications of learned societies.

BROWN, John George, N.A., American figure painter, was born at Durham, England, Nov. 11, 1831. He began his art studies at the age of eighteen, at first at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and afterwards spent a year at the Edinburgh Royal Academy. Removing to America in 1853, he entered the schools of the National Academy of Design in New York, and in 1856 opened a studio in Brooklyn, where he remained until 1860, when he transferred his studio to New York City. He was made an Academician in 1863, and was one of the founders of the Water-Colour Society, of which for the past seven years he has been President. He has twice (1880 and 1885) exhibited at the London Royal Academy, and has received several medals and honourable mention in Paris. Eight of his pictures were exhibited at the Chicago Exposition in 1893. Among his more important productions are: "His First Cigar," "Curling in Central Park," "The 'Longshoreman's Noon," "Tough Customers," "The Thrilling Moment," "The Passing Show," "The Dress Parade," "The Three (Scape) Graces," "Left his Money on the Piano," "The Lost Child," "The Transit of Venus," "A Merry Air and a Sad Heart," "Clear the Track!" "The Dog Show," "A Collection of Antiques," "As Good as New!" "The Old Folks at Home," "Plotting Mischief," "Under the Weather," "The Wounded Playfellow," "A Jolly Lot," "The Monopolist," "Day Dreams," "You're a Nice Pup," and "Watching the Clouds."

BROWN, Robert ("Campsterianus"), M.A., Ph.D., F.L.S., &c., is the only son of Thomas Brown, Esq., of Campster, Caithness, where he was born, March 23, 1842. After being educated privately, he studied in the University of Edinburgh, where he gained several medals and other prizes, and in later years in the scientific schools and universities of Leyden, Copenhagen, and Rostock, receiving from the latter the degree of Phil. Doc. (summa cum laude), his thesis being "Species Thujæ et Libocedri quæ in America-Septentrionale gignuntur." In 1861 he visited Jan Mayen, Spitzbergen, Greenland, and the western shore of Baffin's Bay, discovering the now universally admitted cause of the discoloration of the Arctic Ocean, and numerous other scientific facts. Between 1863-66 he travelled for scientific purposes in many of the least-known parts of America, and some of the Pacific Islands, from the West Indies and Venezuela to Alaska and Behring Sea Coast, as Botanist of the British Columbia Expedition and Commander of the Vancouver Island Exploring Expedition, during which he introduced various new plants into Europe, and charted all the interior of Vancouver, then unknown. His researches are recorded in numerous memoirs and volumes in English, German, and Danish. In 1867 he visited Greenland, making, with E. Whymper, the first attempt by Englishmen to penetrate the inland ice, and formed those theoretical conclusions regarding its nature afterwards confirmed by Nansen and Peary. Since then Dr. Brown has travelled extensively in the Barbary States of North Africa, and has been Lecturer on Geology, Botany, or Zoology in the Royal High School, Edinburgh, and Heriot Watt College (School of Arts), Edinburgh, the Mechanics' Institution, Glasgow, and elsewhere. He is an honorary or ordinary member of many learned societies in this country, in America, and on the Continent, and has been President of the Royal Physical Society, Vice-President of the Botanical Society, and President of the Naturalists' Club, Edinburgh; and was in 1890 elected Vice-President of the Institute of Journalists. Among other new species discovered by him his name has been attached, by different English and foreign naturalists and geographers, to Aralia Browniana (fossil), Verrucaria Campsteriana, and Lecidea Campsteriana, and to Brown's Range, Mount Brown, and Brown's River in Vancouver Island, and to Cape Brown in Spitzbergen, and Brown's Island, north of Nova Zembla. In 1876 he removed to London, in order to devote himself entirely to literary work. He is the author wholly or conjointly of about 30 volumes, and of a large number of scientific memoirs, and of nearly 4,000 articles and reviews in various languages. A list of his Arctic memoirs are contained in Chavanne, Karpf, and Le Monnier's "Die Literatur über die Polar-Regionen," 1878; and, up to 1880, in Lauridsen's "Bibliographia Groenlandica," 1890. His separate works are chiefly geographical, ethnological, and natural history. The principal of these are: "Peoples of the World," 6 vols.; "Countries of the World," 6 vols.; "Manual of Botany;" "Our Earth," 3 vols.; "Science for All," 5 vols; "Africa," 4 vols.; and, in conjunction with Sir L. Playfair, a "Bibliography of Morocco." He is at present, 1894, engaged in editing "Leo Africanus" for the Hakluyt Society, and has annotated "Pellow's Adventures in Morocco."

BROWN, Robert, Jun., F.S.A., born at Barton-upon-Humber, July 6, 1844, was educated at Cheltenham College, and is known as a writer on archaic religion, mythology, and astronomy. His works are "Poseidôn; a Link between Semite, Hamite, and Aryan," 1872; "The Great Dionysiak Myth," 2 vols., 1877-8; "The Religion of Zoroaster, considered in connection with Archaic Monotheism," 1879; "The Religion and Mythology of the Aryans of Northern Europe," 1880; "Language, and Theories of its Origin," 1881; "The Unicorn," 1881; "The Law of Kosmic Order," 1882; "Eridanus: River and Constellation," 1883; "The Mythe of Kirkê," 1883; "The Phainomena or 'Heavenly Display' of Aratos: Done into English Verse," 1885; "A Trilogy of the Life to Come," and other poems, 1887; "The Etruscan Inscriptions of Lemnos," 1888; "The Etruscan Numerals," 1889; "Remarks on the Tablet of the Thirty Stars, or Babylonian Lunar Zodiac," 1890.

BROWN, Tom. See HUGHES, THOMAS.

BROWN, The Rev. William Haig, LL.D., born at Bromley, Middlesex, in 1823, was educated at Pembroke College, Cambridge, where he graduated in high honours in 1846, proceeding M.A. in 1849, and LL.D. in 1864. Having held for some time a fellowship and tutorship in his college and a temporary mastership at Harrow, he became, in 1857, Head Master of the Grammar School at Kensington, in connection with King's College, London, and was elected Head Master of Charterhouse School in 1863, on the retirement of the Rev. R. Elwyn. Under Dr. Haig Brown's mastership this famous school was moved from its old home in the heart of London to the hills above Godalming. In 1869 Dr. Brown published "Sertum Carthusianum floribus trium seculorum contextum. Curâ Gulielmi Haig Brown, Scholæ Carthusianæ Archididascali," and in 1879 a history of Charterhouse, called "Charterhouse Past and Present."

BROWNE, Professor, The Rev. George Forrest, B.D., son of George Browne, Proctor of the Ecclesiastical Court of York, and Anne, daughter of the Rev. R. Forrest, Precentor of York Minster, was born at York, Dec. 4, 1833, and educated at St. Peter's School, York, and Catharine Hall, Cambridge, graduating in 1856. He was Mathematical Master at Glenalmond, 1857; ordained Deacon, 1858; Priest, 1859, by the Bishop of Oxford; and appointed Theological Tutor and Bell Lecturer in Ecclesiastical History in the Episcopal Church of Scotland, 1862; Fellow and Lecturer of St. Catharine's, Cambridge, 1863. He vacated his Fellowship on his marriage with Mary Louisa, eldest daughter of Sir J. Stewart Richardson, Bart., of Pitfour Castle, Perthshire, and was rector of Ashley, 1869-74; Proctor of the University, 1869-71, 1876-8, 1879-81; Secretary of the University Commission, 1877-81; is a member of the Council of the Senate (1874-90), the General Board of Studies, and various Boards and Syndicates. He has been Secretary of the Cambridge Local Examinations since 1869, and of Local Lectures since 1877, and editor of the official University Reporter, Statuta, Ordinances, Endowments, &c. He has been University Preacher on various occasions, is a Magistrate for the Borough of Cambridge, an Alderman of the County Council for Cambridgeshire, and a member of the Governing body of Selwyn College. As a member of the Alpine Club, Mr. Browne published in the Cornhill Magazine various papers on Alpine Expeditions; on "Subterranean Ice," in Fraser, &c., and a book on "The Ice Caves of France and Switzerland," 1864. He published "University Sermons," in 1879, 1880, and 1888; "The Venerable Bede," 1880; and since 1881 has published a number of papers on "English Sculptured Stones of pre-Norman Type." He was Disney Professor of Archæology in the University of Cambridge from 1888 to 1893. Professor Browne's chief claim to public notice lies in his work as the principal organiser of the Cambridge Local Examinations.

BROWNE, Sir J. Crichton. See CRICHTON-BROWNE.

BROWNE, General Sir Samuel James, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., V.C., was born in 1824, and entered the Bengal Staff Corps as an officer in the 46th Bengal Native Infantry, Dec. 22, 1840; became Lieutenant, Oct. 26, 1844; Captain, Feb. 10, 1855; Brevet Major, July 20, 1858; Major, Feb. 18, 1861; Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, April 26, 1859; Lieut.-Colonel, Dec. 22, 1866; Brevet Colonel, Nov. 17, 1864; Major-General, Feb. 6, 1870; Lieut.-General, Oct. 1, 1877; General, Dec. 1, 1888. Sir Samuel James Browne served throughout the Punjaub Campaign of 1848-49, and was present at the passage of the Chenab, the actions of Ramnuggar, Sadvolapore, Chillianwallah, and Goojerat (medal with two clasps); was in command of the Punjaub Cavalry and Corps of Guides; served on the Derajat and Peshawur frontier from 1850 to 1869, including operations against Oomurzaie Wuzeerees in 1851-52; the Bozdar Belooch Expedition in March 1857; the attacks on Narinjee (Eusofzai border) in July and Aug., 1857; and in various minor skirmishes (medal with clasp); was in command of the 2nd Punjaub Cavalry during the Indian Mutiny Campaign of 1858, including the siege and capture of Lucknow (Brevet of Major), actions of Koorsee, Rooyah, and Allygunge, and capture of Bareilly. He commanded a field force of cavalry and infantry in the attack and defeat of the enemy in their position at Seerpoorah, and capture of their guns and camp (several times mentioned in despatches, and thanked by the Commander-in-Chief, and by Government, Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel, C.B., Victoria Cross, and medal with clasp). He received the V.C. "for having, at Seerpoorah, in an engagement with the rebel forces under Khan Alie Khan, on Aug. 31, 1858, whilst advancing upon the enemy's position at daybreak, pushed on, with one orderly sowar, upon a 9-pounder gun that was commanding one of the approaches to the enemy's position, and attacked the gunners, thereby preventing them from reloading and firing upon the infantry, who were advancing to the attack. In doing this a personal conflict ensued, in which Major Browne, Commandant of the 2nd Punjaub Cavalry, received a severe sword-cut wound on the left knee, and shortly afterwards another sword-cut wound, which severed the left arm at the shoulder, not, however, before he had succeeded in cutting down one of his assailants. The gun was eventually captured by the infantry, and the gunner slain." In 1876 he was made K.C.S.I., and in the Afghan war of 1878-79 he commanded the 1st Division Peshawur Valley Field Force in the attack and capture of the Fort of Ali Musjid; the forcing of the Khyber Pass in Nov., 1878, and subsequent operations till the end of the campaign (received the thanks of the Government of India, and of both Houses of Parliament, K.C.B., medal with clasp).

BROWNE, John Hutton Balfour, Q.C., brother of Sir James Crichton-Browne, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., was born Sept. 13, 1845, at Crichton House, Dumfries, Scotland. His father was Dr. W. A. F. Browne, F.R.S., at that time Medical Superintendent of the Crichton Royal Institution, Dumfries, but afterwards Commissioner in Lunacy for Scotland. His mother was a daughter of Dr. Andrew Balfour, of Edinburgh, a sister of J. H. Balfour, Professor of Botany in the University of Edinburgh, and also connected with Dr. Hutton, the geologist, whose work on "The Theory of the Earth" made an epoch in the history of geology. He was educated at the Dumfries Academy, and the University of Edinburgh, where he obtained high distinction in Philosophy and in Literature. He was for several years President of the Speculative Society, and at one time intended to become a Scotch advocate. In 1868 he began to read for the English Bar, and was "called" to the Bar by the Middle Temple in June, 1870. He went the Midland Circuit. In 1870 he published a work on the "Medical Jurisprudence of Insanity." In 1874, having written and published a work on the "Law of Carriers," he was appointed Registrar and Secretary to the Railway Commission, which appointment he held until 1881. He published in 1874 a work on "The Law of Rating," and afterwards several other legal works. In 1880 he published a well-known work on the "Law of Railways." He went to the Parliamentary Bar in 1874, and was made a Queen's Counsel in 1885. He has been engaged for the promotors in all the Bills for the formation of a Ship Canal to Manchester; is, perhaps, the leading authority on Gas and Water Bills, and conducted, as leader, the case of the Traders against all the Railway Companies, in 1889-90, in England, Scotland, and Ireland, before the Board of Trade in settling the Classification of Articles, and the Schedule of Rates, under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888. He is a Justice of the Peace for the county of Dumfries. In 1870 and 1871 he wrote and published several works of fiction, which were fairly popular; one, "For Very Life," was published first in the St. James's Magazine, and was praised by Lord Beaconsfield, at that time Mr. Disraeli; another, "Men were Deceivers Ever," was dedicated to Carlyle, who was a countryman, almost a townsman, of the author; another, "Sir Edward's Wife," went through several editions.

BROWNE, The Venerable Robert William, M.A., Ph.D., F.G.S., the eldest son of William Browne, Esq., of Kennington, Surrey, born Nov. 12, 1809; was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, whence he was elected Scholar and Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, and graduated B.A. in 1831, taking double first-class honours. Having been Tutor of his college, Curate of St. Michael's, and Select Preacher in the University, he was appointed, in 1835, to the Professorship of Classical Literature in King's College, London; and in 1836 to the Assistant Preachership of Lincoln's Inn. In 1843 he was made Chaplain to the Bishop of Lichfield; in 1844 Senior Chaplain to the Forces in London; in 1845 a Prebendary of St. Paul's; in 1854 Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Bath and Wells; in 1860 Archdeacon of Bath, and Rector of Weston-super-Mare; and in 1863 Canon of Wells. He resigned the rectory of Weston-super-Mare in 1876, in which year he was elected an honorary Fellow of King's College, London. Archdeacon Browne is the author of "Histories of Greece and Rome" in Gleig's School Series, and of two elaborate "Histories of Greek and Roman Literature," for which the degree of Ph.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Heidelberg. He translated the Ethics of Aristotle, with an introductory essay and notes, for Bohn's Classical Series, and is the author of several smaller works and sermons. He is married to the eldest daughter of the late Rev. Sir Charles Hardinge, Bart., niece of the late Viscount Hardinge, G.C.B.

BRUCE, Hon. Sir Gainsford, K.B., Q.C., D.C.L., eldest son of the Rev. J. Collingwood Bruce, LL.D., D.C.L., F.S.A., of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, by Charlotte, daughter of T. Gainsford Bruce, Esq., of Gerrard's Cross, Bucks, was born in 1834, and educated at Glasgow University. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1859, and joined the Northern Circuit in the same year. In 1883 he became a Q.C., and in 1887 a Bencher. He was Solicitor-General for the County Palatine of Durham from 1879 to 1886, Attorney-General from 1886 to 1887, and Temporal Chancellor from 1887 to 1892, when he was appointed a Judge of the High Court of Justice (Queen's Bench Division), and received the honour of knighthood. He was for fifteen years Recorder of Bradford, and is a J.P. for the county of Durham. In April, 1880, he unsuccessfully contested Gateshead, and afterwards stood for three northern constituencies without being returned, but in Nov., 1888, he was elected for the Holborn Division of Finsbury, and sat till July, 1892, as a Conservative. He is part-author of "Williams and Bruce's Admiralty Practice" and of "Maude and Pollock on Shipping." In 1868 he married Sophia, daughter of Francis Jackson, Esq., of Chertsey.

BRUCE, Sir Charles, K.C.M.G., of Arnot Kinross, of which county he is a Deputy-Lieutenant, is the son of the late Thomas Bruce, Esq., of Arnot, and was born in 1837, and educated at Harrow. He is the author of "Die Geschichte von Nala und Damayanti," a critical revision of the Sanscrit text, published by the Imperial Academy of St. Petersburg, 1862, and of other Sanscrit and Vedic studies. He published in 1863 a translation of "Nala und Damayanti" in English verse; in 1865, "The Story of Queen Guinivere, and Other Poems." He was appointed Assistant-Librarian at the British Museum in 1863; Professor of Sanscrit, King's College, 1865; Rector of the Royal College, Mauritius, 1868; Director of Public Instruction, Ceylon, 1878; was President of the Ceylon Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society; appointed Colonial Secretary of Mauritius, 1882; Lieut.-Governor and Government Secretary of British Guiana, 1885; and has on several occasions administered the Government of Mauritius and British Guiana. He was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Windward Islands 1893. In 1889 he was made a K.C.M.G.

BRUCE-JOY, Albert, R.H.A., F.R.G.S., sculptor, was born in Dublin in 1842, and is the son of the late Dr. W. Bruce-Joy. He was sent, at the age of nine, to Dr. Becker's school at Offenbach, near Frankfort, and continued his education in Paris under a private tutor, Dr. Hill, and at King's College, London. At the age of 17 he went to the South Kensington Schools of Art, and in 1862 became a pupil for four years of the Irish sculptor, Foley. In 1863 he entered the Royal Academy Schools, and in 1866 went to Rome and studied art for three years. In 1866 he first exhibited at the Royal Academy, since which date he has been a large and constant contributor to its exhibitions. In 1885, at the Antwerp Exhibition, he represented Great Britain on the International Jury for Fine Arts. As a sculptor he has chiefly produced colossal statues. Of these the principal are a statue of Mr. John Laird, 1877; the Harvey Tercentenary Statue at Folkestone, 1879; the Graves Statue at the Royal College of Physicians, Dublin, 1877; the statue of Lord Chief Justice Whiteside in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin; that of Mr. Gladstone in front of Bow Church; that of Mr. John Bright in the New Art Gallery at Birmingham, and that of Lord Frederick Cavendish at Barrow-in-Furness. He has also executed memorials of Admiral Sir E. Codrington (of Navarino) in St. Paul's; of Dean Daunt in Dublin; and of Mr. Pratt at Harrow, besides many busts in marble and terra-cotta of celebrities past and present. His bust of the Hon. Chauncey Depew is now just finished in the marble, and will be sent to New York. Mr. Bruce-Joy has travelled much in the States, and has executed a monument in Lowell.

BRUCH, Max, musical composer, was born at Cologne, Jan. 6, 1838, and received his first musical instruction from his mother (née Almenräder), who was a highly-esteemed teacher of music, and who often in her young days sang at the Rhenish musical festivals. At the age of eleven Bruch attempted compositions on a large scale, and at the age of fourteen he had already brought out a symphony at Cologne. From 1853 to 1857 he held the Mozart scholarship at Frankfort o/M., and in that capacity he was a special pupil of Ferdinand Hiller (then Conductor of the Cologne concerts and Director of the Cologne Conservatorium) in the theory of music and composition; and of Karl Reinecke (till 1854), and of Ferdinand Breunnung in playing the piano. After a short stay in Leipzig, he resided from 1858 to 1861 as musical teacher at Cologne, and was assiduous in composing. On the death of his father, in 1861, he set out on an extensive tour of study, which, after brief stays at Berlin, Leipzig, Vienna, Dresden, and Munich, ended at Mannheim, where his opera "Lorelei" (after the text written by Geibel for Mendelssohn) was produced in 1863. At Mannheim, also, between 1862 and 1864 he wrote the chorus-works, "Frithjof," "Römischer Triumphgesang," "Gesang der heiligen drei Könige," and "Flucht der heiligen Familie." In 1864-5 he was again on his travels, visiting Hamburg, Hanover, Dresden, Breslau, Munich, Brussels, and Paris. Then he brought out his "Frithjof" with success at Aix-la-Chapelle, Leipzig, and Vienna. From 1865 to 1867 he was musical director at Coblentz, and from 1867 to 1870 Director of the Court Orchestra at Sondershausen. At Coblentz he wrote, among other things, his well-known First Concerto for the Violin, and at Sondershausen two symphonies and portions of a Mass. The opera "Hermione," which was produced in 1872 in Berlin, where Bruch resided from 1871 to 1873, had only a succès d'estime. The choral work, or secular cantata, "Odysseus," likewise belongs to the period of the composer's residence at Berlin. After he had been five years (1873-78) at Bonn, devoting his time exclusively to composing "Arminius," "The Lay of the Bell," and his Second Concerto for the Violin, and after he had paid two visits to this country for the purpose of producing some of his works, he became, in 1878, on the resignation of Stockhausen, Director of Stern's Singing Academy at Berlin; and in 1880 he was nominated to succeed Sir Julius Benedict as Director of the Philharmonic Society at Liverpool. In 1881 he married the vocalist, Miss Tuczek, of Berlin.

BRUNET-DESBAINES, Louis Alfred, French painter and engraver, is the son of a distinguished architect, and was born at Havre on Nov. 5th, 1845. He followed the artistic courses of M. Pils and M. Lalaune, and then devoted himself to painting. Among his works are many architectural paintings, some water-colours, and copies of the great masters, including Constable, Corot, and Turner. Among his best-known engravings are "Nine Aquatint Engravings, after Turner," 1877; "Daphnis and Chloé" after Français; "Chill October," after Millais, 1884; "Parting Days," after Leader, 1887. M. Brunet-Desbaines gained a medal of the first class in 1886, and a gold medal at the Paris Exhibition of 1889.

BRUNTON, Thomas Lauder, M.D., F.R.S., was born in Roxburghshire in 1844, and educated at Edinburgh University, where he graduated M.D. and D.Sc., obtaining honours and a gold medal for his thesis "On Digitalis," and the Baxter Scholarship in Natural Science. In 1867 he made some observations on the pathology of angina pectoris, which, together with the knowledge he possessed of the physiological action of nitrate of amyl, led him to the successful application of the drug to the treatment of the disease. This application affords one of the earliest and best marked instances of rational as distinguished from empirical therapeutics. After spending about three years in foreign travel and study, he was appointed Lecturer on Materia Medica at the Middlesex Hospital, London, in 1870, and in the following year he was appointed to St. Bartholomew's Hospital. In 1874 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1886 he was appointed a member of the commission to report upon the treatment of hydrophobia, and went to Paris to examine Pasteur's system. In 1889 he was deputed by the Lancet to represent it, at the invitation of the Nizam's Government, on the second commission appointed at Hyderabad, to investigate the action of chloroform. He wrote the section on Digestion, Secretion and Animal Chemistry in Sanderson's "Handbook for the Physiological Laboratory," which was the first text-book of practical physiology published in this country. In conjunction with Sir Joseph Fayrer he investigated the action of snake poison, and discovered that life could be greatly prolonged, though not ultimately saved, by the use of artificial respiration. His work has been chiefly directed to ascertaining the action of drugs with a view to their application in disease; and he has published, alone or in conjunction with others, numerous papers on this subject, as well as the Goulstonian lectures on "Pharmacology and Therapeutics," in 1877; the Croonian lectures at the Royal College of Physicians in 1889 on "The Connection between Chemical Structure and Physiological Action;" and a text-book in which he has treated the action of drugs from a physiological point of view.

BRYCE, Right Hon. James, D.C.L., M.P., F.R.S., the son of James Bryce, LL.D., of Glasgow, and Margaret, eldest daughter of James Young, Esq., of Abbeyville, co. Antrim, was born at Belfast, May 10th, 1838, and educated at the High School and University of Glasgow, and at Trinity College, Oxford (of which he was a scholar), graduating B.A., 1862, with a double first class. He obtained various University prizes, and proceeded to study for a time at Heidelberg. He was elected Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, 1862, and became a barrister at Lincoln's Inn in 1867, practising for some years. In 1870 he was appointed Regius Professor of Civil Law in Oxford University, a post which he resigned in 1893, and in 1880 was elected Liberal member for the Tower Hamlets. He was Assistant-Commissioner to the Schools Inquiry Commission, 1865-6, and in 1881 served on the Royal Commission on the Medical Acts. He is hon. LL.D. of Glasgow and Edinburgh University, and Corresponding Member of the Institute of France. In 1885 he was elected member for South Aberdeen, and was appointed Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in Mr. Gladstone's Government in 1886. He was one of the chief supporters of the Home Rule Bill, and after the dissolution was returned unopposed for South Aberdeen in 1886. In 1892 he was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with a seat in Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet, and in 1894 succeeded Mr. Mundella as President of the Board of Trade. Mr. Bryce's literary works are: "The Holy Roman Empire" (1st edit. 1864, 9th edit. 1888; translated into German, 1873; do. into Italian, 1886; do. into French, 1889); "The Trade Marks Registration Acts, 1875 and 1876, with Introduction and Notes," 1877; "Transcaucasia and Ararat, a narrative of a Journey in Asiatic Russia in the autumn of 1876, with an account of the author's ascent of Mount Ararat" (1877, 3rd edit. 1878); numerous articles in magazines mostly political, historical, or geographical, including descriptions of Iceland, and of the highlands of Hungary and Poland; "Two Centuries of Irish History" (1888), edited by him, with an Introductory Chapter; "The American Commonwealth" (1888, 2nd edit. 1889). He has been active on various political and social subjects, such as the Abolition of University Tests, the Protection of the Christian Subjects of the Sultan, and the Extension of the Frontiers of Greece, the Preservation of Commons and Open Spaces, the Reform of Endowments, the Revision and Consolidation of the Statute Law, the Establishment of a Universal International Copyright, and the Creation of a Teaching University in London, and he has carried Acts for the Reform of City Parochial Charities and for the amendment of the Law of Guardianship (known as the "Infants Bill"), and the International and Colonial Copyright Act, 1886. Mr. Bryce married, in 1889, Elizabeth Marion, daughter of Thomas Ashton, Esq., of Ford Bank, Didsbury, near Manchester, ex-Sheriff of Lancashire.

BUCHAN, Alexander, M.A., LL.D., born at Kinnesswood, in Kinross-shire, on April 11, 1829, is the son of Alexander Buchan and Janet Hill. He was educated at the Free Church Training College, Edinburgh, and at the Edinburgh University, where he graduated as Master of Arts. He was engaged as a public teacher till Christmas, 1860, when he was appointed Secretary of the Scottish Meteorological Society. He is the author of "The Handy Book of Meteorology," 1867, 2nd edit. 1868; and "Introductory Text Book of Meteorology," 1871; the article "Meteorology" in the last edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica;" "Report on Atmospheric Circulation," being one of the reports of the "Challenger" expedition; besides numerous Monograms in the Publications of the Learned Societies at Home and Abroad, including "The Mean Pressure and Prevailing Winds of the Globe;" "Weather and Health of London;" "Climatology of the British Isles," &c. He is M.A. Edinburgh University; LL.D. Glasgow University; Curator of the Library and Museum of the Royal Society, Edinburgh; Member of Meteorological Council; Foreign Member of the Royal Society of Sciences of Upsala; Honorary Member of the Philosophical Society, Manchester; Corresponding Member of the Philosophical Society, Glasgow; Corresponding Member of the Philosophical Society, Emden; Honorary Member of the Meteorological Societies of Austria, Germany, Algiers, Mauritius, &c.

BUCHANAN, Sir George, M.D. Lond., LL.D. Ed., F.R.S., the elder son of the late George Adam Buchanan, was born in London in the thirties. He was educated at University College School, and afterwards at University College, London, of which college he was subsequently elected a Fellow. He graduated B.A. and M.D. at the University of London, obtaining the University Scholarships in Medicine and Surgery. Later he was elected a Fellow and Censor of the Royal College of Physicians, an Examiner by the Universities of London and Cambridge and by the Conjoint Board of the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons, a Fellow of the Royal Society, and a Doctor of Laws of the University of Edinburgh. He held at different times the Presidentship of the Medical Society of London, of the Society of Medical Officers of Health, and of the Epidemiological Society, and he is at the present time a Fellow of the Royal Medico-Chirurgical and Medical Societies, a Member of the Pathological and Clinical Societies, a Vice-President of the Society of Medical Officers of Health and of the Epidemiological Society, and a Corresponding Member of the Royal Society of Hygiene of Italy and of the Royal Society of Public Medicine of Belgium. Sir George Buchanan practised for some years as a physician in London, holding the appointments of Physician to the London Fever Hospital, to which he is now Consulting Physician; Physician to the Hospital for Sick Children in Great Ormond Street, and Medical Officer of Health of St. Giles. At this time he was employed by the Privy Council to make inquiry into outbreaks of infectious disease in different parts of the country, and into the conditions of various communities as to vaccination, and in 1862 he inquired into and reported on the health of the distressed operatives in Lancashire during the cotton famine. Whilst an inspector he published reports on the results gained in various parts of England by Public Health Works; on the distribution of phthisis as affected by dampness of soil, and on the means of preventing excrement nuisances. He also reported on many outbreaks of disease, such as those of typhoid fever at Caius College, Cambridge, at Guildford, and at Croydon. He entered the service of the Local Government Board when this Board was constituted in 1870, eventually becoming Medical Officer to the same. He held this appointment for twelve years. On his retirement from office in 1891 he received the honour of knighthood, and his friends instituted a gold medal, commemorative of his work, to be awarded triennially by the Royal Society for distinguished services in public health. In addition to numerous reports written by him when Medical Officer of the Local Government Board, he has published in a collected form his "Lettsonian Lectures on the Lung Diseases of Children" (1867), besides an article on Typhus in Reynolds's "System of Medicine," and "English Hospitals in their Sanitary Aspects" (1875).

BUCHANAN, Robert Williams, writer in verse and prose, born Aug., 1841, was educated at the High School and the University of Glasgow. His first work, "Undertones," appeared in 1860, and was followed by "Idyls and Legends of Inverburn" in 1865, and "London Poems" in 1866. Mr. Buchanan edited "Wayside Posies," and translated the Danish Ballads in 1866. Then followed "North Coast Poems," 1867; "Napoleon Fallen: a Lyrical Drama," 1871; "The Land of Lorne; including the Cruise of the Tern to the outer Hebrides," 1871; "The Drama of Kings," 1871; "The Fleshy School of Poetry," an attack on the poems of Mr. D. G. Rossetti and Mr. Swinburne, 1872; and "Master Spirits," 1873. Many years ago, his tragedy of "The Witchfinder" was brought out at Sadler's Wells Theatre; and a comedy by him, in three acts, entitled "A Madcap Prince," was acted at the Haymarket in Aug., 1874. He has also contributed to the stage "A Nine Days' Queen," in which his sister-in-law, Miss Harriet Jay, the novelist, first appeared as an actress; and dramatic versions of "The Queen of Connaught" and "Paul Clifford." In 1869 Mr. Buchanan gave, in the Hanover Square Rooms, a series of "Readings" of selections from his own poetical works. A collected edition of his poems was published in 3 vols., 1874. In 1876 Mr. Buchanan published his first novel, "The Shadow of the Sword," which has been since followed by "A Child of Nature," 1879; "God and the Man," 1881; and "The Martyrdom of Madeline," a novel, 1882. A new volume of poems, entitled "Ballads of Life, Love, and Humour," and a "Selection" from his various poems, were issued simultaneously in 1882. His novel, "Love Me for Ever," appeared in 1883, and his comedy, "Lady Clare," was brought out at the Globe Theatre on April 11th in the same year. "Alone in London," a drama written in conjunction with Miss Harriet Jay, was produced at the Olympic, November 2, 1885, and "Sophia," an adaptation of Fielding's "Tom Jones," at the Vaudeville on April 12, 1886. His play "Joseph's Sweetheart" was produced early in 1888; and, in the same year, he published an epic poem entitled "The City of Dreams." In 1890 the drama, "A Man's Shadow," was produced at the Haymarket. In 1891 his works were "The Moment After," "The Gifted Lady" (a burlesque), "The Coming Terror," and "The Outcast"; and in 1892 "Come Live with Me and be my Love." Early in 1893 he published "The Wandering Jew," a poem which led to long correspondence in the Daily Chronicle. In 1894 his play, "Dick Sheridan," was produced at the Comedy Theatre.

BUCHHEIM, Charles Adolphus, Phil.Doc. (Rostock), F.C.P., was born in Moravia in 1828. After having completed his academical studies, including a course of Pädagogik at the University of Vienna, he devoted himself, both at that town and successively at Leipzig, Brussels, and Paris, to the production of belletristic and historical works, which occupation he continued for some time after his arrival in 1852 in this country. He also translated some of Dickens' works into German, and towards the end of the fifties he devoted himself to the teaching profession and to the production of educational works (including an annotated edition of Schiller's "Wallenstein"), which were most favourably received. His popularity in this country and in America is based on his annotated editions of German classics, issued at the Clarendon Press. In the thirteen volumes hitherto published Professor Buchheim has practically shown for the first time that the works of Lessing, Goethe, Schiller, and Heine are as worthy as the ancient classics of a scholarly treatment, and the result is that his editions are largely used wherever German is taught through the medium of English, and have even been introduced into German schools. Dr. Buchheim is also the editor of the "Deutsche Lyrik" and the "Balladen und Romanzen" in the "Golden Treasury Series," and in 1883 he issued, conjointly with the Rev. Dr. Wace, the Principal of King's College, a volume entitled "First Principles of the Reformation," to which he contributed an essay on the "Political Course of the Reformation," and a translation of one of Luther's celebrated "Reformationsschriften." In 1863 Dr. Buchheim was appointed Professor of the German Language and Literature in King's College, London, and later on he was elected Fellow of the College of Preceptors. He filled the post of Examiner in German to the University of London during three periods of five years each, and he also acted, and still acts, as examiner for various public examining bodies in Great Britain and Ireland, especially so for the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and New Zealand. He was at one time German tutor to the children of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

BÜCHNER, Friedrich Karl Christian Ludwig, M.D., a German philosopher, born at Darmstadt, March 29, 1824, is the son of a distinguished physician in that town. After a preliminary education, he was sent in 1843 to the University of Giessen, where he studied philosophy, though he subsequently at Strasburg turned his attention to medicine, in compliance with the wishes of his family. He took his doctor's degree at Giessen in 1848, and then continued his studies in the universities of Würzburg and Vienna. After practising medicine for some time in his native place, he settled at Tübingen as a private lecturer, being also appointed Assistant Clinical Professor. He was deprived of this position, however, by the authorities, in consequence of the philosophical doctrines propounded in his famous book on "Force and Matter," 1855. He thereupon returned to Darmstadt, and resumed practice as a physician. In the work referred to—which is entitled in German "Kraft und Stoff" (1855; 16th edit., 1888), and which has been translated into most European languages—Dr. Büchner explains the principles of his system of philosophy, which, he contends, is in harmony with the discoveries of modern science. He insists on the eternity of matter, the immortality of force, the universal simultaneousness of light and life, and the infinity of forms of being in time and space. Dr. Büchner has further explained his system in "Nature and Spirit," 3rd edit., 1876; "Physiological Sketches," 2nd edit., 1875; and "Nature and Science," 3rd edit., 1874; "Man, and his Place in Nature," 3rd edit., 1889; "The Intellectual Life of Animals," 3rd edit., 1880; "The Theory of Darwin," 5th edit., 1890; "Light and Life," 1882; "The Future Life and Modern Science," 1889, and several other works. He has also contributed to periodical publications various treatises on physiology, pathology, and medical jurisprudence.

BUCK, Dudley, American musical composer, was born at Hartford, Connecticut, March 10, 1839. He studied three years at Leipzig and in Dresden, and one in Paris, under Hauptmann, Richter, Rietz, Moscheles, Plaidy, and Schneider. In 1862 he returned to America, and in 1864 began a series of organ concerts in the principal cities and towns of the United States, which were continued for a period of fifteen years, and which made him widely known to the American public both as a performer and as a composer. From Hartford, where, since his return from Europe, he has been organist of the North Congregational Church, he removed in 1869 to Chicago, to assume charge of the music in St. James's Church, but immediately after the great fire there in 1871, where he met with severe losses (including unpublished compositions), he went back to the East and took the musical direction of St. Paul's Church, Boston, and shortly afterwards was appointed organist of the Music Hall in the same city. These positions he retained for three years, relinquishing them in 1875 to become assistant conductor in Theodore Thomas' (N.Y.) Central Park Garden Concerts. In the following year his cantata, "The Centennial Meditation of Columbia," was performed under the direction of Mr. Thomas by a chorus of 1,000 voices and an orchestra of nearly 200 pieces at the inauguration of the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia. Later in the same year (1876) he became organist of the Holy Trinity Church, Brooklyn, where he still remains. Among his numerous compositions may be mentioned two "Motett Collections," a series of "Studies in Pedal Phrasing," several groups of songs, a "Symphonic Overture" to Scott's "Marmion," the "Forty-sixth Psalm," and "The Legend of Don Munio," a romantic cantata of which the text is a metrical version of Irving's "Alhambra." The largest of his works is "The Light of Asia" (the text from Sir Edwin Arnold's poem), published in 1885. In the same year he wrote "The Voyage of Columbus" (a cantata), which was first performed by the Apollo Club, a Brooklyn Society of male voices founded and conducted by Mr. Buck. His "Golden Legend," based on Longfellow's poem of the same title, received the prize offered by the Cincinnati Music Festival Association for the best composition for solo voices, chorus and orchestra ($1,000). Other of his works are a comic opera, "Deseret," produced in New York in 1880; "Illustrations in Choir Accompaniment" (1877); and a number of literary-musico treatises on themes connected with his profession. Among his latest works are two cantatas for church use, "The Story of the Cross" and "The Triumph of David," and a "Communion Service in C," in nine numbers. Mr. Buck is on the editorial staff of "The People's Cyclopedia."

BUCKLE, George Earle, the editor of the Times, is the eldest son of the Rev. George Buckle, Canon of Wells, and was born June 10, 1854, at Twerton Vicarage, near Bath, and educated at Honiton Grammar School, 1863-1865, and Winchester College, where he was a scholar on the Foundation, 1866-1872. He was a scholar of New College, Oxford, 1872-77, where he won the Newdigate Prize for English Verse, 1875, and gained a First Class in Literæ Humaniores, 1876, and a First Class in Modern History, 1877; graduating B.A. 1876, and M.A. 1879. He was Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford, 1877-1885, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, 1880. He entered the Times office on the Editorial staff in 1880, and was appointed editor on Mr. Chenery's death in February, 1884. He married, in 1885, a daughter of Mr. James Payn, the novelist.

BUCKNILL, Sir John Charles, M.D. Lond., F.R.C.P. Lond., F.R.S., was born in 1817, at Market Bosworth, and educated at Rugby School and at Bosworth school. He received his medical education at University College, London, of which College he is a Fellow, and has for some years past been a member of the Council. In 1840 he graduated in honours in the University of London, being first in surgery and third in medicine. In the College of Physicians of London he has been Censor, Councillor and Lumleian Lecturer. In 1844 he was appointed the first medical superintendent of the Devon County Lunatic Asylum, an office which he held until 1862, when he was appointed Lord Chancellor's Medical Visitor of Lunatics, which office he held until 1876. He is a Justice of the Peace of the county of Warwick and a Visitor of the County Asylum. In 1853 he originated, and for nine years afterwards edited, the Journal of Mental Science, and he is one of the original editors of Brain. He has published "Unsoundness of Mind in Relation to Criminal Acts" (Sugden Prize), 1857; "The Manual of Psychological Medicine" (last half), 1858; "The Psychology of Shakespeare," 1859; "The Medical Knowledge of Shakespeare," 1860; "Notes on American Asylums," 1876; "Habitual Drunkenness and Insane Drunkards," 1878; "Care of the Insane and their Legal Control," 1880, and also numerous pamphlets, lectures, and articles in journals on insanity and allied subjects. In 1852 Dr. Bucknill, through the influence of the late Earl Fortescue, obtained the permission of the Government that the 1st Devon and Exeter Volunteer Rifles should be embodied, and he was the first recruit of this the primary regiment of the then new volunteer movement. Dr. Bucknill was knighted in July, 1894.

BUFFET, Louis Joseph, a French politician, born at Mirecourt (Vosges), Oct. 26, 1818, practised as an advocate before the Revolution of 1848, when, being returned as a representative of the people by the department of the Vosges, he voted as a rule with the old dynastic Left, which became the Right of the Constituent Assembly. He accepted the Republican Constitution, and declared that General Cavaignac had deserved well of his country. After the election of Dec. 10, he gave in his adhesion to the Government of Louis Napoleon, who entrusted him with the portfolio of Commerce and Agriculture after the dismissal of M. Bixio. Both as minister and as representative he supported the party of order, but he refused to follow completely the policy of the Élysée, and accordingly he quitted the ministry with the late M. Odilon Barrot, Dec. 31, 1849. After the crisis which followed the dismissal of General Changarnier, he returned to office with M. Léon Foucher, April 10, 1851, and in that parliamentary cabinet he represented the ideas of the majority. He resigned with his colleagues Oct. 14, 1851, when the President declared in favour of the withdrawal of the law of May 31. After the coup d'état of Dec. 2, 1851, M. Buffet declined to accept any public appointment for several years. In 1863, however, he came forward as an opposition candidate in the first circonscription of the Vosges, and was elected. M. Buffet quickly became one of the most prominent members of the Corps Législatif, where he was one of the leaders of a "Tiers Parti," which endeavoured to reconcile Liberal reforms with loyalty to the dynasty. He was re-elected for his department in May, 1869, and in the short session which began in the following month he greatly contributed to the victory of the Liberal Centre, and was one of the promoters of the famous demand of interpellation, signed by 116 deputies, which elicited the message and the project of the senatus consulte, containing the promise of a return to parliamentary government. After the prolonged negotiations in connection with which his name was so constantly mentioned respecting the formation of the first parliamentary ministry, M. Buffet became a member, as a Finance Minister, of the cabinet formed by M. Emile Ollivier, on Jan. 2, 1870. His financial policy gave general satisfaction; but when M. Ollivier consented to the plebiscite, M. Buffet deemed it his duty to resign at the same time as his colleague, M. Daru (April 10). After the disaster of Sedan and the revolution of Sept. 4, he retired for a short time into private life. However, at the elections of Feb. 8, 1871, he was returned by his department—again at the head of the poll—to the National Assembly. M. Thiers offered him the portfolio of Finance, but he declined it, for fear of the susceptibilities which might be wounded on account of his having held office under the Empire. On April 4, 1873, he was elected President of the National Assembly, in the place of M. Grévy, resigned; and he was re-elected to that office May 13, 1874. He was again elected, and for the last time, to the same office, March 1, 1875, although at that date he was officially engaged in the formation of a new cabinet to replace the Chabaud-Latour Ministry. On March 10, 1875, M. Buffet was appointed Vice-President of the Council and Minister of the Interior. While holding this office he made himself extremely obnoxious to the Republican party. At the elections of January, 1876, he did not succeed in obtaining a seat in the Assembly, his candidature failing at Mirecourt, Bourges, Castelsarrasin, and Commercy. He therefore resigned the Vice-Presidency of the Council of Ministers. On June 16, 1876, the Senate elected him a Life Senator by 144 votes against 142.

BULGARIA, Prince of. See FERDINAND.

BULLER, Lieut.-General Sir Redvers Henry, V.C., K.C.B., K.C.M.G., is the son of the late James Wentworth Buller, M.P., of Downes, Crediton, Devonshire, and was born in 1839. He entered the 30th Rifles, May 23, 1858; lieutenant, Dec. 9, 1862; captain, May 28, 1870; major, April 1, 1874; lieut.-colonel, Nov. 11, 1878; colonel, Sept. 27, 1879; major-general, May 21, 1884. He served with the 2nd Battalion 60th Rifles throughout the campaign of 1860 in China (medal with two clasps); with the 1st Battalion on the Red River expedition of 1870; accompanied Sir Garnet Wolseley to the Gold Coast in Sept., 1873; and served as D.A. Adjutant and

Quartermaster-General and Head of the Intelligence Department throughout the Ashantee war of 1873-74, including the action of Essaman, battle of Amoaful, advanced guard engagement at Jarbinbah, battle of Ordahai (slightly wounded), and capture of Coomassie (several times mentioned in despatches, brevet of Major, C.B., medal with clasp). He served in the Kafir war of 1878-79, and commanded the Frontier Light Horse in the engagement of Taba ka Udoda, and in the operations at Molyneux Path and against Manyanyoba's stronghold (several times mentioned in despatches); also throughout the Zulu war of 1879, and commanded the cavalry in the engagements at Zeobane Mountain and Kambula; conducted the reconnaissance before Ulundi, and was present in the engagement at Ulundi (several times mentioned in despatches, thanked in General Orders, brevet of Lieut.-Colonel, Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, Victoria Cross, C.M.G., medal with clasp). The V.C. was given "for his gallant conduct at the retreat at Inhloband, on March 28, 1879, in having assisted, while hotly pursued by Zulus, in rescuing Captain C. D'Arcy, of the Frontier Light Horse, who was retiring on foot; Colonel Buller carrying him on his horse until he overtook the rearguard. Also for having on the same day, and in the same circumstances, conveyed to a place of safety Lieutenant C. Everitt, of the Frontier Light Horse, whose horse had been killed under him. Later on, Colonel Buller, in the same manner, saved a trooper of the Frontier Light Horse, whose horse was completely exhausted, and who otherwise would have been killed by the Zulus, who were within eighty yards of him." Colonel Buller served in the Boer war of 1881 as Chief of the Staff to Sir Evelyn Wood, with the local rank of Major-General; in the Egyptian war of 1882 in charge of the Intelligence Department, and was present in the action at Kassassin, Sept. 9, and at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir (mentioned in despatches, K.C.M.G., medal with clasp, 3rd Class of the Osmanieh, and Khedive's Star); served in the Soudan Expedition under Sir Gerald Graham, in 1884, in command of the 1st Infantry Brigade, and as second in command of the expedition, and was present in the engagement at El Teb and Temai (twice mentioned in despatches, promoted to Major-General for distinguished service in the field, medal and two clasps); served in the Soudan campaign in 1884-85, as Chief of the Staff to Lord Wolseley. When Sir Herbert Stewart was wounded, and Colonel Burnaby had been killed, he took command of the Desert Column, and withdrew it from Gubat to Gakdul in the face of the enemy, defeating them at Abu Klea Wells on Feb. 16 and 17 (mentioned in despatches, K.C.B., medal and clasp). From 1887 to 1890 Sir Redvers Buller was Quartermaster-General of the Army, and in Oct. of the latter year became Adjutant-General to the Forces in succession to Lord Wolseley. In April, 1891, he was promoted to the rank of Lieut.-General.

BULLER, Sir Walter Lawry, K.C.M.G., F.R.S., the descendant of an ancient Cornish family and the oldest surviving son of the late Rev. James Buller, was born at Newark, in the Bay of Islands, New Zealand, on Oct. 9, 1838. He received his early education at Auckland College, and afterwards became a pupil of William Swainson, F.R.S., the celebrated zoologist, who had settled in that colony. For a continuous period of fifteen years he held various official appointments, but chiefly in connection with native affairs, as he had early acquired a thorough knowledge of the Maori language; and on eight different occasions he received the special thanks of the Colonial Government. During this time he also contributed largely to zoological literature, and was elected a Fellow of the Linnean and of various other learned societies. From 1855 to 1860 he acted as Government Interpreter and Native Commissioner. In 1861 he was appointed editor-in-chief of "The Maori Messenger," an English and Maori Journal published by authority. At the age of 24 he was appointed a Resident Magistrate, and three years later a Judge of the Native Land Court. In 1865 he served as a Volunteer on Sir George Grey's staff at the taking of the Weraroa Pa, for which he received the New Zealand War Medal. On that occasion, declining the protection of a military escort, he carried the Governor's despatches, at night, through forty miles of the enemy's country, attended only by a Maori orderly; for which gallant service he was mentioned in despatches. In 1871 he visited England, and two years later published a splendidly illustrated "History of the Birds of New Zealand." The Royal University of Tübingen bestowed upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Science, and he received several other foreign distinctions. In 1874 he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple. In 1875 her Majesty, in recognition of the value of his scientific work, created him a C.M.G.; and in 1876 he was elected F.R.S. In 1882 he published a "Manual of the Birds of New Zealand" for the use of students; and in 1883 was awarded the Gold Medal of the New Zealand Exhibition, "for Science and Literature." From 1875 to 1885, inclusive, he practised his profession in the Colony with remarkable success. In 1886 he returned to England, as New Zealand Commissioner at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition; and for his services on that occasion was promoted by her Majesty to the rank of K.C.M.G. In 1887 he was awarded the Galileian Medal by the Royal University of Florence; and in 1888 he published a new and much enlarged edition of "The Birds of New Zealand" (Imperial Quarto). In 1889 he was a member of the Mansion House Committee for the Paris Exhibition, and served on the Executive Council of that body. In the following year he proceeded to New Zealand, and in 1893 returned to England to represent that Colony on the permanent governing body of the Imperial Institute. Besides enjoying the dignity of a British Order, Sir Walter Buller holds the rank of "Officier" in the Legion of Honour. He is also "Officier de l'Instruction Publique" (Gold Palm of the Academy), Knight first class of the Order of Francis Joseph of Austria, Knight first class of the Order of Frederick of Würtemberg, and Knight first class of the Order of Merit of Hesse-Darmstadt.

BULLOCK, The Rev. Charles, B.D., was born in 1829. He was ordained to the Parish of Rotherham, and became Rector of St. Nicholas, Worcester, in 1860. Resigning this post in 1874, he devoted himself to popular literature; and in recognition of his services in this direction the Archbishop of Canterbury conferred on him the degree of B.D. The magazines edited by him are The Fireside, (first published in 1864), Home Words, which in its localized form is known throughout the country, and The Day of Days, for Sunday Reading. In 1876 he founded Hand and Heart, as a penny illustrated Church of England Social and Temperance Journal. More recently he has established "The News: a National Journal and Review." He is also author of several religious books, of which we may mention his "Memorials of Frances Ridley Havergal."

BULWER, Sir Henry Ernest Gascoigne, G.C.M.G., was born in 1836, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. After serving as private secretary to the Lieut.-Governor of Prince Edward's Island, he became, in 1860, an official resident of the Ionian Islands; in 1866, Receiver-General and Treasurer of Trinidad; in 1867, Administrator of Dominica; and from 1871 to 1875, Governor of Labuan; and Consul-General at Borneo. He was then appointed Lieut.-Governor of Natal, which post he held until 1880. In 1882 he was appointed Governor of Natal; in 1883 he was made G.C.M.G.; and, in 1885, Lord High Commissioner of Cyprus. He retired from his Cyprus post in 1892.

BUNSEN, Professor Robert Wilhelm Eberhard, M.D., chemist, born March 13, 1811, at Göttingen, where his father was professor of Occidental literature; studied in the university the physical and natural sciences, and completed his education at Paris, Berlin, and Vienna. Having at Göttingen in 1833 taken his degrees for teaching chemistry he succeeded Wöhler three years later as Professor of this science in the Polytechnic Institution at Cassel. In 1838 he was appointed Assistant Professor in the University of Marburg; became Titular Professor in 1841, then Director of the Chemical Institute. In 1851 he passed to the University of Breslau, and in 1852 to the University of Heidelberg. Some years ago Professor Bunsen declined a call to Berlin which he received at the same time as Professor Kirchhoff, with whom he is the founder of stellar chemistry. He has made many important discoveries, and the charcoal pile which bears his name is in very extensive use. From the spectrum analysis down to the simplest manipulations of practical chemistry, his numerous discoveries have rendered the most distinguished services to science. The University of Leyden conferred on him the honorary degree of M.D. in Feb., 1875. In July, 1877, the University of Heidelberg commemorated the 25th anniversary of Professor Bunsen's election to the Chair of Experimental Chemistry. In Jan., 1883, he was appointed one of the eight Foreign Associates of the Paris Academy of Sciences.

BURBURY, Samuel Hawksley, F.R.S., born at Kenilworth on May 18, 1831, was educated at Kensington Grammar School, and afterwards at Shrewsbury School, and at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was Craven University Scholar in 1853; fifteenth Wrangler and second in the Classical Tripos and second Chancellor's Medallist, 1854; M.A. 1857. He was called to the Bar in 1858, and elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1890. He is joint author (with Rev. H. W. Watson) of "The application of generalised co-ordinates to the dynamics of a material system," 1879; "The mathematical theory of electricity and magnetism, 1885 and 1889; author of a paper "On the second law of thermodynamics in connexion with the Kinetic theory of gases," Philosophical Magazine, 1876; "On a theorem in the dissipation of Energy," Philosophical Magazine, 1882; and various other papers on mathematical and physical subjects in that magazine.

BURDETT, Henry Charles, compiler of "Burdett's Official (Stock Exchange) Intelligence," &c., is the son of the late Rev. Halford R. Burdett, of Northampton, and grandson of the Rev. D. J. Burdett, rector of Gilmorton, Leicestershire, a living which had been in the Burdett family almost uninterruptedly since the time of Queen Elizabeth. Mr. Burdett was born in 1846, and began his active career in the Midland Bank, Birmingham. In 1868 he was appointed secretary to the Queen's Hospital, Birmingham, and in a very short time succeeded in uniting the two rival medical colleges of that town under one management, thus constituting the present strong and useful medical school of the Midlands. He was for a time secretary to the Society for exempting Charities from rating; and was also the first to organise the system of training nurses according to modern ideas and methods, insisting specially upon the employment of young women only. The latter idea was much criticised at the time, and many evils were predicted of its future working. As all the world knows, however, its success has been great beyond the most sanguine expectations. In 1873 Mr. Burdett became a medical student, and, at Birmingham and Guy's Hospital, London, went through the whole curriculum necessary for medical examination and practice. A year later he was appointed House Governor of the Dreadnought Seaman's Hospital, Greenwich, and in six years raised the income of that institution from £7,000 to £13,000 a year. In 1877 he established the well-known paying hospital for the middle and upper classes at Fitzroy House, Fitzroy Square, having succeeded in raising no less a sum than £26,000 for that purpose. Perhaps the most permanently valuable, as it is certainly the most interesting of Mr. Burdett's public services, was the founding, in 1888, of the National Pension Fund for trained nurses and hospital officials. Among those who have helped in the establishment of the Fund, and without whose munificent aid indeed it would have been impossible for Mr. Burdett to realise his benevolent ideal, may be mentioned Lord Rothschild, Mr. J. S. Morgan, Mr. H. Hambro, and Mr. Huchs Gibbs, each of whom gave £5,000 to form a bonus fund for the increase of pensions. Several other gentlemen contributed varying sums, and the Fund started with nearly £30,000 in hand. The Princess of Wales occupies the position of President and the Prince of Wales that of Patron to the Fund. In every department of Hospital administration and finance, Mr. Burdett is admittedly the chief authority in the whole of the British Empire.

BURDETT-COUTTS, Angela Georgina, Baroness, is the youngest daughter of the late Sir Francis Burdett, Baronet, and grand-daughter of Mr. Thomas Coutts, the banker, and was born on April 26th, 1814. In 1837 she succeeded to the great wealth of Mr. Coutts, through his widow, once the fascinating Miss Mellon, who died Duchess of St. Albans. The extensive power of benefiting her less fortunate fellow-creatures thus conferred, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts has wisely exercised, chiefly by working out her own well-considered projects. A consistently liberal churchwoman in purse and opinions, her munificence to the Establishment is historical. Besides contributing large sums towards building new churches and new schools, in various poor districts throughout the country, Miss Coutts erected and endowed, at her sole cost, the handsome church of St. Stephen's, Westminster, with its three schools and parsonage; and more recently, another church at Carlisle. She endowed, at an outlay of £50,000, the three colonial bishoprics of Adelaide, Cape Town, and British Columbia; besides founding an establishment in South Australia for the improvement of the aborigines. She also supplied the funds for Sir Henry James's Topographical Survey of Jerusalem; and offered to restore the ancient aqueducts of Solomon to supply that city with water—a work, however, which the Government did not fulfil. In no direction are the Baroness's sympathies so fully expressed as in favour of the poor and unfortunate of her own sex. Her exertions in the cause of reformation, as well as in that of education, have been numerous and successful. For young women who had lapsed out of well-doing, she provided a shelter and a means of reform, in a "Home" at Shepherd's Bush. Nearly half the cases which passed through her reformatory during the seven years it existed, resulted in new and prosperous lives in the colonies. Again, when Spitalfields became a mass of destitution, Miss Coutts began a sewing-school there for adult women, not only to be taught, but to be fed and provided with work; for which object Government contracts are undertaken and successfully executed. Nurses were sent daily from this unpretending charity in Brown's Lane, Spitalfields, amongst the sick, who were provided with medical comforts; while outfits were distributed to poor servants, and clothing to deserving women. In 1859 hundreds of destitute boys were fitted out for the Royal Navy, or placed in various industrial homes. In the terrible winter of 1861 the frozen-out tanners of Bermondsey were aided, and at the same time she suggested the formation of the East London Weavers' Aid Association, by whose assistance many of the sufferers from decaying trade were able to remove to Queensland. One of the black spots of London in that neighbourhood, once known to, and dreaded by, the police as Nova Scotia Gardens, was bought by Miss Coutts, and, upon that area of squalor and refuse, she erected the model dwellings called Columbia Square, consisting of separate tenements let at low weekly rentals to about two hundred families. Close to it is Columbia Market, one of the handsomest architectural ornaments of North-Eastern London. The Baroness takes great interest in judicious emigration. When a sharp cry of distress arose some years ago in the town of Girvan, in Scotland, she advanced a large sum to enable the starving families to seek better fortune in Australia. Again, the people of Cape Clear, Shirkin, close to Skibbereen, in Ireland, when dying of starvation, were relieved from the same source, by emigration, and by the establishment of a store of food and clothing, by efficient tackle, and by a vessel to help them in their chief means of livelihood—fishing. Miss Coutts materially assisted Sir James Brooke in improving the condition of the Dyaks of Saràwak, and a model farm is still entirely supported by her, from which the natives have learnt such valuable lessons in agriculture that the productiveness of their country has been materially improved. Taking a warm interest in the reverent preservation and ornamental improvement of our town churchyards, and having, as the possessor of the great tithes of the living of Old St. Pancras, a special connection with that parish, the Baroness, in 1877, laid out the churchyard as a garden for the enjoyment of the surrounding poor, besides erecting a memorial sun-dial to its illustrious dead. In the same year, when accounts were reaching this country of the sufferings of the Turkish peasantry flying from their homes before the Russian invasion, Lady Burdett-Coutts instituted the Turkish Compassionate Fund, a charitable organization by means of which the sum of nearly £30,000, contributed in money and stores, was entrusted to Mr. Burdett-Coutts and to the British Ambassador for distribution, and saved thousands from starvation and death. In recognition of her important services, the Order of the Medjidieh was conferred upon her. This is but an imperfect enumeration of the Baroness's good works as a public benefactress. The amount of her private charities it is impossible to estimate. She is a liberal patroness of artists in every department of art. In June, 1871, Miss Coutts was surprised by the prime minister with the offer from Her Majesty of a peerage, which honour was accepted. Her ladyship was admitted to the freedom of the City of London, July 11, 1872, and to the freedom of the City of Edinburgh, Jan. 15, 1874. On Nov. 1, 1880, the Haberdashers' Company publicly conferred their freedom and livery on the Baroness Burdett-Coutts in recognition of her judicious and extensive benevolence and her munificent support of educational, charitable, and religious institutions and efforts throughout the country. She has since become a member of the Turners' Company, and was received with great enthusiasm during a recent visit to Ireland, where she had previously organised a fishing fleet, having its headquarters in Bantry Bay. The Baroness has also taken a leading part in promoting and supporting the Children's Protection Society, of which she was at once asked to become President on the death of the late Lord Shaftesbury. The Baroness was married on Feb. 12, 1881, to Mr. William Lehman Ashmead-Bartlett, who obtained the royal licence to use the surname of Burdett-Coutts.

BURFORD-HANCOCK, Sir Henry James Burford, C.M.G., only son of the late Henry Hancock, Esq., some time President of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, by Rachel Ann, eldest daughter of the Rev. James Burford, D.D., was born in London, Nov. 20, 1839, and educated at Eton. He served in the 45th Regiment (Sherwood Foresters), and subsequently for some years in the Kent Militia Artillery; was called to the Bar, after examination, by the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple in Jan., 1866, after which he practised on the Home Circuit and Sussex Sessions and at the Parliamentary Bar. In 1866 he was presented with a medaille d'honneur by H.I.M. Napoleon III., for a treatise on the International Fishery Laws. In May, 1876, he received the appointment of District Judge in Jamaica, and during his tenure of this office he was employed in the reorganisation of the District Courts, for which he received the thanks of the Government and the offer of the new appointment of second Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Jamaica, which, however, he was permitted to decline. In June, 1878, he was appointed Attorney-General of the Leeward Islands, M.E.C. and M.L.C. of the Leeward Islands, M.E.C. of St. Kitt's, Nevis, Montserrat, Dominica, and the Virgin Islands, and in October of the same year Chancellor of the Diocese of Antigua. He became Commissioner of the Encumbered Estates Courts of Antigua and Montserrat in March, 1879, and in March, 1880, he was confirmed in the office of Chief Justice and Judge of the Court of Vice-Admiralty of the Leeward Islands, in which capacity he had been acting for eleven months conjointly with his office of Attorney-General. In October, 1881, he was ordered out from leave to administer the Government of the Colony, and in 1882 received the honour of knighthood, and the same year was appointed Chief Justice of Gibraltar, the office which he now fills. In 1883 he received the offer of the Government of the Gold Coast, which he was permitted to decline. During his career he has several times received the thanks of H.M. Government, and he assisted in framing the Morocco Order in Council, 1889, for which, and his other services in connection with the British Legation and Consular Courts in Morocco, he was made C.M.G. in 1891. He is the author of many scientific and legal articles in various magazines; and is a Knight of Grace of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem.

BURGESS, James, C.I.E., LL.D., Hon. Assoc. R.I.B.A., F.R.G.S., &c., was born in the parish of Kirkmahoe, Dumfriesshire, in 1832. He studied architecture for some time, but devoted special attention also to mathematics. In 1855 he went to Calcutta as a Professor of Mathematics, and in 1858 wrote a paper "On Hypsometrical Measurements," and published editions of some English textbooks for the Calcutta University Examinations in 1859, with philological notes, &c. Early in 1861 he removed to Bombay, and was engaged in educational work till 1873. There he contributed papers on the Tides, Hypsometry, &c., to the Philosophical Magazine, Transactions of the Bombay Geographical Society, &c. As Secretary to the Commission on the Colaba Observatory in 1865, he prepared the report for Government on that establishment. Early in 1869 he published a large folio on "The Temples of Shatrunjaya," illustrated by 45 photographic views. This was followed by a similar volume on the antiquities at Somnâth, Girnâr, and Junâgarh. In 1871, besides some educational class-books, appeared a monograph on "The Rock-Temples of Elephanta or Ghârapuri," illustrated; and in 1872 he started The Indian Antiquary, a monthly journal of Oriental archæology, history, literature, and folklore, which he conducted for thirteen years, and which soon acquired a European reputation. He travelled through Gujarat and Rajputana in 1872, and wrote the letterpress for a large folio of views of the architecture and scenery of these countries. The Bombay Government nominated him, in 1873, to organize and direct the Archæological Survey of that presidency and the neighbouring states, Gujarat, &c.; and since 1873 the results of this survey have been partly published in six quarto volumes fully illustrated, in about a dozen occasional papers, 1874-85, and in a special volume on "The Cave-Temples of India," those in Northern and Eastern India being described by the late Mr. Jas. Fergusson. Other volumes richly illustrated are in preparation. The superintendence of the Archæological Survey of the Madras Presidency was added to that of Western India, on its initiation in 1881, the results of which are published in "The Buddhist Stûpas of Amaravati and Jaggayapeta," with numerous plates and woodcuts, and other volumes are in preparation. In 1885 he was put in charge also of the surveys in the North, and appointed Director-General of the Archæological Survey of India. In 1888 he edited and published "The Sharqi Architecture of Jaunpur," from the reports of Dr. A. Führer and Mr. E. W. Smith, the provincial surveyors, with 74 sheets of architectural drawings. He also started and edits for Government The Epigraphia Indica, issued in fasciculi, and containing important Sanskrit and Pali Inscriptions translated by the most competent Oriental scholars. He retired from the Directorship of the Surveys in 1889, and the office was then abolished.

BURGESS, John Bagnold, R.A., was born Oct. 21, 1830, at Chelsea, and received his artistic education at the Royal Academy, of which he was elected an Associate June 18, 1877; and made R.A., 1889. Among his pictures are "Bravo Toro;" "The Presentation: English ladies visiting a Moor's house," 1874; "The Barber's Prodigy," 1875; "Feliciana: a Spanish Gipsy," 1876; "Licensing the Beggars: Spain," 1877; "Childhood in Eastern Life," 1868; "Zulina," "The Student in Disgrace: a Scene in the University of Salamanca," and "The Convent Garden," 1879; "Zehra," and "The Professor and his Pupil," 1880; "The Genius of the Family," "Ethel," and "Guarding the Hostages," 1881; "The Letter Writer," and "Zara," 1882; "The Meal at the Fountain," and "Spanish Mendicant Students," 1883; and many other pictures representing Spanish scenes, of which the most recent is "Rehearsing the Miserere," 1894.

BURMEISTER, Karl Hermann Konrad, naturalist, was born at Stralsund, Prussia, Jan. 15, 1807. While a student of medicine at Halle, he was encouraged by Professor Nitzch to study zoology, and particularly entomology. Becoming a doctor in 1829, he made his first appearance as an author in the domain of natural history, with a "Treatise on Natural History," published at Halle in 1830. On the death of Professor Nitzch, in 1842, he succeeded him in the chair of zoology in the University of Halle. He has written numerous articles on zoological subjects in the scientific journals of Germany; several monographs in a distinct form, such as "The Natural History of the Calandra Species," published in 1837, and a "Manual of Entomology." Professor Burmeister has occupied himself in disseminating correct notions of geology among the educated classes; and with this view delivered a series of lectures, which were collected and published in two works, "The History of Creation," 1843, and "Geological Pictures of the History of the Earth and its Inhabitants," 1851. During the revolutionary fervour of 1848, Professor Burmeister was sent by the City of Halle as Deputy to the National Assembly, and subsequently by the town of Leignitz to the first Prussian Chamber. He took his place on the Left, and remained until the end of the session, when, on account of failing health, he was obliged to request leave of absence, which he turned to account by two years' travel in the Brazils, and he published "The Animals of the Brazils," 1854-56. On his return to Europe he resumed his post in the University of Halle, but in 1861 he resigned his chair and repaired to Buenos Ayres, where he became Director of the Museum of Natural History, organized scientifically by himself, and in 1870 Curator of the newly-established University of Cordova. He has since published "Sketches of Brazil," 1853; "A Journey through the La Plata States," 1861; and "The Physical Features of the Argentine Republic." As Director of the Museum of Natural History (which until 1884 belonged to the Province of Buenos Ayres, and since that date has been called the National Museum) he has published the annals of that establishment, in which are given full descriptions of the recent and fossil animals exhibited in the Museum. He has published also "Fossil Horses of the Pampas Formation," in two volumes, and has contributed to several scientific journals various articles on Zoology and Palæontology. In June, 1890, at the age of 83 years, he undertook a journey from Buenos Ayres to Italy and Greece for archæological purposes.

BURNAND, Francis Cowley, born in 1837, and educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where in his first year he founded the Club known as the A.D.C., or Amateur Dramatic Club. Mr. Burnand took his degree in 1857-58, and was called to the Bar in 1861. He is the author of about a hundred dramatic pieces, principally burlesques. His chief work for Punch was the now well-known serial "Happy Thoughts," and "Strapmore," a parody of Ouida's "Strathmore." His burlesque of Douglas Jerrold's nautical drama, "Black-eyed Susan," achieved what was in those days the unprecedented run of over 400 consecutive nights at the Royalty Theatre, Dean Street, Soho; and later his comedy "The Colonel" ran for about a year and a half at the Prince's Theatre in Tottenham Court Road, which has now disappeared. In 1879 he published "The 'A.D.C.'; being Personal Reminiscences of the University Amateur Dramatic Club, Cambridge;" and in July, 1880, he became editor of Punch on the death of Mr. Tom Taylor. In 1888 his parody of "Ariane," entitled "Airey-Annie," was produced at the Strand Theatre. He has of late years added "Very Much Abroad," "Quite at Home," and "Very Much at Sea," to the "Happy Thought" books.

BURNE-JONES, Sir Edward, Bart., was born in Birmingham, Aug., 1833, and educated at King Edward's School in that town. He entered Exeter College, Oxford, 1853, but left before taking any degree, in order to become an artist. He came to London for that purpose in the beginning of 1856, and entered no school of art, but drew much from life, and watched Rossetti at work in his studio when that was possible. He received the honorary degree of D.C.L. at Oxford in 1881, and an Honorary Fellowship given by Exeter College; was elected President of the Royal Birmingham Society of Artists, 1885; re-elected, 1886, and elected Associate of the Royal Academy of Arts, 1885. He resigned his Associateship of the Royal Academy in 1893. His principal oil paintings are a triptych of "Venus' Mirror," "Chant d'Amour," "Laus Veneris," "Feast of Peleus," "Merlin and Vivien," "The Tree of Forgiveness;" four pictures of "Pygmalion and the Image," "The Golden Stair," "The Annunciation," "The Mill," "The Hours," "The Wheel of Fortune," "Cophetua and the Beggar Maid," "The Resurrection," and (his first picture shown at the R.A.), "The Depths of the Sea," "The Garden of Pan," "The Tower of Brass," and the four pictures of the Sleeping Palace (1890) which were exhibited at Agnew's, and are known as "The Legend of the Briar Rose;" these are oil pictures. His principal water-colours are "The Wine of Circe," "St. Dorothy," "Love Among the Ruins," "Temperantia," "Spes," "Fides," "Caritas," "The Days of Creation," "Dies Domini," "Spring," "Summer," "Autumn," "Winter," "Day," "Night." Mr. Burne-Jones has also designed for stained glass, his best-known work of this nature being the St. Cecilia window of Christ Church, Oxford. He has also designed a fine mosaic for the apse of the American Church at Rome. His pictures have been chiefly exhibited at the Grosvenor Gallery and New Gallery. A collection of most of his works was exhibited at the latter gallery in the autumn and winter of 1893. He was made a Baronet in 1894, is an Hon. Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, and one of the founders of the New Gallery.

BURNETT, Mrs. Frances, née Hodgson, was born at Manchester, Nov. 24th, 1849. There she passed the first fifteen years of her life, acquired her education, and gained her knowledge of the Lancashire dialect and character. At the close of the American Civil War reverses of fortune led her parents to leave England for America, where they settled at Knoxville, Tennessee, 1865. She there began to write short stories for the magazines, the first of which appeared in 1867. In 1872 her dialect story, "Surly Tim's Trouble," was published in Scribner's Monthly (now The Century), and in book form in 1877. "That Lass o' Lowrie's" was first presented, serially, in Scribner, and its remarkable popularity demanded its immediate separate issue, 1877. In 1878-79 some of her earlier magazine stories were reprinted, viz., "Kathleen Mavourneen," "Lindsay's Luck," "Miss Crespigny," "Pretty Polly Pemberton," "Theo," "Dolly" (also issued under the title of "Vagabondia"), "Jarl's Daughter," and "Quiet Life." "Haworth's" appeared in 1879, and was followed by "Louisiana," 1880; "A Fair Barbarian," 1881; "Through One Administration," 1883; "Little Lord Fauntleroy," 1886; "Sarà Crewe," 1888; "The Pretty Sister of José," 1889; and "Little Saint Elizabeth," 1890. Her latest works are all studies of child life. Of these we may mention "The One I Knew Best of All," 1893, which is autobiographical. Of these probably "Little Lord Fauntleroy" is the most widely known, as both in its original form of a juvenile story and in the dramatized version it has been received with very great favour in England as well as in America. Its success led to the author's writing the play entitled "Nixie," which was produced at Terry's Theatre in April of 1890. Miss Hodgson was married in 1873 to Dr. Burnett, and she has since resided at Washington, D.C., when not abroad.

BURNS, John, M.P., L.C.C., labour leader, is the son of Alexander Burns, an engineer, formerly of Ayrshire, and was born in humble circumstances at Vauxhall in 1858. He was sent to Christ Church School, Battersea, and at the age of ten years was set to work in a local candle factory. He then became a rivet boy at a Vauxhall engineer's, and afterwards bound himself apprentice to an engineer at Millbank, under whom he served till he was twenty-one. Throughout his earlier years he read omnivorously, and imbibed Socialistic theories from a fellow workman, a Frenchman, who had fled from Paris after the Commune. On coming of age he worked for a year as foreman engineer on the Niger, and on his return from West Africa spent his savings in a six months' tour of Europe. As a boy he had got into trouble with his employers for delivering an open-air address, but he did not come into public notice as a speaker until at an Industrial Remuneration Conference in London he delivered certain speeches on Socialism which attracted attention. Since that time he has constantly addressed workman audiences. Becoming prominent in his own union—the Amalgamated Engineers—he stood as a Socialist candidate for the western division of Nottingham at the general election of 1885, but obtained only 598 votes. In 1886 he took a leading part in the unemployed agitation, and was one of the heads of the crowd which broke from its leaders and caused a riot in the West-end on Feb. 8th, 1887. Subsequently he contested the right of public meeting in Trafalgar Square, and underwent a short term of imprisonment (six weeks) for resisting the police. During the great Dock Strike of 1889, John Burns was the hero of the hour. He addressed dockers' meetings in the East-end every day for weeks, walking from Battersea every morning and returning on foot at night. His main contention was that the docker deserved sixpence (a "tanner") more a day than he had hitherto been paid, but he was also indefatigable as an organizer and strike manager. When the dock labourers finally won a great victory in their long struggle for higher wages Burns's reputation as the first of labour leaders and labour organisers was made. He is now regarded as an authority on labour, and the mouthpiece of respectable artizan opinion in London, and his help and advice are constantly sought by workmen and their organisations. He has been twice elected to the London County Council as Member for Battersea, and in July, 1892, he was returned to Parliament for the same division, his majority on the occasion being 1,559.

BURNSIDE, Sir Bruce Lockhart, Kt., was born on July 26th, 1833, at Bahamas, and was educated at King's College there and privately. He was called to the Bar by Lincoln's Inn in 1856; and during the war which shortly afterwards broke out between the North and the South in America he was conspicuous for the active part which he took as legal adviser to what was called the Confederacy, in the many delicate questions of international law which were at that time raised in consequence of the blockade of the Southern ports and of the fitting out of armed cruisers by the Confederate government. He successfully defended the "Alexandra," the "Orelo," and the "Florida," prosecuted in the B. A. Court for breaches of the Foreign Enlistment Act. He was Speaker of the House, Solicitor, and Attorney-General of the Bahamas, and was made one of Her Majesty's Council. He prepared a valuable "Manual for Justices of the Peace," for which he received the thanks of the Colonial Government. In 1879 he was appointed Queen's Advocate of Ceylon, and was employed at Downing Street for a considerable time in preparing a "Penal Code" and a "Criminal Procedure Code," which were afterwards passed by the Legislature and for which he was specially commended by Lord Derby, the Secretary of State. In 1883 he was appointed Chief Justice of Ceylon, there being at the time most scandalous arrears in the Supreme Court, which had attracted public attention and condemnation. He retired in 1893. Sir Bruce was knighted in 1885.

BURROWS, Montagu, R.N., M.A., F.S.A., third son of Lieut.-General Montagu Burrows, was born at Hadley, Middlesex, Oct. 27, 1819, and educated at the Royal Naval College, Portsmouth, where he obtained the "First Medal" in 1834. He served continuously in the Royal Navy till he obtained the rank of Commander in 1852, and became a retired Captain in 1867. He matriculated at Oxford University early in 1853, and obtained a Double First Class; took the degree of M.A. there, and received an Hon. M.A. degree at Cambridge, in 1859; was elected to the Chichele Professorship of Modern History in 1862; became a Fellow of All Souls in 1870; Chairman of the Oxford School Board in 1873; and member of the Hebdomadal Council of his University in 1876. During his service in the navy he was employed on the Coast of Africa for many years in the suppression of the slave trade; and was engaged in several actions with Malay pirates, under Captain Chads, and he received medals from the English and Turkish Governments for the capture of St. Jean d'Acre in 1840. He was made Commander for his services on the staff of H.M.S. "Excellent." He is the author of "Pass and Class: An Oxford Guide-Book through the courses of Literæ Humaniores, Mathematics, Natural Science, Law, and Modern History," 3rd edit., 1866; "Constitutional Progress: a series of Lectures delivered before the University of Oxford," 1869; "A Memoir of Admiral Sir H. Chads, G.C.B.," 1869; "Worthies of All Souls: Four Centuries of English History illustrated from the College Archives," 1874; "Parliament and the Church of England," 1875; "Imperial England," 1880; "Oxford during the Commonwealth" (Camden Society), 1881; "Wiclif's Place in History," 1882; "Life of Admiral Lord Hawke," 1883; "History of the Brocas Family of Beaurepaire and Roche Court," 1886; "History of the Cinque Ports," 1888; "Memoir of Mr. Grocyn" (in "Collectanea," Vol. II., of the Oxford Historical Society), 1890. He married, in 1849, Mary Anna, daughter of Sir James W. S. Gardiner, Bart., of Roche Court, Hants.

BURT, Thomas, M.P., was born Nov. 12, 1837, at Murton Row, near Percy Main, Northumberland, and is the son of Peter Burt, a coal-miner. While he was yet a child, seventeen months old, his parents went to Whitley, whence they had to remove about a year afterwards, when the pit was thrown out of gear by an explosion. Their next place of abode was New Row, Seghill, now styled Blake Town, where they remained five years, and at a later period they settled at the Seaton Delaval colliery. Young Burt, who had been working in the coal pits from ten years of age, here began that course of self-culture which has gone so far to supply the deficiencies of his previous education. In 1860 he removed to Choppington, and in 1865 he was appointed Secretary to the Northumberland Miners' Mutual Association. In this capacity he rendered himself so popular among the miners that it was determined to nominate him as the working class candidate for the representation of Morpeth at the general election of Feb., 1874. He was returned by 3,332 votes against 585 given for Captain Duncan, the Conservative candidate. In June, 1880, he was elected a member of the Reform Club by the Political Committee, under the rule empowering the body to elect two candidates in each year for marked and obvious services to the Liberal cause. He is President of the Miners' National Union, and has presided over several important conferences of miners held at Manchester, Birmingham, and elsewhere. He has also presided at several International Miners' Conferences held in Paris, Brussels, and other places on the continent. Mr. Burt has been a member of several Royal Commissions, including those inquiring into accidents in mines, loss of life at sea, mining royalties, and the Labour Commission of which the Duke of Devonshire was president. He was one of the British delegates to the International Labour Conference held at Berlin in March, 1890. Mr. Burt was invited by Mr. Gladstone in 1892 to join his administration as Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade, a post which he accepted. In 1860 he married Mary, daughter of Thomas Weatherburn.

BURT, T. Seymour, F.R.S., M.R.A.S., &c., is the fourth son of the late Rev. Charles Henry Burt, and was student of Wadham College, Oxford; then Curate of Plympton St. Mary, Devon; next of Westgate House, Bridgwater, Somerset, and for upwards of twenty years Vicar of Cannington, in the same county; a chaplain-in-ordinary to H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex; an acting magistrate for Somerset; a retired chaplain to the 24th Light Dragoons. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, and a member of the Royal Astronomical Society; and has published the following works:—"Papers on Scientific Subjects," vols. 1, 2, 3, 1837 and 1858; "Trip in Search of Ancient Inscriptions," 1838; "Metrical Epitome of the History of England," 1852; "Poems by Koi Hai," 1853; "Account of a Voyage to India, viâ the Mediterranean," 1857; "A Translation into Blank Verse of all Virgil's Works," vols. 1, 2, 3, &c., 1883-4; "Transposition into Blank Verse of Wesley's translation of T. à Kempis," 1883-4; "Transposition into Blank Verse of 'Hamilton's translation of Sacred History,'" 1883-4; "Transposition into Blank Verse of the Rev. Newman Hall's 'Come to Jesus,'" 1883-4. He is likewise the author of numerous papers published in the journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal,—"Description of the Mode of Extracting Salt from the damp sandbeds of the River Jumna as practised by the Inhabitants of Bundelkhund;" "Inscription found near Bhabra, three marches from Jeypore on the road from Delhi to Nusseerabad;" 'Description of an Instrument for trisecting angles;" "Notice of an Inscription on a Slab discovered in February, 1883;" "Inscription taken from a Baolee at Bussuntgurh, at the foot of the Southern range of hills running parallel to Mount Aboo;" "Observations on a second Inscription taken in facsimile from the neighbourhood of Mount Aboo;" "Description with Drawings of the ancient stone pillar at Allahabad called Bhim Sen's Gadá or Club, with accompanying copies of four inscriptions engraven in different characters upon its surface."

BURTON, Sir Frederic William, R.H.A., F.S.A., Hon. LL.D. Dublin, ex-Director of the National Gallery, third son of Samuel Burton, of Mungret, co. Limerick, and grandson of Edward William Burton, of Clifden House, co. Clare, was born in Ireland in 1816, and educated at Dublin, where he first studied drawing under the brothers Brocas. He was elected Associate of the Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts in 1837, and R. H. Academician in 1839, in which latter year his picture (in water colours), "The Blind Girl at the Holy Well," was chosen for publication by the Irish Art Union, and was engraved by Ryall. In the following year the picture of "The Aran Fisherman's Drowned Child," also was engraved for the Irish Art Union. A large composition of the same year, "The Connaught Toilet," representing peasant girls at a stream, preparing themselves to enter the market town, was, together with the former, exhibited at the Royal Academy in London in 1842. The latter picture was afterwards destroyed by fire at the Pantechnicon, where it had been temporarily deposited by its owner. From 1832 to 1851 his time was occupied in portrait painting. About 1840 he was elected member of the Royal Irish Academy of Science, Antiquities, and Belles Lettres, and for many years sat in the Council of Antiquities. In 1851 he went to Munich. There, at Nuremberg, and in various wanderings in upper Franconia, where he found ample subjects for the pencil, about seven years were passed. In 1855 he became Associate, and in the following year full member of the (now Royal) Society of Painters in Water Colours, and continued to exhibit annually at their rooms until 1870, when he retired from the Society. In November, 1886, he was elected an Honorary Member. He exhibited also on various occasions at the Royal Academy and the Dudley Gallery. In 1874, Sir William Boxall having resigned the Directorship of the National Gallery, Mr. Burton was nominated to that post, from which he retired in March, 1894. He is primarily responsible for the large and very important additions to the collection which have been made during the past twenty years, and which include Leonardo Da Vinci's "Virgin of the Rocks," Raphael's "Ansidei Madonna," Vandyck's "Equestrian Portrait of Charles I." (the last two from Blenheim), the "Ambassadors," by Holbein, and the "Portrait of Admiral Parcja," by Velazquez (both from the Radnor collection), and the various purchases from the Hamilton and other famous sales. Since 1863 Sir F. W. Burton has been a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. In 1884 he received the honour of knighthood, and in 1889 the hon. degree of LL.D. of Dublin.

BUSCH, Moritz, German author and journalist, was born Feb. 13, 1821, at Dresden, and educated at the University of Leipzig. On the completion of his theological and philosophical studies he became a journalist, and was employed on the staff of various newspapers. In 1851 he went to America, and on his return in 1853 published an account of his travels. Subsequently he travelled for some years in the East, then took up journalism again, and finally in 1870 settled in Berlin, where he obtained an appointment at the Foreign Office. Since then he has been the inseparable companion of Prince Bismarck; he has published several works on the German people, but he will always be best remembered by his account of the life of the great statesman, which appeared in 1880, and met with great success. This was followed by a second instalment, which was translated into English under the title of "Our Chancellor."

BUSH, The Rev. Joseph, late President of the Wesleyan Conference, was born March 8, 1826, in the village of Ashby, two miles east of Spilsby, in the county of Lincoln. His education was received at Spilsby; first at what was known as the Academy, and afterwards at the Grammar School, which was at that time conducted by the Rev. Isaac Russell, M.A. In November, 1840, he was apprenticed at Horncastle with Mr. Mark Holdsworth. In March, 1849, on the nomination of the Rev. Joseph Fowler, he was recommended for the work of the ministry by the City Road Quarterly Meeting. After passing the May District Meeting and the July Committee, he was accepted by the Conference for the Home Work, and his name was placed on the List of Reserve. In February, 1850, he was sent by the President, the Rev. Thomas Jackson, to the Maidstone Circuit as supply for the Rev. George Hambly Rowe, who died a few days after Mr. Bush's arrival in the circuit. He remained at Marden until the end of August, when he was received into Richmond College. At the Conference of 1853, Mr. Bush was appointed as Mr. Rattenbury's assistant in Leeds. In 1854, he went to London (Hinde Street); in 1857, to Islington; in 1860, to York; in 1863, to Bolton; in 1866, to Manchester; in 1869, to Brixton Hill; in 1872, to Newcastle-on-Tyne; in 1875, to Edinburgh; in 1878, to Bradford; in 1881, to Altrincham; and in 1884, to Highbury. He was then appointed the General Superintendent of the North-west Essex Mission. In 1871 Mr. Bush was appointed one of the Conference official Letter-writers, and held the office fifteen years—until, in 1886, he was associated with the Secretary of the Conference in the compiling and editing of the "Minutes." In 1872 he was elected Chairman of the Newcastle District, and has since been Chairman of the Edinburgh and Aberdeen, the Halifax and Bradford Districts, and the First London District. In 1873, on the nomination of Dr. Gervase Smith, he was elected into the Legal Hundred, having then served twenty-one years in the ministry. From time to time Mr. Bush has used his pen in the service of Methodism. He has published the following:—"The Sabbath: Whose Day Is It?" "Bread from Heaven;" "The Class Meeting;" "Courtship and Marriage;" "Mary Bell Hodgson: a Memorial;" "Character; and other Sermons;" "Methodist Sunday Schools;" "What to Preach, and How;" "How to Keep our Members; Practical Counsels addressed to Class Leaders;" "The Intermediate State; or, The Condition of Human Souls between the Hour of Death and the Day of Judgment." In addition, Mr. Bush has written on various subjects for the monthly periodicals and the London Quarterly. He has also edited "The Mission of the Spirit;" "The Pillar and Ground of the Truth;" and "The Life of the Rev. William O. Simpson." Some years ago, by direction of the Conference, Mr. Bush re-cast the "Liverpool Minutes," and also collected and classified all resolutions of the Conference on Pastoral Work from 1811 to 1884; interweaving and embodying the whole in one homogeneous document. This pamphlet is the "Methodist Manual of Pastoral Duty."

BUTCHER, Professor Samuel Henry, M.A., Hon. LL.D. (Glasgow), Hon. L.H.D. (Dublin), J.P. for co. Kerry, is the eldest son of the late Samuel Butcher, Bishop of Meath, and of Mary, daughter of the late John Leahy, Esq., of Southhill, Killarney, was born in Dublin, April 16, 1850, and educated at Marlborough College, under Dr. Bradley, now Dean of Westminster. He was elected to a Minor Scholarship at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1869; to a Foundation Scholarship in that college, and to the Bell University Scholarship, in 1870; to the Waddington University Scholarship, in 1871, and obtained the Powis Medal for Latin Hexameters, in 1871 and 1872. He was Senior Classic and Chancellor's Medallist in 1873, and held a Mastership at Eton College for a short time. He was elected to a Fellowship at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1874, and held an Assistant Tutorship there till 1876. Having vacated his Fellowship at Cambridge by marriage he was elected to an Extraordinary Fellowship, without examination, at University College, Oxford, where he was Lecturer till 1882, when he was elected to the Chair of Greek at Edinburgh University, on the retirement of Professor Blackie. He published in 1879, in conjunction with Mr. Andrew Lang, a prose translation of the "Odyssey," now in its 9th edition; in 1881, a small volume on "Demosthenes," in Macmillan's classical series; in 1891, "Some Aspects of the Greek Genius" (Macmillan & Co.), now in a second edition. On March 2, 1886, he was specially elected by the committee as a member of the Athenæum Club. In 1889 he was appointed a Member of the Scottish Universities Commission. In 1876 he married Rose Julia, youngest daughter of the late Archbishop Trench.

BUTE (Marquis of), The Most Honourable John Patrick Crichton Stuart, K.T., LL.D., is the son of the second marquis, and was born at Mount Stuart House, in the Isle of Bute, Sept. 12, 1847, succeeded to the title on the death of his father in 1848, and received his education at Harrow School, whence he proceeded to Christ Church, Oxford. He was admitted into the Roman Catholic Church by Monsignor Capel, in London, on Dec. 1, 1868. He was created a Knight of the Order of the Thistle in Feb., 1875, and is Hereditary Sheriff of the county of Bute. The honorary degree of LL.D. has been conferred upon him by the Universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh. He presented the Great Hall to the buildings of the former. Lord Bute has published "The Early Days of Sir William Wallace," a lecture delivered at Paisley in 1876; "The Burning of the Barns of Ayr," 1878; "The Roman Breviary, translated out of Latin into English," 1879; "The Coptic Morning Service for the Lord's Day, translated into English," and the "Altus of St. Columba," 1882, as well as different articles, including a description of Patmos from a personal visit, of some Christian monuments of Athens, &c. He was elected Lord Rector of St. Andrew's University in 1893. His lordship married in 1872 the Hon. Gwendoline Mary Anne, eldest daughter of Lord Howard of Glossop, and has issue, living, three sons and a daughter.

BUTLER, Benjamin Franklin, was born at Deerfield, New Hampshire, U.S.A., Nov. 5, 1818. He graduated at Waterville College in 1838, and in 1841 began the practice of Law at Lowell, Massachusetts. He early took a prominent part in politics on the Democratic side, and in 1853 was elected to the Massachusetts House of Representatives, and in 1859 to the State Senate. In 1860 he was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention, which met at Charleston, South Carolina, but withdrew with other Northern members on account of the stand taken by the convention on the Slave Trade Question. In that year he was the Democratic candidate for Governor of Massachusetts. He had before held a commission as Brigadier-General of Militia, and, at the outbreak of the Civil War, he entered the Union Army, and was soon placed in command at Baltimore, and subsequently at Fortress Monroe. His refusal at Fortress Monroe to return runaway slaves to their masters, on the ground that they were "contraband of war," originated the term "contrabands," by which slaves were frequently designated during the war. Gen. Butler commanded the land forces which assisted Farragut in the capture of New Orleans, May 1, 1862, and he governed there with great vigour until November, when he was recalled. Late in 1863 he was placed in command of the department of Virginia and North Carolina, and the forces there were designated the Army of the James. When General Grant was moving towards Richmond in July, 1864, Butler made an unsuccessful effort to capture Petersburg. In Dec., 1864, he made an ineffectual attempt upon Port Fisher, near Wilmington, North Carolina, and was then relieved of his command. In 1866 he was elected to Congress by the Republicans of Massachusetts, and he was repeatedly re-elected until 1878. In 1877 he left the Republican party to re-enter that of the Democrats, and was their candidate for Governor of Massachusetts in 1878 and 1879, but was not elected. In 1882 he again secured the nomination and was elected, but held the office for only one year, being defeated by the Republicans in 1883. He was the candidate for President of the Greenback-Labour Party in 1884, but his Democratic opponent, Mr. Cleveland, was successful. Since the close of the war, when not holding any office, he has practised his profession in Boston and New York.

BUTLER, Lady Elizabeth Southerden, daughter of the late Mr. Thomas J. Thompson, by Christina, daughter of Mr. T. B. Weller, was born at Lausanne, in Switzerland. Her parents removed to Prestbury, near Cheltenham, where, at the age of five years, Miss Thompson first began to handle the pencil. After two or three years' sojourn at Prestbury, Mr. and Mrs. Thompson went to live in Italy, and the young artist continued her studies at Florence. In 1870 the family returned to England, and took up their abode at Ventnor, where they remained till the great success of Miss Thompson's picture of the "Roll Call" made a removal to London desirable. At one period she studied in the Government School of Art, Kensington. For some years she exhibited at the Dudley and other galleries. Her first picture at the Royal Academy was "Missing," 1873. It was followed in 1874 by the "Roll Call," a picture which attracted universal attention, and which was purchased by the Queen. "The 28th Regiment at Quatre Bras" was exhibited at the Academy in 1875; "Balaclava" in Bond Street in 1876; and "Inkermann" in Bond Street in 1877. In later years she has painted:—"'Listed for the Connaught Rangers: recruiting in Ireland," 1879; "The Defence of Rorke's Drift," 1881; "Floreat Etona!" 1882, an incident in the attack on Laing's Nek; a picture representing the famous charge of the Scots Greys at Waterloo, 1882; "Evicted," 1890, and "The Camel Corps," 1894. Miss Thompson became the wife of Major-General Sir William Francis Butler, K.C.B., June 11, 1877.

BUTLER, The Very Rev. Henry Montagu, late Dean of Gloucester, Master of Trinity, Camb., and ex-Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, is the youngest son of the late Rev. George Butler, D.D., Head Master of Harrow, and afterwards Dean of Peterborough, and was born in 1833, and educated at Harrow, under Dr. Vaughan, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was elected Bell University Scholar in 1852, and Battie University Scholar in 1853. In 1853 he won Sir W. Browne's medal for the Greek ode, and in 1854 the Porson Prize, the Greek ode, the Camden medal for Latin Hexameters, and the Members' Prize for a Latin essay. In 1855 he graduated B.A. as Senior Classic, and in the same year was elected Fellow of his college. On the retirement of Dr. Vaughan, at Christmas, 1859, he was elected to the head-mastership of the school, over which his father had presided for twenty-four years, from 1805 to 1829. He held this post until 1885, when he was appointed Dean of Gloucester. In 1886 he resigned the Deanery, being nominated by the Crown Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, in succession to the late Dr. Hepworth Thompson. He was honorary chaplain to the Queen, 1875-77; chaplain in ordinary, 1877; prebendary of St. Paul's and examining chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Tait, 1879, and to his successor, Archbishop Benson, 1883. He has been several times select preacher at the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and he published in 1861 and in 1866 volumes of "Sermons preached in the Chapel of Harrow School." He is brother of Canon Butler, and was married in Aug., 1888, to Miss Ramsay, of Girton College, who distinguished herself by taking the first place in the Cambridge Classical Tripos in 1887.

BUTLER, Mrs. Pierce, née Frances Anna Kemble, daughter of Charles Kemble, and niece of Mrs. Siddons, was born in Newman Street, London, Nov. 27, 1809. She made her first public appearance, Oct. 5, 1829, as Juliet, at Covent Garden Theatre, then under the management of her father. "Venice Preserved" was revived Dec. 9 in that year, for the purpose of introducing her as Belvidera; and she sustained the parts of the Grecian Daughter, Mrs. Beverly, Portia, Isabella, Lady Townley, Calista, Bianca, Beatrice, Constance, Lady Teazle, Queen Catherine, Louis of Savoy in "Francis I.," Lady Macbeth, and Julia in the "Hunchback." The three years, during which she retrieved the fortunes of her family, were marked by the production of "Francis I.," a tragedy written by herself at seventeen. In 1832 she visited America, and, with her father, performed with great success at the principal theatres of the United States. An account of these wanderings is given in her "Journal of a Residence in America," 1835. At this period she became the wife of Mr. Pierce Butler, a planter of South Carolina, from whom she obtained a divorce in 1839. She resumed her maiden name, and retired to Lenox, Massachusetts, where she resided, with the exception of a year spent in Italy, for nearly twenty years. Besides translations from Schiller and others, she has also published "The Star of Seville," 1837; a volume of "Poems," 1842; "A Year of Consolation," 1847; "Residence on a Georgia Plantation," 1863; "Records of Girlhood," 3 vols., 1878; "Records of Later Life," 2 vols., 1882; "Notes upon some of Shakespeare's Plays," 1882; and has appeared at intervals as a public reader. From 1859 to 1873 she was in Europe. She then returned to America, but now resides in London.

BUTLER, Major-General Sir William Francis, K.C.B., was born in the county of Tipperary, Ireland, in 1838, and educated at Dublin. He was appointed Ensign of the 69th Regiment, Sept. 17, 1858; Lieutenant, Nov., 1863; Captain, 1872; Major, 1874; and Deputy-Adjutant-Quarter-Master-General, Head-Quarter Staff, 1876. Major Butler served on the Red River Expedition; was sent on a special mission to the Saskatchewan Territories in 1870-71; and served on the Ashanti Expedition in 1873, in command of the West Akim native forces. He was several times mentioned in despatches of Sir Garnet Wolseley, and in the House of Lords by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief. He was appointed a Companion of the Bath in 1874. In Feb., 1879, he was despatched to Natal to assume the responsible post of Staff Officer at the port of disembarkation. In the subsequent expeditions under Lord Wolseley, Major-General Butler has generally held an important post; and especially in the Soudan Expedition. On the return of the forces, he was left behind in command of the British advanced posts. He was Colonel on the Staff in Egypt from 1890 to 1892, and Brigadier-General in Egypt from Dec., 1892, to Nov., 1893, when he was appointed Major-General at Aldershot. General Butler is the author of "The Great Lone Land," 1872; "The Wild North Land," 1873; "Akimfoo," 1875; and "Far out: Rovings Retold," 1880. He married, June 11, 1877, at the church of the Servite Fathers, Fulham Road, London, Miss Elizabeth Thompson, the painter.

BUTTERFIELD, William, architect, was born Sept. 7, 1814. He early devoted himself to a study of the various periods of Gothic architecture, and has in his practice introduced various colours to a large extent into ecclesiastical and domestic buildings by the help of brick, stone, marble, and mosaic combined. Amongst the buildings designed by him are:—St. Augustine's College, Canterbury; the entire buildings of Keble College, Oxford; the Cathedral at Perth; Balliol College Chapel, Oxford; St. Michael's Hospital, Axbridge; the County Hospital, Winchester; the School Buildings at Winchester College; the Grammar School, Exeter; the Chapel, Quadrangle, and other buildings at Rugby School; Rugby Parish Church; Heath's Court, Ottery St. Mary; the Guards' Chapel, Caterham Barracks; All Saints, Margaret Street, London; St. Alban's, Holborn; St. Augustine's, Queen's Gate; Gordon Boys' Home Buildings, near Bagshot; together with a large number of other new churches, such as St. Mary Magdalene's Church and the Vicarage at Enfield, and old buildings and churches restored, as St. Cross, Church and Buildings, Winchester; St. Mary's Church in Dover Castle, and the Parish Church, Tottenham.

BUXTON, Sydney, M.P., was born in 1853, and is the grandson of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, and the son of Charles Buxton, M.P., and of Emily, daughter of Sir Henry Holland, the physician. He was educated at Clifton College and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was a member of the London School Board from 1876 to 1881. In 1880 he unsuccessfully contested Boston at the general election, was returned for Peterborough in 1883, and defeated in 1885. In 1886 he stood for Croydon at a bye-election, but was not returned. In the same year he was elected for Poplar, and re-elected in 1892, when he was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies. In 1882-84 Mr. Sydney Buxton acted as Hon. Sec. of Mr. Tuke's Irish Emigration Fund, and was instrumental in emigrating some 10,000 persons, in families, from the congested districts of Ireland. In 1889 he, with the late Cardinal Manning and the Lord Mayor, constituted the "Mansion House Committee of Conciliation" which helped to bring the great Dock Strike of the year to a satisfactory conclusion. From 1886-1889 he was a member of the Royal Commission on Elementary Education. In 1891 he moved the "Fair Wages Resolution" in the House of Commons. He is the author of a "Handbook to Political Questions," 1880 (now in its 9th edition); "A Political Manual;" "Finance and Politics: an Historical Study, 1796-1884," 1889; a "Handbook to Death Duties," 1890; besides numerous pamphlets and articles on political and financial subjects. In 1882 Mr. Sydney Buxton married Constance, daughter of Sir John Lubbock. She died in 1892.

CABLE, George W., novelist, was born in New Orleans, in 1844, where he resided almost uninterruptedly until 1884, when he removed to New England. His present residence is in Northampton, Massachusetts. At the age of fourteen his father died, leaving his family in such reduced circumstances as to compel his son to leave school in order to aid in the support of his mother and sisters. From that time until 1863 he was usually employed as a clerk. In that year he entered the Confederate army, where he remained until the close of the civil war. Returning to New Orleans, he made such a living as he could—at first as an errand boy (though he was nearly twenty-one years of age), then in book-keeping, and finally secured a position in a prominent house of cotton factors, which he left, in 1879, to devote himself exclusively to literature. His first literary work was in the form of contributions to the New Orleans Picayune, under the signature of Drop-Shot. His work, however, did not attract any very general attention until his Creole sketches appeared in Scribner's Monthly, now The Century Magazine. These were published in book form in 1879, under the title of "Old Creole Days." They were followed by "The "Grandissimes," 1880; "Madame Delphine," 1881; "The Creoles of Louisiana," 1884; "Dr. Sevier," 1884; "The Silent South," 1885; "Bonaventure," 1887; "Strange True Stories of Louisiana," 1889; and "The Negro Question," 1890. In these Mr. Cable has shown such a mastery of the Louisiana dialect and such an insight into the Creole character as to give him a prominent place among American writers; and the public readings from his works which he has given during the past few years in Northern cities have been very largely attended. Although writing additional essays from time to time, and a few short stories, he has devoted his later years almost entirely to the platform and to the establishment of charitable societies, notably the Home Culture Clubs for the educational benefit of the working poor. With 1894 began the publication of a new and important novel dealing with the Middle South.

CADOGAN (Earl of), The Right Hon. George Henry Cadogan, eldest son of the fourth Earl, was born at Durham in 1840. He succeeded to the title on the death of his father in 1873, having been for a few months previously M.P. for Bath. He was appointed Parliamentary Under-Secretary for War in May, 1875; and Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies in March, 1878, in succession to Mr. J. Lowther, who had been advanced to the post of Chief Secretary for Ireland. He went out of office with the Conservative party in April, 1880. In Lord Salisbury's second administration, 1886, he was appointed Lord Privy Seal, without a seat in the Cabinet, but he joined the Cabinet in 1887, and was appointed Chairman of Grand Committees in 1889.

CAINE, Thomas Henry Hall, novelist and dramatist, was born in 1853. He began life as an architect, but at an early period turned his attention to literature. He lived with Dante Rossetti in London during the trying period preceding that poet's death in 1882, and published "Recollections of Rossetti" in the same year. He published "Sonnets of Three Centuries" in 1882; "Cobwebs of Criticism," 1883; "The Shadow of a Crime," "A Son of Hagar," in 1887; also "The Deemster," which has been dramatised. In 1890 he published "The Bond-man;" "The Scapegoat," 1891; "The Prophet," 1892; and "The Manxman," 1893.

CAINE, William Sproston, M.P., was born at Seacombe, Cheshire, March 26, 1842, and is the son of Nathaniel Caine, J.P. for Lancashire and Liverpool, a Liverpool merchant. He was educated privately by the Rev. Richard Wall, M.A. In 1873 he contested Liverpool in the Liberal interest at a bye-election, and afterwards at the general election in 1874, both times unsuccessfully. In 1880 he was returned for Scarborough, and again in 1884, on his appointment to the office of Civil Lord of the Admiralty in Mr. Gladstone's administration of 1880-85. In 1885 he consented to contest the county of Middlesex at the following general election, and on the passing of the Redistribution Act stood for the Tottenham division of that county in 1885 without success. At a bye-election in April, 1886, he was returned for Barrow-in-Furness by a large majority, and was again returned at the general election. In 1892 he was elected member for the Eastern division of Bradford. He is a J.P. for the North Riding of Yorkshire, and is largely engaged in the iron trade of Cumberland. He was Chairman of a Special Commission for the reorganisation of the Metropolitan Constituencies in the Liberal interest. Mr. Caine separated from Mr. Gladstone on the Home Rule question, and has been one of the whips of the Liberal Unionist party, but rejoined the Liberal party in 1890, accepting Mr. Gladstone's amended scheme for the government of Ireland. He is an active leader in the Temperance Reformation, and is president of the British Temperance League and the National Temperance Federation. He is the author of "A Trip Round the World in 1887-88;" "Hugh Stowell Brown: a Memorial Volume," 1888; "Picturesque India," 1890; and "Young India," 1891.

CAIRD, Edward, M.A., Hon. D.C.L., was educated at Glasgow University and Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was a Snell Exhibitioner. In 1861 he was Pusey and Ellerton Scholar, took a first class in Classical Moderations in 1862, and a first class in Literæ Humaniores in 1863. He was subsequently elected to a Fellowship at Merton College, where he was for some years a tutor until appointed to the Chair of Moral Philosophy at Glasgow. On the death of Dr. Jowett he was elected Master of Balliol (Nov. 14, 1893).

CAIRD, Professor, The Rev. John, D.D., LL.D., born at Greenock, December, 1820, graduated at the University of Glasgow, M.A., 1845, was ordained minister of Newton-on-Ayr, 1845; of Lady Yester's Parish, Edinburgh, 1847; of the Parish of Errol, Perthshire, 1849; and of Park Church, Glasgow, 1857. He was appointed Professor of Divinity in the University of Glasgow, 1862; and Principal and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Glasgow, 1873. He was one of Her Majesty's Chaplains for Scotland, but has resigned that office. He has published a volume of Sermons, 1858; addresses on the "Unity of the Sciences, &c.," 1873-74; and "Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion," 1880; also "Spinoza," in Blackwood's Philosophical Classics for English Readers, 1888.

CAIRD, Mrs. Mona, authoress, was born at Ryde, in the Isle of Wight. Her first acknowledged work was "Whom Nature Leadeth." This was followed in 1887 by "One That Wins," and, in the spring of 1889, by "The Wing of Azraël." In the Westminster Review for August and November, 1888, Mrs. Mona Caird wrote articles on "Marriage" and "Ideal Marriage," which led to a voluminous correspondence in the Daily Telegraph, entitled "Is Marriage a Failure?" She afterwards contributed to the Fortnightly an article entitled "The Morality of Marriage," which was a reply to Mrs. Lynn Linton's attack on the "Wild Woman" in the Nineteenth Century.

CALDERON, Philip Hermogenes, R.A., son of the Rev. Juan Calderon, was born in Poitiers in 1883, studied at Mr. Leigh's Academy and in the atelier of M. Picot (Member of the Institute) in Paris. Amongst his earlier pictures are "The Gaoler's Daughter," exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1858; "Man goeth forth to his Labour," 1859; "Never More," 1863; "La Demande en Mariage," and "The Return from Moscow," 1861; "After the Battle," 1862; "The British Embassy in Paris during the Massacre of St. Bartholomew," 1863; "The Burial of Hampden" and "Women of Arles," 1864. Mr. Calderon was elected A.R.A. in 1864. In 1865 he did not exhibit. In 1866 he had in the Royal Academy Exhibition "Her most noble, high, and puissant Grace," "Women of Poitiers washing on the banks of the Clain," and "In the Pyrenees." In 1867 Mr. Calderon was elected full R.A., and received at the Paris International Exhibition the first medal awarded to English Art. He also received one of the medals awarded to English artists at the Vienna Exhibition of 1873. Since then he has exhibited in London "Home after Victory," and "Evening," "Œnone," and "Whither?" (this last his diploma picture); in 1869, "Sighing his Soul into his Lady's Face;" in 1870, "The Orphans," "The Virgin's Bower," and "Spring Driving away Winter;" in 1871, "On her Way to the Throne," and "The New Pictures" (portraits of a well-known picture collector); "In a Palace Tower;" in 1873, "The Moonlight Serenade;" in 1874, "The Queen of the Tournaments" and "Half-Hours with the Best Authors;" "Toujours Fidèle," "The Nest," "Margaret," "Watchful Eyes," and "His Reverence;" "Joan of Arc," "Reduced Three per Cents. (Bank of England)," "The Nunnery at Loughborough," "La Gloire de Dijon," "Ruth and Naomi," 1886; "Deep in the Autumn Woods," 1887; "Home," 1889; "Elizabeth Woodville parting with the Duke of York," 1893; and many others. In 1878 Mr. Calderon was one of the English artists selected to exhibit an extra number of works at the Paris International Exhibition, and he sent there several of the pictures mentioned above. At the close of that Exhibition he received a first-class medal, and was created a Knight of the Legion of Honour. Since that time he was long occupied in painting decorative panels in oil for the dining-room of a well-known lover of art, among which have been "The Olive," "The Vine" (representing the fruits of the earth), and "The Flowers of the Earth," exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1881. In 1887 Mr. Calderon was appointed Keeper of the Royal Academy in place of Mr. Pickersgill.

CALDERWOOD, Henry, LL.D., F.R.S.E., Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh, was born at Peebles, May 10, 1830. Professor Calderwood was educated at the Edinburgh Institution and High School, and at the University, where he distinguished himself in Mental Philosophy. While a student he published, in opposition to the doctrine of Sir William Hamilton, "The Philosophy of the Infinite," in 1854 (now in the 3rd edit.) He studied for the ministry of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, and was ordained minister of Greyfriars Church, Glasgow, 1856. He was appointed Examiner in Mental Philosophy to the University of Glasgow, 1861. This University conferred on him the degree of LL.D. in 1865. During the illness of Professor Fleming, at the invitation of the Senatus, he conducted the class of Moral Philosophy, session 1865-6. In 1868 he was elected Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh. He was chosen F.R.S.E. in 1869; and was elected Chairman of the first School Board for the City of Edinburgh in 1874, from which office he retired in 1877. While Chairman, he published "On Teaching," 1874; 3rd edit., 1881. He published "Handbook of Moral Philosophy," 1872; 15th edit., 1890, and "The Relations of Mind and Brain," 1879; 2nd edit., 1884. He published "The Relations of Science and Religion," 1881, being the Morse Lecture for the Union Theological Seminary, New York. He has edited and enlarged "Fleming's Vocabulary of Philosophy" (4th edit., 1887). Professor Calderwood has been repeatedly invited to become a candidate for the representation of the City of Edinburgh in Parliament, but has declined to abandon academic work.

CALLENDAR, Hugh Longbourne, F.R.S., son of the Rev. Hugh Callendar, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Magdalene College, Cambridge, who died in 1867, was born on April 18th, 1863, at Hatherop, Gloucestershire. He was educated at Marlborough College, of which he was head boy in 1880-82. He entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in Sept., 1882, and was elected Mayor Scholar in December of the same year, and Bell University Scholar in Feb., 1883. He was in the first class in Classics in 1884, was 14th Wrangler in 1885, and was elected to a College Fellowship in Natural Science in 1886. He became a University Extension Lecturer in 1892, Professor of Physics at the Royal Holloway College in 1893, and McDonald Professor of Physics at McGill University, Montreal, in Oct., 1893. In June, 1894, he was elected F.R.S. He has written various papers on subjects connected with the measurement of temperature, the most important of which have appeared in the Phil. Trans. A, 1887, and A, 1891. He has also devised a system of shorthand, published by the Cambridge University Press under the titles of "Phonetic Cursive," 1889, and "Orthographic Cursive," 1891.

CALVÉ, Emma, operatic singer, was born in France in 1866. She took her first lessons from Madame Marchesi, and made her début at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, 1882, in Gounod's "Faust." She played in Paris in 1884, and afterwards made a tour in Italy. She appeared at Covent Garden in 1892 in "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "L'Amico Fritz," and sang in both at Windsor Castle by command of the Queen in July, 1893.

CAMBRAY-DIGNY, Guglielmo Conte di, an Italian statesman, born at Florence in 1820, is the son of Count Louis of Cambray-Digny, a distinguished architect, Foreign Member of the Institut de France, and for a time Minister of Ferdinand III., Grand Duke of Tuscany. After completing his studies at Paris, he returned, at the age of twenty, to his native city, where he was a member of the Liberal and National Party. He always exhorted the Grand Duke, but in vain, to make concessions to the liberal requirements of the times, instead of relying on Austrian support; and in 1859, when the Grand Duke was obliged to flee from his dominions, which were thereupon annexed to Piedmont, Signor Cambray-Digny was named a Deputy to the Tuscan Assembly which approved this preliminary step towards the unification of Italy, and in 1860 was made a Senator of the new Kingdom. In 1865 he presided, in his capacity of Lord Mayor ("Gonfaloniere") of Florence, at the sixth centenary of the birth of Dante, and delivered the official speech of inauguration of the statue of the poet. His political celebrity, however, does not date farther back than the close of the year 1867, when he was appointed Finance Minister of the kingdom of Italy, and found himself face to face with an enormous deficit, which he endeavoured to reduce by various expedients, including the unpopular grist tax, and giving to an Anonyme Society the tobacco monopoly. Count Cambray-Digny, by his perseverance and tact, succeeded in carrying this and other projects in spite of the energetic opposition of a formidable party in the Chambers. He retired in 1869.

CAMBRIDGE (Duke of), Field-Marshal H.R.H. George William Frederick Charles, K.G., K.P., C.C.M.G., G.C.H., G.C.B., G.C.S.I., P.C., son of Adolphus Frederick, the first duke, grandson of King George III., and first cousin to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, was born at Hanover, March 26, 1819, and succeeded his father July 8, 1850. He became a Colonel in the Army Nov. 3, 1837, was advanced to the rank of Major-General in 1854, when he was appointed to command the two brigades of Highlanders and Guards, united to form the first division of the army sent in aid of Turkey against the Emperor of Russia; and was promoted to the rank of General in 1856. In 1861 he was appointed Colonel of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, and was promoted to the rank of Field-Marshal Nov. 9, 1862. His Royal Highness has been successively Colonel of the 17th Light Dragoons, of the Scots Fusilier Guards, and, on the death of the late Prince Consort, of the Grenadier Guards. At the battle of the Alma His Royal Highness led his division into action in a manner that won the confidence of his men and the respect of the veteran officers with whom he served. At Inkermann he was actively engaged, and had a horse shot under him. Shortly after this, in consequence of impaired health, he was ordered by the medical authorities to Pera, for change of air, and after staying there some time proceeded to Malta; whence, his health still failing, he was directed to return to England. At a later period His Royal Highness gave the results of his camp experience in evidence before the Committee of the House of Commons appointed to investigate the manner in which the war had been conducted. On the resignation of Viscount Hardinge in 1856 the Duke of Cambridge was appointed to succeed as Commander-in-Chief, and has continued to hold that post till the present time, the appointment being perpetuated by Letters Patent in 1887. His mother, the Duchess of Cambridge, died April 6, 1889, at the advanced age of 92. He is Ranger of Hyde Park and Richmond Park.

CAMERON, Professor Sir Charles Alexander, M.D., F.R.S.C.I., M.K., & Q.C.P.I., D.P.H., and ex-Examiner, Cambridge University, was born in Dublin on July 16, 1830. His father, Captain Ewen Cameron, was grandson of the unfortunate Archibald Cameron, younger brother of "Lochiel," who was executed for taking part in the Jacobite rising in 1745. Sir Charles's mother was Belinda Smith, a county Cavan lady. Sir Charles was educated at schools in Dublin and Guernsey. He studied medical and chemical science in Dublin and Germany, graduating as Doctor of Medicine and Doctor of Philosophy in 1856. At first he devoted much attention to Agricultural Chemistry. In 1867 he read a paper before the British Association detailing experiments which proved that urea could be assimilated by plants, and that all the nitrogen which they required could be taken from it. In 1862 he contributed a series of papers to the Chemical News on "The Inorganic Constituents of Plants." In 1862 he was elected Public Analyst for the city of Dublin, and was the only analyst in the United Kingdom who succeeded in applying the provisions of the first and very defective Adulteration of Food Act of 1860. He next turned his attention to sanitary science, and in 1867 was elected Professor of Hygiene or Political Medicine in the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland. He was for some years Lecturer on Chemistry and Physics in two medical schools — Steevens Hospital Medical College, and Ledwich School of Medicine. Sir Charles's public lectures on Hygiene, open to ladies, were numerously attended. He is an Honorary Member and Professor of Chemistry, and ex-Professor of Anatomy to the Royal Hibernian Academy of the Fine Arts, &c., Lecturer on Agricultural Chemistry, and Geology in the Albert (Government) Model Farm, Glasnevin, and he is Public Analyst for the greater number of Irish counties and boroughs, as well as Consultant to nearly all the Public Departments. He holds the Professorships of Chemistry and Hygiene in the College of Surgeons, and he has the entire control of the Public Health Department of the Dublin Corporation, being both Executive and Superintendent Medical Officer of Health. Under his régime an immense improvement has taken place in the dwellings of the working classes, and the state of public health has been greatly improved. Sir Charles and the Irish Registrar-General were appointed in 1888 to inquire into the conditions of the Royal Barracks in Dublin. Sir Charles served on the juries of several of the great exhibitions, including that of Paris in 1867. He was President of the Royal College of Surgeons, 1885-6, President of the British Public Health Medical Society, 1880-90, Vice-President of the Institute of Chemistry, 1884-90, President of the British Institute of Public Health, 1890-93, of the Irish Medical Association, 1891-92, of the Society of Public Analysts, and Hon. Member of many Medical Societies abroad and in America. His chief works are a voluminous "History of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and of the Irish Medical Institutions, including 300 Biographies," and a "Manual of Hygiene, and Compendium of the Sanitary Laws." His smaller works, including translations of poems from the German, are numerous. His original papers chiefly appear in the Proceedings of the Royal Society and the Royal Dublin Society, the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy and of the Royal Academy of Medicine, the Chemical News, the Dublin Journal of Medicine. In pure Chemistry, he is best known for his numerous papers on Selenium Compounds. Sir Charles was knighted in 1886, "in recognition of his services in the improvement of Public Health, and his scientific researches." In 1862 he married Lucie, daughter of John Macnamara, solicitor, of Dublin. She died in 1883, leaving seven children.

CAMPBELL, The Right Rev. James Colquhoun, D.D., late Bishop of Bangor, son of the late Mr. John Campbell, of Stonefield, Argyleshire, by Wilhelmina, daughter of the late Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss, Dumbartonshire, was born at Stonefield in 1813. Having graduated in honours at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A., 1836; M.A., 1839; D.D., 1859), he was appointed successively Vicar of Roath, Glamorganshire, 1839; Rector of Merthyr Tydvil, Glamorganshire, 1844; Honorary Canon of Llandaff, 1855; and Archdeacon of Llandaff, 1857. He was nominated by Lord Derby to the See of Bangor, on the death of Dr. Bethell, in April, 1859. Dr. Campbell resigned his bishopric in 1890. He married, in 1840, Blanche (who died 1873), daughter of John Bruce Pryce, Esq., of Duffryn, Glamorganshire.

CAMPBELL, The Rev. Lewis, M.A., LL.D., late Professor of Greek in the University of St. Andrews, son of Robert Campbell, sometime Governor of Ascension Isle, and cousin of Campbell the poet, was born Sept. 3, 1830. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy, at Glasgow University, and at Trinity and Balliol Colleges, Oxford, where he was scholar and exhibitioner. He was thus brought into contact with the present Master of Balliol (Dr. Jowett), whose influence as a college tutor was already conspicuous. He took a first-class in classics in 1853, was Fellow of Queen's from 1855-8, and tutor from 1856-8. In 1857 he was ordained by the Bishop of Oxford, and in 1858 became Vicar of Milford, Hants. He remained there until 1863, when he was appointed Professor of Greek in the University of St. Andrews, a post from which he retired in recent years. Professor Campbell has published many works on classical subjects, of which the chief are: "The Theætetus of Plato," 1861 (2nd edit., 1883); "The Sophistes and Politicus of Plato," 1867; "Sophocles—The Plays and Fragments," Vol. I., 1871 (2nd edit., 1879); Vol. II., 1881; Verse translations of Sophocles, 1873-1883, and of Æschylus, 1890; "Sophocles" in Macmillan's series of Classical Writers, 1879. He has also written articles on Plato and Sophocles in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and contributed various papers to the Quarterly, National, and Classical Reviews, the American Journal of Philology, and other home and foreign periodicals. Professor Campbell published in 1877 a volume of sermons, "The Christian Ideal," and in 1882 (in conjunction with Mr. Garnett), 'The Life of James Clerk Maxwell"

(2nd edit., 1884). He is at present resident in London, and is busily employed in editing Plato's "Republic" from papers left by the late Professor Jowett.

CAMPBELL, Mrs. Patrick, who has become famous in the title-rôle of "Mrs. Tanqueray" at the St. James's Theatre, made her name as an amateur actress long before she was known in professional circles. She first attracted the attention of the critics while playing the part of Helen in an amateur performance of "The Hunchback," given at Colchester. In 1890 she gained an opportunity of appearing on the London stage in a matinée performance of Mr. Louis Parker's "A Buried Talent" at the Vaudeville. Here she again made so favourable an impression as to be encouraged to try a theatrical venture on her own account. In June, 1891, she took the Shaftesbury Theatre, in order to essay Rosalind. In August she obtained an engagement at the Adelphi, where, except for an interruption by illness, she remained till she went to the St. James's to act Paula in "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." At the Adelphi Mrs. Campbell created four parts: as Astrea in "The Trumpet Call," Elizabeth Cromwell in "The White Rose," Tress in "The Lights of Home," and Clarice Berton in "The Black Domino." "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" had a long run. In Nov., 1894, Mrs. Campbell appeared as Kate Cloud, the heroine of "John a'Dreams," at the Haymarket Theatre.

CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN, The Rt. Hon. Henry, M.P., is the second son of the late Sir James Campbell, of Stracathro, Forfarshire, by Janet, youngest daughter of the late Mr. Henry Bannerman, of Manchester, and was born in 1836. He was educated at the University of Glasgow, and at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A., 1858; M.A., 1861). In 1872 he assumed the additional surname of Bannerman, under the will of his uncle, Mr. Henry Bannerman, of Hunton Court, Kent. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, who is a magistrate for the counties of Lanark and Kent, has represented the Stirling district of boroughs in the Liberal interest since Dec., 1868; he was Financial Secretary at the War Office from 1871 to 1874; was again appointed to that office in 1880; and in May, 1882, was nominated Secretary to the Admiralty. He was Chief Secretary for Ireland, 1884-5; and in Mr. Gladstone's third Cabinet, 1886, held the office of Secretary of State for War, and was again appointed to the same office in Mr. Gladstone's Ministry, 1892. He married, in 1860, Charlotte, daughter of the late Major-General Sir Charles Bruce, K.C.B.

CANDOLLE, Anne Casimir Pyramus de, Hon. Doctor of the University of Rostock, son of Alphonse, grandson of Augustin Pyramus, born at Geneva, Feb. 20, 1836; has published several papers on anatomy of plants and descriptive botany in the "Prodromus" and the Monographies of his father as well as in "Mémoires de la Société de Physique et d'Histoire naturelle de Genève," a society of which he was President in the year 1882.

CANNING, Sir Samuel, C.E., upon whom the responsibility of laying the Atlantic Cables of 1865, 1866, and 1869 devolved, is the son of the late Robert Canning, Esq., of Ogbourne St. Andrew, Wiltshire, and was born in 1823. He began his career as assistant to the late Mr. Joseph Locke, C.E., F.R.S., from 1844 to 1849, and was resident engineer during the formation of the Liverpool, Ormskirk, and Preston Railway. Since then he has been engaged in the manufacture and submersion of the most important lines of Submarine Telegraph Cables, almost from their initiation in 1850. He was among the pioneers of Atlantic Cables, and achieved the submergence of the first line of 1858, and that of other Atlantic lines. To his skill and energy the success of the Atlantic Expedition of 1866 is undoubtedly due; he perfected the paying-out, and the recovering and grappling machinery for that cable, which so materially aided its submersion, and the recovery of the cable lost in the preceding year. He has also connected England with Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria, and laid other important lines of cable connecting various countries in the Mediterranean, North Sea, &c. He received the honour of knighthood in 1866, a Gold Medal from the Chamber of Commerce of Liverpool, March 14, 1867, and the insignia of the Order of St Jago d'Espada from the King of Portugal.

CANOVAS DEL CASTILLO, Antonio, a Spanish statesman, was born in 1830. He made his début in 1851, under the patronage of Señors Rios, Rosas, and Pacheco, as chief editor of the Patria, in which he defended Conservative ideas. In 1854 he was named deputy for Malaga, and since that year has never ceased to occupy a seat in the Cortes. In 1856 he was Chargé d'Affaires in Rome, and drew up the historical memorandum on the relations of Spain with the Holy See, which served as a basis for the Concordat. He was then named successively Governor of Cadiz in 1855, Director-General of the Administration from 1858 to 1861, and lastly, in that same year, Under Secretary of State for the Interior. In 1864 the Queen called him to the Ministry, together with Mon; O'Donnell chose him in 1865 as Minister of Finance and the Colonies; and he had the honour of drawing up the law for the abolition of the traffic in slaves. Lastly, a little before the Revolution of 1868, he was the last to defend with energy in the Cortes the Liberal principle when all the parties which had supported his doctrine had deserted the Parliament. His greatest title to fame is that of having been the first—supported by Señors Elduayem, Bugallal, and two others—to hoist the standard of legitimate and constitutional monarchy, in the full Constituent Assembly of 1868, and in face of the triumphant Revolution. His fidelity and capacity definitely obtained for him the supreme direction of the Alfonsist party; and on the proclamation of Alfonso XII. as King in Dec., 1874, Señor Cánovas del Castillo became President of the Council and chief of the new Cabinet, and he continued to hold the Premiership, with the exception of an interval of a few months, down to 1879, when on the return of Marshal Martinez Campos from Cuba, Señor Cánovas del Castillo retired from the Premiership and Marshal Campos became Prime Minister, accepting as his colleagues the principal associates of Señor Cánovas. The skilful resistance of the latter delayed and defeated the Marshal's free-trade and emancipation projects, so that on the re-assembling of the Cortes (Dec., 1879) he was compelled to resign. Señor Cánovas del Castillo then returned to power in the year 1881; however, his Conservative Cabinet was overthrown, and a coalition between Señor Sagasta and Marshal Martinez Campos came into office. At the crisis of Nov., 1855, on the question of the occupation of the Caroline Islands by Germany, he was compelled to resign, and was succeeded by Señor Sagasta. He was elected President of the Chamber the same day as the new Sagasta government came into office, and was chief of the moderate Conservative party till July, 1890, when he returned to power. In Nov., 1891, his government went out of office, but was again formed by him on the old lines. Señor Cánovas del Castillo is the author of numerous works in moral and political science, and a "History of the House of Austria," which is in great repute. These publications have long since gained him admission into the Academy of Madrid. In 1875 Señor Cánovas del Castillo received the insignia of the Order of the Red Eagle from the Emperor of Germany, the Grand Cross of the Order of the Tower and Sword from the King of Portugal, and the Golden Fleece from the King of Spain.

CANTERBURY, Archbishop of. See Benson, The Most Rev. Edward White.

CANTU, Cesare, historian, was born at Brivio, near Milan, December, 1804. He is the eldest of ten brothers, to whom he very early had to be a father. He studied in Milan at the Alexander Lyceum (now Beccaria), and, when only seventeen years of age, he became Professor of Literature in the College of Sondrio, in the Valteline, whence he went to Como, and thence to Milan. He embraced the Liberal cause, and his "Reflections on the History of Lombardy in the Seventeenth Century," published at Milan, excited the hostility of the Austrian Government, and he was imprisoned for three years. This work, published in Turin, has passed through ten editions, besides pirated editions and translations; and though it brought him many laurels, it brought him likewise many thorns. In his captivity he wrote an historical romance, "Margherita Pusterla," 1835, a work which has often been compared to the "Promessi Sposi" of Manzoni. He has composed various religious hymns, and his poem "Algiso," his "Letture Giovanelli," which have passed through more than thirty editions, and the articles which he has contributed to the "Biblioteca Italiana" and the "Indicatore" of Milan, have popularized his name throughout Italy. He belongs to what has been called the Romantic School, founded by Manzoni and Silvio Pellico. He has also published "Storia Universale," which has been translated into English, French, and German; "History of Italian Literature," 1851; "History of the Last Hundred Years," 1852; "History of the Italians," 1859; "Milano, Storia del Popolo e pel Popolo," 1871; "Cronistoria della Independenza Italiana," 3 vols., 1873; "Commento Storico ai Promessi Spósi [di Alessandro Manzoni], o la Lombardia nel secolo XVII.," 1874; "Donato ed Ercole Silva, Conti di Biandrate; cenni biografici," conjointly with C. Rovida, 1876; "Caratteri Storici," 1881; and "Beccaria et le droit pénal," 1885.

CAPEL, The Right Reverend Monsignor Thomas John, D.D., was born Oct. 28, 1836. Having completed his education by six years' private tuition under the Rev. J. M. Glennie, B.A., Oxon., in the autumn of 1860 he was ordained priest by Cardinal Wiseman. In January, 1854, he became co-founder and Vice-Principal of St. Mary's Normal College at Hammersmith. Shortly after ordination he was obliged to go to a southern climate to recruit his strength. When there, at Pau, he established the English Catholic Mission, and was formally appointed its chaplain. Subsequently, his health having improved, he returned to London, where his sermons and doctrinal lectures in various churches, and more especially at the Pro-Cathedral at Kensington, soon raised him to the foremost rank among English preachers. During several visits to Rome he also delivered courses of English sermons in that city by the express command of the Sovereign Pontiff. Monsignor Capel, while labouring at Pau in the work of "conversions," was named private chamberlain to Pope Pius IX. in 1868, and after his return to England domestic prelate in 1873. With returning health Monsignor Capel once more took to the work of education, and in February, 1873, established the Roman Catholic Public School at Kensington. He was appointed Rector of the College of Higher Studies at Kensington—the nucleus of the Roman Catholic English University—in 1874, by the unanimous vote of the Roman Catholic Bishops, and he held that appointment until he resigned it in 1878. Then having delivered a series of conferences on the Doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church in Florence by the wish of Leo XIII., Monsignor Capel carried out his long-proposed visit to America. There, in all the great cities, he lectured and preached to large audiences on religious, social, political, and literary subjects. In 1882 Monsignor Capel wrote "Great Britain and Rome," urging the importance of having a Papal Nuncio accredited to England, and during his tour in America he published treatises on "Confession," "The Holy Catholic Church," "The Name Catholic," "The Pope the Head of the Christian Church," besides re-editing the well-known work, "Faith of Catholics."

CAPRIVI DE CAPRERA DE MONTECUCCULI, Count Georg Leo von, the German Chancellor, is the eldest of the four sons of Julius Edward von Caprivi, who was a high legal functionary in the service of the Prussian State. General von Caprivi was born at Charlottenburg on Feb. 24, 1831. Entering a general regiment in his eighteenth year, he won rapid promotion and served with distinction in the campaigns of 1864 and 1866. In 1870 he acted as Chief of the Staff to the 10th Corps, of which he is now the Commander, and reaped fresh laurels in all the battles on the Loire. Swiftly ascending the other steps of the military ladder, he was appointed in 1883 to the command of the 30th Division at Metz; and next year, passing from the army to the navy, he succeeded to Herr von Stosch, on the latter's retirement from the head of the Admiralty. In a short time naval men by profession were amazed at the mastery of their art and the perception of their interests which were displayed by a mere landsman and soldier. Soon after the present Emperor's accession, on the death of Count Monts, he reorganised the navy; the command of the Imperial fleet being vested in Admiral von der Goltz, while something like a ministry of marine was created under Rear-Admiral von Heusner; and it was on this occasion that General von Caprivi, sharing in the redistribution of military commands, was rewarded for his loyalty to the army, no less than for his naval services, with the 10th or Hanoverian Army Corps, which is one of the finest in the whole army. During the manœuvres of the autumn of 1889, when the Hanoverians and Westphalians met in mimic warfare, with smokeless powder and other innovations on their trial, the Emperor had opportunity enough anew to study the character of General von Caprivi, and this general's character and ability to serve him in a political capacity must have fairly convinced his Majesty, otherwise he would never have asked him to assume the enormous burden of responsibility which Prince Bismarck had laid down. It was not without grave scruples and self-distrust that General von Caprivi listened to the proposals of the Emperor; but his Majesty, it is said, had finally decided to have a soldier for his new Chancellor, thinking, as he does, with Frederick the Great, that a General must be the surest conductor of a foreign policy, as knowing best how far he can go with the army behind him. On March 19, 1890, the appointment of General Caprivi as successor to Prince Bismarck was made public. The General received the title of Count from the Emperor in December, 1891. He gave up his position as Prussian Prime Minister to Count von Eulenberg in March, 1892, but remained Chancellor and Minister for Foreign Affairs. In 1892 and 1893, despite of prolonged opposition, he conducted the German Army Bills successfully through Parliament. He unexpectedly resigned in October, 1894, owing to friction with Count Eulenberg in the matter of the Agrarian League malcontents.

CARATHEODORY PACHA (Alexander), a native of Constantinople, belongs to one of the most distinguished families of the Greek community in the Turkish capital, and through his wife is connected with the noble family of the Aristarchi. He was brought up at Constantinople, and was sixteen years of age when he was sent to the West of Europe to complete his studies. On his return to Turkey he was employed in the Government offices of the Sublime Porte, and soon attracted notice by his assiduity and intelligence. In several capitals of Europe he occupied the post of First Secretary of Embassy, and he was appointed, for the first time, Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs during the Grand-Vizieriat of the late A'ali Pacha. About this period he was nominated Minister of the Sultan at the Court of Rome, where he resided for two years. He was recalled to occupy, for the second time, the post of Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and was sent, as chief plenipotentiary of Turkey, to the Congress of the Great Powers which assembled at Berlin in 1878 to revise the provisions of the Treaty of San Stefano. He had previously been raised to the rank of Muchir. Afterwards he became Minister of Public Works, and in November, 1878, he was appointed Governor-General of Crete. In May, 1885, he was appointed Prince of Samos and adjoining islands, which were accorded a measure of autonomy under the suzerainty of the Porte.

CARDUCCI, Josué, eminent Italian poet and critic, was born at Val-di-Castello, near Pietra Santa, on July 27th, 1837, and was educated at the college of the Scolopii at Florence, where he early gave proof of his talents. In 1858 he founded a literary review, the Poliziano, in which he proposed to render the Italian language classical in form though modern in thought. At the same time he published his Juvenilia, and several critical essays on the old Italian poets. These writings obtained him, in 1860, an appointment as Professor of Italian Literature at the University of Bologna. Among Signor Carducci's poetical works may be mentioned his famous "Hymn to Satan;" "Levia Gravia," 1875; "Odi Barbari," Odes in irregular metres, 1880; "September, 1792," 1883. M. Luzol has translated the Barbaric Odes into French, and Mr. G. A. Greene has recently published some translations of Carducci in his "Italian Lyrists of To-day." Among Carducci's critical works may be mentioned "Literary Studies," 1874; "Commentaries on Petrarch," 1879; "Critical Conversations" and "Lives and Portraits," 1884.

CARINI, Isidore, was born at Palermo (Sicily) on Jan. 7, 1843, and ordained Priest in 1866, Canon of the Cathedral of Palermo in 1875, Professor of Paleography and Curator of the Archives of Palermo in 1877. In 1882 he was sent by the Government into Spain to collect and publish documents relative to the Sicilian Vespers; and recalled to Rome by His Holiness Leo XIII. as assistant archivist and first Professor of Paleography at the new Vatican school in 1884. In 1889 he was appointed Premier Préfet at the Vatican Library. Canon Carini has been a prolific writer, not merely upon archæological subjects but also on religion, literature, languages, bibliography, &c. He is a member of various literary societies, and for his services during the cholera in 1885 received a gold medal from the King of Italy.

CARLE. See SADOW, VICTORIEN.

CARLING, Hon. Sir John, K.C.M.G., was born in London, Ont., on Jan. 23rd, 1828, and was educated in the public schools of his native place. For a number of years he was a member of the firm of Carling and Co., brewers, London, and was a director of the Great Western Railway, the London, Huron and Bruce Railway, and the London and Port Stanley Railway. He was elected Trustee of the Board of Education, London, in 1850, and held this office until in 1854 he became a member of the Board of Aldermen for the same city. In 1857 he was returned as a member for London to the General Assembly, holding the seat continuously until the Confederation. He was Receiver-General of Canada in 1862; was elected to the Commons in 1867, holding the seat to 1874, and was also returned to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario in 1867. He was Minister of Agriculture and Public Works from July, 1867, until Dec., 1871; Sworn of the Privy Council, and was Postmaster-General from May 23, 1882, until Sept. 25, 1885, when he resigned this portfolio and accepted that of the Minister of Agriculture. He was re-elected to the Commons in 1878, and continued to sit for London until 1891. He was called to the Senate in 1891, but resigned his seat in the spring of 1892, and again successfully contested London for the Commons. He retained the portfolio of Minister of Agriculture until Sept., 1892; since then he has been a Member of the Cabinet without portfolio. He was created K.C.M.G. in 1893.

CARLINGFORD (Lord), The Right Hon. Chichester Samuel Parkinson Fortescue, K.P., is the youngest son of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Chichester Fortescue, of Dromisken, co. Louth, some time member for Hillsborough in the Irish Parliament, and brother of Lord Clermont, to whose Irish title Lord Carlingford succeeded in 1887. His mother was Martha, daughter of the late Mr. Samuel Meade Hobson, of the city of Waterford. He was born Jan. 18, 1823, and educated at a private tutor's and at Christ Church, Oxford (B.A., 1844; M.A., 1847). He obtained a first class in classical honours, and in 1846 gained the Chancellor's prize for an English essay on the "Effects of the Conquest of England by the Normans." He is an Honorary Student of Christ Church. He entered Parliament at the general election of 1847 as one of the members for the county of Louth, which he represented in the Liberal interest till Feb. 1874, when he was defeated. Mr. Chichester Fortescue held a Junior Lordship of the Treasury under Lord Aberdeen in 1854-55; the Under-Secretaryship of State for the Colonies in 1857-58; and again in 1859-65. He was sworn a member of the Privy Council in 1864. In 1865 he was made Chief Secretary for Ireland, and he held that post down to June, 1886. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet in Dec., 1868, he resumed that office, from which he was transferred in 1870 to the Presidency of the Board of Trade. Just before retiring from office in Feb., 1874, Mr. Gladstone recommended the Queen to bestow a peerage on Mr. Chichester Fortescue, who was accordingly created Baron Carlingford. In consequence of the introduction of Mr. Gladstone's Irish Land Bill in April, 1881, the Duke of Argyll resigned his seat in the Cabinet and his office of Lord Privy Seal. Lord Carlingford was thereupon appointed to succeed his Grace in that office, and towards the close of the Parliamentary Session he had charge of the Land Bill. In 1883 he succeeded Lord Spencer as President of the Council, but resigned office with his party in 1885. Since 1886 he has been prevented by weak health from taking part in public life, but is a member of the Liberal Unionist party, and voted against the Second Reading of the Home Rule Bill in the House of Lords in 1893.

CARLISLE, Bishop of. See GOODWIN, THE RIGHT REV. HARVEY.

CARLISLE, John Griffin, American Statesman, was born in Campbell (now Kenton) County, Kentucky, Sept. 5, 1835. He received a common school education, studied law, and began its practice in 1858. From 1859 to 1861 he was a member of the Kentucky House of Representatives, and of the State Senate from 1866 to 1871, resigning his seat to accept the office of Lieut.-Governor, to which he was elected in Aug. 1871, and which he occupied until 1875. In 1876 he was elected a member of the lower branch of Congress, where he continued to sit until May, 1890, when he was sent to the United States Senate to fill the unexpired term of the late Senator Beck (to 1895). From 1883 to 1889, he was the (Democratic) Speaker of the House of Representatives.

CARLOS I. (Dom Carlos), King of Portugal and the Algarves, son of Louis I., was born in Lisbon on Sept. 28, 1863, married in Lisbon, May 22, 1886, Amélie, Princess of Orléans-Bourbon, daughter of the late Comte de Paris, and has two children. He succeeded to the throne on Oct. 19, 1889. During a financial crisis in 1892 King Carlos and the Royal Family renounced a fifth of their yearly income for the benefit of the nation. In April, 1893, an attempt was made on the king's life as he was being driven through Lisbon.

CARLOS (Don), Duke of Madrid (Carlos Maria de los Dolores Juan Isidoro Josef Francesco Quirino Antonio Miguel Gabriel Rafael), who claims to be the legitimate King of Spain by the title of Charles VII., was born March 30, 1848. His father, Don Juan, was the brother of Don Carlos (Charles VI.), known as the Count de Montemolin, in support of whose claims the Carlist risings of 1848, 1855, and 1860 were organised. As Charles VI. died without children, Jan. 13, 1861, his rights devolved upon his brother, Don Juan, who had married, on Feb. 6, 1847, the Archduchess Maria Teresa of Austria, Princess of Modena. Their son, the present Don Carlos, who was educated principally in Austria, married, on Feb. 4, 1867, Margaret de Bourbon, of Bourbon, Princess of Parma, daughter of the late Duke Ferdinand Charles III., Mademoiselle de France, Duchess of Parma, and sister of the late Comte de Chambord (Henry V. of France). In Oct. 1878, Don Juan abdicated in favour of his son, whose standard was raised in the north of Spain by some of his partisans, April 21, 1872. On July 16, in that year, Don Carlos published a proclamation, addressed to the inhabitants of Catalonia, Aragon, and Valentia, calling upon them to take up arms in his cause, and promising to restore to them their ancient liberties; and in the following December Don Alfonzo, the brother of Don Carlos, assumed the command of the Carlist bands in Catalonia. Don Carlos himself made his entry into Spain, July 15, 1873, announcing that he came for the purpose of saving the country. From that period the war was waged with remarkable vigour, and the various governments which came into power at Madrid strove in vain to dislodge the Carlists from their strongholds in the north of Spain. When the Republic came to an end, and the eldest son of the ex-Queen Isabella returned to Spain as Alfonso XII., Don Carlos issued a proclamation, dated at his headquarters at Vera, Jan. 6, 1875, calling upon Spain to adhere to his side. The contest was carried on with great stubbornness and gallantry by the Carlists for more than a twelvemonth after that; but in January, 1876, Tolosa, their last stronghold, fell, and its defenders, flying in disorder, sought refuge on French territory. Don Carlos went to Paris, but on July 18, 1881, was expelled from France on the ground of his having ostentatiously allied himself with the partisans of the Comte de Chambord. Since the death of Alfonso XII., Don Carlos has not actively come forward as a pretender. Don Carlos has five children—the Infanta Blanca, born Sept. 7, 1868; the Infante Jaime (Don Jaime), Prince of the Asturias, born June 27, 1870; the Infanta Elvira, born July 28, 1871; the Infanta Beatrix, born March 21, 1874; and the Infanta Alix, born June 29, 1876.

CARMEN, Sylva. See ELIZABETH, QUEEN OF ROUMANIA.

CARNEGIE, Andrew, the "Iron King," an American manufacturer, was born at Dunfermline, Scotland, Nov. 25, 1837. His family removed to the United States in 1848 and settled at Pittsburgh, Pa., and two years later Andrew began his business career by attending a small stationary engine. This he soon left to become a telegraph messenger, and later he became an operator. While clerk of the superintendent of the telegraph lines of the Pennsylvania R. R. Co. at Pittsburgh, he aided in the adoption by that company of the Woodruff sleeping-car, and this gave him the nucleus of his present great fortune. He was made superintendent of the Pittsburgh division of the Pennsylvania road, and soon afterwards acquired an interest in some oil wells that proved very profitable. Subsequently he became associated with others in establishing a rolling-mill, which has grown to be the largest and most complete system of iron and steel industries in the world ever controlled by one individual. He has spent large sums of money for educational and charitable purposes. At his native place he erected, in 1879, commodious swimming-baths for the use of the people, and in the following year gave it $40,000 for a free library. He gave $50,000 in 1884 to the Bellevue Hospital Medical College at New York for a histological laboratory. Since 1885 he has expended nearly two millions of dollars on a music-hall, library, and art gallery at Pittsburgh, and Alleghany City, Pa. A large music-hall in 1890 was built in New York through his generosity, at a cost of $1,125,000. Edinburgh has also received $250,000 from him for a free library; and other libraries have been established by him at Braddock, Pa., and elsewhere. His latest benefaction is the gift of $50,000 for a public library at Ayr. He has frequently contributed to periodicals on the labour question and similar economic topics, and has published in book form "An American Four-in-Hand in Britain," 1883; "Round the World," 1884; and "Triumphant Democracy," 1886 (new edition 1893), besides several pamphlets.

CARPENTER, The Right Rev. William Boyd, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Ripon, born about 1841, was educated at St. Catherine's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1864, M.A. 1867). After holding various curacies he was, in 1870, appointed Vicar of St. James's, Holloway, where he remained until, in 1879, he became Vicar of Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, W. He was Select Preacher at Cambridge in 1875 and 1877; Hulsean Lecturer at Cambridge 1878; Honorary Chaplain to the Queen, 1878; Select Preacher at Oxford in 1882; Bampton Lecturer, 1887; and received from the University of Oxford an honorary D.C.L. in 1889. In 1882 he was appointed to a vacant canonry at Windsor. On the death of the late Dr. Bickersteth he was, in 1884, consecrated Bishop of Ripon. He presided over the Church Congress held at Wakefield in 1886; and in 1887 he was selected by the House of Commons to preach the Jubilee Sermon at St. Margaret's, Westminster. He is the author of "Thoughts on Prayer," "Narcissus," "Heart Healing," "The Witness of the Heart to Christ," "Truth in Tale," and "The Permanent Elements of Religion."

CARR, Joseph William Comyns, was born in 1849. In 1870 he matriculated at the London University, and afterwards passed in the honours division of the first examination for the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He became a student of the Inner Temple in 1869, and was called to the Bar in 1872, having gained a studentship in Roman and International Law at the Inns of Court. Mr. Comyns Carr then joined the Northern Circuit, but shortly afterwards ceased to practise at the Bar, and devoted himself to literature and journalism. From 1870 to 1880 he was a constant contributor to the principal literary reviews and magazines. Writing especially upon subjects connected with art, he held for some years the post of Art Critic on the Pall Mall Gazette, and in 1875 he accepted the English editorship of L'Art. He was also associated with Sir Coutts-Lindsay in the establishment of the Grosvenor Gallery, and was one of the Directors of that Institution. His works on art include "Drawings by the Old Masters," 1877; "The Abbey Church of St. Albans," 1878; "Examples of Contemporary Art," 1878; "Essays on Art," "Art in Provincial France," 1883; and "Papers on Art," 1884. Mr. Carr has also written for the stage. In 1882 he produced a dramatised version of Mr. Hardy's novel "Far from the Madding Crowd;" and in 1884 he collaborated with the late Hugh Conway in the drama of "Called Back," founded upon the popular story of that name. "Arthur," now being acted at the Lyceum (Jan., 1895), is from his pen.

CARRINGTON, Charles Robert, 3rd Lord, G.C.M.G., Joint Hereditary Lord Great Chamberlain of England, was born in 1843, and educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1863. Subsequently he entered the Royal Horse Guards, where he rose to the rank of Captain, and afterwards became Lieut.-Colonel of the 3rd Battalion of the Oxfordshire Light Infantry. From 1865 to 1868 he was M.P. for Wycombe. He was Captain of the Corps of Gentlemen at Arms from 1881-1885; Governor of New South Wales from 1885-1890; Lord Chamberlain of the Queen's Household in 1892; and is a member of the London County Council. Lord Carrington was A.D.C. to the Prince of Wales on his visit to India in 1875-1876, and has travelled in the United States and the Colonies. He was appointed Chairman of the Welsh Land Commission in 1893. In politics he is a strong Liberal. In July, 1878, he married Cecilia, eldest daughter of Charles, fifth Lord Suffield.

CARRODUS, John Tiplady, was born January 20, 1836, at Braithwaite, near Keighley, Yorkshire. At twelve years of age he went to study the violin with Bernhard Molique in Stuttgart, having received instruction before that from his father, a musical enthusiast, in Keighley. He remained with Molique in Germany, and later in London, until the year 1854. His first important public appearance was in the Hanover Square Rooms, at a concert given by Charles Salaman in 1849. Subsequently his friends in Bradford strongly urged his claim to appear at the first Bradford Festival in 1853, and, backed by a testimonial obtained from Spohr, he played a solo conducted by Costa, after which he was engaged at the Royal Italian Opera, Philharmonic Concerts, and Charles Hallé's Manchester orchestra. Eventually he became leader of all three of these societies, and has played concertos at the Philharmonic, Crystal Palace, and other important musical societies, including leading the orchestra and playing violin solos at the Three Choir and Leeds Festivals. He has published some violin solos and studies. He has several sons, who all hold positions of distinction in the musical world.

CARRUTHERS, William, F.R.S., F.L.S., was born at Moffat, Scotland, in 1830, and educated at the Academy there, and afterwards at the University and New College, Edinburgh. He entered the British Museum as Assistant in the Department of Botany in 1859; and succeeded Mr. J. J. Bennett, as keeper of that Department, on his retirement in 1871. Mr. Carruthers has conducted many original investigations on living and fossil plants, and has published numerous memoirs on fossil botany in the journals and transactions of learned societies. He re-edited Lindley and Hutton's "Fossil Flora," and was afterwards engaged in preparing an account of the fossil plants of Britain, supplementary to that work.

CARTWRIGHT, The Right Hon. Sir Richard John, K.C.M.G., Canadian statesman, was born at Kingston, Dec. 4, 1835. He was educated at his native city and at Trinity College, Dublin, and entered the Canadian Parliament as a Conservative in 1863, but in 1870 left that party, and has since been one of the Liberal leaders of the Dominion. In 1873 he was made Minister of Finance in the Mackenzie Government, an office he retained until the general defeat of the Liberals in 1878. Since that time he has held no office other than his membership in Parliament. In 1879 he was created a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

CARVALHO. See MIOLAN-CARVALHO, MADAME, M. C.

CASATI, Gaetano, is the son of a doctor at Monza, where he was born in 1838. He studied at Monza, Milan, and Pavia, devoting himself more especially to mathematics. When one-and-twenty, inspired by the youthful ardour of those days for the independence of Italy, he became a soldier in Piedmont, joining the corps of Bersagliere. He obtained advancement, and in 1867 was elevated to the rank of captain. But service in the army did not offer him sufficient scope for his energy. He set his mind on becoming an African explorer, and to this end gave in his resignation in 1879. Regarded as a man of great promise and capacity, he was commissioned by the Società d'Esplorazione Commerciale d'Africa to proceed to that country at their expense, and he sailed from Genoa on Dec. 24, 1879. He went by way of Suakin and Berber to Khartoum, where he arrived about the middle of May, 1880, his immediate object being to reach the Bahr-el-Gazelle, and there see his fellow-countryman, Gessi Pacha, then governor of that particular region. In this he succeeded, and the meeting of the two was of a touching character. Gessi soon afterwards nursed Casati through a dangerous fever, paying him the most devoted attention, and refusing to leave him until he was thoroughly restored to health. Then, however, Gessi moved on to Khartoum, intending to return to Europe, though he got no further than Suez, where he died. After Gessi's departure Casati had another severe attack of fever, this time of prolonged duration, but he was able on Oct. 14, 1880, to proceed to Rumbeck. After this nothing was heard about him by his friends until a letter reached them from Tangasi, dated Dec. 29, 1881, stating that he had been kept a prisoner by a certain chief, Azanga by name, and had only succeeded in making his escape on the 7th of that month. Getting on the march again in 1881, Casati made his way to the Niam-Niam territory, which lies immediately to the west of what was once Emin Pacha's province, and has since been visited and described by George Schweinfurth. In a letter dated April 13, 1883, Casati describes his cordial reception by Emin Pacha at Lado, where he saw also Junker, the Russian explorer. Emin Pacha, he says, treated him with "rare liberality and generosity." At that time, however, the Mahdi was assuming a very threatening attitude, and thus the three Europeans found themselves "united but shut in" in this extreme corner of the Egyptian possessions. Two expeditions were organized to effect their rescue, one conducted by Dr. Fischer, which got as far as the east of Victoria Nyanza, and then had to return for the want of the requisite goods for barter; and the other led by Dr. Lenz, who proceeded by way of the Congo, but also was obliged to abandon his attempt, leaving, as we all know, the real honours of the rescue to be obtained by Stanley. At the request of Emin Pacha he went to live as "resident" in the territory of King Kabba Rega, son of M'tesa, of Unyoro. In this capacity part of his duty was to play the rôle of Emin's postmaster. Emin forwarded to him all his correspondence for Europe, and he had to devise the means as best he could by which it was to be sent to the coast. At first Casati was well treated by the king; but, after the lapse of about twenty months, Kabba Rega changed his humour, and condemned him to death, together with an Arab merchant named Biri, who, Casati heard, was actually killed. Casati, however, though at first tied with cords round his neck, arms, and legs, managed to escape with some of his men. Chased from place to place he got over sufficient ground during the night to reach at last the Albert Nyanza, where lay his sole hope of safety, though even there he ran the risk of being caught by a certain chief in that region who, as he heard, had received orders from the king to capture and murder him. Happily they found a boat, in which one of the men went off to tell Emin Pacha what had happened. Two days afterwards Emin Pacha arrived in his steamer, and rescued Casati from his perilous situation. It was high time. For three days Casati had not had a morsel of food to eat. "I am now in safety, it is true," wrote he from the Albert Nyanza on March 25, 1888, "but I am oppressed with grief at the loss of all my notes. The work of so many years has vanished like smoke!" But Casati had previously sent home sufficient information to show that he had already done valuable service to the cause of African exploration.

CASHEL, Bishop of. See DAY, THE RIGHT REV. MAURICE FITZGERALD.

CASIMIR-PERIER, Jean Paul Pierre, Ex-President of the French Republic, is the son and grandson of statesmen, his father, Auguste Casimir-Perier, the diplomatist, having been Minister of the Interior in 1871, whilst his grandfather was leader of the Opposition on the accession of Louis-Philippe, and afterwards Premier. The Ex-President was born on Nov. 8, 1847. After a brilliant career as a student of literature and history he received the University degree of licencié ès lettres, and in the Franco-Prussian war joined the Mobiles of the Aube who were summoned to Paris, where during the siege he behaved with such gallantry as to be mentioned in an Order of the Day, and afterwards to receive the decoration of the Legion of Honour. When his father joined the first Republican Cabinet of M. Thiers, he became chef du cabinet at the Ministry of the Interior. In order to open to him a political career his father resigned his position as Councillor-General of the Aube in April, 1874, and introduced him to the electors of Nogent-sur-Seine, under the sanction of the Perier political tradition. He was elected Deputy without opposition on July 18. The same year he conducted a brisk electoral campaign in his department in support of the Republican candidature of General Saussier. At the general elections of February, 1878, he was elected unopposed for Nogent-sur-Seine. His profession of faith was resolutely Republican, and he joined the Left Centre and the Republican Left in the Chamber of Deputies, voting constantly with the majority supported by these groups. After the crisis of May, 1877, he was one of the 363 deputies who refused to pass a vote of confidence in the Broglie Ministry. At the succeeding elections he was returned by a large majority over the Bonapartist candidate, M. Walkenaer, and when in December a purely Republican Cabinet was formed he was appointed, under M. Bardoux, Under-Secretary of State at the Ministry of Public Instruction. He retained this post until the Cabinet Dufaure went out of office in January, 1879. Three months later he abandoned the Left Centre for the Republican Left. Re-elected for Nogent-sur-Seine in August, 1881, he joined the Union Républicaine. In February, 1883, he retired from the Chamber on the law being passed to exclude members of French royal families from public employments. In this he followed family tradition, and is in consequence still regarded as Orleanist in tendency. In the following March he consented to re-enter Parliament, and on Oct. 17, 1883, was appointed Under-Secretary of State at the Ministry of War, and remained here till his superior minister, General Campenan, retired in January, 1885. In the October elections of the same year he was returned by a large majority for the Aube. In September, 1889, he was again elected for Nogent-sur-Seine. In each successive Parliament M. Casimir-Perier has enjoyed great personal influence among the Republican majority. In 1890 he was elected Vice-President of the Chamber and President of the Budget Committee. In the summer of 1894 he was elected President of the French Republic, immediately after the assassination of the late President Carnot. His political tradition was not so purely revolutionary as that of the Carnots, but his election took place at a crisis in the affairs of France when an essentially strong and courageous man was needed at the head of the State. This M. Casimir-Perier had always been held to be. He has put down Anarchism with a strong hand, and his great wealth and high social position would have rendered him acceptable to whole classes who have hitherto held aloof from the Elysée, had he not stultified the promise of a brilliant presidential career by suddenly announcing his resignation in Jan., 1895, on the ground that he had been insulted and misrepresented from the first, and could not retain an office which had been irksome in the extreme. The name Casimir-Perier was adopted by the Periers, father and son, in 1874.

CASSAGNAC, Granier de. See GRANIER DE CASSAGNAC, PAUL DE.

CASTELAR, Emilio, for long a Spanish statesman, and one of the most eloquent orators of the day, born in 1832, became notorious, early in his career, in consequence of his extreme democratic and socialistic opinions, which he expounded in various Liberal journals. For a time he was Professor of History and Philosophy in the University of Madrid, and in 1866 he took a leading part in the revolutionary movement, which was put down by Serrano. On this occasion he was condemned to death, but he made good his escape, and sought refuge first at Geneva and afterwards in France. When the revolution broke out in September, 1868, he returned to his native country, and was one of the most energetic leaders of the republican movement. He exerted himself to the utmost in order to bring about the establishment of a republic, but at the general election for the Constituent Cortes in February, 1869, the republicans succeeded in returning only a small proportion of their candidates, among whom, however, was Señor Castelar. In the discussions respecting the new constitution of Spain, Señor Castelar advocated, but unsuccessfully, the principle of republican institutions. In June, 1869, he vigorously opposed the project of a regency, and he was also concerned in the republican insurrections which occurred in October of that year. In the government chosen by the Cortes after the abdication of King Amadeo, Señor Castelar was Minister of Foreign Affairs. On Aug. 24, 1873, he was elected President of the Cortes by 135 votes against 73, but he vacated that post on Sept. 6, when he was nominated President of the Executive Power. His first measure was the prorogation of the Cortes and the assumption of dictatorial power. He next took energetic, but ineffectual, measures to suppress the Carlist insurrection, and despatched the Minister of War in person to Cuba to protect Spanish interests in that island. When, however, the Cortes re-assembled on Jan. 2, 1874, it refused by 120 votes against 100, to pass a vote of confidence in President Castelar, who resigned. Thereupon General Pavia, as Captain-General of Madrid, forcibly dissolved the Cortes, and appointed a provisional government, with Marshal Serrano at its head. Soon after the pronunciamiento in favour of Alfonso XII., Señor Castelar quitted Madrid and proceeded to Geneva, January, 1875. While in that city, being disgusted at the educational decree promulgated by the Spanish Government, he resigned the Chair of History in the University of Madrid, March 6, 1875. Subsequently he returned to Spain, and succeeded, though not without considerable difficulty, in obtaining a seat in the Cortes as Deputy for Madrid, at the elections of January, 1876. Since that time he has spoken frequently, and always with effect; but he has been a politician without a party, too advanced for Sagasta and too moderate for the Zorrillists. In the spring of 1893 he announced his intention of retiring once for all from political life, and, whilst declaring himself as staunch a republican as heretofore, said he was convinced that Spain could only be firmly governed under monarchical institutions. He was elected a member of the Spanish Academy in 1871, but he did not deliver his reception speech till April 25, 1880. Señor Castelar has written "Ernesto, novelo original de costumbres," 1855; "Lucano, su Vida, su Genio, su Poema," 1857; "Legendas Populares," 1857; "Ideas Democráticas," 1858; "La Civilizacion en los cinco primeros siglos del Cristianismo. Lecciones pronunciadas en el Ateneo de Madrid," 2 vols., 1858-59; "Crónica de la Guerra de Africa," 1859; "La Redencion del Esclavo," 1859; "Colleccion de los principales articulos politicos y literarios," 1859; "Cartas á un Obispo sobre la Libertad de la Iglesia," printed in "Biblioteca de Democracia," 1864; "Discurso pronunciado en la noche del 13 de Novembre de 1868, con motivo de instalarse el Comité Republicano de Madrid," 1868; "Discursos Parliamentarios, en la Asamblea Constituyente," 3 vols., 1871; "Roma vieja y nueva Italia," translated into English by Mrs. Arthur Arnold, under the title of "Old Rome and New Italy," 1873; "Semblanzas contemporáneas de los personajes mas celebres del mundo en las Letras, las Ciencias y las Artes;" "Vida de Lord Byron;" "Historia de un Corazon," a romance; "La Rusia Contemporanea," 1881; and "Tragedias de la Historia," 1883.

CASTLETOWN (Lord), Bernard E. B. FitzPatrick, 2nd Baron Castletown, of Upper Ossory, was born in 1848, and educated at Eton and Oxford. He went through the Franco-Prussian campaign as assistant under the Red Cross Society, and was present in Paris during the earlier days of the Commune. From 1871-75 he served in the 1st Life Guards, and was with the Household Cavalry in the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, gaining the medal and clasp after Tel-el-Kebir. He has travelled extensively in Lapland, the little-known parts of Asia Minor, the Rocky Mountains, and British North America. He sat in Parliament for three years as Conservative member for Portarlington (1880-83), and took a prominent part in the discussion of Irish questions. Since his accession to the House of Lords his political attitude has always been that of a "Moderate." In 1885 he was appointed Chairman of the Barrow Drainage Royal Commission, and he is a D.L. and J.P. for Queen's County, Ireland. He married in 1875 the Hon. Clare St. Leger, only child of Viscount Doneraile.

CATES, Arthur, F.R.I.B.A., F.S.I., &c., architect, born in London, April 29, 1829, was educated at King's College School, and became a pupil of Sydney Smirke, R.A. In 1870 he succeeded Sir James Pennethorne as Architect to the Land Revenues of the Crown in London, under the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods and Forests. He is Surveyor to the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple, and holds other appointments. For some years he was Hon. Sec. to, and is now member of, the Council of the Society of Biblical Archæology. He is Hon. Sec. to the Architectural Publication Society ("The Dictionary of Architecture"), and, since 1887, he has been a Vice-President of the Royal Institute of British Architects.

CAVE, The Hon. Sir Lewis William, was born July 3, 1832, at Desborough, in Northamptonshire (where his father owned a small estate), and was educated at Rugby, under Dr. Tait. In 1851 he was elected to an Exhibition at Lincoln College, Oxford, and took his B.A. degree in 1855, having been placed in the second class classics in the final examination. In 1856 he was admitted as a student at the Inner Temple, and in June, 1859, was called to the Bar. In the following year he joined the Midland circuit, and subsequently left it to join the new North-Eastern circuit. Mr. Cave was appointed a revising barrister in 1865, and held the office until he obtained a silk gown in 1875. In 1873 he was appointed Recorder of Lincoln. Mr. Cave was elected a Bencher of his Inn in 1877, and in the same year was made a Commissioner of Assize for the autumn circuit. In 1880 he was appointed a Commissioner to inquire into the Parliamentary elections at Oxford. In March, 1881, Mr. Cave was appointed one of the Justices of the High Court, and in April received the honour of knighthood, together with Mr. Justice Mathew. In December, 1883, Mr. Justice Cave was appointed Judge in Bankruptcy, in which position he had to administer the new Bankruptcy Act, which came into operation on Jan. 1, 1884. Mr. Justice Cave has edited several law books. From 1861 to 1865, in conjunction with the Hon. E. Chandos Leigh, Q.C., he edited the "Reports of the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved." In 1861 Mr. Cave, in conjunction with Mr. Bell, edited the seventh edition of Stone's "Practice of Petty Sessions." In 1869 he edited the sixth edition, and in 1875 the seventh edition of Addison's "Treatise of the Law of Contracts," and in 1879 he edited the fifth edition of the same author's "Law of Torts."

CAYLEY, Professor Arthur, F.R.S., Ph.D., Sc.D., D.C.L., LL.D., son of the late Henry Cayley, Russia merchant, of a Yorkshire family, was born at Richmond, Surrey, on Aug. 16, 1821, and educated at King's College, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1842, as Senior Wrangler and first Smith's prizeman. He was elected Fellow of his College, was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1849, and for some years practised as a conveyancer. In 1863, on the institution of the professorship, he was elected Sadlerian Professor of pure mathematics in the University of Cambridge. He was elected an Honorary Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and in 1875 was re-elected to a Foundation Fellowship. He is a correspondent of the French Institute in the section of Astronomy, and is an honorary member, associate, or correspondent of the Academies of Berlin, Vienna, Rome and many others. He received the degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford in 1864, and that of LL.D. from the University of Dublin in 1865, and from the University of Edinburgh in 1884. He has also received the degree of Ph.D. from the Universities of Göttingen, Leyden, and Bologna, and in 1888 the degree of Sc.D. was conferred upon him by his own University. He is a past President of the Royal Astronomical, the London Mathematical and the Cambridge Philosophical Societies, and was President of the British Association at the meeting at Southport in 1883. He has received the Royal and Copley medals of the Royal Society, the De Morgan medal of the London Mathematical Society, and the Huyghens medal (Leyden). His mathematical memoirs, exceeding 800 in number, which were originally published in English and Foreign mathematical journals and Transactions, are now in course of publication by the University of Cambridge in ten volumes quarto, under his own editorship. Six volumes are already issued (1894). He is also the author of a treatise on Elliptic Functions. His writings relate to most branches of pure mathematics, besides dynamics and astronomy. He gave, in the first half of the year 1882, a course of mathematical lectures at the John Hopkins University, Baltimore. For some years he was a member of the Council of the Senate of the University of Cambridge, and of the Press Syndicate. He was also the chairman of the Association for promoting the higher education of women (to which Newnham College belongs). In the year 1890 the distinction of officer of the Legion of Honour was conferred upon him by the President of the French Republic.

CECIL, Arthur. See BLUNT, ARTHUR CECIL.

CECIL, Lord Eustace Brownlow Henry, second surviving son of the second Marquis of Salisbury, by his first wife, was born in London, in 1834, and educated at Harrow and Sandhurst. He entered the Army in 1851, served in the Crimea, and retired as Captain and Lieut.-Colonel, Coldstream Guards, in 1863. He represented South Essex in the House of Commons in the Conservative interest from July, 1865, to December, 1868, and West Essex from 1868 until 1885. In February, 1875, he was appointed Surveyor-General of Ordnance, which post he retained until the resignation of his party in 1880. Lord Eustace Cecil is the author of "Impressions of Life at Home and Abroad," 1865. He is a magistrate for Middlesex, Essex, and Dorset, and a county alderman of Dorset.

CERRITO, Francesca. See ST. LÉON, MDME.

CESNOLA, Count, Luigi Palma di, LL.D., was born at Rivarolo, near Turin, Italy, June 29, 1832. He received a collegiate education, after which he was placed in a seminary with a view to his entering the priesthood. Preferring, however, a more active life, he left the seminary to enter the Sardinian Army on the outbreak of the war with Austria in 1848. In Feb., 1849, he was promoted to a Lieutenancy on the battlefield for bravery. On the close of the war, he was ordered to the Royal Military Academy at Cherasco (near Turin), from which he graduated in 1851. After remaining in the army several years, he went to New York in 1860, and, in 1861, was made a Lieut.-Colonel in the volunteer service of the U.S. army, and subsequently Colonel of the 4th New York Cavalry, and served throughout the war, commanding a brigad of cavalry much of the time. At Aldie, Va., June 17, 1863, he was presented by General Kilpatrick with his own sword for heroic conduct on the battlefield, and at the next charge he was severely wounded, made a prisoner of war, and was confined in Libby Prison for over nine months. At the close of the civil war, he was appointed American Consul at Cyprus, where he remained until the consulate was abolished (1865-1877). It was while he occupied that position that he made the discovery of antiquities with which his name is now associated. He has been made an honorary member of many scientific and literary societies, both in Europe and in America, and the kings of Italy and Bavaria have bestowed knightly orders upon him. Both Columbia and Princeton Colleges conferred on him the degree of LL.D. In 1873 the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York secured by purchase the Cypriote antiquities collected up to that date, and Cesnola was granted an extended leave of absence to visit New York and arrange and classify them. Returning to Cyprus in 1873, he made further discoveries and collections, which also were secured to the Metropolitan Museum. In 1877 he settled permanently in New York. In 1878 he was made a Trustee of the Museum, and Secretary of the Board of Trustees. In 1879, when the museum was removed to Central Park, he was appointed Director of it. Since that day his time has been chiefly devoted to promoting the growth of the Museum, which is to-day one of the leading Museums of the world. He published a narrative of the discoveries and excavations in 1878 under the title of "Cyprus: its ancient cities, tombs, and temples;" and in 1882 a description of the "Metropolitan Museum of Art." In 1890 he issued the second volume of the "Atlas of the Cesnola Collection," under the auspices of the Museum.

CHADWICK, David, was born at Macclesfield, Dec. 23, 1821. He was educated at Manchester, and in 1843 began business as a professional accountant. In 1844 he was appointed Treasurer to the Corporation of Salford, and retained that office till 1860. He took an active part in the establishment of the Salford Royal Free Library and Museum, Peel Park, and of the Salford Working Men's College, and was the first treasurer of both institutions. He was Honorary Secretary and afterwards President of the Manchester Statistical Society, and was the first President of the Manchester Institute of Accountants, and is now a member of the Council of the Institute of Chartered Accountants. He was elected M.P. for Macclesfield in 1868, and was re-elected in 1874. In 1880 he was again returned for the same constituency, but on petition the election was declared void. He introduced into Parliament and carried through the Commons, and through the Second Reading in the Lords a bill for the amendment of the Joint Stock Companies Acts with compulsory forms of Balance Sheet and Profit and Loss Statements. He was some time a member of the Council of the London Statistical Society, and wrote a history of the rate of wages in Lancashire in 200 trades for twenty years. He is the author of various essays on Parliamentary Representation, Working Men's Colleges, Poor Rates and Principle of Rating, Water Meters, Financial Aspect of Sanitary Reform, the Equitable Adjustment of the Income-Tax, Profit-Sharing, and Joint Stock Companies. He is a prize essayist and Associate of the Institute of Civil Engineers. He erected the Macclesfield Free Library, and presented it to the Corporation, is a Governor, and one of the three Trustees of the Estate and Pictures of the Royal Holloway College at Egham, Surrey. He married, first, Louisa, youngest daughter of William Bow, Esq., and, second, Ursula, eldest daughter of Thomas Sopwith, Esq., M.A., C.E., F.R.S., of Newcastle-on-Tyne and Westminster.

CHAILLU, Paul Du. See DU CHAILLU, PAUL.

CHALLEMEL-LACOUR, Paul Armand, President of the French Senate, born at Avranches (Manche), May 19, 1827, studied at Paris in the Lycée of Saint Louis, entered the Normal School in 1846, and was first in the competition for graduation in philosophy in 1849. He was sent as Professor of Philosophy to the Lycées of Pau and Limoges. Arrested and imprisoned after the coup d'état, and then banished from France, he withdrew to Belgium, where he delivered lectures with success, and next to Switzerland, where he was appointed Professor of French Literature in the "Polytechnicon" of Zurich. After the amnesty he returned to his native country (1859), and contributed articles on literature, art, and philosophy to the Temps, the Revue Nationale, the Revue des Cours Scientifiques et Littéraires, the Revue Moderne, of which he became manager, and the Revue des Deux Mondes. In 1868 he established, in conjunction with Messieurs Brisson, Allain-Targé, and Gambetta, the Revue Politique, of which he undertook the management, and consequently underwent a conviction for publishing the lists of subscriptions for a monument to the representative Baudin. Appointed Prefect of the Rhône after Sept. 4, 1870, he was called upon to administer the affairs of the turbulent city of Lyons in circumstances of extreme difficulty. It is true that he did not succeed in preventing excesses there, but it is urged on his behalf that his authority was counterbalanced and held in check by the Committee of Public Safety. He resigned this office Feb. 5, 1871, and on Jan. 7, 1872, he was elected Deputy in the Radical interest for the Bouches-du-Rhône. In the chamber he distinguished himself by his eloquence and his readiness and calmness in debate. On Jan. 30, 1876, he was elected a Senator by the department of the Bouches-du-Rhône. M. Challemel-Lacour was mixed up at about the same period in two important law-suits. One of these was brought by the Brothers of Christian Doctrine of the commune of Caluire, in the Department of the Rhône, whose establishment had been occupied by troops during the war. After prolonged arguments, and notwithstanding a ministerial decree of April 10, 1878, which declared that the Prefect had acted in the name of the State, the Court of Cassation sent back the case to the Court of Dijon, which, on Jan. 30, 1879, condemned M. Challemel-Lacour and his associates in 97,243 francs damages. The second action was brought by M. Challemel-Lacour against La France Nouvelle, a Legitimist journal, which had charged him with cheating at play in a club, and the defendants were condemned, on Jan. 6, 1879, to pay a fine of 2000 francs and 10,000 francs costs. A few days afterwards (Jan. 14) he was sent to Berne as ambassador to the Swiss Confederation. On June 11, 1880, he was nominated ambassador to the Court of St. James's, in succession to M. Léon Say. On his appointment being made known in this country, an angry debate took place in the House of Commons, got up by Mr. O'Donnell, as to M. Challemel-Lacour's antecedents. Mr. O'Donnell was, however, defeated by 245 votes against 149. M. Challemel-Lacour continued to be Ambassador in London till Feb. 1882, when he was recalled at his own request. In the Cabinet formed by M. Jules Ferry in Feb. 1882, M. Challemel-Lacour held the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, and during the Tonkin complications defended the Government before the Chamber. Ill-health compelled him to resign his position as Minister in Nov. 1883. In Jan., 1885, he was re-elected Senator for the Bouches-du-Rhône, but he made no important political appearance until Dec., 1888, when he delivered a great speech which was regarded as an apology for the party of Opportunism. In Nov., 1891, he made another notable speech in favour of Free Trade. He has been elected President of the Senate. M. Challemel-Lacour was one of the founders, and is chief editor, of the République Française. He has published "La Philosophie Individualiste," an essay on Humboldt, in the "Bibliothèque de Philosophie Contemporaine," 1864; a translation of Ritter's "History of Philosophy," with an introduction, 3 vols., 1861; and he edited the works of Madame d'Épinay, 2 vols., 1869.

CHAMBERLAIN, The Rt. Hon. Joseph, M.P., P.C., eldest son of the late Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, a member of one of the City Companies, was born in London in 1836. His mother was Caroline, daughter of Mr. Henry Harben. He was educated at University College School, and afterwards became a member of a firm of wood-screw makers at Birmingham (Nettlefold & Chamberlain), which his father had joined in 1854. He retired from business in 1874, shortly after the decease of his father. Mr. Chamberlain had at this time obtained a certain local celebrity in consequence of his advanced Radical opinions and the fluency of speech with which he expressed them in one of the Birmingham debating societies. In 1868 he was appointed Chairman of the first Executive Committee of the Education League, and in November of the same year a member of the Birmingham Town Council. In 1873 he became Chairman of the Birmingham School Board, of which he was first elected a member in 1870. Mr. Chamberlain is also an Alderman of Birmingham, and was three times successively elected Mayor of the Borough (1874-75-76). His name was first brought before the public in Feb., 1874, when he came forward at the general election to oppose Mr. Roebuck at Sheffield. He was not successful, the numbers polled being 14,193 for Roebuck, 12,858 for Mundella, and 11,053 for Chamberlain. In June, 1876, he was returned for Birmingham, to fill up the vacancy occasioned by Mr. Dixon's retirement from Parliamentary life. In the House of Commons Mr. Chamberlain chiefly attracted notice by his advocacy of the Gothenburg system of licensing places where intoxicating liquors are sold. He is in favour of disestablishment and of compulsory secular education. At the general election of April, 1880, he was returned with Mr. Muntz and Mr. Bright for Birmingham, the three Liberals gaining a large majority over the Conservative candidates, Major F. Burnaby and the Hon. A. G. C. Calthorpe. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Administration immediately after that election, Mr. Chamberlain was nominated President of the Board of Trade, with a seat in the Cabinet. As such he prepared and passed the Bankruptcy Act which is now in force, and attempted, but in vain, to pass a strong Merchant Shipping Bill. During this administration Mr. Chamberlain continued to be a prominent member of the Radical party; and at the general election of Nov., 1885, he was generally regarded as the leader of the "advanced wing." But after the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet of 1886 (in which he held the post of President of the Local Government Board), he found himself obliged to resign from inability to agree with the Prime Minister's Home Rule policy. At the general election of 1886, when he was returned unopposed for West Birmingham, he stood as a strong Unionist, and withdrew from connection with the Gladstone party. In 1887 he went to the United States as Chairman of a Fisheries Commission, and signed a Treaty in 1888. He went again to the States in the autumn of that year, and married Miss Endicott on Nov. 15. On the elevation of Lord Hartington to the peerage as Duke of Devonshire, Mr. Chamberlain was nominated the leader of the Liberal-Unionist party in the House of Commons. During and since the general election of 1892, he has untiringly opposed his former colleagues. He is of opinion that Unionism, in order to remain a power in politics, should abandon its merely negative policy.

CHAMBERLAIN, General, Sir Neville Bowles, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., the second son of the late Sir Henry Chamberlain, Bart. (who was for some years Consul-General and Chargé d'Affaires in Brazil), born at Rio, Jan. 18, 1820, was appointed to the Indian Army in 1836. He served as a subaltern with much distinction in Afghanistan and Scinde, and was wounded at Kandahar and at Ghuznee. In 1842 he was attached to the Governor-General's body-guards, and in 1843 appointed Deputy-Assistant Quarter-Master-General to the Army. In 1848 he was nominated by Lord Dalhousie one of his aides-de-camp, and commanded the 8th Irregular Cavalry, attached to the army in the Punjaub. In 1855, having previously discharged some important civil duties as military secretary to the Chief Commissioner (Sir John Lawrence), he was placed in command of a force of irregular troops, which he retained until the breaking out of the Indian Mutiny. On the death of Col. Chester before Delhi, Col. Chamberlain (then brigadier-general) succeeded to the post of Adjutant-General of the Bengal Army, and was severely wounded in the sortie of July 18. He was nominated a C.B. in 1857, and in reward for his services in the Mutiny, was appointed aide-de-camp to the Queen. He afterwards gained distinction by his services against the hill-tribes, and has been wounded more frequently than any other officer of his years and standing in the service. He was advanced to the rank of Lieutenant-General in May, 1872; appointed Colonel of the Bengal Infantry in May, 1874; a member of Council of the Governor of Madras in 1875; and Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army in Dec. 1875. In Aug., 1878, he was appointed the head of the English special mission to Cabul. This mission was abruptly stopped by the refusal of the Ameer of Afghanistan's officer at Ali Musjid to permit it to advance (Sept. 21). He was created General in 1877; and rose to be Commander-in-Chief of the Army of Madras, 1881. He retired in 1886.

CHAMPNEYS, Basil, architect, son of the late Dean of Lichfield, was born in 1842, and educated at Charterhouse, being elected Foundation Scholar and Gold Medallist in 1860, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in classical honours in 1864. He studied architecture under the late John Prichard, diocesan architect of Llandaff, and began practice in 1867. Amongst other works he has designed the following public buildings:—at Cambridge, the Divinity and Literary Schools, the Old Hall, Sidgwick Hall, Clough Hall, and other buildings of Newnham College, the Archæological Museum, and All Saints' Memorial; at Oxford, the Indian Institute, the new buildings at New College, Lady Margaret Hall and Mansfield College; at Bedford, the Girls' Schools and new Grammar School buildings for the Harpur Trust; at Harrow, the new school buildings and Butler Museum; and the Women's Fawcett Memorial on the Thames Embankment. He has designed the following churches:—St. Luke's, Kentish Town; St. Peter-le-Bailey, Oxford; St. Mary Star of the Sea, Hastings; Havering-atte-Bowe in Essex; Matfield in Kent; Glascote in Warwickshire; Stonefold and Laneside in Lancashire. Mr. Champneys has carried out the restoration of Tatenhill, Tamworth, Wednesbury, and Alrewas in Staffordshire; Bexley in Kent; Upholland in Lancashire; Chilcote in Derbyshire; Okewood in Surrey; St. Dunstan's, Stepney; St. Bride's, Fleet Street; and St. Alphege, Greenwich, in the London district; and is also the designer of the Palace Avenue Hotel in Kensington. Mr. Champneys is the author of a work entitled, "A Quiet Corner of England," published in 1875.

CHANDLER, Charles Frederick, M.D., Ph.D., LL.D., American Chemist, born at Lancaster, Massachusetts, Dec. 6, 1836. Studied at the Lawrence Scientific School of Harvard College, and afterwards at the Universities of Göttingen and Berlin, receiving his degree of Ph.D. at Göttingen in 1856. In 1857 he was placed in charge of the chemical department of Union College, and in 1858 was appointed to the Chair of Chemistry in the New York College of Pharmacy. In 1864 he was made Professor of Analytical and Applied Chemistry in the newly instituted School of Mines connected with Columbia College, New York, and on the reorganization of the school in 1877 became Professor of Chemistry both in the school and in the college. In 1865 he was appointed chemist to the New York Metropolitan Board of Health, of which for a number of years he was President. In 1870, in connection with his brother, he established the American Chemist, a monthly periodical, in which the results of his principal investigations have appeared, but which was discontinued in 1877. He became connected with the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1872, as Adjunct Professor of Chemistry and Medical Jurisprudence, succeeding to the full Professorship in 1876. The degree of M.D. was conferred upon him by the University of the City of New York in 1873 and that of LL.D. by Union College in the same year. He is a member of the Chemical Societies of London, Berlin, Paris and New York, of the National Academy of Sciences and of a large number of other Scientific Associations. While a member of the Board of Health, Dr. Chandler did much to improve the sanitary condition of New York by establishing a rigid inspection of milk and food supplied, by securing the passage of the Tenement House Act, by regulating the location of Slaughter-houses, and in numerous other ways. He has published "The Inaugural Dissertation," 1856; "Report on Water for Locomotives," 1865; "Examination of Various Rocks and Minerals," which appeared in the geological reports of Iowa and Wisconsin; "Investigations on Mineral Waters," and papers on the water supply of cities, on petroleum, on the purification of coal-gas; and has also contributed numerous scientific articles to Johnson's "Universal Cyclopædia," 1874-77.

CHANEY, Henry James, F.R.A.S., born at Windsor in 1842, was educated at a private School, entered the civil service in 1859, was appointed in 1860 to the Exchequer to take charge of the technical duties arising under the Sale of Gas Act, 1859, became Secretary to the Royal Commissions on Standards, 1867-8, and, on the retirement in 1876 of the Warden of the Standards, he was appointed Superintendent, Standards Department, in the Board of Trade. He has been a member of various committees relating to units and standards of measurement; and represented Great Britain in Paris in 1889 at the General Conference of the International Committee of Weights and Measures. He is identified with improvements in the local administration of the laws relating to the weights and measures used in trade, and with recent demands for higher accuracy in weighing and measuring instruments used for scientific and manufacturing purposes. His printed papers, issued under the direction of the Board of Trade, include "Reports on Standards of Measurement for Gas;" "Verification of Standards for the Governments of India and Russia," 1877; "Screw Gauges," 1881-3; "Apothecaries' Weights and Measures," 1881; "Calculations of Densities and Expansions," 1883; "On the Prevention of Fraud in the Sale of Coal and of Bread;" "Expansion of Palladium;" "Re-comparison of the Imperial and Metric Units," 1883; "Verification of the new Parliamentary Standards of Length and Weight," 1881-3; "Mode of Testing weighing-machines," 1886; "Note on the Gold Coinage," 1886; "Re-determination of the Scientific Unit of Volume," 1889.

CHANLER, Mrs. Amélie, née Rives, an American writer, was born at Richmond, Va. in 1863. She was educated chiefly at the home of her grandfather, William C. Rives, Castle Hill, Albemarle co., Va., and early showed a taste for literature. Her first published story was "A Brother to Dragons," and appeared in the Atlantic in 1886. This was followed by "Farrier Lass of Piping Pebworth," "Nurse Crumpet's Story," "Story of Arnon," and "Virginia of Virginia." In 1888 her "Quick or the Dead" was issued, and it at once attracted wide attention, and proved one of the literary sensations of the year. Her later works are: a five-act Syrian tragedy entitled "Herod and Mariamne," "The Witness of the Sun," and "According to St. John." Miss Rives was married, in June, 1888, to John Armstrong Chanler of New York, a great grandson of the late William B. Astor, and has spent considerable time since then in England and on the continent of Europe.

CHAPLEAU, The Hon. Joseph Adolphe, Q.C., LL.D., Knight Commander of the Legion of Honour, Knight Commander of St. Gregory the Great, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, was born at Ste. Thérèse de Blainville, Quebec, Nov. 9, 1840, and was called to the Bar in 1861 and created Q.C. in 1873. He entered the Provincial Legislature in 1867, being elected by acclamation for the county of Terrebonne, which he still represents in the Commons. From 1873 to 1874 he was Solicitor-General. He became Provincial Secretary in 1876, and left the Government at the coup-d'-état of Lt.-Governor Letellier de St. Just in March, 1878. He was foremost in the struggle which ensued, as leader of the Opposition, and defeated the Joly Administration, which had endorsed the arbitrary action of the Lieut.-Governor, who had dismissed a ministry supported by a large majority of both houses of the Legislature. Lieut.-Governor Letellier was dismissed from office by the Federal Government, after an overwhelming vote of the Parliament of Canada against his violation of responsible Government. Mr. Chapleau became Premier of Quebec in Oct. 1879, and remained in that position, filling the offices of Minister of Agriculture and Public Works and of Minister of Railways, until July, 1882, when he was called to the Privy Council of Canada, as Secretary of State, which position he occupied until Jan. 25, 1892, when he was appointed Minister of Customs, which department he had under his control up to Dec. 7, 1892, at which date he received the Commission of Lieut.-Governor of the Province of Quebec. He established in Canada, in 1881, the Crédit Foncier Franco-Canadian, a financial institution of high standing, of which he is the Vice-President in Canada, the President being in Paris. He was appointed Commander of the Legion of Honour, in 1882, by President Grévy. He had been made the previous year, a Commander of St. Gregory the Great. In 1884 he was appointed President of a Royal Commission on Chinese Immigration, and visited California and British Columbia as such. His report on the question was followed by the enactment of a law, which does not forbid but limits in a certain measure Chinese Immigration into Canada. He introduced into Canada the British system of the Stationery office for public departments and Parliament, and the American system of a National Printing Bureau. He is a Professor of International Law and LL.D. of the Laval University.

CHAPLIN, The Right Hon. Henry, late President of the Board of Agriculture, is the second son of the late Rev. Henry Chaplin, by Horatia, daughter of the late William Ellice, Esq. He was born in 1841, and educated at Harrow and at Christ Church, Oxford. From Nov., 1868, to Nov., 1885, he represented Mid-Lincolnshire in the House of Commons, since when he has sat for North Kesteven or for the Sleaford Division of Lincolnshire. Mr. Chaplin is a prominent member of the Conservative party, a frequent debater, and an authority on agricultural matters. From June, 1885, to Jan., 1886, he was Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and in 1889 was appointed the President of the newly-formed Board of Agriculture, with a seat in the Cabinet. He was sworn of the Privy Council in 1885. Mr. Chaplin is a representative country gentleman and a prominent leading member of the turf. He is a J.P. and D.L. of Lincolnshire. In 1890 Edinburgh University conferred upon him its honorary LL.D. degree. He married in 1876 Lady Florence Leveson-Gower, daughter of the third Duke of Sutherland. She died in 1881.

CHAPMAN, Miss Elizabeth Rachel, was born at Woodford, Essex. She has written fiction, essays, and poetry, and is interested in the various social and philanthropic movements of the day, more particularly in those specially affecting women. The following is a list of her publications: "Master of All," 1881; "A Tourist Idyl, and other stories," 1883; "The New Godiva and other studies," 1885; "A Comtist Lover, and other studies," 1886; "The New Purgatory, and other poems," 1887; "A Companion to 'In Memoriam,'" 1888; and "A Little Child's Wreath: a Sonnet Sequence," 1894.

CHARD, Lieut.-Col. John Rouse Merriott, V.C., was born Dec. 21, 1847, being the second son of the late Mr. William Wheaton Chard, of Pathe, Somerset, and Mount Tamar, Devon. He was educated first at the Plymouth New Grammar School, and then at Woolwich, and obtained his commission in the Royal Engineers July 15, 1868. After two years at Chatham he went to Bermuda, where he was employed for three years on the fortifications near Hamilton for the defence of the dockyard and naval anchorage. Coming on leave to England on the death of his father, he was sent to Malta to complete his foreign service, remaining about two years employed on the new forts there. On his return to England he was quartered at Aldershot, and took part in the Army Manœuvres. After a short stay at Chatham he went to Exeter (Western District) for about two years. Ordered from there to Aldershot to join the fifth company of Royal Engineers on the mobilization of the Army Corps for the East, he went with the company to Chatham, and embarked with it for Natal, Dec. 2, 1878, arriving at Durban early in Jan., 1879. On Jan. 22 Lieutenant Chard was the hero of the famous defence of Rorke's Drift. He was left in charge of the Commissariat post, with eighty men of the 80th Regiment; and an attack being imminent, a barricade was hastily thrown up under his direction, the men using for this purpose a number of bags, biscuit tins, and other matters belonging to the commissariat stores, being part of the time under fire. The attack was made soon after dark by at least 3,000 Zulus, and the fight was kept up during the greater part of the night. The Zulus got inside the barricade six times and were as often driven out at the point of the bayonet. In the meantime another body of Zulu troops passed to the rear of the military hospital and set fire to it. At dawn the attacking force withdrew, for Lord Chelmsford's column was then seen approaching, and was enthusiastically hailed by the gallant defenders. Three hundred and fifty-one dead Zulus were counted near the entrenchment, and the number killed after that attack was estimated at 1,000. The defenders of Rorke's Drift were undoubtedly the means of saving Grey Town and Helpmakaar, and also of securing time for effecting a retreat with the main column. Lieutenant Chard left Rorke's Drift sick with fever on Feb. 17 for Ladysmith, where he was hospitably entertained at the house of Dr. Hyde Allen Park. He left Ladysmith for the front on April 27, rejoined the 5th company of the Royal Engineers at Landsman's Drift on April 29, and was present at the battle of Ulundi. On returning to St. Paul's he was presented with the Victoria Cross by Sir Garnet Wolseley. Soon afterwards he was ordered home. Arriving at Portsmouth Oct. 2, 1879, he was met by a telegram from Her Majesty, and shortly afterwards he proceeded to Balmoral, where he was graciously received by the Queen. He was advanced to the rank of Captain in 1879, to that of Major in 1886, and to that of Lieut.-Colonel in Jan., 1893.

CHARLES I. (Charles Eitel Frederick Zephirin Louis), King of Roumania, was born April 20, 1839, being the second son of Prince Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, head of the second of the non-reigning branches of the princely house of Hohenzollern. He was elected and proclaimed Prince Regnant of Roumania, with hereditary succession, by a plébiscite, taken April 8-20, 1866, and definitely recognised on Oct. 24 in that year by the Sublime

Porte and the guaranteeing Powers. The Prince had previously been a sub-lieutenant in the 2nd regiment of Prussian Dragoons, and it is believed that his candidature for the throne of Roumania, which had become vacant by the expulsion of Prince Alexander John, was proposed by Prussia, and supported by her diplomatic action. His reign has been marked throughout by internal dissensions and parliamentary crises. The unwarrantable persecution of the Jews in Moldavia elicited indignant protests from various foreign governments, who likewise complained that bands of armed men were allowed to be formed within the Roumanian territory, with the object of creating disturbances on the Lower Danube. The disputes in the Roumanian Chamber, and the incessant ministerial changes, led to a dissolution of the Chamber of Bucharest in 1869. A convention was concluded between his Government and the Czar, permitting the Russians to Cross the Danube in April, 1877. The Roumanian army was then mobilised, and war declared against Turkey. In Sept. and Oct. 1877, Prince Charles held the nominal command of the Army of the West, and he fought at Plevna, where the Roumanians behaved with great gallantry, and suffered heavy losses. He received, in acknowledgment of his services, the Cross of St. George from Alexander II., to whom he sent in return the decoration of the Order of the Star of Roumania. He had the title of "Royal Highness" from 1878 till March 26, 1881, when he was proclaimed King of Roumania by a unanimous vote of the representatives of the nation. The coronation ceremony took place on May 22. As the King has no heirs, his nephew, Prince Ferdinand of Hohenzollern was declared Prince Royal of Roumania by a decree of March 18, 1889. Charles I. married Nov. 15, 1869, Pauline Elizabeth Ottilie Louise (born 1843), daughter of the late Prince Hermann of Wied. (See Elizabeth.)

CHARLES, Hon. Sir Arthur, K.B., is the youngest son of the late Robert Charles, Esq., of London and Carisbrooke, I.W., and was born in 1839. He received his education at University College, London, and became B.A. of London University with mathematical honours in 1858, subsequently receiving an hon. M.A. degree from the Archbishop of Canterbury, and in 1884 the hon. D.C.L. of Durham. He joined the Bar at the Inner Temple in Jan., 1862, after obtaining a certificate of honour of the first class. He then joined the Western Circuit, and became one of its leaders. In Feb., 1877, he took silk, and became a Bencher of his Inn in Jan., 1880. From 1878 to 1887 he was Recorder of Bath, and Chancellor of Southwell Diocese, and Commissary of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster from 1884-87. In September of the latter year he was appointed a Judge of the High Court of Justice, and was also knighted. He is a member of Council and President of the Senate of University College, London, and a member of the Council of Legal Education. From 1877 to 1882 he examined in Common Law in London University, of which he unsuccessfully contested the Parliamentary representation in 1880. In the same year he was Church Commissioner to inquire into corrupt practices at the Canterbury election, and in 1881-83 a Royal Commissioner to inquire into the working of Ecclesiastical Courts. He married, in 1866, Rachel Christian, daughter of the late Thomas Duncan Newton, Esq., of Plymouth.

CHARLES, Mrs. Elizabeth, the daughter of John Rundle, Esq., formerly M.P. for Tavistock, was born in 1826. She is the authoress of "The Draytons and Davenants," 1841; "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family," 1863. This has had a large sale, and so also has "The Diary of Mrs. Kitty Trevylyan," 1864. Mrs. Charles published, in 1866, "Winifred Bertram;" in 1870, "The Martyrs of Spain;" in 1873, "Against the Stream;" in 1876, "The Bertram Family;" in 1879, "Joan the Maid;" in 1881, "Lapsed, but not Lost," all her works being characterised by deep religious feeling. She married, in 1851, Mr. Andrew Charles.

CHARLEY, Sir William Thomas, Q.C., D.C.L., born in 1833, is the youngest son of the late Matthew Charley, Esq., of Finaghy House, near Belfast. He was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, and took his degree of B.A. in 1856, and of B.C.L. and D.C.L., by accumulation, in 1868. In 1865 he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, having obtained the first certificate of honour of the first-class, and the exhibition at the final examinations of Council of Legal Education. He was elected Common Serjeant of the City of London in April, 1878, becoming a Commissioner of Oyer and Terminer at the Central Criminal Court and Judge of the Ancient Mayor's Court of London. On reaching the fifteenth year of his judicial service he resigned the office of Common Serjeant, retiring on a pension of two-thirds of his judicial salary, which had been increased some years before.

In 1880 he was made a Q.C. For twelve years, viz. from 1868 to 1880, he represented Salford in the House of Commons in the Conservative interest. He was unsuccessful at the election of 1880, and unsuccessfully contested Ipswich in 1883 and 1885. In the latter year the majority against him was very small, and his opponents were unseated for bribery by their agents. He was invited to stand again, but declined on account of ill-health. Two Conservatives were returned. Sir William Charley is a Past-Master of the Worshipful Company of Loriners, a member of the Court of Lieutenancy of the City of London, and Hon. Colonel of the 3rd Volunteer Battalion of the Royal Fusiliers (City of London Regiment). He is also Trustee and Hon. Standing Counsel of the United Kingdom Beneficent Association, Trustee of the Church of England Young Men's Society, and Vice-President of the City of London Conservative Association, the Church Defence Institution, and numerous other Societies. He is the author of works on the "Real Property Acts" and "Judicature Acts," which have run through three editions. When in Parliament he carried several measures of social reform, such as the "Infant Life Protection Act, 1872," and the "Offences against the Person Act, 1875," the principles of some of which have been extended by subsequent legislation. He was knighted in 1880. In the spring of 1890 he married Miss Clara Harbord, daughter of F. G. Harbord, Esq., of Kirby Park, Cheshire.

CHARLOTTE, Ex-Empress of Mexico (Marie Charlotte Amélie Auguste Victoire Clémentine Léopoldine), daughter of Leopold I., King of the Belgians, born June 7, 1840, was married July 27, 1857, to the ill-fated Maximilian, afterwards Emperor of Mexico. In the midst of his embarrassments, Maximilian sent his empress to Paris in 1866 to seek more effectual aid from the Emperor Napoleon. She failed entirely in her mission, and proceeded to Italy, where her reason gave way in consequence of the troubles she had already undergone, and of those which she foresaw her husband would experience. Her Majesty was removed to the palace of Laeken, near Brussels, and it is said that during lucid intervals she formerly employed her time in writing Memoirs of the History of the Mexican Empire. Her recovery is considered hopeless.

CHARNOCK, Richard Stephen, Ph.D., F.S.A., born in London, Aug. 11, 1820, is the son of Richard Charnock, Esq., of the Inner Temple, barrister-at-law. He was educated at King's College, London, and admitted an attorney in 1841. He has travelled through the whole of Europe, and has also visited the North of Africa and Asia Minor; and has devoted much time to the study of anthropology, archæology, and philology, especially the Celtic and Oriental languages. Dr. Charnock is a member of many learned societies, and Doctor of Philosophy of the University of Göttingen. Among very many contributions to philology, anthropology, and science in general, Dr. Charnock is author of "Guide to the Tyrol," 1857; "Local Etymology," 1859; "Bradshaw's Guide to Spain and Portugal," 1865; "Verba Nominalia," 1866; "Ludus Patronymicus," 1868; "The Peoples of Transylvania," 1870; "Manorial Customs of Essex," 1870; "Patronymica Cornu-Britannica," 1870; "On the Physical, Mental, and Philological Characters of the Wallons," 1871; "Le Sette Commune," 1871; "A Glossary of the Essex Dialect," 1879; "Prænomina; or, the Etymology of the principal Christian Names of Great Britain and Ireland," 1882; and "Nuces Etymologicæ," 1889.

CHARTERIS, Professor the Rev. Archibald Hamilton, M.A., D.D., born in Wamphray, Dumfriesshire, Dec. 13, 1835, was educated at the parish school and Edinburgh University, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1852, and of M.A. in 1853. He was presented to the parish of St. Quivox, Ayrshire, in 1858, to Newabbey in 1859, and called to The Park Church, Glasgow, in 1863. He was appointed one of Her Majesty's Chaplains for Scotland in 1870, having previously received the degree of D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1868. He was appointed to the Chair of Biblical Criticism in the University of Edinburgh in 1868, which he still holds. Professor Charteris is the author of "The Life of James Robertson, D.D.," 1863; "Canonicity: a Collection of Early Testimonies to the Books of the New Testament," 1880; "The Christian Scriptures," being the Croall Lectures, 1882, and of several occasional pamphlets and lectures. In ecclesiastical work he is best known as Vice-Convener of the General Assembly's Committee for the Abolition of Patronage, which accomplished its work in 1874, and as Convener of the General Assembly's Committee on Christian Life and Work from its first appointment (1869) to the present time. The purpose of this committee is to inquire into and report upon the methods of work employed in the various parishes of the Church of Scotland, so that through the influence of the General Assembly and of public opinion, those methods may be developed and improved. Through this committee many changes have been gradually, and with general approval, introduced, almost all in the direction of turning the forces of the Christian Church into channels of social helpfulness. The Young Men's Guild and The Woman's Guild, founded by it, have been largely imitated by other churches in Scotland, England and America. Deaconesses have also been trained and appointed, and Guild Sisters (for special work among the poor) are trained by this committee. The specialty of all these agencies is that they are part of the organisation of the Church: authorised, regulated, and supervised by the Church Courts; not (as had been previously the case) originated and maintained by individuals or associations outside of ordinary church organisation. Professor Charteris was Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1892.

CHARTRES (Duc de), Robert Philippe-Louis - Eugène - Ferdinand d'Orléans, youngest son of the late Duke of Orleans, and grandson of the late King Louis Philippe, was born at Paris, Nov. 9, 1840. When only two years of age he lost his father, and six years later the Revolution drove him into exile. The young duke was carefully brought up in Eisenach in Germany, and afterwards joined his family in England. He served in the Italian army, 1859, and in the Federal army in the first campaign of the American Civil War in 1862. After the Revolution of Sept. 4, 1870, he returned incognito to France, and served in General Chanzy's army under an assumed name; and in 1871, when the National Assembly had revoked the law of banishment against the Orleans family, he was appointed a Major, and served first in Algiers; he was subsequently appointed Lieut.-Colonel and Colonel. In 1883 his name was struck off the active list of the army by a decree of the Republican Government; and he was at once removed from the command of the 12th Chasseurs, and was peremptorily ordered on Feb. 25 to quit Rouen, at which city that regiment was stationed. He bade farewell to his regiment in a dignified order of the day, and asked leave of absence in order to travel in the Caucasus. In 1886, in obedience to the decree of June 22, his name was finally struck off the French army lists. He married, June 11, 1863, Françoise-Marie-Amélie of Orleans, eldest daughter of the Prince de Joinville, and has issue two daughters, born respectively Jan. 13, 1865, and Jan. 25, 1869, and two sons, born respectively Jan. 11, 1866, and Oct. 16, 1867.

CHASSEPOT, Antoine Alphonse, a French inventor, born March 4, 1833, is the son of a working gunsmith, to which trade he was himself brought up. Entering the Government workshops, he was attached in 1858 to that of St. Thomas, in Paris, as Controller of the second class; attained the rank of Controller of the first class in 1861, and that of Principal in 1864. The result of his study of the mechanism of small arms, especially of the famous Prussian needle-gun, was the invention of the Chassepot rifle, which was adopted by the French army; and, according to the official accounts, "did wonders" against the Garibaldians at Mentana. M. Chassepot was afterwards officially attached to the national manufactory of arms at Châtellerault, near Poitiers. He took out patents for his invention, and the royalty he received on the rifles manufactured brought him in a large income. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1866, and promoted to the rank of officer of the same in 1870. The Chassepot was famous in the war of 1870, but has long since been superseded.

CHELMSFORD (Lord), General the Right Hon. Frederic Augustus Thesiger, G.C.B., is the eldest son of the first Lord Chelmsford (who was twice Lord Chancellor in the Government of the late Lord Derby) by his wife Anna Maria, youngest daughter of Mr. William Tinling, of Southampton. He was born May 31, 1827, and educated at Eton. In 1844 he entered the Rifle Brigade. He was transferred in 1845 to the Grenadier Guards as ensign, and became captain 1850; Brevet-Major 1855; Lieut.-Colonel 1857; Colonel 1863; Major-General 1868; Lieut.-General 1882; and General 1888. He served in the Crimean campaign as aide-de-camp to Major-General Markham, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol, and for this service he was promoted to a brevet majority. Having exchanged into the 95th Regiment as second Lieut.-Colonel, he served in the Indian Mutiny campaign. He succeeded Colonel Raines, C.B., in the command of the 95th Regiment. As Deputy Adjutant-General in the Abyssinian campaign of 1868 he was present at the capture of Magdala. For his services in this campaign he was nominated a Companion of the Bath and one of Her Majesty's aides-de-camp. He was Adjutant-General to the forces in India from 1869 till Dec., 1874, when he was appointed to command the troops at Shorncliffe, and subsequently the 1st Infantry Brigade at Aldershot. In March, 1877, he attained the rank of Major-General, and in January of the following year he was nominated to succeed General Sir Arthur Cunninghame as Commander of the Forces and Lieut.-Governor of Cape Colony. He completed the subjugation of the Kaffirs, and restored Caffraria to a condition of tranquillity, and for these services was made a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath. He had succeeded to the peerage on his father's death in 1878. Lord Chelmsford was appointed to the chief command of the British troops in the Zulu War of 1879. Lieut.-Colonel Durnford's column, consisting of 1,774 Englishmen and 650 natives, was encamped at Isandhlwana, when an attack was made on the fortified camp by the Zulus, resulting in the annihilation of half the garrison. A gallant defence was made the same day at Rorke's Drift, about ten miles from Isandhlwana, by Lieutenants Chard and Bromhead, who with 110 men of the 24th Regiment and twenty-nine others held the post against the desperate assaults of 3,000 Zulus. Lord Chelmsford's troops arrived after the natives had been beaten off and had retired. On April 2 an attack was made by an army of 11,000 Zulus upon the fortified camp of the British troops under Lord Chelmsford at Gingholova, on the road to Ekowe, but the Zulus were repulsed with great loss; and two days later the British troops, who had been surrounded at Ekowe by Zulus after the disaster of Isandhlwana, were relieved by the force under Lord Chelmsford's command. The decisive battle of Ulundi was fought on July 4, when the Zulu army was completely defeated. The credit of the victory admittedly belongs to Lord Chelmsford, but before this battle was fought Sir Garnet Wolseley had landed at Durban, Natal, to supersede him in the command of the British troops operating against the Zulus. Lord Chelmsford, having resigned the command, was created a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, and arrived in England in Aug., 1879. In 1884 he was appointed Lieutenant of the Tower of London, which he held until 1889. He married, in 1867, Adria Fanny, daughter of Major-General Heath, of the Bombay army.

CHERBULIEZ, Victor, son of a Professor of Greek at Geneva, was born in that city in 1829. His early education at Geneva was completed in Paris, at Bonn and in Berlin, and after a voyage to the East he published his first essay, an antiquarian trifle, entitled "A propos d'un Cheval, Causeries Athéniennes," 1860, reprinted in 1864 under the title of "Un Cheval de Phidias." After the death of his father in 1874 he settled in Paris, where he published a number of novels, all which appeared originally in the columns of the Revue des Deux Mondes. Among them are "Le Comte Kostia," 1863; "Le Prince Vitale," 1864; "Paule Méré," 1864; "Le Roman d'une honnête Femme," 1866; "Le Grand Œuvre," 1867; "Prosper Randoce," 1868; "L'Aventure de Ladislas Bolski," 1869; "Le Fiancé de Mademoiselle de Saint-Maur," 1876; and "L'Idée de Jean Têterol," 1878, which was translated into English under the title of "The Wish of his Life." Later books are "Noirs et Rouges," "Olivier Maugant," "La Ferme du Choquard," 1884; "La Bête," 1887; "La Vocation du Comte Ghislam," 1888; "Une Gageure," 1890; "L'Art et la Nature," 1892; and "Le Secret du Précepteur," 1893. Most of M. Cherbuliez's works have been translated and published in America; and many have been translated into Danish, English, German, Italian, Polish and Spanish. M. Cherbuliez is also a political writer of influence, the numerous articles in the Revue des Deux Mondes signed "G. Valbert" being from his pen. M. Cherbuliez has been reinstated in his rights as a French citizen which had been lost through his ancestors having left France during the religious persecutions in the 17th century. On May 25, 1882, he was received into the French Academy as the successor of M. Dufaure.

CHESNELONG, Pierre Charles, a French politician, was born at Orthez (Basses-Pyrénées), April, 1820, and educated at Pau. Formerly he was a dealer in hams and tissues at Bayonne, at first in partnership with his father, but he afterwards handed over the management of the business to his eldest son, though still retaining an interest in it. In 1848 M. Chesnelong declared at a public meeting that "the republican form of government must be regarded as the only possible one in the present and in the future by all men who conscientiously take account of the movement of ideas and Providential progress of facts." However, he afterwards changed his sentiments, and in 1865 became an official candidate, under the Empire, for the representation of the second circonscription of the Basses-

Pyrénées. His candidature was successful, and he was re-elected in 1869. At the elections of January, 1872, he was again returned to the National Assembly for the Basses-Pyrénées, and he took his seat among the monarchical majority. He took a very prominent part in the monarchical negotiations in October, 1873. As a member of the Committee of Nine, he was sent to the Comte de Chambord, at Salzburg, in order to arrange with him the conditions of a monarchical restoration. M. Chesnelong took back a satisfactory account of his interview with the Pretender, and preparations were being made for the entry of the King into Paris when the manifesto of the 27th of October cast disorder and carried desolation into the Legitimist camp. At the general elections of Feb. 20, 1876, he was again chosen as Deputy for the arrondissement of Orthez, but the Chamber invalidated the election, and when M. Chesnelong sought the suffrages of the electors a second time he was defeated by his Republican opponent, M. Vignancourt (May 21, 1876). A few months later (Nov. 24, 1876), he was elected a senator for life. M. Chesnelong has taken a leading part in all Roman Catholic movements, both in and out of Parliament. He accompanied the pilgrimage to Paray-le-Monial, in honour of the Sacred Heart, and he subscribed the address of the Roman Catholic Deputies to Pope Pius IX. He was President of the general assemblies of the Roman Catholic Committees of France, held at Paris in 1874 and 1875. He is Vice-President of the Conseil-Général of the Basses-Pyrénées.

CHESNEY, General Sir George Tomkyns, K.C.B., C.S.I., C.I.E., M.P., the author of "The Battle of Dorking," was educated at Woolwich, and joined the Bengal Engineers in 1848. He was Lieutenant in 1854, and served throughout the siege of Delhi, where he was twice severely wounded; Captain in 1858; Major in 1872; Lieut.-Colonel in 1874; Colonel in 1884; and General in 1885. His "Indian Polity" was published in 1868; his brochure, "The Battle of Dorking," anonymously in 1871, and created a great sensation, so realistically was it written. "The Dilemma" and "The Private Secretary" were published in 1881. In February, 1894, he lectured on the "British Empire" to the members of the Colonial Institute. In 1887 General Chesney became a member of the Council of the Governor-General of India, retiring in April, 1891. In 1892 he was elected M.P. for Oxford. In the same year he was promoted to the rank of General.

CHESTER, Bishop of. See JAYNE, THE RIGHT REV. FRANCIS JOHN.

CHEYNE. Professor the Rev. Thomas Kelly, M.A., D.D., son of the late Rev. Charles Cheyne, second master of Christ's Hospital, was born in London, Sept. 18, 1841, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School and Worcester College, Oxford. While at the University he obtained the Chancellor's Prize for an English Essay, the Pusey and Ellerton and the Kennicott Hebrew Scholarships, the Johnson Theological Scholarship, and the Ellerton Prize for a Theological Essay. In 1864 he was admitted to deacon's and in 1865 to priest's orders in the Church of England. In 1869 he was elected Fellow of Balliol College for attainments in Biblical criticism and Semitic philology, and became the first lecturer in Oxford who held and taught the main results of modern Old Testament criticism. Soon afterwards, at the instance of Professor Jowett, he was commissioned by Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode to edit the Old Testament portion of the now well-known "Variorum Bible," and selected as his co-editor the present Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford. He was also a member of the Old Testament Revision Company, and contributed many articles on Old Testament criticism to the latest edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." In addition to this and other work he organised, under the late Dr. Appleton, the theological department of the original "Academy," which section became in his hands an organ of critical theology as understood by Continental scholars and their like-minded English colleagues. The publication of his larger work on Isaiah in 1880-81 foreshadowed the new movement for the reconciliation of criticism and an enlightened church theology, and in 1881 he gave an earnest of his revived attachment to the church by accepting the college living of Tendring, Essex. In 1884, at the tercentenary celebration of the University of Edinburgh, he received the degree of D.D. At the end of 1885 he was elected to the Oriel Professorship of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture at Oxford, to which chair a canonry in Rochester Cathedral is attached. Professor Cheyne is the author of many works on the Old Testament, including "Notes and Criticisms on the Hebrew Text of Isaiah," 1869; "The Book of Isaiah Chronologically Arranged," 1870; "The Prophecies of Isaiah," 2 vols., 1880-1881, 3rd edition, 1885; "The Books of Micah and Hosea," Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges, 1882, 1884; "Exposition of Jeremiah and Lamentations," Pulpit Commentary, 1883, 1885; "The Book of Psalms," a new version, Parchment Library, 1884; "Job and Solomon; or, the Wisdom of the Hebrews," 1886; "The Book of Psalms; a New Translation and Commentary," 1888; "The Life and Times of Jeremiah," 1888; "The Hallowing of Criticism," 1888; "The Origin and Religious Contents of the Psalter," 1891 (Bampton Lectures for 1889); "Aids to the Devout Study of Criticism (I. the David Narratives: II. The Book of Psalms)," 1892; "Founders of Old Testament Criticism: Historical, Biographical, and Critical Sketches" (including a survey of the questions in debate between the moderate and advanced schools of Old Testament criticism), 1893. The introduction to the work on "The Origin of the Psalter" contains a sketch of Professor Cheyne's development as a critical scholar, which was called for by the attacks of which his Bampton Lectures were the object during and after their delivery. His position as a Churchman may be understood from parts of the same introduction, and from his two Church Congress papers on "Faith and Criticism," reprinted respectively in "Job and Solomon," pp. 1—9, and "Hallowing of Criticism," pp. 183—207, with which the concluding chapters of "Founders of Old Testament Criticism" and an article on "Reform in the Teaching of the Bible" (Contemporary Review, August, 1890), may be compared. Some animadversions on his views offered by Mr. Gladstone called forth a detailed reply from Professor Cheyne in the Nineteenth Century, December, 1891 ("Ancient Beliefs in Immortality").

CHEYNE, Professor William Watson, M.B., was educated at the University of Edinburgh, where he passed with First Class Honours in 1875. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1879; Boylston Medal Prizeman and Gold Medallist, 1880; and Jacksonian Prizeman, 1881. He was Demonstrator of Surgery at King's College, and Demonstrator of Anatomy at the University of Edinburgh; Surgeon to King's College Hospital and to the Paddington Green Children's Hospital; Examiner in Surgery at Edinburgh University; and Hunterian Professor at the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1888 and 1890. He is at present Professor of Surgery at King's College, London. He is the author of "Antiseptic Surgery, its Principles, Practice, History, and Results;" "Manual of the Antiseptic Treatment of Wounds;" 'Public Health Laboratory Work: Part I., Biological Laboratory;" "Lectures on Suppuration and Septic Disease; on Tubercular Diseases of Bones and Joints," 1890-1892; and on the "Radical Cure of Hernia;" and has contributed numerous papers on surgical and scientific subjects to the Medical Journals and the learned Societies.

CHICHESTER, Bishop of. See Durnford, The Right Rev. Richard.

CHICHESTER, Dean of. See Pigou, The Very Rev. Francis.

CHILDERS, The Right Hon. Hugh Culling Eardley, M.P., F.R.S., was born in Brook Street, London, June 25, 1827, and is the only son of the late Rev. Eardley Childers, of Cantley, Yorkshire, by Maria Charlotte, eldest daughter of the late Sir Culling Smith, Bart., of Bedwell Park, Hertfordshire. He was educated at Cheam School, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated as fourteenth Senior Optime in 1850. Before that year was out, Mr. Childers set sail for Australia. Soon after his arrival there he became a member of the then recently-established Government of Victoria. With that Government he was connected till the beginning of 1857, having held the office of Commissioner of Trade and Customs in the first Cabinet, and having been member for Portland in the first Legislative Assembly. He returned to England in 1857 to take up the office of Agent-General for the colony, and in that year proceeded to the degree of M.A. at Cambridge. He also became a student of Lincoln's Inn, but he was never called to the Bar. In 1859 he was an unsuccessful candidate for Pontefract. On a petition, which was withdrawn and afterwards became the subject of special inquiry by a select committee, he unseated his opponent, was returned at the new election in Feb., 1860, and continued to represent that borough in the Liberal interest until Nov. 1885, when, being the only Home Ruler on the Front Bench, he was defeated by the Irish vote. Mr. Childers was chairman of the Select Committee on Transportation in 1861, and a member of the Commission on Penal Servitude in 1863; his recommendations with respect to transportation having been eventually adopted by the Government. He became a Lord of the Admiralty in April, 1864, and Financial Secretary to the Treasury in Aug., 1865, retiring on the accession of Lord Derby's third Administration in 1866. In 1867 he was nominated a Royal Commissioner to investigate the constitution of the Law Courts. On

Mr. Gladstone's coming into power in Dec., 1868. Mr. Childers was nominated First Lord of the Admiralty, which office he was compelled by ill-health to resign in March, 1871. While at the Admiralty Mr. Childers made changes, in 1869, which tended to subordinate the members of the Board more effectually to the First Lord, constituting him, in effect, Minister of Marine; and to render departmental officers at once more individually responsible and more intimate with the controlling members of the Board. He also revised and reduced the list of officers; recast, from top to bottom, the regulations for promotion and retirement; established a fixed annual tonnage for the construction of ironclads and other ships; reformed the administration of the dockyards; and cleared the coast-guard and home ports of men unfit for service at sea. He was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in Aug., 1872. His re-election for Pontefract on this occasion is memorable as being the first Parliamentary election that took place in England by ballot. He held the Chancellorship of the Duchy of Lancaster for only one year, retiring in 1873, when Mr. Gladstone's Administration was remodelled. On the Liberals returning to power in April, 1880, he was appointed Secretary of State for War, in which office he established the territorial regimental system, revised the lists of officers, and applied to them rules for employment and retirement similar to those which he had introduced into the navy. He also established regimental warrant officers, and improved the position of the non-commissioned officers. He was Secretary of State during the Egyptian campaign of 1882. On Dec. 16, 1882, he became Chancellor of the Exchequer in succession to Mr. Gladstone, who had held that office jointly with the office of First Lord of the Treasury. Mr. Childers retired from this office on the defeat of the Government in June, 1885. In Jan., 1886, he was elected for South Edinburgh, and in Mr. Gladstone's short Ministry held the post of Home Secretary. He was re-elected for South Edinburgh at the general election of 1886, but was not a candidate at the general election of 1892. Mr. Childers, who was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1868, is the author of pamphlets on Free Trade, Railway Policy, and National Education. He has been at various times the Chairman of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co., Chairman of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., and a Director of the London and North-Western Railway Co., London and County Bank, the Bank of Australasia, and the Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Co., but he always resigned his directorships on taking office. In 1850 Mr. Childers married Emily, third daughter of George I. A. Walker, Esq., of Norton, Worcestershire. (She died in 1875.) Mr. Childers married secondly, on April 13, 1879, Katharine Ann, daughter of the late Dr. Gilbert, Bishop of Chichester, and widow of Colonel the Hon. Gilbert Elliot.

CHINNERY-HALDANE, The Right Rev. James Robert Alexander. LL.B., D.D., Bishop of Argyll and the Isles, is the only son of the late Alexander Haldane, Barrister-at-Law, heir male of the family of Haldane of Gleneagles, and was born in 1842, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of LL.B., 1864, and D.D., 1888. He was ordained Deacon in 1866, and Priest in 1867, both by the Bishop of Salisbury; and became Assistant Curate of All Saints', Edinburgh, which curacy he held for about seven years. He was afterwards incumbent of St. Bride's, Nether Lochaber, 1876; Dean of Argyll and the Isles, 1881; Bishop of Argyll and the Isles, 1883. He married, in 1864, Anna Elizabeth Frances Margaretta, only child and heiress of Rev. Sir Nicholas Chinnery, Bart., of Flintville, co. Cork, when he assumed the additional name of Chinnery.

CHITTY, The Hon. Sir Joseph William, is the second and only surviving son of the late Mr. Thomas Chitty, of the Inner Temple, and was born in London in 1828. He was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1851, taking a first-class in classics. Subsequently he was elected a Fellow of Exeter College, and proceeded M.A. in 1854. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1856, and was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1874. Mr. Chitty for some years enjoyed a very extensive practice in the Rolls Court, of which he was the leader. He was formerly a Major in the Inns of Court Volunteers. To the general public, however, Mr. Chitty's name was once most familiarly known in his capacity as umpire at the Oxford and Cambridge boat-race, which post he filled for some years. He entered Parliament at the general election of 1880 as one of the Liberal members for Oxford. In Sept., 1881, he was appointed a Judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, in place of Sir George Jessel, the Master of the Rolls, who had been transferred to the Court of Appeal. Shortly afterwards he received the customary honour of knighthood. He married, in 1858, Clara Jessie, sixth daughter of the late Right Hon. Sir Frederick Pollock.

CHRISTIAN IX., King of Denmark, fourth son of the late Duke William of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glücksburg, was born April 8, 1818. Before his accession to the crown he was Inspector-General and Commander-in-Chief of the Danish Cavalry. The succession was vested in him by the protocol of London, May 8, 1852, and he ascended the throne on the death of Frederic VII., Nov. 15, 1863. On his accession, the position of affairs with respect to Schleswig-Holstein was completely changed. The son of the Duke of Augustenburg immediately laid claim to the sovereignty of the duchies, although his father had for a compensation resigned all his rights in 1852. The independence of Holstein more especially, and of a portion of Schleswig, was warmly espoused by the German Diet, which forthwith ordered the advance of a Federal army to occupy the debatable territory, for the purpose of enforcing its enfranchisement from Danish rule. Before matters had proceeded far, Austria and Prussia determined to interfere, and by a combined armed occupation of the disputed territory to bring the question to an issue independently of the Diet, and in opposition to the wishes of that body. They accordingly invaded the duchies, which, after a hotly contested campaign, they succeeded in wresting from Denmark, also taking temporary possession of Jutland. Christian IX., disappointed in not obtaining assistance from some European power, after the failure of the conference convened in London in 1864,—which failure was in some measure attributable to the obstinacy of the Danish Government—entered into negotiations for peace with Prussia and Austria, and a treaty was signed at Vienna, Oct. 30, 1864. The King of Denmark renounced all his rights to Schleswig-Holstein and Lauenburg, and in 1866 the two German powers quarrelled over the spoil. Since then his Majesty has sought to develop the interior resources and popular institutions of his country. A new constitution was inaugurated in Nov., 1866, when the King opened the first Rigsdag, the members of which were elected in accordance with the new electoral law. The army and navy have also been thoroughly reorganised, agriculture and commerce have received a great stimulus, and several railways have been constructed. In spite of this, however, the social state of the country is far from satisfactory; the hostility between the leaders of the people and the Court party is intense, and the Crown is by no means popular. Christian IX. and Queen Louise visited the Princess of Wales at Marlborough House, London, in March, 1867. The marriage of the Crown Prince of Denmark with the Princess Louisa, daughter of the King of Sweden, at Stockholm, on July 28, 1869, was hailed as a pledge of union between the two countries. His Majesty granted a new constitution to Iceland, which came into operation in August, 1874, that being the thousandth year of Iceland's existence as a nation. He went to Reikiajvik on the occasion of the anniversary being celebrated, and on his return paid a flying visit to Leith and Edinburgh, Aug. 18, 1874. He visited the Emperor William II. of Germany at Berlin in Aug., 1888, and in the autumn of 1889 was visited by the Emperor of Russia and his family. In 1842 he married a daughter of the Landgrave William of Hesse-Cassel, by whom he has had six children, and among them the King of Greece, the Princess Alexandra of Wales, and the Princess Dagmar, married to the late Tsar of Russia. On May 26, 1892, the King and Queen of Denmark celebrated their golden wedding amid many demonstrations of loyalty and popular rejoicing. They were present at the marriage of the Duke of York in July, 1893.

CHRISTIAN (Princess), Her Royal Highness Helena Augusta Victoria, Princess of Great Britain and Ireland, and Duchess of Saxony, third daughter of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, was born May 25, 1846, and married at Windsor Castle, July 5, 1866, to his Royal Highness Frederick-Christian-Charles-Augustus, Prince of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Augustenburg, and has four children. On Her Royal Highness's marriage a dower of £30,000 and an annuity of £6,000 was granted to her by Parliament. The Princess is a Member of the Royal Order of Victoria and Albert (1st Class), and a Lady of the Imperial Order of the Crown of India, and of the Royal Red Cross, &c.

CHRISTIAN (Prince), His Royal Highness Frederick-Christian-Charles-Augustus, Prince of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg, K.G., born Jan. 22, 1831, married July 5, 1866, Helena Augusta Victoria, Princess of Great Britain and Ireland. Prince Christian received the title of Royal Highness by command of Her Majesty, and was made a Knight of the Garter in July, 1866.

CHRISTIE, William Henry Mahony, F.R.S., P.R.A.S., Astronomer-Royal, was born at Woolwich in 1845, and is the son of the late Professor S. H. Christie. He was educated at King's College School, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge, and became a Fellow of his college. He graduated B.A. 1868, as fourth wrangler; was appointed, in 1870, Chief Assistant at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich. On Sir G. B. Airy's retirement in 1881 Mr. Christie was appointed Astronomer-Royal. He is the author of the "Manual of Elementary Astronomy," and has contributed valuable papers to the Proceedings of the Royal Society (of which he was elected Fellow in 1881), and the Royal Astronomical Society (of which he was elected Fellow in 1871).

CHRISTINA, Queen-Regent of Spain. See MARIA CHRISTINA.

CHURCH, The Rev. Alfred John, born in London, Jan. 29, 1829, son of John Thomas Church, solicitor, was educated at King's College, London, and Lincoln College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1851 (2nd class in Lit. Hum.). He was ordained in 1853, and held the curacy of Charlton, Malmesbury, till the end of 1856. He was successively Assistant Master at the Royal Institution School, Liverpool, and at Merchant Taylors' School, London, 1857-70; and Head Master of Henley, 1870-72; and of Retford Grammar Schools, 1873-80. In 1880 he was appointed to the Chair of Latin at University College, London; this he resigned in 1889. In 1892 he became rector of Ashley, Tetbury, Wilts. He has published, in conjunction with the Rev. W. T. Brodribb, a translation of "Tacitus," 1862-77, and of Livy, xxi.-xxv., an edition of "Select Letters of Pliny, and Pliny the Younger," in "Blackwood's Ancient Classics for English Readers," "Tacitus," in "Macmillan's Series of Literature Primers," and editions of "Tacitus, Annals VI." and "Agricola" and "Germania." He contributed "Ovid" to Blackwood's series above mentioned, and is conductor of "Seeley's Cheap School Books," several of which come from his pen. He also edited, in 1868, a collection of translations from Tennyson into Latin verse, under the title of "Horæ Tennysonianæ." But the works by which he is best known are a series of volumes which aim at popularising some of the great Greek and Latin classics. "Stories from Homer," appeared in 1877, and were followed by "Stories from Virgil," "Stories from the Greek Tragedians," "Stories from the East," "The Story of the Persian War," "Stories from Livy," "Roman Life in the Days of Cicero," "A Traveller's True Tale, after Lucian." "The Story of Jerusalem," and "Heroes and Kings," belong to the same series. Other books for the young written by him are "The Chantry Priest of Barnet," "With the King at Oxford," "Two Thousand Years Ago; or, the Adventures of a Roman Boy," "Stories of the Magicians," and "To the Lions!" a tale of the Early Church. He has also written "Carthage" and "Early Britain," the former in Messrs. G. P. Putnam & Sons' "Series of the Story of the Nations." Mr. Church obtained, in 1884, at Oxford, the Prize for a Poem on a Sacred Subject. The subject was "The Sea of Galilee."

CHURCH, Arthur Herbert, F.R.S., F.C.S., fourth and youngest son of the late John Thomas Church, solicitor, of Bedford Row, was born June 2, 1834, educated at King's College and the Royal College of Chemistry, London, and at Lincoln College, Oxford; first-class in Natural Science School, Oxford; B.A. 1860, M.A. 1863; has been Professor of Chemistry in the Royal Academy of Arts in London since 1879; Lecturer on Organic Chemistry at Coopers Hill College since 1888. He was formerly, 1863-1879, Professor of Chemistry in the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester. Mr. Church is the Discoverer of Turacin, an Animal Pigment containing Copper, and of several new mineral species, including the only British Cerium mineral. He is the author of "Precious Stones," 1883; "English Earthenware," 1884; "English Porcelain," 1886; "The Laboratory Guide for Agricultural Students," 6th edit., 1888; "Food Grains of India," 1886; "Colour," 2nd edit., 1887; "Food," 2nd edit., 1889, &c. Author of researches on Vegetable Albinism, on Colein or Erythrophyll, on Aluminium in Vascular Cryptogams, &c. He was elected Fellow of the Chemical Society in 1856; Fellow of the Royal Society in 1888.

CHURCH, Frederic Edwin, an American artist, was born at Hartford, Connecticut, May 4, 1826. He early developed a fondness for art, and became a pupil of Thomas Cole. Among his first notable works were some views in the Catskill Mountains. He visited South America in 1853, and again in 1857, and on his return from his second visit finished his great picture, "The Heart of the Andes." In 1857 he completed a large painting, "The Great Fall, Niagara," which at once gave him a high rank among landscape artists. This was followed, in 1868, by "Niagara" (a still larger painting, comprising both Falls), which was exhibited both in England and in the United States. He has since painted "Cotopaxi," "Morning," "On the Cordilleras," "Under Niagara," "The Icebergs," "Sunset on Mount Desert Island," and "Moonlight under the Tropics." In 1868 he visited Europe and the Holy Land. Among the paintings inspired by this visit are "Damascus," 1869; "Jerusalem," 1870; and "The Parthenon," 1871. His "Tropical Scenery," painted from sketches made during a trip in the West Indies, was exhibited in New York in 1873. He has been an Academician since 1849. Among the more important of his later productions are "Ægean Sea," 1875; "Syria by the Sea," 1876; "Morning in the Tropics," 1877; "The Monastery," 1878; "Valley of Santa Marta," 1879.

CLARETIE, Jules Arnaud Arsène, a French writer, born at Limoges, Dec. 3, 1840, was educated in the Bonaparte Lyceum, at Paris. Adopting literature as a profession, he contributed a very large number of articles to various French and Belgian journals, including La Patrie, La France, La Revue Française, Le Figaro, and L'Indépendance Belge. In 1866 he followed in Italy the campaign against Austria, in the capacity of correspondent of L'Avenir National. Two series of lectures, delivered by him in Paris in 1865 and 1868, were interdicted by the Imperial authorities. In 1869 he was condemned to pay a fine of 1,000 francs for having described, in Le Figaro, under the pseudonym of "Candide," the double execution of Martin, called Bidouré, by order of the Prefect Pastoureau, in the department of the Var. In the following year he succeeded M. Francisque Sarcey as dramatic critic of L'Opinion Nationale, and subsequently he followed the French army to Metz, and sent letters from the seat of war to L'Opinion Nationale, L'Illustration, and Le Rappel. After the fall of the Empire he was appointed by M. Gambetta to the post of secretary of the Commission of the papers of the Tuileries; but he soon resigned that office, and he was next charged by M. Etienne Arago, Mayor of Paris, with the duty of organising a library and lecture-hall in each of the twenty arrondissements of Paris. For a very short time he commanded the second battalion of the volunteers of the National Guard, which was dissolved by General Clément Thomas when those volunteers were replaced by the mobilised National Guards. M. Jules Claretie was present at nearly all the engagements which took place under the walls of Paris; and on Jan. 20, 1871, in the capacity of an officer of the staff, he negotiated with the aide-de-camp of the Crown Prince of Prussia the truce which gave an opportunity for removing the dead from the field of battle at Buzenval. At the general elections of Feb. 8, 1871, he stood as a condidate in the department of Haute-Vienne, in the Republican interest; but, being unsuccessful, he resumed his journalistic and literary pursuits. He has published thirty or forty volumes of causeries, history, and fiction, of which the novels "Monsieur le Ministre" and "Le Prince Zilah" are the most celebrated. Both have been produced on the stage. On the death of M. Perrin, M. Claretie was appointed Director of the Théâtre Français, 1889, and in the summer of 1893 brought the company of the theatre to London, where a successful season was inaugurated at Drury Lane. A poem by M. Claretie, commemorative of this unusual artistic event, was distributed in the theatre at the first-night representation. M. Claretie was created Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1887, and elected into the Académie Française in 1889.

CLARK, Edwin Charles, LL.D. of Cambridge, F.S.A.; Barrister-at-Law of Lincoln's Inn; Regius Professor of Civil Law, Cambridge; Professor of Roman Law to the London Council of Legal Education; Present Fellow of St. John's and late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; was born in 1835 at Ellinthorp Hall, Boroughbridge, Yorkshire; educated at Richmond School, Yorkshire, Shrewsbury School, and Trinity College, Cambridge, and was 7th Senior Optime in Mathematical Tripos, Senior Classic, and Senior Chancellor's Medallist (Classical), 1858. His publications are:—"Early Roman Law," 1872; "An Analysis of Criminal Liability," 1880; "Practical Jurisprudence," 1883; "Cambridge Legal Studies," 1888; and various papers published by the Royal Archæological Institute, and the Cambridge Antiquarian Society.

CLARK, Latimer, C.E., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., M.I.C.E., Past President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, and Chevalier of the Légion d'Honneur, was born at Great Marlow, in Buckinghamshire, on March 10, 1822, and in the year 1847 he commenced railway surveying, and his brother, Mr. Edwin Clark, who had been engaged in making a number of experiments preliminary to the construction of the Britannia Tubular Bridge across the Menai Strait, having been appointed Superintending Engineer of that great work, Mr. Latimer Clark became his Assistant Engineer, and afterwards published a small work, entitled "A Description of the Britannia and Conway Tubular Bridges," which has run through several editions. In 1850 he entered the service of the Electric Telegraph Company as Assistant Engineer, under his brother. He afterwards became their Engineer-in-Chief and Consulting Engineer, an office which he held until the General Post Office finally took over the telegraphs, in Jan., 1870. In the year 1853 he made a long series of researches on the subject of the underground telegraph wires, the results of which were afterwards fully set forth in the Government Report, issued in 1861, on Submarine Telegraph Cables. In the course of the experiments he was the first to witness the retardation of electric signals in submarine lines, and to demonstrate that currents of low tension travel as fast as those of high tension. At the request of Professor Airy, the late Astronomer-Royal, some of these experiments were repeated before Professor Faraday, and formed the subject of a lecture at the Royal Institution, delivered in Jan., 1854. They are fully described in Faraday's "Experimental Researches." He also aided Professor Airy in the simultaneous announcement of time throughout the country, and assisted in magnetic research, and in 1857 was the means of affording the interesting information that during a display of Aurora Borealis the magnetic needles were strongly affected by the magnetic storm of which this northern light is a sign. He wrote to the Astronomer-Royal suggesting that magnetic observatories should be furnished with wires stretching out towards the four cardinal points, to act as feelers for electric currents. This suggestion has since been acted upon with valuable results to science. During his brief intervals of leisure he amused himself with photography, and in 1853 devised a plan of obtaining stereoscopic pictures with a single camera. In 1858 he became a Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers. In the succeeding year, after the failure of the first Atlantic cable, he became for a short time Engineer to the Atlantic Cable Telegraph Company, and in 1860 he was chosen a Member of the Committee appointed jointly by the Government and that Company to inquire into the whole subject of Submarine Telegraph Cables. This investigation lasted for some time, and resulted in the publication of an elaborate and valuable report of considerable extent, embodying all that up to the period of its issue was known with relation to submarine telegraphy. In 1861 he read a paper before the British Association, "On the Principles to be Observed in Forming Standards of Electric Measurements." In this paper he suggested the names of Ohm, Farad, and Volt, to be employed for the Electrical units, names which have since become so familiar to Electricians. Mr. Latimer Clark also for many years was Engineer to the Indian Government Cable lines in the Persian Gulf. On one occasion the expedition of which he had charge was wrecked in the "Carnatic" on the Island of Shadwan, in the Red Sea, and he narrowly escaped with his life. As head of the firm of Clark, Forde, & Co., and in connection with other engineers, he has superintended the submergence of about fifty thousand miles of submarine cables in all parts of the globe. In 1868 he published a work in which he laid down with great clearness the principles of Electric measurement. It was translated into French, Italian, and Spanish, and eagerly perused by foreign savants, whose idea of its value may be gathered from the fact that when, some time afterwards, Mr. Latimer Clark was in Paris and entered a scientific meeting then sitting, the President rose from his seat, and, hailing with delight the advent of their visitor, stated that he had never fully appreciated the laws of Electricity until he had read that work. In 1871 Mr. Latimer Clark published, in conjunction with Mr. Robert Sabine, "Electrical Tables and Formulæ for Operators in Submarine Cables." In 1873 he read before the Royal Society a paper on "A Single-Cell Battery as a Standard of Electromotive Force," now in general use under the name of "Clark's Standard Cell." In 1875 he was elected the fourth President of the Society of Electric Telegraph Engineers, and in his inaugural address gave some highly interesting outlines of the harbingers, and even what might be called premonitions, of the electric telegraph, mentioning the idea of some old writers, that two magnetic needles would vibrate in unison at any distance apart, though unconnected with each other. He referred to the fact that a Scotchman, named Charles Marshall, or Morrison, of Paisley, had in 1758 published a full and clear description of a practicable electric telegraph, suggesting that the wires should be coated with an insulating material; and he referred to the electric telegraph erected by the late Sir Francis Ronalds, in the year 1816, in his garden at Hammersmith. He bore testimony to the remarkable foresight of Sir F. Ronalds with regard to the value of the telegraph, which, in 1823, he had proposed that the Government should establish all over the kingdom. Mr. Latimer Clark has taken out about 150 patents in different countries to secure the value of his various inventions, relating not only to electrical telegraphy, but also to engineering work in general.

CLARKE, Lieut.-General Sir Andrew, G.C.M.G., C.B., C.I.E., son of Colonel Andrew Clarke, of Belmont, co. Donegal, was born at Southsea, in 1824, and educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. He entered the Royal Engineers as second lieutenant, 1844; became captain, 1854; lieut.-colonel, 1867; colonel, 1872; major-general, 1884; lieut.-general, 1886. He was aide-de-camp and then private secretary to Sir W. Denison, the Governor of Van Diemen's Land, subsequently a member of the Legislative Council of that colony, served in New Zealand during the years 1847-48, and became a member of the Legislative Council there in 1851. In 1853 he was appointed Surveyor-General of Victoria. He was elected to the Victorian Assembly for Melbourne, under the new constitution, and became Minister for Public Lands, but he resigned office in 1857, and returned to this country in the following year. He commanded the Royal Engineers of the Eastern and Midland districts of England till 1863, when he went on special service to the West Coast of Africa respecting the Ashantee difficulties. On his return he was appointed in Aug., 1864, Director of the Works of the Navy, which office he held till June, 1873. From the latter date till Feb., 1875, he was Governor of the Straits Settlements, and he was next appointed Minister for Public Works in India. He was commandant of the School of Military Engineering at Chatham from 1881 to 1882, when he was appointed Inspector-General of Fortifications. In Nov., 1882, he was despatched to Cairo, charged with the duty of inquiring into the causes of the sickness and mortality which were prevailing among the British army of occupation, and was invested with full power to make any alterations which he might consider necessary in the sanitary arrangements. Sir Andrew Clarke is the author of several works on engineering.

CLARKE, Charles Baron, F.R.S., F.L.S., F.G.S., born June 17, 1832, at Andover, Hants, is the son of Turner Poulter Clarke, of Andover, J.P., and was educated, from eight to fourteen, under the Rev. Lewis Tomlinson, of Salisbury, from fourteen to nineteen at King's College School, London, then at Trinity and Queen's Colleges, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. in Jan., 1856 (bracketed third Wrangler). He was called to the Bar in 1858 at Lincoln's Inn, was elected Fellow of Queen's College, Cambridge, 1857. He was Mathematical Lecturer of Queen's College, Cambridge, from 1858-65, entered the Bengal Educational Service in 1866, was superannuated 1887. He has published "Speculations from Political Economy," 1886; and numerous other papers on Political Economy; various papers on music (as in Nature, Jan., 1883); the "Class-Book of Geography," 1889; and other text-books; also an account of Khasi Dolmen in the Journal of the Anthropological Society. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, of the Linnæan Society, of the Geological Society of London, &c.; and has been for some years past almost exclusively devoted to the studies of Morphological Botany and English History. His principal botanic work is published in the De Candolle Monographies, in Sir J. D. Hooker's "Flora of British India," and in the Journals and Transactions of the Linnæan Society.

CLARKE, Sir Edward, Q.C., M.P., eldest son of Mr. J. C. Clarke, of Moorgate Street, E.C., was born in 1841, and educated at College House, Edmonton, and the City Commercial School, Lombard Street, E.C. In 1859 he obtained a writership in the India Office, but retired 1860. Afterwards he was a reporter in the House of Commons, and was on the literary staff of the Standard and Morning Herald. He obtained the Tancred Law Studentship in 1861, and was called to the Bar in 1864 at Lincoln's Inn, and joined the Home Circuit. In 1880 he was created a Queen's Counsel, and two years later was elected a Bencher of his Inn. He was elected member for Southwark a few weeks before the dissolution of 1880, but lost his seat at the general election. Since July, 1880, he has represented Plymouth in the Conservative interest. His first great professional success was made in the well-known "Penge Mystery," and more recently he made a great impression by his able speech in the Pimlico case in defence of Mrs. Bartlett. On the accession of Lord Salisbury's second Government to power in August, 1886, Sir (then Mr.) Edward Clarke was made Solicitor-General, and received the honour of Knighthood.

CLARKE, Hyde, born in London in 1815, was engaged in the Spanish and Portuguese wars of succession. In 1836, as an engineer, he planned and surveyed the Glasgow and South-Western Railway, with the Morecambe Bay Embankment, and the development of Barrow. In 1849, having been engaged in acoustic telegraphy, he was employed to report on the telegraph system for India, and in 1857 he exerted himself for the extension of hill settlements and railways in India. In 1836 he founded the London and County Bank, and in 1868 was engaged in founding the Council of Foreign Bondholders, which he long administered. He has taken an active part in Oriental and Colonial politics. His early writings from 1837 include works for the Useful Knowledge Society, and numerous books, memoirs, and pamphlets on philosophical subjects, political economy, banking, statistics, railways, international law, foreign loans, and public works. Mr. Clarke is also the author of "Military Life of Wellington," 1849; "English Grammar and Dictionary," 1853; and "Comparative Philology," 1858. He is well known as a philologist and a linguist.

CLARKE, John Sleeper, American comedian, was born at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1835. At an early age he became a member of an amateur dramatic association in his native city, but he made his début as Frank Hardy in "Paul Pry," at the Howard Athenæum in Boston, 1851, and began his first regular engagement at the Old Chestnut Theatre, Philadelphia, as Soto, in "She Would and She Would Not," 1852. He afterwards acted for some years at Baltimore, Boston, New York, and other cities. In 1863 he became joint-lessee of the Winter Garden Theatre, New York, and so continued till 1867, when the establishment was destroyed by fire. In 1865 he purchased, with his brother-in-law, Edwin Booth, the Walnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia, and in 1866 became joint-lessee of the Boston Theatre. In the autumn of 1867 he came out at the St. James's Theatre in London in the character of Wellington de Boots, which he had performed more than a thousand nights in America. He played also Bob Tyke in "The School of Reform," Salem Scudder in "The Octoroon," and, after a tour in the provinces, revived old comedies, and was very successful as Dr. Pangloss in "The Heir-at-Law." Returning to America in 1870 he remained there till 1871, when he paid another visit to England. In March, 1872, he became proprietor of the Charing Cross Theatre, and afterwards managed the Haymarket Theatre, with the late Mr. E. A. Sothern. For many years Mr. Clarke has been one of the largest owners and managers of theatres probably in the world, controlling, in addition to his London property and his Philadelphia Walnut Street Theatre, another theatre on Broad Street in the latter city. Besides managing these establishments he has appeared constantly on the stage both in England and in America, though his home has been chiefly in London.

CLARKE, Mrs. Mary Cowden, the eldest daughter of Mr. Vincent Novello, and sister of Madame Clara Novello, was born in June, 1809, and was married in 1828 to the late Mr. Charles Cowden Clarke, the friend of Lamb, Keats, Hazlitt, and Leigh Hunt. A year after her marriage she commenced her minute analysis of our great national dramatist, embodying her analysis in the "Complete Concordance to Shakespeare," which, after sixteen years' assiduous labour, was brought to a successful termination, and published in 1845. In addition to this labour of love, Mrs. Cowden Clarke has written "The Adventures of Kit Bam, Mariner," published in 1848; "The Girlhood of Shakespeare's Heroines," in 1850; a novel called "The Iron Cousin," in 1854; "The Song of a Drop o' Wather, by Harry Wandworth Shortfellow," in 1856; "World-noted Women," in 1857; an edition of "Shakespeare's Works, with a scrupulous revision of the Text;" "Trust and Remittance: Love Stories in Metred Prose," in 1873; and "A Rambling Story," 2 vols., 1874; as well as various magazine articles, chiefly relating to the great masterpieces of dramatic literature, besides a few poems and stories in verse. In conjunction with her husband, she produced "Many Happy Returns of the Day: a Birthday Book," in 1847 and 1860; an annotated edition of "Shakespeare's Plays," in 1869; "Leigh Hunt: a Descriptive Sketch," in The Century Magazine, 1882; "Puck's Pranks: a Juvenile Drama," in The St. Nicholas Magazine, 1883; "On English Cookery in Shakespeare's Time," in The Merry England Magazine, 1883; "Verse-Waifs," 1883; "A Score of Sonnets to One Object," 1884; "Salvini's Corrado" in The Athenæum, 1885; "Shakespeare's Self, as Revealed in his Writings," Shakespeariana, 1885; "Uncle, Peep, and I: a Child's Novel," 1886; "Shakespeare, as the Girl's Friend," in The Girl's Own Paper, 1887; "A Story without a Name" in The Girl's Own Paper, 1887; "Centennial Biographic Sketch of Charles Cowden-Clarke," 1887; "Memorial Sonnets, &c.," 1888.

CLAYDEN, Arthur William, M.A., F.G.S., &c., born Dec. 12, 1835, at Boston, in Lincolnshire, is the eldest son of Mr. P. W. Clayden and his first wife Jane, and was educated at University College School and Christ's College, Cambridge. Mr. Clayden entered the University at the early age of 17, obtained a foundation scholarship in 1875, and graduated in the second class of the Natural Science Tripos of 1876, finishing all his examinations before his 21st birthday. In 1878 he was appointed Science Master at Bath College, a post which he held for nine years. In 1887 he resigned his post at Bath and removed to London on his appointment as a Lecturer on the University Extension Schemes of Cambridge and London. He is a Fellow or Member of the Chemical, Geological, Physical and Royal Meteorological Societies, and in 1890 was elected one of the Council of the last. Mr. Clayden is the author of several original papers. The most important are "On the Thickness of Shower Clouds" (Q. J. Royal Meteorological Society, 1886); "On a Working Model of the Gulf Stream" (Q. J. Royal Meteorological Society, 1889); describing an invention which is a practical demonstration of the Wind theory of Ocean Currents; "Note on some Photographs of Lightning and of 'Black' Electric Sparks" (Philosophical Magazine, and Proceedings of the Physical Society, 1889), "On 'Dark' Flashes of Lightning" (British Association, 1889), two papers which prove that a phenomenon which had puzzled scientific men for a couple of years was nothing but a form of photographic reversal. In addition to his scientific and educational work, Mr. Clayden has had considerable journalistic experience as a leader writer on special topics. He married in 1883 Ethel, second daughter of A. S. Paterson, Esq.

CLAYDEN, Peter William, eldest son of Peter Clayden, of Wallingford and Farringdon, Berks, was born at Wallingford, Oct. 20, 1827, educated privately for a business career, became minister of the Unitarian Congregation at Boston in 1855, Rochdale in 1859, and Nottingham in 1860. He joined the staff of the Daily News as a leader writer on the retirement of Miss Martineau, and on her recommendation, in 1866. In 1868, when the Daily News was reduced in price to one penny, Mr. Clayden removed to London, and became assistant editor. He acted as assistant editor and leader writer till August, 1887, since which time he has been associated with Sir John Robinson in the editorship. Mr. Clayden was Liberal candidate for Nottingham, in conjunction with Mr. Charles Seely, now Colonel Seely, at the general election in 1868. He unsuccessfully contested the Norwood Division of Lambeth in the Liberal interest in 1885, and the Northern Division of Islington in 1886. During his residence at Boston he edited the Boston Guardian, and at Rochdale wrote leaders for the Rochdale Observer. While at Nottingham he contributed to the Edinburgh Review, the Fortnightly Review, the Theological Review, the Cornhill Magazine, and later to various other periodicals. In 1873 he established the Reading Observer as an organ of Liberal principles in his native county, disposing of it to its present proprietors in 1879. Mr. Clayden is the author of several political and other pamphlets, one of which, on the Redistribution Act in London, is believed to have led to the reconstruction of some of the divisions originally suggested, notably those of Southwark. He published "England under Lord Beaconsfield," 1880; "Samuel Sharpe, Egyptologist and Translator of the Bible," 1884; "The Early Life of Samuel Rogers," 1887; "Rogers and His Contemporaries," 2 vols., 1889; and "England under the Coalition" in 1892. Mr. Clayden has been President of the Institute of Journalists, and took an active part in the successful effort to procure for the Institute a Royal Charter. Mr. Clayden has been twice married; first to Jane, eldest daughter of the late Mr. Charles Fowle, of Dorchester, in 1853, and second, in 1887, to Ellen, eldest daughter of the late Mr. Henry Sharpe, whose recollections of his uncle, Samuel Rogers, have an important place in "Rogers and his Contemporaries."

CLELAND, Professor John, M.D. (Edinburgh), LL.D. (St. Andrews), D.Sc. (Q.U.I.), L.R.C.S.E., F.R.S., born at Perth in 1835, is the second son of the late John Cleland, surgeon, at Perth. Dr. Cleland was appointed, in 1863, to the chair of Anatomy and Physiology in Queen's College, Galway, and in 1877 to the chair of Anatomy in Glasgow, which he still holds. He is the author of numerous Anatomical Contributions, and the following books: "Directory for the Dissection of the Human Body," 1876; "Animal Physiology," 1877; "Evolution, Expression, and Sensation," 1881.

He is also the author of "Scala Natural and other Poems," 1887; and, in conjunction with others, "Memoirs and Memoranda in Anatomy," vol. i., 1889.

CLÉMENCEAU, Georges Benjamin, M.D., a French physician and politician, born at Mouilleron-en-Pareds (Vendée), Sept. 28, 1841, began his professional studies at Nantes, and completed them in Paris, where, in 1869, he was created a Doctor of Medicine, and practised at Montmartre. After the revolution of Sept. 4, 1870, he was appointed Mayor of the 18th arrondissement of Paris, and a member of the Commission of Communal Education. At the election of Feb. 8, 1871, he was elected a representative of the department of the Seine in the National Assembly, where he took his place among the members of the Extreme Left, and voted against the preliminaries of peace. On the 18th of March he endeavoured to save the lives of the Generals Lecomte and Clément Thomas, but in vain, for he did not arrive at the Rue des Rosiers until after their execution. On this occasion the Central Committee of the Communists, which was sitting at the Hôtel de Ville, resolved that Dr. Clémenceau should be arrested; but he was fortunate enough to elude the vigilance of the insurrectionary police. When the murderers were put upon their trial, Nov. 29, 1871, some of the witnesses accused him of not having interfered as early as he might have done, but he was warmly defended by Colonel Langlois, whose testimony appeared to clear Dr. Clémenceau from all blame in the matter. However, the accusations led to a duel between Dr. Clémenceau and M. le commandant de Poussargues, who was wounded in the leg by a pistol-shot. Dr. Clémenceau was prosecuted for this affair a month later, the result being that he was condemned by the Seventh Chamber of Correctional Police to be imprisoned for a fortnight, and to pay a fine of twenty-five francs. In the sitting of the 20th of March he introduced in the National Assembly a Bill, signed by the Radical fraction of the Deputies of the department of the Seine, to authorise the election of a Municipal Council for the City of Paris, to consist of eighty members; and he was one of those who signed the manifesto of Deputies and Mayors fixing the municipal elections on the 26th of that month. As a candidate at those elections, he polled 752 votes, but was not elected. After having taken part in the unsuccessful attempts at conciliation between the Government and the Commune, he sent in his resignation both as Mayor and as Deputy, and retired for a short period into private life. On July 23, 1871, he was elected a member of the Municipal Council of Paris for the Clignancourt quarter, and he took a prominent part in the discussions concerning primary secular instruction and financial questions. On Nov. 29, 1874, he was re-elected a member of the Municipal Council, of which he became successively Secretary and Vice-President, and eventually President in Nov., 1875. He was elected a Deputy for the department of the Seine by the 18th arrondissement of Paris, Feb. 20, 1876, and afterwards he became Secretary of the Chamber. In the following April he resigned his place in the Municipal Council. He was again re-elected to the National Assembly by the 18th arrondissement of Paris at the general elections of Oct. 14, 1877. Since that time he has been generally regarded as the leader of the Advanced Left, and as such he has made and unmade many Governments. His opposition to the Tonquin policy decided the fall of M. Ferry, and his support kept M. de Freycinet in office. He is editor and chief proprietor of the influential Radical journal La Justice. It was a resolution moved by M. Clémenceau, and insisting on a thorough investigation of the Wilson scandal, that led to the overthrow of the Rouvier Government, and the consequent fall of M. Grévy. M. Clémenceau was asked by the President to form a Ministry, but declined, and told the President plainly that the crisis was not a political but a presidential one. He is regarded as one of the most expert swordsmen in France, and acted as one of the seconds to M. Floquet in his duel with General Boulanger in July, 1888. At the general elections of September, 1889, M. Clémenceau was returned by a large majority for Draguignan, and in parliament again made himself the mouthpiece of Radicalism. As such he uttered the famous epigram, "La Révolution est un bloc, dont on ne peut rien détacher, rien rejeter." This was spoken during a debate (Jan., 1891) on Sardou's "Thermidor," which was suppressed. Somewhat later, on being asked if the Socialist Deputy Lafargue could be let out of prison, he announced that, Boulangism being no longer a danger, the alliance between the Radical and Opportunist Republicans was at an end, and thenceforward became an opponent of the Freycinet Ministry. During the Panama scandals he was persistently and violently attacked by opponents, who accused him of selling his country, but these accusations were found to be based on forgeries. He was, however, defeated at the general election in Sept., 1893.

CLEMENS, Samuel Langhorne, generally known by his pseudonym of "Mark Twain," was born at Florida, Missouri, Nov. 30, 1835. At the age of thirteen he was apprenticed to a printer, and worked at the trade in St. Louis, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, and New York. In 1855 he became for a short time pilot on the Mississippi river, and in 1861 went to Nevada as private secretary to his brother, the Secretary of the territory. He then went to the mines, and afterwards for several months acted as reporter for Californian newspapers. He spent six months in the Hawaiian Islands in 1866, and after delivering humorous lectures in California and Nevada, returned to the East in 1867, where he published "The Jumping Frog." In that year he embarked, with a large number of other passengers, on a pleasure excursion up the Mediterranean, to Egypt and the Holy Land, which he describes in "The Innocents Abroad," 1869. For a time he was editor of a daily newspaper published in Buffalo, N. Y. State, where he married a lady possessed of a large fortune. In 1872 he visited England, giving several humorous lectures; and a London publisher made a collection, in four volumes, of his humorous papers, adding, however, many which the author asserts were never written by him. In 1874 he produced in New York a comedy, "The Gilded Age," which had a remarkable success, owing mainly to the personation, by Mr. Raymond, of the leading character, "Colonel Mulberry Sellers." Mr. Clemens is a frequent contributor to the magazines, and in addition to the books mentioned above has published—"Roughing It," 1872; "Adventures of Tom Sawyer, 1876; "Punch Brothers, Punch," 1878; "A Tramp Abroad," 1880; "The Prince and the Pauper," 1882; "The Stolen White Elephant, and other Tales," 1882; and "Life on the Mississippi," 1883. In 1884 he established in New York the publishing house of C. L. Webster & Co., which issued in 1885 a new story by him entitled "Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," a sequel to "Tom Sawyer," and brought out in that and the following year Gen. Grant's "Memoirs," of which Mrs. Grant's share of the profits amounted to $480,000. Since then he has published "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," 1889; "The American Claimant," 1892; "Pudd'nhead Wilson," 1893, and "Tom Sawyer Abroad," 1893, the last two beginning serially in St. Nicholas and The Century in Dec., 1893. His books have been republished in England, and translations of the principal ones in Germany.

CLEVELAND, Grover, twenty-second President of the United States, was born at Caldwell, New Jersey, March 18, 1837. When he was three years of age his father, who was a Presbyterian minister, moved to Fayetteville, Onondaga co., New York, where they lived until 1851, when the family went to Clinton, Oneida co., leaving Grover in Fayetteville, where he remained about two years as a clerk in the village store. On the death of his father in 1853 he went to New York, and for about a year was book-keeper and assistant teacher in the Institution for the Blind. Thence he removed to Buffalo in 1855, where he studied law and began its practice in 1859. In 1863 he was appointed Assistant District Attorney for Erie co., and in 1865 was the Democratic nominee for District Attorney, but failed to secure the election. From Jan. 1, 1871, to Jan. 1, 1874, he was sheriff of that county, and in 1881 was elected Mayor of Buffalo. The reformed methods of administering the city's affairs, instituted by him while filling that office, led to his election in the following year as Governor of the State of New York, by a majority of 192,000 votes over his opponent, Judge Folger, the Republican Secretary of the U.S. treasury. This phenomenal success, as indicative of the probability of his carrying New York and of attracting the Independent vote, secured him the Democratic nomination for the Presidency in 1884, and in Nov. of that year he was elected over Mr. Blaine, the Republican candidate. Mr. Cleveland's administration, 1885-89, was marked by great prosperity to the country at large; by the admission of four new States (Washington, Montana, North Dakota and South Dakota) to the Union; by an extension of the reform in the Civil Service begun under his predecessor, Mr. Arthur; and by a freer use of the veto-power than had generally been exercised by other Presidents. On the meeting of Congress in Dec., 1887, he devoted his annual message mainly to the advocacy of a reduction in tariff duties in order to prevent the further increase of the surplus in the U.S. treasury, which was already large and which threatened to cause financial difficulties. This message occasioned a prolonged discussion of the principles of protection, and furnished the issue in the National Political Campaign of 1888, when Mr. Cleveland was renominated by the Democrats, and Mr.

Harrison was chosen as the Republican candidate. Although the former received a popular majority larger than he had had in 1884, the latter had the greater number of electoral votes, and accordingly on March 4, 1889, Mr. Cleveland left Washington and removed to New York where he remained in the practice of law till 1893. In 1892 certain New York, wire-pullers tried to substitute Mr. Hill as Democratic Candidate for the presidency in place of Mr. Cleveland, but the Democratic Convention at Chicago adopted the latter by an immense majority. At the Presidential Election on Nov. 9, 1892, Mr. Cleveland defeated Mr. Harrison by another very large majority. The solemn inauguration of President Cleveland took place at Washington on March 4, 1893, amid great popular enthusiasm. In his inaugural address the President declared that the nation could never be prosperous without a sound and stable currency. On July 1, he convened Congress by proclamation for Aug. 7, when they were to meet for the repeal of the Silver Laws. A presidential message was afterwards sent to Congress urging the necessity of prompt action in the silver question. On Mr. Wilson's bill for the repeal of the Silver-Purchase Law being introduced, the President pushed it on till it passed the House of Representatives (Aug. 28), but after prolonged debates in the Senate the Repeal party were beaten, and agreed to a compromise. Of this President Cleveland and many Republicans disapproved, and the Bill, with a senatorial amendment, received the presidential signature on Nov. 1. President Cleveland's policy is described in America as the "tariff-for-revenue platform." His present term of office will expire in 1897.

CLIFFORD, Frederick, was born in 1828, and called to the Bar of the Middle Temple in 1859. He served as Assistant Boundary Commissioner under the Reform Act of 1867. Mr. Clifford, who was for many years on the literary staff of the Times, and practises at the Parliamentary Bar, is the author of a treatise on "The Steamboat Powers of Railway Companies," 1865; and is joint author (with Mr. Pembroke Stephens, Q.C.) of a treatise on "The Practice of the Court of Referees on Private Bills in Parliament," 1870, a standard text-book in Private Bill Practice. He is also joint author of yearly volumes of Reports of cases as to the Locus Standi of Petitioners, decided each Session by the Court of Referees from 1867 down to the year 1884. But his chief work in this connection is a "History of Private Bill Legislation," in two volumes, 1885-6, dedicated by permission to Her Majesty the Queen; a work of great labour, research, and of general interest to historical students for the light it throws upon social progress in Great Britain. He published, in 1875, "The Agricultural Lock-out of 1874; with Notes upon Farming and Farm Labour in the Eastern Counties," founded on a series of letters which appeared in the Times; and he is the author also of a treatise on "The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875;" of other Papers reprinted from the Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society; and of an article on "English Land Law," forming one of the treatises prepared under the direction of the Royal Agricultural Society, and translated and published by "La Société des Agriculteurs de France," for the "Congrès International de l'Agriculture," held in Paris in 1878.

CLIFFORD, John, D.D., B.Sc., LL.B., F.G.S., General Baptist Minister (New Connexion), was born at Sawley, near Derby, Oct. 16, 1836, educated at the Nottingham General Baptist Theological College, 1855-58, and at University College, London, 1858-66, taking the London University degrees of B.A., 1861, B.Sc., 1862, with honours in Geology, Logic and Moral Philosophy; M.A., 1864, bracketed first; LL.B., 1866, with honours in Principles of Legislation. Since 1858 he has been Pastor of the Westbourne Park Church, Paddington, London. He was President of the General Baptist Association, 1872; and Secretary, 1876-78, of the London Baptist Association; President, 1879; and from 1870 to 1883 (inclusive) edited The General Baptist Magazine; and was President of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, 1888. He is the author of "Familiar Talks on 'Starting in Life,'" London, 1872; "George Mostyn," 1874; "Is Life Worth Living? an Eightfold Answer," 1880, 6th ed., 1889; "English Baptists: Who they are, and What they have Done" (edited), 1883, 2nd ed., 1884; "Daily Strength for Daily Living, Expositions of Old Testament Themes," 2nd ed., 1886; "The Dawn of Manhood," a book for Young Men, 1886; "Baptist Theology," Contemporary Review, March, 1888; "The Great Forty Years," 1888; "The New City of God," 1888; "The Place of Baptists in the Evolution of British Christianity," Times, 1889; "Who are Christian Ministers?" Lippincott's Magazine, March, 1890, &c.

CLIFTON, Professor Robert Bellamy, M.A. (Cantab. et Oxon.), F.R.S., F.R.A.S., only child of the late Robert Clifton, Esq., was born at Gedney, Lincolnshire, March 13, 1836. After receiving his early education at private schools he entered University College, London, in 1852, and studied Mathematics under the late Professor De Morgan. In 1855 he proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge, and in 1859 graduated (B.A.) as sixth Wrangler, gaining also the second Smith's Prize for proficiency in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy. In 1860 he was elected to a Fellowship in St. John's College, and also became Professor of Natural Philosophy in Owens College, Manchester, an appointment which he retained until elected Professor of Experimental Philosophy in the University of Oxford in 1865. In 1868 he was admitted a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1869 a Fellowship in Merton College, Oxford, was conferred upon him, and he subsequently became also a Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. Prof. Clifton is the author of some papers on subjects connected with optics and electricity, but he has principally devoted himself to the development of physics, as a branch of study, in the University of Oxford. The Clarendon Laboratory—the first laboratory erected in England specially for instruction in practical physics—was designed and organised by him. From 1879 to 1886 he was a member of the Royal Commission on Accidents in Mines, and he took an active part in the investigations involved in the prosecution of the inquiry. Prof. Clifton has been President of the Physical Society of London, 1882-84; he is a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, and of several other scientific societies in London, Cambridge, and Manchester. He is also a member of the Board of Visitors of the Royal Observatory at Greenwich.

CLUSERET, Gustave Paul, a French military adventurer and Communist general, was born at Paris June 23, 1823. His father was an ancien officier of the First Empire, and became colonel of a regiment of the line under the Monarchy of July. Young Cluseret studied in the military school of St. Cyr, and upon leaving, in 1845, was appointed a sub-lieutenant of his father's regiment, the 55th. In the revolution of Feb. 1848, Cluseret was in command of a section of grenadiers told off for the protection of the Bank. When the National Guard of the quartier relieved the troops, Baron d'Argoult hid the young officer and his soldiers for two days, and then assisted them to escape in disguise from the fury of the people. In the days of June, Cluseret was elected a chief of a battalion of National Guards, and for his bravery under fire was named Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. After the dissolution of the Garde Mobile he returned to his old regiment with the grade of lieutenant, and shortly afterwards was put on the retired list in consequence of a manifestation of politics adverse to the Prince-President. He was replaced at the intercession of Marshal Magnan, an old friend of his father's, and in 1853 was transferred to the Chasseurs-à-pied, with whom he went through the campaign in the Crimea, was made captain, and, after the peace, went to Africa, where, as his biographer, M. Jules Richards, delicately puts it, "the elasticity of his principles in the matter of the ownership of property made it necessary for him to resign." In 1860 he turned up with the army of Garibaldi, where he became lieutenant-colonel. When the war broke out in America he joined the Federals, and fought against the South with the grade of a colonel. After the close of the American war Cluseret returned to France and took up the profession of journalism. Another indication of "elasticity of principles" led to the necessity of his quitting Paris, and he came over to England, where he mixed himself up with the Fenian agitation. Returning again to France, he got into trouble by reason of the publication of a newspaper article to which his name was appended, and was condemned to two months' imprisonment in St. Pélagie. There, in addition to the acquaintance of his biographer, he made that of certain agents of the International Society, the effect of which was shortly afterwards seen in his organizing the strike of the shop-assistants in Paris, in 1869. After the elections of June in that year, Cluseret was expelled from France at the instance of the Minister of War, who had reason to believe that the ex-captain was tampering with the sous-officiers of the garrison. Immediately upon the proclamation of the Provisional Government of Sept. 4, 1870, the exile turned up again, and his subsequent history is legibly written in the records of revolution at Marseilles, Lyons, and Paris. For a short time he was at the head of the military operations of the Paris Commune, but, like nearly all the other agents of that body, he soon fell under suspicion, and was arrested, though he was released from custody shortly before the entrance of the Versailles troops. It was reported that he was shot before Sept. 22-26, 1871; but, notwithstanding the vigilant search made for him by the police, he remained in concealment in Paris till the end of the month of December, 1871, when he escaped to London. Soon afterwards he went to the United States. The Third Council of War, sitting at Versailles, condemned him to death, par contumace, Aug. 30, 1872. Cluseret and his publisher were, on Jan. 27, 1881, sentenced by default to two years' imprisonment and 3000 f. fine for an article inciting soldiers to mutiny. He again left France and returned in 1884, when he exhibited his paintings, of which some have lately appeared in the Salon. In 1887 he published his Memoirs. They deal with the Second Siege of Paris, and are an apology for the Commune. In 1888 Gen. Cluseret stood for parliament in the Var, and was elected as a "revolutionist." He was re-elected at Toulon in 1889.

COBBE, Miss Frances Power, daughter of Charles Cobbe, Esq., of Newbridge House, co. Dublin, D.L., J.P. (who fought at Assaye as lieutenant in the 19th Light Dragoons), was born Dec. 4, 1822, and educated at Brighton. She has been a frequent contributor to the periodicals of the day, and is the author of the following works: "An Essay on Intuitive Morals," 1855 (3rd edit., 1859); "Religious Duty," 1857 (2nd edit., 1864); "Pursuits of Women," 1863; "Cities of the Past," 1863; "Broken Lights," 1864 (3rd edit., two American edits.); "Italics," 1864; "Studies Ethical and Social," 1865; "Hours of Work and Play," 1867; "Drawing Lights," 1868; "Alone, to the Alone," 1871 (3rd edit., 1881); "Darwinism in Morals," 1872; "Hopes of the Human Race," 1874, 1880; "Re-echoes," 1876; "False Beasts and True," 1875; "Duties of Women," 1880; (3rd English, 8th American, edit., 1889); "The Peak in Darien," 1881; "A Faithless World," 1885; "The Scientific Spirit of the Age," 1888; "The Modern Rack," 1889; "The Friend of Man" (2nd edit.), 1890. Besides these books Miss Cobbe has issued a great number of pamphlets, among which are: "The Workhouse as an Hospital," 1861; "Friendless Girls, and How to Help Them," 1861, containing an account of the original Preventive Mission at Bristol; "Female Education," 1862 (a plea for granting University Degrees to women), and more than two hundred pamphlets and leaflets on the vivisection question. Miss Cobbe resided for some years in Bristol with the late Mary Carpenter, for the purpose of working at her reformatory and ragged schools; and subsequently originated, in concert with Miss Elliot, a scheme for befriending young servants, now worked by the Metropolitan Association founded for that purpose, and another for the relief of destitute incurables. After journeys to Egypt, Palestine and Greece, and several visits to Italy, Miss Cobbe joined a friend in taking a house in South Kensington, where she lived for twenty years. She was for a part of this time on the staff of the Echo, and subsequently of the Standard, and contributed largely to other newspapers and periodicals, the Quarterly Review, Fraser, &c. She was engaged, besides literary work, in promoting the Act (41 Vict. c. 19) of 1878, whereby wives whose husbands have been convicted of aggravated assaults upon them are enabled to obtain Separation Orders; and also in aiding the movement for obtaining Parliamentary suffrage for women. In 1880-81 she twice delivered to audiences of ladies a course of lectures on the Duties of Women; these have been largely circulated in America, and also translated and published in Danish, Italian and French. During the last fifteen years Miss Cobbe has been principally occupied in founding and directing as Hon. Sec. the Victoria Street Society for the Protection of Animals from Vivisection, an Association of which the late Lord Shaftesbury was President. She has now resigned her office and the editorship of the Zoophilist, and resides at Hengwrt, near Dolgelly; but continues to work and, occasionally, to speak at meetings on behalf of the cause of humanity to animals as opposed to the demands of biological science.

COLENSO, The Rev. W., F.R.S., F.L.S., belongs to an old Cornish family, and was born at Penzance in 1811. He is a first cousin to the late Bishop of Natal, John William Colenso. In his youth he learned the arts of printing and bookbinding, and worked in the office of Watts & Son, 2 Temple Bar, Crown Court, where he was for a time engaged on work for the British and Foreign Bible Society. In the year 1833, the Church Missionary Society decided to send out a press and outfit to New Zealand. About the end of the year, Mr. Colenso was introduced to the secretaries of the mission, and was definitely engaged, in the double capacity of missionary and printer. On Jan. 3, 1835, the press and plant were landed, and on Feb. 17, 1835, was worked off the first copy of the first book printed in New Zealand—the Epistles to the Ephesians and Philippians, in the Maori language. Mr. Colenso's time was thenceforward chiefly devoted to the ordinary mission-work, in the course of which he traversed nearly the whole of the North Island on foot—a tremendous undertaking in the days before roads and bridges existed. For two years he resided with Bishop Selwyn, at St. John's College, Waimate; in 1844 he took orders, and in the same year took up his abode in Hawke's Bay, where he has since remained. Mr. Colenso is the only surviving European who was present on the important occasion of the signing of the Treaty of Waitangi, on Feb. 6, 1840; and his latest published work, issued from the Government press, is a detailed account of the proceedings, written at the time. As a man of science, Mr. Colenso has a wide reputation. There is no greater authority on Maori arts, antiquities, myths, and legendary lore, or on the natural history of the Islands. He is a Fellow of the Linnæan Society, and in recognition of his distinguished contributions to botanical science was elected Fellow of the Royal Society. From the first foundation of the New Zealand Institute he has been the largest and most valued contributor to its transactions. He was the first to identify the fossil remains of the gigantic dinornis—the moa of Maori proverb—as those of a bird. He has in manuscript a voluminous lexicon of the Polynesian language, the labour of many years.

COLLET, Sir Mark Wilks, Bart., J.P., was born in London in 1816, is the second son of Mr. James Collet, a London merchant, and was educated abroad. He is a partner in the house of Brown, Shipley & Co., London; was elected a Director of the Bank of England in 1866; filled the office of Deputy Governor of the Bank from 1885 to 1887, and of Governor from 1887 to 1889. He was created a Baronet in 1888 in recognition of services rendered as Governor of the Bank in connection with the Conversion of the National Debt, effected in that year. He is a J.P. for the County of Kent, and for the County of London, and also a Commissioner of Lieutenancy for the City of London.

COLLINGS, The Right Hon. Jesse, M.P., was born in 1831 in the parish of Littleham-cum-Exmouth in Devonshire. He comes of humble parentage, but received what in those days was considered a fair education, and at an early period of his life entered, as clerk, the Birmingham firm of Messrs. Samuel Booth and Co., subsequently becoming their representative in the South and West of England. He at length acquired their business and settled in Birmingham in 1866 as head partner in the firm of "Collings and Wallis." Taking, as he did, an active part in public work, he was in 1867 elected a member of the Birmingham Education Society, and early in 1868 published a vigorous pamphlet entitled "An Outline of the American School System: with Remarks on the Establishment of a Common School System in England." In this pamphlet, which had a large circulation, he advocated the formation of "a Society on the Principle of the Anti-Corn Law League, national in name and constitution, refusing all compromise, its platform being National Secular (or unsectarian) Education, compulsory in rating and in attendance." Later in the same year "The National Education League" was formed, Mr. George Dixon being President, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, Chairman of the Executive Committee, and Mr. Jesse Collings Honorary Secretary. The action of the League materially assisted the passing of the National Education Act in 1870, and Mr. Collings was to the front in all its deliberations. In 1868 he became a member of the Town Council of Birmingham, and in 1878 was unanimously elected Mayor. His tenure of office was notable in many ways. In 1878-9 he did much to alleviate the prevalent distress among the poor of Birmingham by instituting the "Mayor's Fund," which gave relief to more than 10,000 families. In 1879 he was mainly instrumental in rebuilding the Central Free Libraries of Birmingham, which had been destroyed by fire. He became notorious in 1878 for his severe action against certain "Jingo" dissentients who disturbed a political meeting of which he was chairman. These persons—of whom there were some hundreds—created a disturbance at a political meeting called at the Town Hall "to consider the Afghan Policy of the Government," and were ejected by the police at Mr. Collings's request. Several of the rejected brought actions against the Mayor and others, and the case was tried in the Criminal Court, where Mr. Collings was defended by Sir Henry James. The Stipendiary, Mr. Kynnersley, declined to state a case, and the right of a chairman to eject uproarious opponents remains unsettled. About twenty years ago Mr. Collings assisted in the formation of the Agricultural Labourers' Union, and was for some time a member of its Executive Committee. His political life is intimately associated with the aims of this association. In 1880 he entered Parliament as Radical member for Ipswich, and represented that constituency till 1885. On entering Parliament he determined to devote himself chiefly to the cause of the agricultural labourer, and in 1882, after several defeats, he succeeded in passing the Allotments Extension Act. At the same time he introduced a General Allotments Bill and a Small Holdings Bill, which embodied the policy known as "Three Acres and a Cow." These bills were repeatedly defeated, until in 1886 Mr. Collings moved an amendment to the Address, setting forth the necessity for legislation favourable to the agricultural labourers. The amendment was carried, and caused the fall of the Conservative Government. In 1887 the Unionist Government passed the Allotments Bill with but slight alteration. The Small Holdings Bill was also adopted and passed in 1892, and the administration of the Act was placed in the hands of the County Councils. The Act tends to produce a peasant proprietary, and Mr. Collings holds "that not only the rural labourers, but the working men in towns and centres of industry, as well as shopkeepers, manufacturers and traders generally, will all be benefited by the increased production of the smaller articles of food, which can alone be produced" by owners of small holdings. Mr. Collings has been a warm opponent of the action of the Charity Commissioners in rural districts. He has opposed their schemes, and to a great extent modified their policy towards the poorer classes in country districts. When in 1885 a bill was passed for disfranchising voters who had received parochial relief, he succeeded in carrying a proviso that a labourer who had been attended by a Poor Law Medical Officer should not lose his vote. In 1883 he founded the Allotments Association, but was turned out of it in 1886 owing to his having become a Unionist. He thereupon formed the present Rural Labourers' League, which aims at securing to the labourer the benefits given him under recent Acts. Mr. Jesse Collings was re-elected in 1892 to the Bordesley Division of Birmingham, which he has represented since 1886. He is author of several pamphlets on free education and peasant proprietorship. In 1858 he married the daughter of Mr. Edward Oxenbould, by whom he has one daughter, married to Mr. H. C. Field. He is a Unitarian in creed. In 1886 he was Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board, and in 1891 was a member of the Labour Commission.

COLLINGWOOD, Cuthbert, M.A. and B.M. Oxon. F.L.S., &c., was born at Greenwich, Dec. 25, 1826, and educated at King's College School, Christ Church, Oxford, Edinburgh University, and Guy's Hospital. He also studied in Paris and Vienna. From 1858 to 1866 he resided in Liverpool, occupying during that period the Chair of Botany in the Medical School, and that of Biology in the School of Science. He was also senior physician to the Liverpool Northern Hospital. Dr. Collingwood has been a Fellow of the Linnæan Society since 1853, and sat on the Council in 1868. In 1866-67 he undertook as a volunteer, under the sanction of the Admiralty, a scientific voyage for the study of marine zoology, &c., visiting China, Formosa, Borneo, and Singapore; the results being recorded in "Rambles of a Naturalist on the Shores and Waters of the China Sea," 1868, in numerous papers read before scientific societies, and in scientific journals. He is the author of "A Vision of Creation," "The Travelling Birds," and numerous scientific papers. In 1876-77, Dr. Collingwood travelled in Palestine and Egypt, and published an account of his journey.

COLLINS, Richard Henn, Q.C., Justice of the High Court, third son of Mr. Stephen Collins, Q.C., of Dublin, was born in 1842, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the highest honours in classics and moral science. He left Dublin without taking a degree, and proceeded to Downing College, Cambridge. He was bracketed fourth in the Classical Tripos, and was elected a Fellow of Downing in 1865, becoming an Hon. Fellow on the expiration of his Fellowship. Called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in Nov. 1867, he was created a Q.C. in 1883, and elected a Bencher of his Inn in 1884. He enjoyed a large practice both as junior and as Queen's Counsel, and appeared latterly in the important licensing appeal of "Sharp v. Wakefield" in the House of Lords, and in the Clitheroe Abduction Case, in which he appeared as leading counsel for Mr. Jackson in the Court of Appeal. He was for long well known as a sound and careful lawyer. In April, 1891, he was elevated to the Bench in succession to the late Mr. Justice Stephen, who had then recently retired. He was for some years a member of the Bar Committee, and is joint author of "Smith's Leading Cases."

COLOMB, Sir John Charles Ready, K.C.M.G., born May 1, 1838, is the son of General G. T. Colomb, by Mary, daughter of Sir A. B. King, Bart. He was educated privately and at the Royal Naval College, and served in the Royal Marine Artillery, 1854-69. He is the author of a series of lectures, 1869-86, delivered before the Royal United Service Institution, and subsequently published, "On the Distribution of Our War Forces;" "General Principles of Military Organization;" "Russian Development;" "Our Naval and Military Position in the North Pacific;" "The Naval and Military Resources of Our Colonies;" "Naval Intelligence and Protection of Commerce in War;" "The Use and Application of Marine Forces, Past, Present, and Future;" "Imperial Federation, Naval and Military;" "The Protection of Our Commerce," 1867; "Imperial Strategy," 1871; "Colonial Defence and Colonial Opinion," 1876; "The Defence of Great and Greater Britain," 1879; and has received the thanks of the Colonial Governments. He has contributed to Blackwood, Fraser, Nineteenth Century, Murray's Magazine, &c. He was one of the founders of the Imperial Federation League in conjunction with the late Rt. Hon. W. E. Forster, M.P., was elected M.P. for the Bow and Bromley Division of the Tower Hamlets, 1886, and was made K.C.M.G. in 1889.

COLQUHOUN, Archibald Ross, Assoc. Mem. I.C.E., F.R.G.S., gold medallist of the Royal Geographical Society, was born off the Cape in March, 1848, and is the son of the late Dr. Archibald Colquhoun, of Edinburgh, who gained renown in the H.E.I.C.S. during the first Afghan campaign. Mr. Colquhoun was educated in Scotland and on the Continent; entered the Indian Public Works Department as assistant engineer in 1871, and was first posted under Dr. Holt Hallett in the Tenasserim Division. This division forms the Eastern portion of British Burma, and borders Siam and the Siamese Shan States. Having gained considerable experience in the railway, canal, and other divisions, in 1879 he was appointed secretary and second in command of the Government Mission despatched to Siam and the Siamese Shan States. In 1881 he returned to England on furlough, and, together with Mr. Hallett, formed the project for the connection of India and China and the opening up of Siam and Central Indo-China by railway, which led to the exploration by Messrs. Colquhoun and Wahab through Southern China and the Chinese Shan States in 1881-82, and by Mr. Holt Hallett in Siam and the Siamese Shan States in 1883-84, during which they succeeded in tracing out the best route for their proposed system of railways. On his return to England Mr. Colquhoun was awarded the gold medal of the R.G.S.; published "Across Chrysé," a book in two volumes, giving an account of his travels; he contributed many important letters to The Times on China and Indo-China, addressed several Chambers of Commerce, and awakened general interest in those parts of the East and in the proposed system of railways. "Among the Shans" was published in 1883. In June, 1883, he left England for China and Tonquin as special correspondent of The Times; his able letters and descriptions of the people and country at once placed him in the foremost rank of correspondents and were quickly republished. Returning to England in Oct., he again left for The Times in Nov., remaining in the East until the close of the Franco-Chinese war. He came back to England in July, 1885, addressed the London Chamber of Commerce upon "English Commercial Policy in the East," proposed the annexation of Upper Burma, and the alliance of England and China so as to frustrate the aims of France and Russia in the East, and to advance the development of our commerce with China. Whilst in China he did all in his power to increase the friendly feeling of the Chinese Government for the English, and was intrusted by Li Hung Chang with a message to the Viceroy of India proposing the early connection of India and China by telegraph, viâ Burma and the Burmese Shan States. In Siam he saw the King, and explained the proposed system of railways, and was subsequently informed by our Minister at Bangkok, that the Siamese would construct their portion of the railway if the British would meet them with a line to the frontier. Mr. Colquhoun acted from 1885-89 as a Deputy-Commissioner in Upper Burma, where he gained much credit for his able administration of affairs. In 1889 he left Burma on leave, and was appointed by Mr. Rhodes to the British South Africa Company, and employed in drawing up regulations for Mashonaland. In 1890 he accompanied the Pioneer Expedition for the occupation of Mashonaland, invested with a commission to assume the duties of Administrator and Chief Magistrate, which post he filled in 1890-91, organising the first settlement of that important Colony. The Manika Treaty, which seemed a valuable territory for Britain, was executed by him. In 1891 Mr. Colquhoun was invalided home, and retired from the service of the British South Africa Company in 1892. In Nov., 1893, he retired on a pension from the service of the Government of India. In Dec., 1893, he published "Matabeleland and Our Position in South Africa," and subsequently addressed many of the leading Chambers of Commerce on "Matabeleland and Our New Colony in South Africa."

COLVIN, Sir Auckland, K.C.M.G., C.I.E., son of the late John Russell Colvin, B.C.S., Lieut.-Governor of the North-West Provinces of India, by Emma Sophia, daughter of the Rev. W. Sneyd, was born in 1838. He was educated at Eton and at Haileybury College, and entered the Indian Civil Service in 1858. He became in succession Under-Secretary to the Government of India, Home and Foreign Departments; Secretary to the North West Provinces Revenue Board, and Secretary to the Government of the North West Provinces. He was a member of the International Commission of Egyptian Liquidation in 1880, and was appointed English Controller-General in Egypt the same year. In 1881 he was created a Knight Commander of the Order of SS. Michael and George. Sir Auckland Colvin took a prominent part in assisting and advising the Khedive on the occasion of Arabi Pasha's military demonstration on Sept. 9, 1881; and in July, 1883, he received the thanks of Her Majesty's Government for his services prior and subsequent to that event. After the abolition of the Dual Control (Jan., 1883), he became Financial Adviser to the Khedive. In October, 1883, he became Financial Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India. He has received the grand cordons both of the Order of the Medjidieh and of the Osmanieh. Sir A. Colvin was in 1891 Lieutenant-Governor and Chief Commissioner of the North West Provinces and Oudh.

COLVIN, Sidney, M.A., was born at Norwood, Surrey, June 18, 1845. He is the youngest son of the late Mr. Bazett D. Colvin, of the firm of Crauford, Colvin, & Co., of 71, Old Broad Street, and of Bealings, Woodbridge, Suffolk, by his wife Mary Steuart, eldest daughter of the late Mr. William Butterworth Bayley, of the East India Company's Civil Service. Mr. Colvin was educated at home and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was Chancellor's English Medallist in 1865, and where he graduated as third in the first class of the Classical Tripos in 1867. He was elected a Fellow of Trinity College in 1869; Slade Professor of Fine Arts, 1873 (re-elected 1876, 1879, 1882, and 1885); and was appointed Director of the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, in 1876. Having been appointed Keeper of the Department of Prints and Drawings in the British Museum in Dec., 1884, Mr. Colvin resigned the direction of the Fitzwilliam Museum at that date, and the post of Slade Professor, in Jan., 1886. He is a member of the German Archæological Institute, and Corresponding Member of the Historical Society of Maine, U.S. Since 1867 he has been a frequent contributor, chiefly as a critic and historian of art and literature, to the Portfolio, Fortnightly Review, Cornhill Magazine, Nineteenth Century, Edinburgh Review, Macmillan's Magazine, and other periodicals. In addition to his being a contributor to periodical literature, he is the author of the following books:—"Children in Italian and English Design," 1872; "Landor" in the "English Men of Letters" series, 1882; and "Keats" in the same series, 1886. He has also edited "Selections from the Writings of Walter Savage Landor," 1884.

COMMERELL, Admiral of the Fleet, Sir John Edmund, K.C.B., V.C., second son of Mr. John W. Commerell, of Stroud Park, Horsham, Sussex, by Sophia, daughter of Mr. William Bosanquet, of Harley Street, London, was born in London in 1829. Entering the Royal Navy in 1842, he became Lieutenant in 1848, Commander in 1855, Captain in 1859, Rear-Admiral in 1877, and Vice-Admiral in 1881. He served in China and South America, and took part in all the operations in the Parana (1845-46), especially at Punta Obligado, where he assisted in cutting the chain that defended the river. Afterwards he served in the Baltic and the Gulf of Bothnia (1854), and as Lieutenant of H.M.S. Weser was present at Sebastopol, and in several operations in the Sea of Azof; he was twice mentioned in despatches, and received the Victoria Cross for hazardous service in the Putrid Sea. He commanded H.M.S. Fury in 1859, and in July of that year he led a division of seamen in the attack on the Taku Forts. For this service he was highly praised in despatches, and promoted to H.M.S. Magicienne, in which he served during the subsequent operations in China. In 1866 he was in command of H.M.S. Terrible, and rendered active service in laying the Atlantic cable. He commanded H.M.S. Monarch on particular service in 1868-69, and in 1872-73 he served as Commodore of the second class, and senior officer in command off the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa. In Aug., 1873, whilst reconnoitring up the River Prah to discover the position of the Ashantees, the boats were fired upon from the banks, and Commodore Commerell was so dangerously wounded as to necessitate his relinquishing the command of the station. After going to Cape Town for the cure of his wounds, he returned to England, when he was nominated a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath and appointed a Groom-in-Waiting to the Queen. Sir J. E. Commerell was second in command of the Mediterranean Fleet from July, 1877, to Oct., 1878, and was a Lord of the Admiralty from Oct., 1879, to May, 1880. He was appointed Commander-in-Chief, North American and West India stations, in 1882, Admiral in 1886, and Admiral of the Fleet in 1892. He was Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth at the time of the Emperor of Germany's first visit to England in 1889, and was presented with a large bronze medal by the Queen to commemorate this event. From the Emperor he received a sword and an autograph letter in commemoration of the Naval Review at Spithead. Appointed Groom-in-Waiting to the Queen in June, 1891, he was selected by Her to be Senior Naval Officer in attendance on the German Emperor in 1891 and 1893. In Dec., 1893, he was presented by the Sultan with the insignia of the Order of the Medjidieh of the First Class.

COMMON, Andrew Ainslie, F.R.S., F.R.A.S., was born August 7, 1841, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and is the son of Thomas Common, surgeon. He was educated privately, was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1876; Fellow of the Royal Society in 1885, &c.; and is now Treasurer of the Royal Astronomical Society and Gold Medallist for work in Celestial Photography, carried on principally at his observatory at Ealing, near London, where he has one of the largest equatorial telescopes, and has been most successful in obtaining photographs of the heavens, including nebulæ, and stars of the eleventh magnitude.

COMPTON, The Right Rev. Lord Alwyne Spencer, D.D., Bishop of Ely, is a younger son of the second Marquis of Northampton, by the eldest daughter of the late Major-General Douglas Maclean Clephane, of Torloisk, N.B. He was born in 1825, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A., coming out as a wrangler in 1848. He was appointed rector of Castle Ashby, Northamptonshire, in 1852, and nominated to an honorary canonry in Peterborough Cathedral in 1856. He was made rural dean of Preston Deanery in 1874, and in 1875 was appointed to the Archdeaconry of Oakham, which he held till October, 1879, when he was nominated by Lord Beaconsfield to the Deanery of Worcester, in succession to the late Dr. Yorke. He held this post until 1885, when he was appointed Bishop of Ely in succession to the late Dr. Woodford. Lord Alwyne Compton was for some years an active and zealous member of the Convocation of the Clergy, both as Proctor for the diocese of Peterborough and also as Archdeacon. His lordship is married to a daughter of the late Rev. Robert Anderson, of Brighton.

CONANT, Thomas Jefferson, D.D., LL.D., was born at Brandon, Vermont, Dec. 13, 1802. He graduated at Middlebury College in 1823, and after a brief tutorship in Columbian College, Washington, accepted an appointment as Professor of Languages in Waterville College (now Colby University), Maine. In 1833 he resigned his professorship and removed to the vicinity of Boston. In 1835 he became Professor of Biblical Literature and Criticism in the Baptist Theological Seminary (which afterwards became Madison, and recently Colgate, University), at Hamilton, New York, and while connected with it spent two years in the study of Oriental languages and literature at the universities of Halle and Berlin, and published a translation of the Hebrew grammar of Gesenius, with the additions of Rödiger. In 1850 he accepted the Professorship of Biblical Literature and Criticism in the Theological Seminary at Rochester, New York, but in 1858 resigned, and removed to Brooklyn, New York, to devote himself to the production of a revised translation of the Holy Scriptures. His work in this department consists of revised versions, with notes, of "The Book of Job" (1857); "The Gospel of Matthew" (1860); "The Book of Genesis" (1858); "The Book of Psalms" (1868); also, with some additional notes, in the American edition, of "Lange's Commentary" (1872); "The Book of Proverbs" (1872); "Βαπτίζειν; its Meaning and Use, philosophically and historically investigated" (1872); "The Books of Joshua, Judges, Ruth, Samuel, and Kings" (1884). He was a member of the American Committee co-operating with the Convocation of Canterbury, England, in the revision of the Authorized English version of the Bible. In conjunction with his daughter Blandina, he published, in 1878, a "General and Analytical Index to the American Cyclopædia." He received the degree of D.D. from Waterville College, and in 1856 was made a member of the Deutsche Morgenländische Gesellschaft, Halle and Leipzig.

CONGREVE, Richard, M.A., M.R.C.P. (1866), third son of Thomas and Julia Congreve, born at Leamington, Hastings, Warwickshire, Sept. 4, 1818, was educated at Rugby under Dr. Arnold, and became successively Scholar, Fellow, and Tutor of Wadham College, where he graduated B.A. in 1840, taking first-class honours in classics. Having acted for some time as an assistant-master at Rugby, he returned to Oxford, where he resumed his tutorship at Wadham College. In 1855 he published a small volume on the history of the Roman Empire of the West, and an edition of "Aristotle's Politics," with notes (2nd edit., 1874). He resigned his Fellowship, and after deeply studying the social and religious system of the late M. Comte, embraced it as the best solution of the social and religious difficulties which surrounded him. Mr. Congreve has since published "Gibraltar;" a pamphlet on Indian matters, in which he recommends England to give up its Indian Empire as indefensible; "Italy and the Western Powers;" "Elizabeth of England;" various translations from Comte, such as "The Catechism of Positive Religion" (1858); "Essays: Political, Social, and Religious" (1874); and some sermons.

CONNAUGHT and STRATHEARN (Duchess of), Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise Margaret of Prussia, born July 25, 1860, and married at Windsor Castle, March 13, 1879, is the third daughter of the late Prince Frederick Charles, and grand niece of the late Emperor William of Germany. Her Royal Highness has three children: the Princess Margaret Victoria Charlotte Auguste Norah, born at Bagshot Park, Jan. 16, 1882; the Prince Arthur Frederick Patrick Albert, born at Windsor Castle, Jan. 13, 1883; and the Princess Victoria Patricia Helena Elizabeth, born March 17, 1886.

CONNAUGHT and STRATHEARN (Duke of, His Royal Highness Arthur William Patrick Albert, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.C.M.G., Prince of the United Kingdom, Duke of Saxony, Prince of Coburg and Gotha, the third son of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, was born at Buckingham Palace, May 1, 1850. He entered the Military Academy at Woolwich as a cadet in 1866, became a lieutenant in the Royal Engineers in 1868, and a lieutenant in the Royal Artillery in February, 1869. He was appointed a lieutenant in the Rifle Brigade in August, 1869, and a captain in excess of the establishment of the regiment in 1871. On attaining his majority in the last-named year Parliament voted him a grant of £15,000 per annum; and an addition of £10,000 was voted on his marriage in 1879. Prince Arthur was created Duke of Connaught and Strathearn, and Earl of Sussex, May 26, 1874, and took his seat in the House of Lords on the 8th of the following month. At a Council held at Windsor, May 16, 1878, the Queen declared the intended marriage of the Duke of Connaught and Strathearn to Princess Louise Margaret of Prussia, third daughter of the late Prince Frederick Charles, and grand niece of the late Emperor William of Germany. The marriage was celebrated at Windsor, March 13, 1879. His Royal Highness's staff services are:—Brigade Major at Aldershot in 1873; Brigade Major to the Cavalry Brigadier at the same quarters in 1875, in the October of which year he was appointed Assistant Adjutant-General at Gibraltar, which post he held until April, 1876. In 1880 he was made a General of Brigade at Aldershot. He commanded the Guards Brigade in the First Division in the expedition to Egypt in 1882. He was appointed in October, 1882, Honorary Colonel of the 13th Bengal Lancers serving in Egypt. In September, 1886, the Duke, accompanied by the Duchess, left England for India, arriving at Bombay September 27. His Royal Highness was Commander-in-Chief of the forces in the Bengal Presidency, and, on his returning home, of the Southern District in England. He was promoted to the full rank of General (April, 1893), and was appointed Commander-in-Chief at Aldershot in August.

CONNEMARA, Lord (Robert Bourke), P.C., third son of the fifth Earl of Mayo, was born at Hayes, co. Meath, June 11, 1827, and educated at Enniskillen School, at Hall Place, Kent, and at Trinity College, Dublin. Called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1852, he went the South Wales Circuit, and attended the Knutsford sessions for twelve years. Mr. Bourke also had a large business at the Parliamentary Bar. He was elected M.P. for Lynn Regis, in the Conservative interest, at the general election of December, 1868, and continued to represent that borough in the House of Commons until 1886. When Mr. Disraeli came into power in February, 1874, Mr. Bourke was appointed Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and he held that office till April, 1880, when he was added to the Privy Council. In 1880 he was commissioned to go to Turkey to arrange the external debt of that country, and succeeded in effecting a settlement of the question. In 1885 he resumed his former place at the Foreign Office under Lord Salisbury, and remained there till the defeat of the Government in January, 1886. On the retirement of Sir M. E. Grant-Duff, in 1886, he was appointed Governor of Madras, and resigned that post in 1890. He was created first Lord Connemara in 1887. He has travelled in America, India, and the Holy Land, and contributed his views upon these countries to various magazines. He is also the author of "Parliamentary Precedents." He married, in 1863, Lady Susan Georgiana, eldest daughter of the first Marquis of Dalhousie.

CONSTANT, Benjamin, a French painter, born at Paris, June 10, 1845, studied in the École des Beaux-Arts, and then entered the atelier of M. Cabanel. The first picture which he sent to the Salon was "Hamlet et le Roi," 1869; and he has since exhibited "Trop tard," 1870; "Samson et Délilah," 1872; "Femmes du Riff-(Maroc)" and "Bouchers maures à Tanger," 1873; "Coin de Rue" and "Carrefour à Tanger," 1874; "Prisonniers Marocains," "Femmes de Harem à Maroc," and "Le Dr. Guéneau de Massy," 1875; "Mohamed II., le 29 Mai, 1453," a picture of colossal dimensions, afterwards sent to the Exposition Universelle of 1878; "M. Emmanuel Arago," 1876; "La Soif," "Le Harem," and "Hamlet au Cimetière," 1878; "Le Soir sur les Terrasses au Maroc" and "Favorite de l'Emir," 1879; "Le dernier Rebelle," 1880; "Herodiade," 1881; "Le Lendemain d'une Victoire à l'Alhambra," 1882; "La Vengeance du Chérif," 1885, a large picture, which is typical of M. Constant's latest manner; an Oriental subject, as melodramatic as possible; ample opportunities for painting the nude; and strong effects of colour. He exhibited "Judith" and "Justinien," 1886; "Orphée" and "Theodora," 1887; decorative panels for the new Sorbonne, 1888; "Le Jour des Funérailles," a scene in Morocco, 1889; "Beethoven" and "Victrix," 1890. The painter has received several medals, and is one of the most successful and most-studied members of the modern French school. M. Constant, who was promoted to the rank of Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1884, married one of the daughters of M. Emmanuel Arago.

CONYBEARE, Henry, J.P., civil engineer and architect, fourth son of the Very Rev. William Daniel Conybeare, Dean of Llandaff, the well-known geologist, was born at Brislington, in Somersetshire, Feb. 22, 1823. After leaving Rugby School, he entered the civil engineering department of King's College, London, and accompanied Professor Hall, when he with Professor Mosely assisted in the organisation of the Cornish School of Mines. On leaving King's College, Mr. Conybeare spent three years in an engine manufactory at Newcastle, and then went to India on the engineering staff of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, and he had the civil engineering charge of the city and island of Bombay from 1849 to 1852. In consequence of the prevalence of water famines at Bombay, he was requested in 1854 by the Government of that presidency to report on the best means of affording an adequate water supply to the city and island. His recommendations being approved by the Supreme Government of India, he was appointed to carry them into execution. During his residence in India, Mr. Conybeare practised architecture as well as civil engineering, and designed the church erected at Colaba, in memory of those who fell in the Afghan campaign, the church of St. John at Satara, and many civil buildings. As a justice of the peace, he took a prominent part in the business of the Bombay Bench; and on the breaking out of the Mahomedan riots in 1854 he was appointed to act as second Stipendiary Magistrate of Police. During the last six years which he remained in India, he was the Indian correspondent of the Times. Since his return to England in 1855, Mr. Conybeare has been in extensive practice as a railway engineer, and has been engineer-in-chief to a large number of railways. He was elected a member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, and has taken a large part in the discussions of that body. In 1856 he designed docks for the port of Bombay, and in the same year was appointed Lecturer on the Principles and Practice of Civil Engineering at the Royal Engineers Establishment for Field Instruction at Chatham. In April, 1869, Mr. Conybeare was appointed by the Home Secretary to design and carry out certain works of drainage required to be executed under the authority of the Home Office and of the Local Government Act, at Southover, in Sussex. In 1878 he was engaged at Caracas, in Venezuela, where he now resides.

COOK, Edward Tyas, M.A., Editor of the Westminster Gazette, born at Brighton in 1857, is the fifth son of the late Mr. Silas Kemball Cook, Secretary and House Governor of the Seamen's Hospital, Greenwich. He was educated at Winchester College, 1869-76 (head of the school), and went with a Scholarship to New College, Oxford. First Class Classical Moderations, 1877; First Class Greats (Classics), 1880; President of the Union and of the Palmerston clubs; graduated B.A., 1880; M.A. 1883. He was Secretary of the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching, 1882-85; and joined the staff of the Pall Mall Gazette, 1883, of which he was appointed editor, in succession to Mr. W. T. Stead, 1890. On the sale of the paper to Mr. W. W. Astor, and a consequent change in its politics, he resigned the editorship (October, 1892). A new Liberal journal, the Westminster Gazette, was thereupon founded by George Newnes, M.P., and Mr. Cook was appointed editor (Jan. 31, 1893). He is the author of "A Popular Handbook to the National Gallery" (fourth ed., 1893); and "Studies in Ruskin," 1890.

COOK, The Rev. Joseph, LL.D., born at Ticonderoga, New York, Jan. 26, 1838, was educated at Yale and Harvard, graduating in 1865. He afterwards studied four years at the Andover Theological Seminary, and then spent two years in Germany and in foreign travel. Since his return to America he has resided principally at Boston, where he has delivered a series of more than two hundred "Boston Monday Lectures," for which he is principally noted. He has repeated these lectures in other cities of the United States, and has published them in eleven volumes, 1877-88, under titles of "Biology," "Conscience," "Heredity," "Labor," "Marriage," "Orthodoxy," "Socialism," "Transcendentalism," "Occident," "Orient," and "Current Religious Perils." Numerous editions of these books have appeared in England. In 1880-83 Mr. Cook, with his wife, made a tour of the world as a lecturer on philosophical and religious topics, and spoke to great audiences in England, Scotland, Ireland, India, Japan, and Australia. In 1888 he founded Our Day, a monthly record and review of current reform, and is its editor, with the co-operation of Miss Frances E. Willard, ex-President Cyrus Hamlin, and other eminent specialists. Mr. Cook took a prominent part in the "World's Parliament of Religions," held at Chicago during seventeen days of September, 1893, in connection with the Columbian Exposition. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Howard University (Washington) in 1890.

COOK, Mrs. Russell, born in 1857, is the eldest daughter of Mr. T. Eustace Smith, late M.P. for Tynemouth. She lived, when a child, at Gosforth House, Newcastle-on-Tyne, was educated at Orleans, and passed the public examination for French schoolmistresses. In 1878, Mrs. Russell Cook, then Mrs. Ashton Dilke, became an active member of the Women's Suffrage Society; and has delivered speeches and lectures on the subject of female suffrage all over England. She wrote, in 1885, a book on the subject as part of the "Imperial Parliament Series," edited by Mr. Sydney Buxton, M.P. Mrs. Cook became, in 1883, trustee for the Weekly Dispatch newspaper, over the policy and arrangements of which she has since then kept a general control. She has been active in the promotion of many schemes for the improvement of the position of women; and has served on the councils of many Working Men's and Radical Clubs. She was elected in November, 1888, member of the London School Board for the West Lambeth division, and as such, was a strong advocate of Free Education and a progressive educational policy. She married, in 1876, Ashton W. Dilke (second son of the late Sir C. Wentworth Dilke), who became M.P. for Newcastle in 1880, and died in 1883 at Algiers. Her second husband is Mr. Russell Cook.

COOKE, Mordecai Cubitt, botanist, was born on July 12, 1825, at Horning in Norfolk. His father was the village shopkeeper, and the boy received rather a scant education, if we except two years spent in the house of his maternal uncle, a dissenting minister. Whilst occupied as schoolmaster, Mr. Cooke pursued his self-education, and published his first book, "The Seven Sisters of Sleep," which was a popular account of the seven prevailing narcotics of the world. At this times his botanical studies were chiefly in the direction of Economic Botany, and his fellow-schoolmasters long remembered not only his school museum of the raw produce of the vegetable kingdom, but also his energy in organising a similar museum in connection with an Association of Metropolitan Teachers in Elementary Schools. It was during this period that he taught evening classes of adults elementary botany, and published his manual of "Structural Botany," which recently reached its thirty-fifth thousand. From this time dates also his first application to the study of Fungi, in which he subsequently acquired his chief reputation. In 1862 the "Manual of Botanic Terms" was issued, and about the following year "A Plain and Easy Account of British Fungi." Succeeding this a series of articles on "Microscopic Fungi" were published in the Popular Science Review, and subsequently they were collected and issued in a small volume, under the title of "Rust, Smut, Mildew, and Mould," passing through several editions, which were revised in turn, and brought up to date. In 1862 appeared the first edition of "Our Reptiles," with coloured plates chiefly drawn from life. In 1867, "A Fern-Book for Everybody" appeared, which was followed, in 1869, by "One Thousand Objects for the Microscope." As no text-book for British Fungi had been published since 1836, our author employed himself next in preparing and publishing, at his own risk, the "Handbook of British Fungi." In 1874, a volume entitled "Fungi: their Nature, Influence, and Uses," was published in the International Scientific Library, with a commendatory preface by the Rev. M. J. Berkeley. This was accompanied by simultaneous American and French editions. After the publication of Rostafinski's monograph of the "Mycetozoa" in Polish, our author set to work to learn to read the Polish language, and translated as much of this work as related to British species, which was published as "The Myxomycetes of Great Britain" in 1877. In 1879 he commenced the publication of "Mycographia" at his own expense, and six parts of this work, with coloured plates of Discomycetes, was all that appeared, on account of its heavy cost. About 1880 two popular volumes of Natural History Rambles were published under the titles of "The Woodlands" and "Ponds and Ditches," which were followed, in 1881, by "Freaks and Marvels of Plant Life." In the latter year the largest and most important work of his life was commenced, that of the "Illustrations of British Fungi (Hymenomycetes)," in parts, and was continued throughout a period of ten years, forming eight large volumes, including 1,200 plates of the British gill-bearing fungi. These were executed in chromo-lithography from outlines in pen and ink, all of which were executed by himself. The letterpress to the plates was issued almost simultaneously under the title of "Handbook of British Fungi (Second Edition)." Whilst the publication of the "Illustrations of British Fungi" was proceeding, two other works were prepared and published, dealing with British Fresh-Water Algæ. The first of these, entitled "British Fresh-Water Algæ," in two 8vo vols., with coloured plates, was issued in parts, commencing in 1882, and was out of print soon after its completion. The other was entitled "British Desmids," commenced in 1886, and completed in one volume, with sixty-six coloured plates. It was during the year 1889 that another popular volume was written, entitled "Toilers in the Sea"; and in 1893 another, called "Romance of Low Life amongst Plants." In 1889 he contributed the portion on "Fungi" to the "Flora of Herefordshire;" and in 1890 another volume was written for the International Scientific Library, entitled an "Introduction to Fresh-Water Algæ." In 1891, "British Edible Fungi" appeared with coloured plates, treating the subject in a popular manner. In 1892, under the title of "Vegetable Wasps and Plant Worms," was published a popular history of Entomogenous Fungi, or fungi parasitic upon insects. In the same year the "Handbook of Australian Fungi" was published under the sanction of the Governments of the several Australian Colonies. And in 1894 "Edible and Poisonous Mushrooms, What to Eat, and What to Avoid," with eighteen coloured plates. In 1865 he issued a small illustrated catalogue of the British Hepaticæ, which formed the basis of a volume, published also in 1894, under the title of "a Handbook of the British Hepaticæ." In 1865 he projected, and edited for seven years, the popular Natural History Magazine, under the title of Hardwicke's Science Gossip; and in 1872 he started, and conducted on his own account for twenty years, "Grevillea, a Quarterly Record of Cryptogamic Botany and its Literature." During the whole period between 1864 and 1894 numerous contributions from the same pen were furnished to various scientific journals at home and abroad. In 1877 he was elected an Associate of the Linnæan Society, in recognition of his services to British Botany. In 1870 the St. Lawrence University of New York conferred on him the honorary degree of Master of Arts, and in 1873 he received the same honour from Yale University, and subsequently, also from the United States, that of Doctor of Laws. In 1865 he was one of the three projectors and original founders of the Quekett Microscopical Club, of which he was twice elected President. Taking up the thread of his personal career from 1861, we find him at the close of that year entered upon his duties at the India Museum, in association with the impending Exhibition of 1862, and from that time, to his retirement at the close of 1892, he was in the service of the Secretary of State for India, as a scientific expert. During the last twelve years of that period, and after the disruption of the India Museum, he was detailed on special duty at Kew Gardens, where he had charge of, and was referee on, all subjects connected with fungi. Some years ago his entire herbarium, and portfolios of drawings of fungi, were acquired by the authorities for the National Herbarium at Kew. Any one glancing over the pages of the eight volumes of Saccardo's "Sylloge" will find evidence of his activity in Mycology, since there is scarcely a page in which his name does not occur. Since the death of the Rev. M. J. Berkeley he has been the oldest active mycologist in Europe, having been continuously working and writing on the subject for more than thirty years.

COOLEY, Thomas McIntyre, LL.D., was born at Attica, New York, Jan. 6, 1824. In 1843 he removed to Michigan, where he was in 1845 admitted to the Bar. In 1857 he was appointed to compile and publish the laws of the State, and in 1858 he was made reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court, a position which he held for several years, during which he published eight volumes of reports, followed by a digest of all the decisions of the State. In 1859 the law department of the University of Michigan was organized, and he was chosen one of the professors, and subsequently became Dean of the Faculty, holding the position until 1885, after which he was for three years Professor of Constitutional History in the same institution. For three years he was Lecturer on governmental subjects in Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. In 1864 he was appointed to fill a vacancy on the Bench of the Supreme Court of the State, a position which he held for twenty-one years, being a part of the time Chief Justice. In 1887 he was appointed by the United States Circuit Court at Chicago Receiver of the Wabash Railway Company, and took upon himself the management of that road, but resigned it after a few months' service at the urgent request of President Cleveland to accept the appointment of Commissioner under the Interstate Commerce Law for the Regulation of Railroads. He was chosen by his associates chairman of the Commission, and held the office for four years, when his health so completely gave way in consequence of overwork that he was obliged to resign, and since then has held no public office. He has published "The Constitutional Limitations which rest upon the Legislative Power of the States of the American Union," 1868, which has gone through several editions; an edition of Blackstone's "Commentaries," 1870; and of Story's "Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, with Additional Chapters on the New Amendments," 1873; "Law of Taxation," 1876; "Law of Torts," 1879; "General Principles of Constitutional Law in the United States," 1880; and, for a series of State histories, "Michigan, a History of Governments," 1885. He furnished nearly all the legal articles in Appleton's "American Cyclopædia," 1873-76, and has been a voluminous writers for magazines and reviews, mostly on legal subjects. His articles which of late have attracted most attention, have been one in opposition to the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, and a number insisting upon the right, the power, and the duty of the Senate of the United States to proceed to put a stop to the obstructive measures of the minority on such questions as the repeal of the Silver Purchase Clause of the Sherman Act, and to vote upon such subjects directly. He has received the degree of LL.D. from both Michigan University and Harvard University.

COOPER, Charles Alfred, journalist, was born at Hull, Yorkshire, in 1829. He was educated at the Hull Grammar School, and early in life entered the office of the Hull Packet, a weekly newspaper of good standing. There he became a reporter, and took a share in subeditorial work. In 1861 he removed to London, and entered the gallery of the House of Commons as a reporter for the Morning Star. Of this paper he subsequently became the sub-editor, and held the post until 1868, when he became assistant-editor of the Scotsman, in which capacity he served for several years. In 1880 he became editor of the Scotsman, and in 1881, in recognition of his services to the Liberal party, he was made a member of the Reform Club, without a ballot, on the nomination of the political committee. Earlier he had taken a great interest in the opening of the gallery of the House of Commons to the reporters of provincial newspapers, and shortly before becoming editor of the Scotsman, he had the gratification of seing this object gained.

COOPER, Sir Daniel, Bart., G.C.M.G., was born at Bolton, Lancashire, July 1, 1821. When very young he sailed for New South Wales, and was educated there till he was fourteen, and then returned to England and finished his education by a course of four years at University College, London. Mr. Cooper's health at this period of his life was very uncertain, and after starting in business in Europe he sailed again for New South Wales, when he was at once connected with his uncle's firm, at that time one of the most extensive mercantile houses in Australia. In 1847 Mr. Cooper was appointed a director, and in 1855 the President, of the Bank of New South Wales. In 1849 he was elected a member of the Legislative Council of the Colony, which was at that time the only legislative body; and again in 1853. Two years afterwards the Act was passed which gave the Colony a Constitution modelled on the English Parliament. In 1856, at the first election under the new Constitution, Mr. Cooper was again returned, and was chosen first Speaker of the Assembly. In 1857 he was knighted. He resigned his office as Speaker owing to ill-health in 1860, and immediately afterwards, on the resignation of the Forster Government, he was invited to form a Ministry, but was for the same cause compelled to decline. Sir Daniel returned to England in 1861, and was created a baronet in 1863. He has ever since his return to England taken an active part in every movement tending to promote the welfare of the Colonies. For the services rendered by him in connection with the Sydney Exhibition he was created a Knight Commander of the Order of SS. Michael and George in Oct., 1880, and in 1888 was made a G.C.M.G. of the same order. In 1888 he was Acting Agent-General for New South Wales. He is a member of the Senate of Sydney University.

COOPER, Thomas Sidney, R.A., was born at Canterbury, Sept. 26, 1803. At the age of seventeen he became painter at the Hastings Theatre, and for three years gained a moderate income by scene-painting. Then he became a drawing-master at Canterbury till the year 1827, when he set out from Dover to Calais, and literally "sketched his way" from that French port to the Belgian capital; paying tavern bills by likenesses of hosts and hostesses. At Brussels his talents secured him patrons and employment; and having settled there, he married, and enjoyed the friendship of various Flemish artists. There, too, his pencil was first directed to the study of landscape, and the branch of art (animal-painting) which secured him his present high reputation, with abundant and profitable employment. The revolution of 1830 involved him and his family in difficulties, and forced him to return to England. He first exhibited in the Suffolk Street Gallery in 1833. His picture attracted attention, and he received a commission from Mr. Vernon for a picture now in the Vernon Gallery. About ten years later his Cuyp-like groups of cattle, "Going to Pasture," "Watering at Evening," "Cattle Reposing" in the heat of a summer afternoon, "The King of the Meadows," attracted general notice. Mr. Cooper was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1845, and a Royal Academician in 1867, and still continues to exhibit. In 1882 he presented to the city of Canterbury the Gallery of Art which he had founded some ten or twelve years earlier, and in which he had since given gratuitous instructions to students. A condition made by the donor was that only a nominal fee should be charged to the artizan classes for tuition; the original object for which the gallery was built having been the teaching of drawing to poor boys. At the meeting at which Mr. Cooper's gift was announced it was determined to convert the gallery into a school, and to affiliate it to the Science and Art Department at South Kensington. Mr. Cooper has published his reminiscences. He has found innumerable imitators, and at one time was constantly called upon to decide upon the authenticity of cattle-pictures reputed to be the work of his brush. He has latterly charged a fee to the persons sending such paintings for his inspection.

COPE, Professor Edward Drinker, naturalist and comparative anatomist, was born at Philadelphia, July 28, 1840, and studied in the University of Pennsylvania, and worked at anatomy in Europe in 1863-4, and is Ph.D. of Heidelberg. He was Professor of Natural Science in Haverford College, Philadelphia, from 1864 to 1867, and has been Curator and Corresponding Secretary of the Academy of Natural Sciences. He was Professor of Geology and Palæontology, and is now Professor of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy in the University of Pennsylvania. In 1871 he explored the cretaceous formations of Kansas; in 1872 the eocene of Wyoming; in 1873 the tertiary beds of Colorado; in 1874 was employed by the U. S. G. G. Survey under Lieutenant (now Captain) G. M. Wheeler in New Mexico; in 1875 in Northern Montana; in 1877 in Oregon and Texas; and from 1878 to 1884 he had several parties exploring the Western regions. The result of these expeditions has been the creation of a collection of over 1,000 species of extinct vertebrate animals, of which Professor Cope has made known to science at least three quarters. The structure of many of these animals is in the highest degree remarkable, and has been described in numerous papers, read before the scientific societies of Philadelphia, or published in the reports of the Hayden U. S. Geological Survey of the Territories, to which he was palæontologist of vertebrata, or in those of Captain Wheeler, U. S. Engineers. Professor Cope has also published essays on fishes, batrachians, reptiles, and mammalia of various parts of the world, and has made observations on the anatomy of these animals, which have, in connection with his palæontological studies, resulted in new views of their systematic arrangement. He has also, since 1869, published a number of papers on the subject of evolution, which are to be found in the Proceedings of the Philadelphia Scientific Societies, and which were collected and published in "The Origin of the Fittest." He is a member of the National Academy of Science, and of various other American and European academies, and, together with Professor J. S. Kingsley, is senior editor of the American Naturalist. He is the author of the doctrine of "catagenesis" and "diplogenesis," and of an adaptation of philosophy to the doctrine of "evolution" (1889). He received the Bigsby gold medal of the Geological Society of London in 1879, in recognition of his services in the field of vertebrate palæontology.

COPELAND, Ralph, Ph.D., F.R.A.S., Astronomer Royal for Scotland, and Professor of Practical Astronomy in the University of Edinburgh in the place of Professor Piazzi Smyth, who resigned, was born, in 1837, at Woodplumpton, Lancashire. Having determined to devote his life to astronomy, he entered the University of Göttingen in 1864, and became assistant under the late Professor Klinkerfuss at the observatory there. He for some time assisted Earl Rosse with his observations; and since 1876 has been connected with Lord Crawford's observatory at Dun Echt. For the purpose of observing the transit of Venus across the sun's disc, Professor Copeland visited Mauritius and Jamaica; and, in 1883, he took astronomical observations in Peru and Bolivia at various heights, rising to 14,000 feet.

COPLESTON, The Right Rev. Reginald Stephen, D.D., Bishop of Colombo, son of the Rev. R. E. Copleston, formerly Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, was born at Barnes, Surrey, in 1845. From Merchant Taylors' School he proceeded to Merton College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. (2nd class in classics) in 1869. He was then elected a Fellow of St. John's College, of which he became senior tutor; and he proceeded M.A. from that College in 1871. When Dr. Jermyn resigned the Bishopric of Colombo, in Ceylon, Mr. Copleston was selected by the Crown to fill the vacant See, and he was consecrated in Westminster Abbey, Dec. 28, 1875. He has published "Æschylus," in Blackwood's "Classics for English Readers;" and was one of the three writers of the "Oxford Spectator." Dr. Copleston married a daughter of the late Archbishop Trench.

COPPÉE, François Edouard Joachim, a French poet, was born Jan. 12, 1842. He early gained a reputation as a poet, among the "Parnassians" of 1866, and published in the same year a volume of poems entitled "Le Réliquaire," which was followed two years later by "Intimités." He then turned his attention to the theatre, and wrote "Le Passant," produced at the Odéon in 1869; "L'Abandonnée" and "Fais ce que dois," 1871; "Le Bijou de la Délivrance," 1872; "Le Luthier de Crémone," produced at the Théâtre Français in 1877; "Madame de Maintenon," 1881; "Severo Torelli," 1883; "Les Jacobites," 1885. For several years M. Coppée was attached to the library of the Senate House, and in 1878 was appointed keeper of the records at the Comédie Française. He was made a member of the Académie Française in 1884, and officer of the Legion of Honour in 1888. Among his later poems may be mentioned "Les Humbles," 1872; "L'Exilée," 1876; "Les Mois," 1877; "La Marchande de Journaux," 1880; "Contes en vers et poésies diverses," 1881; "L'Enfant de la Balle," 1883; "Arrière-Saison," 1887. He has published several novels and collections of stories, such as "Contes en prose," 1882; "Contes Rapides," 1888; and "Toute une Jeunesse," 1890. He began to publish his collected works in 1885.

COQUELIN, Benoît Constant ("Coquelin Aîné"), a French actor, born at Boulogne-sur-Mer, Jan. 23, 1841, is the son of a baker, and was destined originally to follow that trade; but evincing a great aptitude for the stage, he went to Paris and was admitted to the Conservatoire on Dec. 29, 1859, joining M. Regnier's class, of which he became the most brilliant pupil. He obtained the second prize for comedy, and made his début at the Théâtre Français on Dec. 7, 1860, in the character of Gros-René in the "Dépit Amoureux." He afterwards played with success in the "Fourberies de Scapin," "Mariage de Figaro," "Don Juan," and other classical pieces; Lupin in "La Mère Confidente; the Marquis in "Le Joueur;" Annibal in "L'Aventurière," &c. He created the rôle of Anatole in "Une Loge d'Opéra," John in "Trop Curieux," Gagneux in "Jean Baudry," Vincent in "L'Œillet Blanc," Aristide in "Le Lion Amoureux," Gringoire in the play of that name, Beaubourg in "Paul Forestier," Eucrate in "Le Coq de Mycille," &c. M. Coquelin has obtained great success in society by reciting in private and at public meetings, and has thus added to the reputation of new poets, particularly of Eugène Manuel and François Coppée. In 1886 he was put on the list of "sociétaires pensionnaires" of the Théâtre Français, and this prevented him from appearing as an actor in any French theatre. But, after travelling abroad in America and Alsace at the head of a dramatic company of his own formation, he re-entered the Comédie Française in Dec. 1889, and played Mascarille, Diafoirus, and Argente, and other parts, in order to support his son Jean, at that time making his first appearances as an actor. He created the part of Labussière in M. Sardou's "Thermidor," which after three representations was interdicted by the French Government (Jan. 25, 1891). His next creation was Petruccio in a modified version of the "Taming of the Shrew" (Nov. 1892). As his engagement at the Théâtre Français lasts only six months each year, he has recently taken to touring abroad with a company of his own selection, and in the summer of 1892 he brought "Thermidor" and "La Mégère Apprivoisée" to London. He is the author of several works on the comedian's art.

COQUELIN, Ernest Alexandre Honoré, better known as "Coquelin Cadet," brother of the preceding, was born at Boulogne-sur-Mer, May 16, 1848. He entered the service of the Northern Railway Company, but being irresistibly drawn towards the theatrical profession, he went to Paris, and, in 1864, entered M. Regnier's class at the Conservatoire, and three years later carried off the first prize for comedy. After successfully making his début at the Odéon in the comic rôles of classic pieces, he entered the Comédie Française in June, 1876, and played with his brother. During the Siege of Paris he gained the Military Medal for bravery at the Battle of Buzenval. Among his best creations are Ulrich in "Le Sphinx" of Octave Feuillet, Isidore in "La Reprise du Testament de César Girodot," Frédéric in "L'Ami Fritz" of MM. Erckmann-Chatrian, and Basile in "Le Barbier de Séville." He is noted as a reciter, and is the author of many "monologues," which he delivers at public and private entertainments.

CORBOULD, Edward Henry, artist, the eldest son of Henry Corbould, and grandson of Richard Corbould, historical painters, was born in Great Coram Street, London, Dec. 5, 1815. Being at an early age ambitious of distinction in art, he painted "The Fall of Phaëton from the Chariot of the Sun," for which he obtained the gold Isis medal of the Society of Arts in 1834, winning the same prize again in 1835, with an original model of "St. George and the Dragon." In 1836 he obtained the large gold medal for his model of the Chariot-race, from Homer. He exhibited at the Royal Academy, and at the Gallery of British Artists, subjects mostly from Spenser's "Faëry Queen," and eventually joined the New Society (now the Royal Institute) of Painters in Water Colours. His first large subject here was "The Assembling of the Canterbury Pilgrims at the Tabard Inn, Southwark," followed by "The Woman taken in Adultery," "The Eglinton Tournament" (from sketches made upon the spot), "Under the Rose," "Salomé Dancing before Herod," "The Plague of London," "The Baptism of Ethelbert," "William of Eynesham reciting the Victory of Towton Field" (in Westminster Hall), "Scene from the Prophète" (painted for the Queen), "Floretta de Nerac, the first love of Henry IV. of France" (purchased by her Majesty, and presented to the King of Prussia), "The Entry of the Boy King into London after his Coronation in Paris," and "The Destruction of the Idols at Basle" (both in the collection of the Empress Frederick), and various others which we cannot enumerate. In 1851 Mr. Corbould was appointed Instructor of Historical painting to the Royal Family. His picture painted from Tennyson, "The Struggle for the Last Diamond," was perhaps the earliest purchase of a work of art by the Prince of Wales; but that from Tennyson's "Morte d'Arthur," in 1864, purchased by her Majesty and presented to the Princess Louise, is generally considered Mr. Corbould's best work.

CORFIELD, William Henry, M.A., M.D. (Oxon.), F.R.C.P., Hon. A.R.I.B.A., was born in Dec., 1843, at Shrewsbury, and was educated at the Cheltenham Grammar School, and obtained a Demyship in Natural Science at Magdalen College, Oxford, in March, 1861, at the early age of seventeen. In the subsequent October he matriculated, and in 1863 took a first class in Mathematics at Moderations. In the same year he had the honour of being selected by Professor Daubeny, the eminent Chemist, Botanist, and Vulcanologist, to accompany him in his examination of the volcanic appearances in the Montbrison district of Auvergne. In 1864 he passed in the final Classical Schools, and took a first class in Mathematics for the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Early in the following year Mr. Corfield obtained, in open competition, the Medical Fellowship at Pembroke College, and thus the line of his future career was decided. He next gained first-class honours in the Natural Science Schools, taking Chemistry and Geology as special subjects. Other successes followed rapidly, and the Burdett-Coutts University Scholarship in Geology and the Allied Sciences fell to him in 1866, to which, a year later, was added the Radcliffe Travelling Fellowship in Medicine. This gave him an opportunity of visiting the professional centres of the Continent, including, of course, Paris, where he studied analysis, with special reference to hygienic matters, under Berthélot, at the Collège de France, and took the opportunity then afforded of clinical study under Béhier, Sée, Hardy, and other eminent teachers, besides attending Bouchardat's lectures on Hygiene. He next proceeded to Lyons, where he worked at clinical medicine and surgery, and also made a special study of the remains of the remarkable aqueducts of ancient Lugdunum, and then passed over into Algiers, visiting afterwards some of the medical schools in Italy and Sicily. In 1868 he took his M.B. degree, and was appointed Examiner for Honours in Natural Science at the University of Oxford; and, in 1869, he received the further appointment of Professor of Hygiene and Public Health at University College, London. His Introductory Lecture was printed in the British Medical Journal on June 18 and 25, 1870, and was afterwards published in pamphlet form, under the title of a "Résumé of the History of Hygiene." He still directs the Hygienic Laboratory, which he started at this College, and in which many pupils, who have subsequently gained important sanitary posts, have been trained. He became a Member of the Royal College of Physicians of London, in 1869, and, in the same year, was elected a Member of the Committee appointed by the British Association for the Advancement of Science, to report on the Treatment and Utilization of Sewage. The alarming illness of the Prince of Wales at Londesborough Lodge, Scarborough, where he was attacked by typhoid fever at the close of the year 1871, called attention very prominently to the subject of house sanitation, and Professor Corfield made, at Lord Londesborough's request, a careful inspection of the condition of the Lodge, and described the results in a letter, which appeared in the Times on Jan. 22, 1872. In 1871 he was elected Medical Officer of Health for Islington, and, in 1872, obtained and still holds, the same post for St. George's, Hanover Square. He took his M.D. degree at Oxford in 1872, and was next year appointed Lecturer on the Law of Health at the Birmingham and Midland Institute, an office which he held for five years; afterwards he accepted a similar post at the Saltley Training College. In 1873 he delivered a course of lectures on "Water Supply, Sewerage, and Sewage Utilization" to the Royal Engineers stationed at Chatham; these lectures were at once reprinted in the United States. Dr. Corfield, in 1874, read a paper before the Epidemiological Society "On the supposed Spontaneous Origin of the Poison of Enteric Fever," in which he vigorously combated the possibility of the de novo origin of the disease. In 1875 Professor Corfield was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians; and he has published some "Remarks on the Study and Practice of Public Medicine," which were delivered as an Introductory Lecture to the Students of University College in that year. In 1879 he delivered a course of Cantor Lectures before the Society of Arts, taking for his subject, "Dwelling-houses, their Sanitary Construction and Arrangements." Professor Corfield's most recent publications are:—The third edition of his work on "The Treatment and Utilization of Sewage," in the preparation of which he has been assisted by his former pupil, Dr. Louis Parkes; his Anniversary Address to the Sanitary Institute on "The Water Supply of Ancient Roman Cities, with especial reference to Lugdunum (Lyons)," in which he shows that the Romans employed inverted siphons made of lead for the purpose of carrying their aqueducts across deep valleys, which is illustrated by lithographs from sketches made by himself on the spot; and his paper on "Outbreaks of Sore Throat caused by slight escapes of Coal Gas," read before the Society of Medical Officers of Health. Professor Corfield is prominently before the profession as Professor of Hygiene and Public Health at University College, London, and for some years one of the Examiners for the Sanitary Science Certificate at the University of Cambridge, and at the Royal College of Physicians, as a Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry and of the Chemical Society, a Fellow of the Geological Society, an Honorary Associate of the Société Française d'Hygiène, and more recently, an Honorary Corresponding Member of the Royal Society of Public Health of Belgium, a Past President of the Society of Medical Officers of Health, and Chairman of the Council of the Sanitary Institute of Great Britain. He married, in 1876, Emily Madeline, youngest daughter of the late John Pike, Esq., F.S.A., and has six children.

CORNU, Marie-Alfred, was born March 6, 1841, admitted into the École Polytechnique in 1860, whence he passed to the School of Mines, and was created engineer in 1866. In 1867 he was appointed Professor of Physics at the École Polytechnique, and since then he succeeded Becquerel as member of the Académie des Sciences. He received the Rumford Medal of the Royal Society of London in 1878, has been President of the French Association for the Advancement of Science, is Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur (1890), and Member of the Bureau des Longitudes (1886). Professor Cornu's researches have been chiefly devoted to optical subjects, and he is one of the first living authorities upon light, he having greatly improved Fizeau's toothed wheel, and so given to measurements of the velocity of light a precision which was previously impossible. His principal experiments upon this subject are recorded in the Annals of the Paris Observatory; many of his other papers are in the Comptes Rendus, and deal with crystalline reflection, the reversal of the lines in the spectrum of metallic vapours, the spectre of the aurora borealis, and the normal solar spectrum.

CORRIGAN, The Most Rev. Michael Augustine, D.D., American (R.C.) prelate, was born at Newark, N.J., Aug. 13, 1839. He was educated at St. Mary's College, Wilmington, Delaware; and at Mount St. Mary's, Emmetsburg, Maryland, graduating at the latter institution in 1859. He was ordained to the priesthood at Rome in 1863, and in the following year received the degree of D.D. After filling for a few years the chair of Dogmatic Theology and Sacred Scripture at Seton Hall College, Orange, N.J., he became its President in 1868. In 1873 he was appointed by Pius IX. to the See of Newark, and in 1880 was made coadjutor to Cardinal McCloskey, Archbishop of New York, under title of Archbishop of Petra; and on the death of the Cardinal in 1885 he became Metropolitan of the diocese of New York.

COSSON, Charles Alexander de, F.S.A., F.R.G.S., Baron de Cosson in France, born at Durham, Aug. 26, 1846, is descended from an ancient French family established in Guienne at the period of the Revolution, when his grandfather emigrated, serving first in the army of the Princes, and then in the Hompesch regiment of Hussars. When that regiment was incorporated in the British Army as the 10th Hussars, he came to England, his father having been guillotined and his estates forfeited. He returned to France in 1855, and died there in 1867, at the age of ninety-eight, his life thus reaching from the Reign of Louis XV. almost to the close of that of Napoleon III. Baron de Cosson was educated at home, and travelled much on the continent with his family. He spent two years at Seville, where he lost his father in 1871. In December, 1868, he had written to the Times a long account of the insurrection at Cadiz, which the leading article described as the first exact narrative of that event received in England. In the winter of 1872 he went to Egypt, and thence proceeded to Abyssinia, in company with his brother the late Major de Cosson, who published an account of this journey in "The Cradle of the Blue Nile." He visited Adowa and Axum, and crossed the Lamalmon Pass to Gondar and Lake Tsana. The travellers were well received by the late King John of Abyssinia. In the summer of 1873, his brother, having to return to England, left him, and travelled viâ Khartoum and the desert, to Suakim. The experience thus gained led to his being appointed to the water transport of Sir Gerald Graham's Field Force in 1885, when he was mentioned in despatches, and gazetted Major. Baron de Cosson remained in Abyssinia some months longer, returning to Massowah, by Debra Tabor, Sokota, and the interior of the country. He is best known, however, for the attention he has given for the last twenty years to the study of ancient armour and weapons. In conjunction with the late William Burges, A.R.A., he organised an exhibition of helmets and mail at the Royal Archæological Institute, in 1880, and undertook the description of the European helmets. In that work he formulated the principles which he considered ought to regulate the scientific study of ancient armour. He especially insisted that each fine piece of armour was a well considered and skilfully wrought piece of metal work, having its definite purpose, for which it was admirably adapted, and that armour should not be looked at, as was so often the case, simply as people regard the objects at Madame Tussaud's Exhibition. Since then he has contributed various papers to the Archæological Journal, and other antiquarian publications. He has also, at his house at Chertsey, a small but carefully formed collection of arms and armour. He has of late been engaged in conjunction with the Conde de Valencia de Don Juan, at Madrid, in collecting, as far as possible, all notices and marks of ancient armourers and swordmakers. In 1878 he married Cecilia Nefeeseh Bonomi, second daughter of the late Joseph Bonomi, well known for his travels in the East and his works on ancient Egypt and Assyria.

COTTON, General Sir Arthur Thomas, K.C.S.I., son of the late H. C. Cotton, Esq., and a cousin of the late Lord Combermere, born at Woodcot House, Oxfordshire, in 1803, was educated at Addiscombe. He entered the Madras army in 1819, became Colonel of Engineers in 1854, and served in the Burmese war. In 1861 he received the honour of knighthood for his activity in developing the cotton growing capabilities of India, and was entertained at a public dinner before returning to the East. He was nominated a Knight Commander of the Star of India on the reorganization of that Order in 1866. In the following year he was nominated a Lieut.-General in the army, and placed on the fixed establishment of general officers. He attained the rank of General in 1876, and was placed on the retired list in the following year.

COTTON, James Sutherland, M.A., was born at Coonoor, in the Madras Presidency, on July 17, 1847, and is the third son of J. J. Cotton, H.E.I.C.S. He was educated at Winchester, and at Oxford, where he was successively Exhibitioner of Lincoln, Scholar of Trinity, and Fellow of Queen's. He obtained a First Class in Classical Moderations, and also in the Final Classical School, and was for a time Secretary and Treasurer of the Union Debating Society. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn (1874), and joined the Western Circuit. He assisted Sir W. W. Hunter in compiling the "Statistical Account of Bengal" (20 vols. 1875-77); the "Statistical Account of Assam" (2 vols. 1879); and the "Imperial Gazetteer of India" (9 vols.. 1881; also second edition, 14 vols., 1885-87.) He is the author of the "Decennial Statement," exhibiting the Moral and Material Progress of India for the period 1873-74 to 1882-83 (issued as a Blue-book, 1885); of "India," in the volume of the "English Citizen Series," entitled "Colonies and Dependencies" (1883); and of "Mountstuart Elphinstone," in the series of "Rulers of India" (1892). He also contributed an essay on "The Intentions of the Founders of Fellowships" to "Essays on the Endowment of Research" (1876); and has been a contributor to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," "Chambers's Encyclopedia," and the "Dictionary of National Biography." Since 1887 he has edited "Paterson's Practical Statutes," an annual volume containing the important Acts of Parliament of the year, with introductions and notes. He is best known as the editor of the Academy, having conducted that important review since 1881.

COUCH, The Right Hon. Sir Richard, P.C., born in 1816, was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1841, and practised for many years on the Norfolk circuit. He was for some years Recorder of Bedford, but in 1862 was appointed a Puisne Judge of the Bombay High Court, entering upon office in August of that year. In April, 1866, on the retirement of the late Sir Matthew Sausse, he was promoted to be the Chief Justice of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, receiving soon afterwards the honour of knighthood; and in 1870 he succeeded Sir Barnes Peacock as Chief Justice of the High Court of Calcutta. He resigned the latter post in 1875, when his name was added to the roll of the Privy Council. In the same year he was President of the Commission appointed to inquire into the charges against the Gaekwar of Baroda. He was appointed a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in January, 1881.

COUES, Elliott, M.D., was born at Portsmouth, N.H., Sept. 9, 1842, and studied at Columbian University, Washington, where he took his B.A. degree in 1861;

A.M. in 1862; M.D. 1863. He served on the Medical Staff of the U.S. army from 1862 to 1881, holding official positions on the Northern Boundary Survey, 1873-76; and on the Geological Survey of the Territories, 1876-80. From 1877-87 he was Professor of Anatomy in the National Medical College at Washington; during 1883 he was Professor of Biology in the Virginia Agricultural College. He is a member of most of the scientific societies in America, and of many in Europe. His principal works are:—"Key to North American Birds," 1872, enlarged edition 1884; "Field Ornithology," 1874; "Birds of the North-west," 1874; "Fur-Bearing Animals," 1877; "Monographs of North American Rodentia," 1877; "Birds of the Colorado Valley," 1878; "Ornithological Bibliography," 1878-80; "New England Bird Life," 1881-83; "Check List and Dictionary of North American Birds," 1882; "The Biogen Series," 1882-86; "History of the Expedition of Lewis and Clark," 1893. He has been for many years a voluminous contributor to scientific periodicals, and is the author of the articles on general biology, zoology, and comparative anatomy in the "Century Dictionary."

COURTNEY, The Rt. Hon. Leonard Henry, M.P., P.C., eldest son of the late Mr. John Sampson Courtney, banker, of Penzance, Cornwall, by Sarah, daughter of Mr. John Mortimer, of St. Mary's, Scilly, was born at Penzance, July 6, 1832. He was educated at the Regent House Academy in that town, under Mr. Richard Baines, and afterwards privately under Mr. L. R. Willan, M.D. Mr. Courtney was for some time in the bank of Messrs. Bolitho, Sons, and Co., but went to St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1851, and graduated B.A. as Second Wrangler in 1855, being bracketed First Smith's Prizeman. In the following year he was elected a Fellow of his college. For some time he was engaged in private tuition at the university. In 1858 he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn. He was appointed in 1872 to the Chair of Political Economy at University College, London, and held that professorship until a lengthened visit to India in the winter of 1875-6, necessitated his retirement. For two years he was Examiner in Constitutional History in the University of London, 1873-75. In 1874 he contested Liskeard, but polled only 329 votes against 334 recorded for Mr. Horsman, but at the election which was held after that gentleman's death, Mr. Courtney gained the seat, December 22, 1876, polling 388 votes against 281 votes given to his opponent, Lieut.-Colonel Stirling. He held the seat as long as Liskeard remained a parliamentary borough, and when it was merged in the Division of South-East Cornwall he won the enlarged constituency at the general election of 1885, and was again returned in 1886 and 1892. He was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in Dec. 1880. In August, 1881, he was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, in succession to Mr. Grant Duff, who had been nominated Governor of Madras: and in May, 1882, he succeeded the late Lord Frederick Cavendish as Financial Secretary to the Treasury, but resigned his appointment on finding that the last Reform Bill did not include the principle of proportional representation, which he and the late Mr. Fawcett had long advocated. In 1885 and again in 1886, having been returned as a Unionist Liberal, he was appointed Chairman of Committees in the House of Commons. He was a member of the Labour Commission (1893-94), of the Indian Currency Commission, and the Commission for the Unification of London. Mr. Courtney was for some years a regular writer for the Times. In 1860 he published a pamphlet on "Direct Taxation;" and to the "Journal of the Statistical Society," 1868, he contributed a paper on the "Finances of the United States, 1861-67." Mr. Courtney has written various papers in the Fortnightly Review, the Nineteenth Century, and the International Review. He married, March 15, 1883, Catherine, eldest unmarried daughter of Mr. Richard Potter, a lady well known for her exertions in providing decent homes for the poor. He was made a Privy Councillor in 1889; and was presented with the hon. freedom of Penzance.

COURTNEY, William Leonard, M.A., LL.D., was born in 1850, and was educated at Merton College, Oxford, of which society he was a scholar. He took his degree in 1872, and was a Fellow of Merton from 1872-75. In 1876 he was elected fellow and tutor of New College, and was for years a prominent member of University society. He was one of the chief supporters of the University Dramatic Club, with whom he often acted. During recent years he has done good service to the literature of criticism in the columns of the Daily Telegraph. He resigned his tutorship to join the staff of that paper, and has for some time controlled its reviewing department. He was appointed editor of the Fortnightly Review, in succession to Mr. Frank Harris, in the autumn of 1894. He is the author of a work on logic, literary and historical essays, and a blank-verse drama entitled "Kit Marlowe."

COWELL, Professor Edward Byles, born at Ipswich, Jan. 23, 1826, was educated at the Ipswich Grammar School and at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in classics, December, 1854, and M.A. 1857. In 1856 he went to Calcutta as Professor of History in the newly-established Presidency College, and was appointed soon afterwards Principal of the Sanskrit College also. He returned to England in 1864, and in 1867 was elected Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Cambridge. In 1874 he was elected to a Fellowship in Corpus Christi College. Professor Cowell's chief published works are:—"The Prákrit Grammar of Vararuci" (Sanskrit and English), 1854; "Kanshítaki Upanishad" (Sanskrit and English), 1861; "Maitráyaníya Upanishad" (Sanskrit and English), 1870; "Kusumáñjali; or, Hindoo Proof of the Existence of a Supreme Being" (Sanskrit and English), 1864; "Taittiríya, or Black Yajur Veda" (Sanskrit), Vols. I., II., edited with Dr. Roer, 1860-64; "Elphinstone's History of India," edited with Notes, 1866; "Colebrooke's Essays," edited with Notes, 1873; "The Aphorisms of Sándilya," translated from the Sanskrit, 1873; "The Nyáya-Málá-Vistara," a Sanskrit work on the "Púrva-mímimsí," left unfinished by the original editor, Professor Goldstücker, and completed, 1878; "The Sarva-Darsana-Samgraha, or Review of the different Schools of Hindoo Philosophy," translated in conjunction with Professor A. E. Gough, 1882; "The Divyâvadâna," a collection of early Buddhist Legends in Sanskrit, edited in conjunction with R. A. Neil, Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge, 1886; and "The Buddha-Karita," edited in 1893, and translated in 1894.

COWEN, Frederic Hymen, composer, born Jan. 29, 1852, at Kingston, in Jamaica, exhibited as an infant an extraordinary love of music. He was brought to England at the age of four, and from that time showed so much musical talent, both in composition and in playing, as to render it advisable to place him under the tuition of Sir Julius (then Mr.) Benedict and Sir John (then Mr.) Goss, whose pupil he remained until the winter of 1865. He then studied at the conservatoires of Leipzig and Berlin, and returned to London in 1868. His first essay in composition was a waltz, written at six years old. This was followed by numerous small pieces, including an operetta entitled "Garibaldi." On his return from Berlin he wrote a fantaisie sonata, a trio, a quartet, a concerto for piano, and a symphony in C minor, the latter played firstly at the composer's own concert, and then at the Crystal Palace. Mr. Cowen's more important works comprise two cantatas, "The Rose Maiden," 1870; and "The Corsair" (written for the Birmingham Festival), 1876; an opera, "Pauline," 1876; an oratorio, "The Deluge," unpublished; Symphonies No. 2 and No. 3 (Scandinavian), which latter has made his name known throughout Europe; a sacred cantata, "Saint Ursula" (produced at the Norwich Festival, 1881); Symphony No. 4 (the Welsh); cantata, "Sleeping Beauty" (written for the Birmingham Festival), 1885; Symphony No. 5, in F; the oratorio "Ruth" (written for the Worcester Festival), 1887; "A Song of Thanksgiving" (for the opening of the Melbourne Centennial Exhibition), 1888; the cantata, "St. John's Eve," produced at the Crystal Palace, December, 1889; an opera, "Thorgrim," produced at Drury Lane by the Carl Rosa Company, April, 1890; a cantata, "The Water Lily," produced at the Norwich Festival, 1893; and the opera "Signa," produced at Milan in November, 1893, being the first opera by an Englishman produced in Italy for over half a century. Mr. Cowen's works also comprise several overtures, a sinfonietta, a suite de ballet ("The Language of Flowers"), pieces for the pianoforte, and more than 200 songs and ballads, many of which have attained great popularity. In 1888 Mr. Cowen was engaged by the Victorian Government to direct the series of concerts at the Melbourne Centennial Exhibition extending over a period of six months, and returned to England in the spring of 1889. He was elected Conductor of the Philharmonic Society in 1888, which post he resigned in 1892.

COWEN, Joseph, late M.P. for Newcastle, eldest son of the late Sir Joseph Cowen (who represented Newcastle-on-Tyne from 1865 till his death in December, 1873), by Mary, daughter of Mr. Anthony Newton, of Winlaton, co. Durham, was born at Blayden Brows in that county in 1831. He received his education at the University of Edinburgh. Early in life Mr. Cowen contracted close friendship with Mazzini, Garibaldi, Kossuth, Herzen, and other political exiles. He was unceasing in his advocacy of the cause of the oppressed European nationalities. To aid their propaganda he established a private press, at which their revolutionary manifestoes were printed and smuggled into Italy, Hungary, and Poland. He was intimately and actively identified with the different Garibaldian expeditions to establish a free and united Italy, and with Langiewicz's unsuccessful effort for Polish independence. At the death of his father Mr. Cowen was elected for Newcastle, which he represented until 1886. In home politics he is a democrat, and in foreign affairs an imperialist. He disregards conventional party ties, and in Parliament has always acted independently. He would have England to keep her empire, and assert and maintain her position as an active and efficient member of the European Areopagus. He believes this can be best done by a system of Imperial Federation, and he would carry federation the length of granting Home Rule to Ireland, which he advocates as a means of consolidating and strengthening the empire. Mr. Cowen is a member of most of the representative bodies in Tyneside. He was one of the pioneers of co-operation, and has been an ardent advocate of education and social progress, on which subjects he has written several pamphlets. In Parliament Mr. Cowen has promoted Bills for the extension of County Courts, for the establishment of Licensing Boards, and for amendments in the electoral law. He is an extensive coal owner, and firebrick and clay retort manufacturer. He is also proprietor of the Newcastle Daily and Weekly Chronicles, and has contributed largely to these and other periodicals. His addresses to his constituents have been collected and published in two volumes. His life, by Major Jones, and a selection of the speeches he has delivered in the House of Commons and at literary institutions also have been published. After the dissolution of 1886, Mr. Cowen did not offer himself for reelection. He has since his retirement from Parliament written extensively for his own newspapers and for other political and literary publications. He married, in 1854, Jane, daughter of Mr. John Thompson, of Fatfield.

COWIE, The Very Rev. Benjamin Morgan, D.D., Dean of Exeter and Precentor of Exeter Cathedral, born June 8, 1816, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A., as Senior Wrangler, in 1839, and was elected Fellow of his college. In 1844 he was appointed Principal of the College of Civil Engineers at Putney. He was a Select Preacher in his university, and preached the Hulsean Lectures in 1853 and 1854; was elected Professor of Geometry at Gresham College in 1854, and became a Minor Canon of St. Paul's in 1858. He also held the vicarage of St. Laurence Jewry, in the City of London, from 1858 to 1873. In 1859 he was appointed a Government Inspector of Training Schools, and in 1866 Warburtonian Lecturer at Lincoln's Inn. He was nominated one of the Chaplains in Ordinary to Her Majesty, Jan. 14, 1871, and was appointed Dean of Manchester in October, 1872. In 1880 he was elected Prolocutor of the Lower House of Convocation of the Province of York, in succession to the late Dean of York, the Hon. A. Duncombe. In 1882 Dr. Cowie was appointed Dean of Exeter. He published in 1846 a "Catalogue of the Library of St. John's College, Cambridge;" and he is the author of some theological works.

COWPER (Earl), The Right Hon. Francis Thomas De-Grey Cowper, K.G., eldest son of the sixth Earl, was born in 1834, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took a first-class in law and modern history in 1855. He succeeded to the title on his father's death, in 1856. He was Captain of the Gentlemen-at-Arms from April, 1871, to December, 1873. On May 5, 1880, he was installed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland at Dublin Castle, and he held that post till April 28, 1882, when he and Mr. Forster resigned together, he being succeeded by Earl Spencer. Lord Cowper after this did not take much part in public affairs until Mr. Gladstone promulgated his Home Rule policy, when Lord Cowper declared himself opposed to it. He was Chairman of the celebrated "Opera House" meeting of Unionists, and took other measures against Mr. Gladstone's bill. After the accession of Lord Salisbury, Lord Cowper was appointed Chairman of the Commission for investigating the working of the Irish Land Act of 1881. He was appointed Chairman of the Gresham University Commission in 1892.

COX, The Rev. Sir George William, Bart., M.A., born in 1827, was educated at Rugby and at Trinity College, Oxford, of which he was scholar, and where he graduated S.C.L. in 1849, and proceeded B.A. and M.A. in 1859. He entered holy orders in 1850, and was curate of Salcombe Regis, Devon, in 1850-51, of St.

Paul's, Exeter, 1854-57, held an assistantmastership in Cheltenham College in 1860-61, was vicar of Bekesbourne, Kent, 1881, and is now rector of Scrayingham, York. With his friend Edward A. Freeman (afterwards the historian of the Norman Conquest and of Sicily) he published in 1850 a volume of "Poems Legendary and Historical." His "Life of St. Boniface" was published in 1853. He is also author of "Tales from Greek Mythology" and "The Great Persian War," 1861; "Tales of the Gods and Heroes," 1862; "Tales of Thebes and Arzos," 1863; "A Manual of Mythology in the form of Questions and Answers," 1867; "Tales of Ancient Greece," collected edition, 1868; "Latin and Teutonic Christendom," 1870; "The Mythology of Aryan Nations," 2 vols., 1870; "Popular Romances of the Middle Ages," 1871; and "Tales of the Teutonic Lands," 1872, both in conjunction with Mr. Eustace Hinton Jones; "A History of Greece," 2 vols., 1874; "The Crusades," 1874; "The Greeks and the Persians," 1876; "The Athenian Empire," 1876; "A General History of Greece, from the earliest period to the death of Alexander the Great, with a sketch of the subsequent history to the present time," 1876; "School History of Greece," 1877; "History of British Rule in India," 1881; "Introduction to the Science of Comparative Mythology and Folklore," 1881; "Alexander the Great" and other articles in the 9th edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica;" "Lives of Greek Statesmen," 2 vols., 1886; "A Concise History of England and the English People," 1887. He has been a contributor to the Edinburgh Review since 1857. In 1861 he became literary adviser to the publishing firm of Messrs. Longman, and this relation continued for twenty-five years. He edited (jointly with Mr. W. T. Brande) the "Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art" (3 vols. 1865-67; new edition, 3 vols. 1875), and contributed to the "Glossary of Terms and Phrases," edited by the Rev. H. Percy Smith, 1883. To Dr. Colenso, Bishop of Natal, during his sojourn in England, 1863-65, he gave all the help in his power, and the intimate associations of these years supplied him with an abundance of materials of which, after the Bishop's death, he was enabled to avail himself in drawing up the story of his great work on the Pentateuch and the Old Testament history generally. In 1888 he published his "Life of Bishop Colenso," avowing that his motive in writing it was to lay before the world for his words and his acts generally a full and complete vindication, and to record the fact that for his method and its conclusions a decisive justification is furnished by the series of judgments which have issued from the highest courts of the Church of England. Claiming for the Bishop of Natal a genuine and hearty loyalty for the Church of England, for which throughout his whole life he worked and fought, and seeing the prevalent disposition to turn the controversy to false issues, he put forth, later in the same year 1888, under the title of "The Church of England and the Teaching of Bishop Colenso," a series of 154 propositions, embodying all that is of any importance, in the several volumes published by the Bishop, the conclusion being that the law of the Church of England, and with it a silence which implies acquiescence on the part of all schools and parties, make it in every way competent for any clergyman to hold and to teach any of these propositions. On the death of his uncle, Sir Edmund Cox, which occurred in Canada in 1877, he succeeded to the baronetcy; and he is the 14th baronet in succession from Sir Richard Cox, Chancellor of Ireland.

COXE, The Right Rev. Arthur Cleveland, D.D., Anglican Bishop of Western New York, was born at Mendham, New Jersey, May 10, 1818. B.A., University of New York, 1838, and M.A. 1841, when he completed his course at the General Theological Seminary. Ordained to the diaconate, he became rector of St. Ann's Church, Morrisania, New York, where he remained till Easter, 1842. Ordained Priest in that year, he was rector of St. John's Church, Hartford, Connecticut, till 1854, when he accepted the rectorship of Grace Church, Baltimore. In 1863 he became rector of Calvary Church, New York. He was consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Western New York, Jan. 4, 1865, and on the death of Bishop De Lancey, three months later, he succeeded to the bishopric. Dr. Coxe visited England in 1851, and made an extensive tour on the Continent. Visiting the eminent Hirscher, at Freiburg (Breisgau), he became convinced that a movement towards Primitive Christianity was on foot, both in Germany and Italy. He translated a work of Hirscher's, with an introduction detailing facts which he had learned in Italy. Returning to England in December, the Bishop of Oxford (Wilberforce) urged him to publish them at Oxford, which he did in the following year, under the title "Sympathies of the Continent." The subsequent career of Dr. Döllinger and the rise of the Old

Catholics confirmed the views and predictions of this work. He had previously published in Blackwood's Magazine an article which attracted attention to the criticisms of De Maistre on the Church of England. In 1878 and again in 1888 he attended the Conferences at Lambeth Palace, and at other times has been in England on private or public business. He was one of the founders of the Anglo-Continental Society. He became D.D. at the University of Durham, 1888, when he preached in the Cathedral by appointment of the late Bishop Lightfoot. Among his many publications are "Christian Ballads," 1840 (published in England in 1851, and subsequently in many editions); "Athanasian and other Poems," 1842; "Hallowe'en," 1844; "Saul, a Mystery," 1845; "Sermons on Doctrine and Duty," 1854; "Impressions of England," 1856; "Criterion," 1866; "Moral Reforms," 1869; "Apollos," republished in Oxford, 1874; "Ladye Chace," 1878; and "The Penitential," 1882. In 1885 he founded the Christian Literal Co. of New York, and edited nine vols. of their series of "Ante-Nicene Fathers;" also, subsequently, their edition of St. Augustine on the Psalms. In 1887 he was "Baldwin Lecturer" at Michigan University, and the first vol. of these lectures appeared in 1887, with the title of "Institutes of Christian History." In 1887 he was "Bedell Lecturer" in Kenyon College, (Gambier, Ohio): the lectures were published under the title "Holy Writ and Modern Thought." In 1889 appeared "The Paschal," a collection of Easter poems. In 1892 he was "Paddock Lecturer" in New York; the work (in the press) to be called "The Repose of the Blessed." He has been a large contributor to periodical literature, and has published, in Paris, several publications in the French language. In 1888 he preached frequently in Paris, and officiated in the "Gallican Chapel" as Bishop in charge of the "Gallicans" of France, a position which he resigned in 1892, when (as he had constantly urged as a desirable result) the Archbishop of Utrecht consented to assume this work in France. His work, "L'Episcopat de l'Occident," published in Paris in 1875, has been rewritten and enlarged in English, and is now in the press. He has also a poem on "Westminster Abbey" in course of publication, which will appear in England and America simultaneously.

COXWELL, Henry Tracy, was born March 2, 1819, at the Parsonage House, Wouldham, near Rochester Castle. This celebrated aëronaut is the grandson of the Rev. Charles Coxwell, deputy-lieutenant for Gloucestershire, and son of Commander Joseph Coxwell, R.N., and was educated at the Military School, Chatham. In 1844 the young balloonist, who at that time was an enthusiastic amateur, ascended from White Conduit Gardens in North London. In 1845 he projected and edited the Aërostatic Magazine; after that he made numerous ascents with Mr. Hampton, Mr. Gypson, and Lieutenant Gale. He was a fellow-traveller with Albert Smith when a balloon (Gypson's) burst over London in a storm of lightning and thunder, and it was owing to Mr. Coxwell's promptitude in cutting a line which turned the balloon into a parachute that the lives of the four aërial travellers were saved. This incident was one of the means used by his friends to induce him to undertake the management of a balloon himself, which he did most successfully in the year 1848 at Chelmsford. In the same year he commenced an aëronautic campaign on the Continent: starting at Brussels, with his typical war balloon, he demonstrated a new plan of discharging aërial torpedoes. The torpedoes were dropped from a second car or battery connected by a rope ladder, 40 feet long, below the passenger car. Down this rope ladder Mr. Coxwell descended in order not to risk the gas exploding when the shells were lighted and discharged. They fell over the city and exploded in mid-air. With this balloon a succession of experiments took place at Elberfeld, Berlin, and the principal towns of Germany and Austria. In the year 1851 Mr. Coxwell returned to London, and about the time of the Crimean War he called the attention of the military authorities to his system of signalling, by using semaphore arms attached to the ring and car. Some years later he adopted other codes more in accordance with the telegraphic improvements of the present day. In 1862 Mr. Coxwell, after making numerous ascents in Great Britain, turned his attention to meteorological ballooning. Mr. James Glaisher, F.R.S., having undertaken to make observations for the British Association, Mr. Coxwell was invited to co-operate. On Sept. 5, 1862, Messrs. Glaisher and Coxwell accomplished an exploration to the unprecedented elevation of seven miles, where Mr. Glaisher was in a state of insensibility, while Mr. Coxwell had to mount up into the ring to seize the valve cord between his teeth, as he had lost power in his hands, they being frost-bitten, and he could not effect a descent until he had opened the valve. It was here that Mr. Coxwell observed an aneroid to indicate their maximum elevation, which was confirmed by other meteorological instruments as read and verified by Mr. Glaisher before and after his temporary unconsciousness of thirteen minutes, during which time a vast dip had been made of nearly 19,000 feet. Lofty flights above our highest mountain-tops were continued for some time, but never equalled the first. About this time Mr. Coxwell ascended from Woolwich Arsenal and from Aldershot camp for purely military objects. In the year 1870 Prussia formed in Cologne two detachments of aëronauts, in order to use them during the Franco-German War, and Mr. Coxwell was engaged to instruct the officers and soldiers in this service. Some time before the Egyptian Campaign Mr. Coxwell showed at the Crystal Palace how one large balloon and two smaller ones could, by a variation in their positions while in a captive state, illustrate a system of signalling. He retired in the year 1885, when his last public ascent had been made from York, where he had ascended consecutively for twenty-eight years. He has written two volumes of his "Life and Ballooning Experiences;" these were published in 1887-9.

CRACKENTHORPE, Montague (formerly MONTAGUE COOKSON), Q.C., D.C.L., younger son of Christopher Cookson, of Nowers, Somerset, Esq., and grandson of Dr. Cookson, Canon of Windsor, whose sister married William Wordsworth, the poet, was born in 1832, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School; where he carried off the principal school prizes, in addition to the Pitt exhibition awarded to the best scholar of the year. In 1850 he went to St. John's College, Oxford, of which he was successively Scholar and Fellow. In Easter term, 1852, he gained the Junior University Mathematical Scholarship (open to all undergraduates), and was in the same term second for the Hertford Latin Scholarship. He took a double first class in classics and mathematics in Moderations, and the like double honours in the Final Schools. In 1856, he was elected Eldon Law Scholar, and at once entered as a student at Lincoln's Inn. Here he was a pupil in the chambers of Mr. Thomas Lewin, whom he afterwards assisted in bringing out a new edition of his treatise on the "Law of Trusts," and he also read with Mr. John Wickens, better known as Vice-Chancellor Sir John Wickens. In 1859 he was awarded the Studentship of the Four Inns of Court. In 1862 he was appointed Lecturer in Equity and Real Property to the Incorporated Law Society, a post which he relinquished in 1886, owing to his increasing practice at the Bar. In 1875 he was made a Q.C., and in 1877 became a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn. For many years he was a recognised leader in the Chancery Division, notably in the Court presided over by Mr. Justice (afterwards Lord Justice) Fry. Of late he has ceased to attach himself to any one court, and practises mainly in Appeal Cases and before the House of Lords and Privy Council. In 1888 he succeeded, on the death of his cousin, William Crackenthorpe, Esq., to the Newbiggin Hall estate, situate partly in Westmorland and partly in Cumberland, a property which has been preserved in the Crackenthorpe family since the reign of Edward III. In the same year he obtained a grant of a Royal Licence to change his name from Cookson to Crackenthorpe, and to bear the arms of Crackenthorpe, quartered with his own arms. From time to time Mr. Crackenthorpe has contributed to many of our leading periodicals, writing usually on social, political, and legal subjects. Among his articles may be cited "The Morality of Married Life" in the Fortnightly Review, "The Nation before Party" in the Nineteenth Century, and two papers on legal reform in the same magazine. He is the author of an essay on the "Immigration of Destitute Aliens," published by Swan Sonnenschein & Co. in their Social Science Series. His letters to the Times on Ireland, written in 1887, after making a tour of political inspection in that country, have been frequently quoted by Unionist speakers in support of the case against Home Rule. He is a Liberal-Unionist, and as a Liberal he has contested two divisions of the Metropolis. He has delivered a large number of political and social addresses in the North of England. In London, Mr. Crackenthorpe is a member of the Council of Legal Education and of the Bar Committee, and he is Vice-Chairman of the Council of Law Reporting. In Oxford, he is Standing Counsel to the University and an honorary Fellow of St. John's College. In Westmorland, he is a Justice of the Peace, and Deputy-Lieutenant, and Chairman of Quarter Sessions. He is a brother of Sir Charles Cookson, K.C.M.G., C.B., Consul-General and Judge at Alexandria. In 1869 he married the younger daughter of the Rev. Hardley Chauncy Holt, a descendant of Sir John Holt, Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench and also of Sir John Eardley Wilmot, Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas.

CRAIG, Isa. See KNOX, MRS.

CRANBROOK (Viscount), The Right Hon. Gathorne Gathorne-Hardy, G.C.S.I., is the third son of the late Mr. John Hardy, of Dunstall Hall, Staffordshire (who for many years represented the town of Bradford in Parliament), and of Isabel, daughter of Mr. Richard Gathorne, of Kirkby Lonsdale. He was born at Bradford, Oct. 1, 1814, and educated at Shrewsbury School, and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he gained a second-class in classics, and took the degree of B.A. in 1836. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1840, and practised as a barrister for several years. Mr. Hardy unsuccessfully contested Bradford in the Conservative interest in 1847, but was returned to the House of Commons in 1856 as member for Leominster, which borough he continued to represent till the celebrated Oxford election in July, 1865, when, after an exciting contest, he defeated Mr. Gladstone by a majority of 180, this being the principal Conservative success at the general election of that year. In 1858 Mr. Hardy was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in Lord Derby's second administration; on the formation of Lord Derby's third administration in July, 1866, he became President of the Poor-Law Board; and on the resignation of Mr. Walpole, in May, 1867, he was nominated Secretary of State for the Home Department, which office he held till the resignation of the Conservative ministry in Dec. 1868. On the formation of Mr. Disraeli's administration in Feb. 1874, Mr. Hardy was nominated Secretary of State for War. In May, 1878, he was raised to the House of Peers by the title of Viscount Cranbrook, of Hemsted, in the County of Kent; and he assumed, by royal licence, the additional surname of Gathorne. In the same year he succeeded the Marquis of Salisbury as Secretary of State for India, and held that office until the Conservatives retired from Office in May, 1880. In Lord Salisbury's cabinet of 1885, and again in 1886, Lord Cranbrook held the office of Lord President of the Council, and in 1892, on the resignation of the Government, he was created Earl of Cranbrook and Baron Medway of Hemsted in the county of Kent. He married in 1838, Jane, daughter of Mr. James Orr, of Holyrood House, co. Down. His eldest son, the Hon. J. S. Gathorne-Hardy, now Lord Medway, sat in Parliament for the Medway Division of Kent, and his third son, the Hon. A. E. Gathorne-Hardy, for the East Grinstead Division of Sussex.

CRANE, Walter, painter and decorative designer, second son of Thomas Crane, of Chester, miniature and portrait painter, sometime Secretary and Treasurer of the Liverpool Academy, was born at Liverpool, Aug. 15, 1845; apprenticed, 1859, to W. J. Linton (the eminent wood engraver, poet, and chartist), for three years, to learn the craft of drawing on wood for engraving. This turned his work largely in the direction of book illustration, which he followed side by side with painting and decorative designing. He was appointed a member of the committee of the General Exhibition, known as the Dudley Gallery, of Water-Colour Drawings in 1879, and resigned that position in 1881. He was Examiner at the National Competition of Drawings, South Kensington, 1879, and has so acted since. He was elected a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours in 1882, also of the Institute of Painters in Oil, but resigned membership of both in 1886. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours (the old society) in March, 1888, and has since exhibited there. He became a member of the Società d'Acquarellisti of Rome in 1883. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy (a small picture, "The Lady of Shalott") in 1862; and he has exhibited at the Grosvenor Gallery every year from its foundation in 1877, on which he ceased to appeal to the Academy. His principal pictures are:—"The Renaissance of Venus," 1877; "The Fate of Persephone," 1878; "The Sirens," 1879; "Truth and the Traveller," 1880; "Europa," "The Laidley Worm," 1881; "The Roll of Fate" and "Dunstanborough Castle," 1882; "Diana and the Shepherd," 1883; "The Bridge of Life," 1884; "Freedom," 1885; "Pandora," 1885; "The Chariots of the Hours," 1887; "Sunrise," 1888; "Flora," 1889; "Pegasus," 1889. "A Diver," 1885, won a silver medal at the Paris Universal Exhibition, 1889. He has published "Walter Crane's Toy Books," 1869-75; "Picture Books," 1874-5; "The Baby's Opera," 1877, &c.; "The Sirens Three," a poem written and illustrated by himself, 1886, which appeared originally in The English Illustrated Magazine. He was associated with the movement against the Royal Academy, 1886, and in favour of the establishment of a National Exhibition in which all the arts should be represented. Afterwards, in conjunction with other well-known decorative artists, he founded the Arts and Crafts Exhibition Society, 1888, and became its President. The society opened its first exhibition at the New Gallery in the autumn of 1888. In 1884 he became associated with the Socialist movement, and has since worked for it by means of lectures, writings, and designs. In 1889 he gave the Cantor Lectures (course of three) at the Society of Arts, "On the Decoration and Illustration of Books." He was President of the Section of Applied Art at the National Art Congress at Liverpool, 1888; and designed the Seal of the London County Council, 1889. Since 1889 he has illustrated "Flora's Feast" (written by himself); "The Book of Wedding Days," "Echoes of Hellas," "Queen Summer," 1891 (written by himself); "A Wonder Book" (Nathaniel Hawthorne), 1892; "The Old Garden" (Margaret Deland), 1892; "Illustrations to Shakespeare's Tempest," "The Glittering Plain" (William Morris), to be issued by the Kelmscott Press; "Renaiscence, a Book of Verse," 1891 (by himself). In 1891 an exhibition of Walter Crane's works was held at the Fine Art Society's in Bond Street, comprising book designs, decorations, and easel pictures in oil and water colours. This collection was afterwards shown in the United States of America, whither Mr. Crane accompanied it, and in Germany (1892-93). Mr. Crane's principal easel pictures since 1889 are a "Masque of the Senses," "Poppies and Corn," "A Masque of Spring Flowers," and "Neptune's Horses." The two latter were exhibited at the New Gallery in 1892. Just prior to his visit to America he sat to G. F. Watts for his portrait, which was exhibited at the New Gallery in 1893. In September, 1892, he was appointed Director of Designs at the Manchester Municipal School of Art.

CRAWFORD, Mrs. Emily, journalist, daughter of Andrew and Grace Johnstone, was born in Dublin on May 31, 1841. Her education was a home one until she went to Paris in 1857. Her reading was extensive, and when a young girl she was engaged to write a daily letter to the Morning Star. She married, in 1864, George Morland Crawford, Esq., of Chelsfield Court Lodge, Kent, and member of Lincoln's Inn, who was then Paris Correspondent of the Daily News. After her marriage she greatly aided her husband in his work, remained in France during the war of 1870, and was in Paris during the Communal Civil War. She frequently contributed leading and miscellaneous articles to the Daily News, and wrote for many papers, besides English and American magazines and reviews; amongst others, Truth, the Illustrated London News, the Illustrated Journal, the Pall Mall Gazette, the New York Tribune, the Gentleman's Magazine, The Century, and Macmillan's, to which she furnished, in Oct., 1877, a monograph of M. Thiers. She also wrote the biography of that statesman which appeared after his death in the Daily News. Her first review article was asked for by the editor of The Museum of Edinburgh, on the suggestion of the late Matthew Arnold, who, when he made it, was not acquainted with her, but had been struck with some observations which she had made on the weak side of the system of higher education in France, and had entered into a correspondence with her on the subject. Mrs. Crawford has also contributed to the Contemporary and Universal Review, and Subjects of the Day. Mrs. Crawford was proposed for the Cross of the Legion of Honour, but preferred that the decoration offered her should be given to her son, Mr. Robert Crawford.

CRAWFORD, Francis Marion, American writer, the son of Thomas Crawford, the sculptor, was born at Bagni di Lucca, Italy, Aug. 2, 1854. He was educated partly in America (Concord, N. H.), partly in Italy, and partly in England, 1870-74, where he had a private tutor and was a member of Trinity College, Cambridge. From 1874-76 he studied at Karlsruhe, and for a short time at Heidelberg. He passed 1876-78 at the University of Rome, studying Sanskrit. In 1879 he went to India and was editor of a daily paper, the Indian Herald, published at Allahabad. He returned to America in 1881, remaining there till 1883, when he went to Italy, where (with the exception of a visit to Turkey in 1884) he has since principally resided, his home being near Sorrento. Mr. Crawford's writings have been chiefly novels, though he has done some work in critical philosophy and philology. His books include "Mr. Isaacs," 1882; "Dr. Claudius," 1883; "To Leeward," 1883; "A Roman Singer," 1884; "An American Politician," 1884; "Zoroaster," 1885; "A Tale of a Lonely Parish," 1886; "Saracinesca," 1887; "Marzio's Crucifix," 1887; "Paul Patoff," 1887; "With the Immortals," 1888; "Greifenstein," 1889; "Sant' Ilario," 1889; and "A Cigarette Maker's Romance," 1890; "Khaled," "The Witch of Prague," "Don Orsino," "Pietro Ghisleri," and "The Children of the King," 1893. Mr. Marion Crawford a few years ago was awarded a prize of 1,000 francs by the French Academy, as an acknowledgment of the merit of his novels, and especially of two of them, "Zoroaster" and "Marzio's Crucifix," which were written in French as well as in English.

CRAWFORD, Oswald, C.M.G., was educated at Eton and Oxford. Leaving the university he entered the Foreign Office, and was appointed Consul at Oporto in 1867. He is the author of the "World we Live In," "Sylvia Arden," "Beyond the Seas," and several works dealing with Portuguese matters. In 1890 he was created C.M.G., and in the same year published "Round the Calendar in Portugal."

CRAWFORD, Sir Thomas, K.C.B., M.D., and LL.D. Edin.; Hon. F.R.C.S.I., F.R.C.P.I., and M.Ch.R.U.I., entered the army as assistant-surgeon in Feb., 1848, was promoted surgeon in Feb., 1855, surgeon-major in Feb., 1868, and deputy-inspector-general in Feb., 1870. He became surgeon-general in Dec., 1876. While an assistant-surgeon with the 51st Light Infantry Regiment, Dr. Crawford served throughout the Burmese war of 1852-3, and was present at the storming and capture of Rangoon. For this service he received the Burmah medal with the clasp for Pegu. Dr. Crawford was subsequently gazetted to the 18th Royal Irish Regiment, and served in the Crimea during the Eastern campaign from Feb., 1855, to the fall of Sebastopol. He received the Crimean medal and clasp of Sebastopol, together with the Turkish medal for this service. He was subsequently selected for the position of head of the medical branch in the director-general's office in London, and held this appointment for several years during Sir Galbraith Logan's rule of the department. At the conclusion of this service Dr. Crawford proceeded to India, where he served as deputy-surgeon-general of the Sirhind circle in Bengal. Having completed this tour of foreign service, Dr. Crawford returned to England and held the appointment of head of the Army Medical Department in Ireland. In 1879 he returned to India as chief of the Army Medical Department in that empire. In April, 1882, he was appointed to succeed Sir William Muir as Director-General of the Army Medical Department, from which he retired in May, 1889.

CREAGH, Charles Vandeleur, C.V., C.M.G., was born Oct. 4, 1842, and is the second surviving son of Captain James Creagh, R.N., of Cahirbane, Co. Clare, Ireland, and grandson of the O'Moore, of Cloghan Castle, King's Co. He was educated at the Royal Naval School, New Cross, and at Eastman's Naval Academy, Southsea; passed the examination for admission to the India Navy in 1857, and entered the Punjaub Police, as Assistant District Superintendent, in 1865. He obtained a second class certificate in Oriental languages, and in 1867 was supported by the Indian Government in raising a Sikh Police Corps, for which service he had been selected by the Governor of Hong Kong. He has held the following appointments in Hong Kong:—1868, J.P.; Acting Captain Superintendent of Police in 1869-70, and 1877-78; Sheriff, 1874; Aide de Camp, 1878; Superintendent of the Fire Brigade, 1878-80. He studied law in the Middle Temple during eight terms, and passed the examinations in Roman and Common Law. He passed with credit the six Acting Police Magistrate and Coroner examinations in Chinese prescribed by Government; and was Arbitrator for Government under the Opium Ordinance in 1879; was appointed Assistant British President and Member of the State Council, Perak, on the application of the President, Sir Hugh Low, in 1882; and Judge of the Presidency Court, Perak. He acted frequently for the President during his absence. In 1888 he was selected for the post of Governor and Commander in Chief and Chief Judicial Officer of the British North Borneo Company's territory, with the approval of the Secretary of State. On Jan. 1, 1890, he was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Labuan. In 1892 he was made a C.M.G.

CREMER, William Randell, M.P., was born in 1829, of poor parents, at Fareham, in Hampshire, and lost his father, who was a herald painter, at an early age. As soon as he was old enough he was apprenticed to the carpenter's trade, and in Brighton, as well as in London, where he afterwards worked as a joiner, he found time to associate himself in all the Radical movements of the day, and in 1859 took part in the Unionist agitation which resulted in the celebrated lock-out in the building trade. In 1860 he united the various small local Unions in the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners. In the same year he took an active part in the demonstration arranged for the reception of Garibaldi on his visit to England, and to him also were mainly due the arrangements for the great demonstrations of the Reform League in Hyde Park and the Agricultural Hall. Since then he has been associated in all the movements on behalf of the working classes, such as the Education League (before the passing of Mr. Forster's Act), the agricultural labourers' agitation, and the Workmen's Peace Association (at the time of the Franco-German War). Mr. Cremer's views on home politics coincide, for the most part, with those of the majority of Advanced Radicals. At the general election of 1885 he was returned as a working-class member for the Haggerston division of Shoreditch, and was again elected as a Gladstonian Liberal in 1886 and in 1892. He is Secretary of the International Arbitration League, and editor of the Arbitrator. In 1864 he was first General Secretary of the "Internationel." In 1890 he was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour.

CREMONA, Professor Luigi, F.R.S., F.R.S.E., LL.D., Professor of Higher Mathematics at the University of Rome and Senator of the Kingdom of Italy, &c., was born at Pavia on Dec. 7, 1830. In 1848, leaving school and home, he fought for eighteen months for the independence of Italy, taking part in most engagements in Venetia. Subsequently he went to the University of Pavia and continued his studies, having Brioschi as a master. He very soon entered upon his career as a teacher, at first at the Gymnasium of Cremona, and at the Lyceum of Milan; then as Professor of Higher Geometry at the University of Bologna. In 1886 he passed to the Higher Technical Institute of Milan. In 1873 he was called to reorganize the School of Engineers in Rome, of which he has been director for many years. Luigi Cremona has devoted the whole of his scientific life to the study of higher geometry, and to the reform of mathematical instruction in the secondary and higher schools. The introduction of projective geometry and of graphic statics in public instruction in Italy is almost exclusively his work. He is a Senator of the Realm, and Vice-President of the Council of the Italian Parliament. No question on higher teaching is ever discussed in the Chamber without Cremona ably taking up the subject, for he does this with a perfect knowledge of it. He is the author of a large number of memoirs and works dealing chiefly with geometry.

CRICHTON-BROWNE, Harold W. A. F., was born at Bensham in the county of Durham, on July 3, 1866, and is the only son of Sir James Crichton-Browne, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S. He was educated at University College School, at a Private Tutor's, and at Magdalene College, Cambridge. He became lieutenant in the 3rd Battalion King's Own Scottish Borderers, and F.R.G.S. In 1888 he joined Mr. Joseph Thomson's exploring expedition to the Atlas Mountains, and with that traveller traversed the interior of Southern and Northern Morocco, crossed the mountains in three districts not before entered by Europeans; and reached the summit of Tizi Likumpt, 15,000 feet high. On the recall of Mr. Thomson to England to take charge of an Emin Pacha Relief expedition then contemplated, Mr. Crichton-Browne remained for three months in sole charge of the expedition. He is the author of "In the Heart of the Atlas," a lecture delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain; "Two African Cities," &c.

CRICHTON-BROWNE, Sir James, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., Knt. B. 1866, born in 1840 at Edinburgh, is the son of Dr. W. A. F. Browne, H. M. Commissioner in Lunacy for Scotland, who was eminent as a physician and introduced many ameliorations in the treatment of the insane. Sir James Crichton-Browne was educated at the Dumfries Academy, Trinity College, Glenalmond, the University of Edinburgh, and the Medical Schools of London and Paris, and is Honorary Member and was formerly Senior President of the Royal Medical Society of Edinburgh. He is Fellow of the Academy of Medicine of New York, and of many learned Societies; has been President of the Medico-Psychological Association and of the Neurological Society of London; is Vice-President and Treasurer of the Royal Institution of Great Britain; J. P. for Dumfries-shire; was formerly Medical Superintendent of the Newcastle-on-Tyne Borough Asylum; Lecturer on Psychological Medicine in the Newcastle College of Medicine; is Medical Superintendent of the West Riding Asylum; Lecturer on Mental Diseases in the Leeds School of Medicine; and is Lord Chancellor's Visitor in Lunacy. He has published a large number of monographs on the Physiology and Pathology of the Nervous System, and on Mental Diseases; a work on "Education and the Nervous System," 1884; and many lectures and addresses and contributions to medical journals. He founded and edited for six years the West Riding Asylum Medical Reports, the first British Journal of Neurology, also edited translations from the Danish of Kestal on "Overpressure in Schools,"

1885. While at the head of the West Riding Asylum, where he had 1,500 insane patients under his professional care, Sir James not only raised that institution into the first rank amongst kindred institutions, and made it famous for good management and successful results, but converted it into a great Medical School, in which important researches were carried on, and in which young medical men were trained for asylum practice. He established a laboratory, in which original investigations were conducted, and in which Ferrier's first discoveries in the functions of the brain were made. He also established a museum, and periodically gave lectures, and brought the moral treatment of the inmates and discipline of the staff to a high pitch of perfection. His reports and letters on overpressure in elementary schools led to a number of modifications in the curriculum of such schools, all tending to mitigate the severity of the pressure upon the children, and especially on such children as are dull or delicate. His writings also, by calling attention to the half-starved condition of large numbers of the children in elementary schools, led to the establishment of free breakfasts. At the meeting of the Congress of the Sanitary Institute at Liverpool, Oct. 1894, he lectured to a working-man audience on "The Prevention of Tubercular Disease."

CRISP, Hon. Charles Frederick, American Statesman, was born at Sheffield, Jan. 29, 1845, during a visit of his parents to this country. He was taken to the United States the year of his birth and was educated at the public schools of Savannah and Macon, Georgia. He served in the Confederate Army during the Civil War, and at its close studied law and was admitted to the Bar in 1866, practising at Ellaville, Georgia. In 1872 he was appointed Solicitor-General of the South-Western Judicial Circuit of Georgia, and in 1877 became Judge of the Superior Court in the same circuit. This position he retained until elected a Representative in Congress in 1882. He has served continuously in Congress since that year, and since 1891 has been Speaker of the House.

CRISPI, Francesco, an Italian statesman, born at Ribera, in Sicily, Oct. 4, 1819, studied law at Palermo, and became a member of the Bar at Naples, where he took part in the conspiracies which led to the overthrow of the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies in 1848. He was one of the chief promoters of the insurrection of Palermo, became a deputy and general secretary of war, and for two years was the heart and soul of the resistance offered by the Sicilian people. After the victory gained by the Swiss regiments, Signor Crispi fled to France. In 1859 and 1860 he organised the new Sicilian revolution; landed at Palermo with Garibaldi and his volunteers, and after fighting as a simple soldier, became a minister, in which capacity he paved the way for the annexation of the Two Sicilies to the Kingdom of Italy. In 1861 he was returned by the city of Palermo to the first Italian Parliament, in which he took a prominent and influential position, becoming in a short time the acknowledged leader of the constitutional opposition. It was the understanding between Signor Crispi and the old Piedmontese "third party" which led to the formation of the new Ratazzi ministry. He was chosen as a Deputy at the elections of Nov., 1876, by several electoral colleges, and "opted" for that of Bari. On the 22nd of that month he was elected President of the Chamber of Deputies by 232 votes against 115. The following year the party of "Moral Order" returned to power in France, and, the interests of Italy seeming menaced by them, Signor Crispi undertook semi-official journeys in search of allies against the Republic. He was cordially received in London and at Berlin (1877). Some weeks later he became Minister of the Interior in the remodelled Depretis cabinet, but retired in March, 1878. During the ten following years in which M. Depretis was intermittently in power, he remained one of the leaders and principal orators of the Left. On May 15, 1880, he delivered a speech which was commented on by the European press, and unfolded therein the policy of his party. The Chamber required, he declared, to be directed by a vigorous hand. "Italia Irredenta," the "unredeemed" Italy of the Adriatic coast, which is still under Austrian sway, was to be encouraged in its desire to become Italian. Italy was to take a more prominent position in the concert of nations, and was to aim at the acquisition of increased influence in the East. After the delivery of this speech he advocated electoral reform and the adoption of Scrutin de liste. In March, 1881, he began to attack France in his journal La Riforma, and afterwards advocated a German alliance and an increase of the national armaments and defences and complete military reorganisation. In November, 1883, he declared war against the clerical party, as being hostile to modern Italian institutions, and thus completed what he calls the "traditional programme of the Left." After the Italian reverses in Africa in 1887, Signor Crispi asked the Government to vote an extraordinary credit in order to send reinforcements to Massowah. The credit was voted, the Depretis Government again went out of office, and Crispi asked the Chamber to express utter condemnation of the fallen ministry. This was not done, and in the end Signor Crispi became Minister of Foreign Affairs in a new Depretis cabinet, and after the death of that statesman in July, 1887, succeeded him as President of the Council and Home and Foreign Minister. On Oct. 1, Signor Crispi began paying a series of visits to Prince Bismarck at Friedrichsruhe, the result of which was the entry of Italy into the Triple Alliance. The country was now asked to vote enormous sums for the maintenance of an increased army and navy. Financial crises ensued, and disturbances in Rome and Naples. Crispi became very unpopular, and in September, 1889, two attempts were made on his life in the above-named towns. In 1888 the commercial treaty with France was broken and not renewed, and the relations between the Government and the Papacy became increasingly strained, owing to the anti-clerical legislation of the former. Signor Crispi, however, thought it expedient to go to the country, and after a brilliant electoral campaign, in which he made a great speech at Florence, in November, 1890, containing a declaration of foreign policy and repudiating the Irredentists as hostile to Austria, he brought his party back into power with a majority in the Chamber of 236. The Premier himself was returned by four electoral colleges. Two months later, however, the Crispi ministry fell on a question of taxation, the chief minister having made himself unpopular by his high-handed refusal to consider the necessity of retrenchment in military and naval expenditure. Though out of power, Signor Crispi continued for some time to express his views on political questions at public banquets and meetings throughout the country, as well as in the Chamber, and in December, 1891, made a notable attack on his successor, Signor di Rudini, apropos of the Papal question. But he retired from the strife before the attack had been fully rebutted. In 1892 he gave up the leadership of the opposition, but retained his seat. After the ensuing bank scandals, and the resignation on Nov. 24, 1894, of Signor Giolitti, the Premier in succession to Rudini, Signor Crispi was again called on to form a Cabinet. He succeeded in forming a ministry of all parties on Dec. 10, and afterwards called on politicians in general to aid him in restoring the national credit. On May 14, Signor Crispi gained a victory in the Chamber on the question of the Budget, but in June his Cabinet resigned on the Finance question. They, however, retained office on Baron Sonnino's ceasing to be Finance Minister. Signor Crispi's government nevertheless supported Sonnino's proposed financial reforms, and are pledged to effect an economy of 20,000,000 lire in national expenditure in 1895-96. In Oct. 1894, the Crispi government suppressed the Socialist Corporation of Italian Workers, after having taken severe measures against the revolutionary movement in Sicily (Feb.).

CRITCHETT, George Anderson, F.R.C.S.E., Ophthalmist, was born in London on Dec. 18, 1845, and is the eldest son of the late George Critchett, F.R.C.S. He was educated at Harrow, where he gained the prize for English Literature, and at Caius College, Cambridge. He graduated B.A. in 1867, subsequently studied for some time in Germany and France, and graduated M.A. in 1873. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1872, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1880. He was appointed Ophthalmic Surgeon to the Royal Free Hospital in 1879, but resigned that office in 1881, when he was appointed Ophthalmic Surgeon to St. Mary's Hospital, and Lecturer on Ophthalmology at the Medical School. He was President of the Ophthalmic Section of the British Medical Association at the meeting held in Leeds in 1889; and delivered the opening address for discussion, the subject being "The Treatment of Immature Cataract." He delivered the Introductory Lectures at St. Mary's Hospital at the opening of the winter session in 1887, and has published in the leading medical journals, numerous papers and lectures on Diseases of the Eye, the best known of these being "Eclecticism in Operations for Cataract," 1883; and "Nature's Speculum in Cataract Extraction," 1886.

CROFTON, The Right Hon. Sir Walter Frederic, C.B., P.C., a son of the late Captain Walter Crofton, of the 54th Foot (who when Brigade Major was killed at Waterloo), was educated at Woolwich Academy, entered the Royal Artillery in 1833, became Captain in 1845, and afterwards retired. He held from 1854 to 1862 the chairmanship of the Directors to Convict Prisons in Ireland, was Inspector of Reformatory Schools and Debtors' Prisons, and in reward for the great success of his management, received the honour of knighthood in 1862, and Companionship of the Bath. He was a Commissioner of Prisons in England from 1866 to 1868, and Special Commissioner in Ireland in 1868 and 1869 for Prisons, Reformatories, and Industrial Schools; was sworn a member of the Irish Privy Council in 1869; and was Chairman of the Prisons Board in Ireland from 1877 to 1878. Sir Walter is a magistrate for Wiltshire, and instituted, and has for many years maintained, a Refuge for Female Convicts and an Industrial School for Children of Criminals.

CROFTS, Ernest, A.R.A., was born at Leeds, Sept. 15, 1847, being the son of Mr. John Crofts, J.P., of Adel, near that town. He was educated at Rugby School, and after remaining there several years went to Berlin. Thence he removed to London, where he studied for some years as a pupil under Mr. A. B. Clay. Afterwards he went to Düsseldorf, where he became a pupil of Herr Emil Hünten, the well-known military painter to the late Emperor William of Germany. Mr. Crofts subsequently returned to London, and was elected an associate of the Royal Academy, June 19, 1878. Among his pictures from time to time exhibited, chiefly at the Royal Academy, are the following:—"The Retreat: an Episode in the German-French War," 1874, now in the Public Gallery, Königsberg, Prussia; "One Touch of Nature makes the Whole World Kin," which obtained the Crystal Palace Silver Medal, 1874; "Ligny," 1875, exhibited at the Academy, and afterwards at the International Exhibition, Philadelphia, 1876; "On the Morning of the Battle of Waterloo"—Napoleon seated outside a cottage consulting a map—1876 (this was exhibited at the Paris International Exhibition, 1878); "Oliver Cromwell at Marston Moor," 1877; "Ironsides Returning from Sacking a Cavalier's House," 1877; "Wellington on his March from Quatre Bras to Waterloo;" 1878; "On the evening of the Battle of Waterloo," 1879, bought by the Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool; "Marlborough after the Battle of Ramillies," 1880, exhibited at the Paris Exhibition, 1889, and obtained a medal; "George II. at the Battle of Dettingen," 1881; "A Pause in the Attack: Hougoumont, Waterloo;" "At the Farm of Mont St. Jean, Waterloo," 1882; "At the sign of the Blue Boar, Holborn;" "Charles I. on his Way to the Scaffold," 1883; "Wallenstein," 1884; "William III. at London," 1885; "Farewell," 1886; "Napoleon Leaving Moscow," 1887; "Marston Moor," 1888; "The Knight's Farewell," 1889; "Whitehall, Jan. 30th, 1649," 1890; "Prince Rupert," 1893; and "Roundheads Victorious," 1894.

CROKE, The Most Rev. Thomas W., D.D., Roman Catholic Archbishop of Cashel, was born near the town of Mallow, co. Cork, May 19, 1824, and was educated partly at home, but principally at the Chorleville Endowed School, which he left at the age of fourteen. He then went to Paris and entered the Irish College, read there the usual course of philosophy and theology, and left in the year 1844. After spending a year in the College of Menin in Belgium, where he taught English, mathematics and rhetoric, he went in November, 1845, to the Irish College in Rome, where he remained nearly three years, attending lectures in the celebrated Roman University, and reading theology under the Jesuit Fathers Perrone and Passaglia. In 1846 he won the gold and silver medals, and in the following year took his degree as Doctor of Divinity, and was ordained priest, afterwards returning to Ireland. In 1848 he taught rhetoric in Carlow College, and in 1849 theology in the Irish College at Paris. For the next nine years he was engaged in missionary work in the Diocese of Cloyne, co. Cork, and in 1858 was appointed President of St. Colman's College, Fermoy. In 1865 he was appointed parish priest of Doneraile and Chancellor of the Diocese of Cloyne. Five years later he accepted the Bishopric of Auckland, New Zealand, where he remained until 1874. In 1875 he was promoted to the Archiepiscopal See of Cashel. Of late years Dr. Croke's name has been conspicuous by its connection with the Land League and Irish Nationalist movements.

CROMER, Lord (formerly Sir Evelyn Baring), C.B., K.C.S.I., G.C.M.G., first cousin of the present Lord Northbrook, was born February 26, 1841, and was formerly a European Commissioner of the Public Debt in Egypt, and was appointed one of the Controllers-General, representing England and France, when the Khedive Ismail was deposed by the Sultan's firman in 1879, and Tewfik Pacha became ruler of Egypt. In co-operation with his French colleague, M. de Blignières, Lord Cromer successfully carried on the Control until he accepted, towards the close of 1880, the office of Finance Minister of India, under the Marquis of Ripon, left vacant by Sir John Strachey's resignation. In this capacity he framed and carried three successful budgets. In May, 1883, he was appointed to succeed Sir Edward Malet, at Cairo, with the status of Minister. He married, in 1867, Ethel, daughter of Sir Rowland Stanley Errington.

CROOKES, Professor William, F.R.S., was born in London in 1832. In 1848 he entered the Royal College of Chemistry as a pupil of the distinguished chemist Dr. Hofman, and at the age of seventeen he gained the Ashburton Scholarship. After two years' study he became, first junior, then senior assistant to Dr. Hofman, until 1854, when he was appointed to superintend the meteorological department of the Radcliffe Observatory at Oxford. In 1855 he became Professor of Chemistry at the training College, Chester. In 1859 he founded the Chemical News, and is still its proprietor and editor; and in 1864 he became editor of the Quarterly Journal of Science. Mr. Crookes's earliest original researches were begun whilst at the Royal College of Chemistry, and his first paper, "On the Seleno-Cyanides," was published in the Quarterly Journal of the Chemical Society in 1851. Since that date he has been much engaged in original research on questions connected with chemistry and physics. In 1861 Mr. Crookes discovered, by means of spectrum observations and chemical reactions, the metal thallium, and he also determined its position among elementary bodies, and produced a series of analytical notes on the new metal. In 1863 Mr. Crookes was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; in 1865 he discovered the sodium amalgamation process for separating gold and silver from their ores. In 1866 he was appointed by the Government to report upon the application of disinfectants in arresting the spread of the cattle plague, which in that year excited much alarm in England. In 1871 he was a member of the English expedition to Oran to report upon the total phase of the solar eclipse which occurred in December of that year. In June, 1872, he laid before the Royal Society laborious researches on the atomic weight of thallium—researches that extended over a period of eight years. In 1872 he began his experiments on "Repulsion resulting from Radiation." His first paper on the subject was read before the Royal Society Dec. 11, 1873, and between that time and 1880 Mr. Crookes sent to the Society other communications on collateral subjects, which are all published in the "Philosophical Transactions." One important result of these investigations is the Radiometer. In 1875 Mr. Crookes received from the Royal Society the award of a Royal Medal for chemical and physical researches. In 1876 he was elected a Vice-President of the Chemical Society, and the next year a member of the Council of the Royal Society. In 1877 he described the Otheoscope—a greatly modified Radiometer, susceptible of an almost endless variety of forms. In 1878 he gave before the Royal Society a "Bakerian Lecture," containing another long series of experiments and observations on "Repulsion resulting from Radiation." In 1879 the Royal Society published in its "Philosophical Transactions" records of Mr. Crookes's experiments on "Molecular Physics in High Vacua." In the same year appeared a further paper on "Repulsion resulting from Radiation;" and he was again appointed Bakerian Lecturer to the Royal Society, his subject being the "Illumination of Lines of Molecular Pressure, and the Trajectory of Molecules." In 1880 the French Académie des Sciences bestowed on Mr. Crookes an extraordinary prize of 3,000 francs and a Gold Medal, in recognition of his discoveries in Molecular Physics and Radiant Matter. In 1881 Mr. Crookes acted as a Juror at the International Exhibition of Electricity in Paris. In this official position he was not entitled to a medal, but in the official report, his fellow jurors, after discussing the merits of four systems of incandescent lamps, declared—"None of them would have succeeded had it not been for these extreme vacua which Mr. Crookes has taught us to obtain." Mr. Crookes is the author of "Select Methods in Chemical Analysis,"—2nd ed., revised and extended, 1886; of the "Manufacture of Beetroot-Sugar in England;" of a "Handbook of Dyeing and Calico-Printing;" and of a manual of "Dyeing and Tissue Printing," 1882,—one of the "Technological Handbooks" prepared for the examinations of the City and Guilds of London Institute. He is also joint author of the English adaptation of Kerl's "Treatise on Metallurgy." He has edited the three last editions of Mitchell's "Manual of Practical Assaying," and has translated into English and edited Reimann's "Aniline and its Derivatives," Wagner's "Chemical Technology," Auerbach's "Anthracen and its Derivatives," 2nd ed. 1890, and Ville's "Artificial Manures," 2nd ed. 1882. Mr. Crookes is an authority on sanitary questions, especially the disposal of townsewage, and his views have been laid before the public in two pamphlets, "A Solution of the Sewage Question" and "The Profitable Disposal of Sewage." Since 1883 Mr. Crookes has been almost exclusively engaged with researches on the nature and constitution of the Rare Earths as interpreted by the "Radiant Matter" test, a new method of spectroscopic examination the outcome of his earlier discoveries on "Radiant Matter," which seems likely to throw a side light on the origin and constitution of the elements. On this subject he has communicated many papers to the Royal and other societies, some of the most important being the following:—"Radiant Matter Spectroscopy; the Detection and wide Distribution of Yttrium," the Bakerian Lecture for 1883; "On Radiant Matter Spectroscopy, Part II., Samarium;" "Notes on the Spectra of Erbia, and the Earth Ya;" "On some New Elements in Gadolinite and Samarskite, detected Spectroscopically;" "On the Crimson Line of Phosphorescent Alumina." In 1882 Mr. Crookes was elected a member of the Athenæum Club, under rule 2. In 1886 Mr. Crookes was elected President of the Chemical Section of the British Association, and at their Birmingham meeting that year he delivered an address in which he propounded some novel speculations on the probable origin of the Chemical Elements, showing that the balance of evidence was in favour of the view that our so-called elements have been formed by a process of evolution from one primordial matter. In 1887 he delivered a Friday evening discourse before the members of the Royal Institution, on the "Genesis of the Elements." In the same year he was elected President of the Chemical Society; he held office for the usual period of two years, and at the anniversary meetings he delivered two addresses, one on "Elements and Meta-Elements," and the other on "The Spectroscopic History of the so-called Rare Earths." In 1888 Mr. Crookes was awarded the Davy Medal of the Royal Society, for his Radiant Matter Researches.

CROSS (Viscount), The Right Hon. Richard Assheton Cross, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., D.C.L., LL.D., P.C., was born at Red Scar, near Preston, May 30, 1823, being the third son of the late William Cross, Esq., by Ellen, daughter of the late Edward Chaffers, Esq. He was educated at Rugby School under Dr. Arnold, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1846. In 1849 he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, and for several years he went the Northern Circuit. He was elected M.P. for Preston in the Conservative interest in March, 1857, and continued to represent that borough till March, 1862. At the general election of Dec., 1868, he was elected Conservative member for South-West Lancashire. At the general election of 1874, Mr. Cross was returned without opposition. On the formation of Mr. Disraeli's administration, Mr. Cross was appointed Home Secretary, Feb. 21, 1874, on which day he was sworn of the Privy Council. He was elected a Bencher of the Inner Temple in 1876, received the hon. degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford in 1877, and that of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge, Oct. 24, 1878, and LL.D. St. Andrews. He resigned the seals of the Home Department when the Conservatives went out of office in April, 1880. At that period he was created a G.C.B., and was again returned for South-West Lancashire. He was appointed Home Secretary in Lord Salisbury's short administration of 1885, and at the general election of the same year was returned for the Newton Division of South-West Lancashire. After the general election of 1886, at which he was again returned for Newton, he was made a Viscount, and became Secretary of State for India in Lord Salisbury's administration. Lord Cross was a member of the Council on Education, and an Ecclesiastical Commissioner for England; and is a magistrate for Cheshire and Lancashire, a Deputy-Lieutenant for the latter county, and was formerly Chairman of the Lancashire Quarter Sessions. He is the compiler of two legal works:—"The Acts relating to the Settlement and Removal of the Poor, with notices of cases, indices and forms." 1853; and "The General and Quarter Sessions of the Peace: their jurisdiction and practice in other than criminal matters" (written in conjunction with Mr. H. Leeming), 1858, 2nd edition, 1867. In 1852 he married Georgiana, daughter of the late Thomas Lyon, Esq., of Appleton Hall, Wallington, now C. I. (Cross of India).

CROWE, Eyre, A.R.A., an historical and a genre painter, born in London, in Oct., 1824, studied painting in the atelier of Paul Delaroche at Paris. He went with that distinguished artist and his other pupils to Rome in 1844. Acting as amanuensis to Mr. W. M. Thackeray, he visited the United States in 1852–3. He is an occasional inspector of the Science and Art Department. Mr. Eyre Crowe was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in April, 1876. Amongst his paintings may be mentioned "Gold-smith's Mourners," 1863; "Friends," 1871; "Blue Coat Subjects," 1872; "French Savants in Egypt," 1875; "The Rehearsal," 1876; "Sanctuary," "Prayer," and "Bridal Procession at St. Maclou, Rouen," 1877; "School Treat," 1878; "Blue Coat Boys returning from their Holiday;" "Marat: 13 July, 1793;" "The Blind Beggar," and "The Queen of the May," in 1879; "Queen Eleanor's Tomb" and "Forfeits," in 1880; "Sandwiches," and "Sir Roger de Coverley and the Spectator at Westminster Abbey," 1881; "How happy could I be with either!" and "The Defence of London in 1643," exhibited in 1882; "Old Porch, Evesham," in 1884; "School at the Aitre, St. Maclou, Rouen"; "A Rifle Match at Dunnottar, N.B." 1890; "Peg of Limavaddy," 1893; and "The Brigs of Ayr," 1894.

CROWE, Mrs. George, née Kate Josephine Bateman, was born in Baltimore, Maryland, in Oct., 1842. Both her parents were actors, and she and her sister, two years younger than herself, appeared in public as the "Bateman Children" as early as 1851, at the St. James's Theatre. She afterwards prepared herself assiduously for the stage, and in 1859 played successfully in the leading American theatres, her principal characters being those of Evangeline, founded on Longfellow's poem; Geraldine, in a play written for her by her mother; Julia, in the "Hunchback;" Pauline, in the "Lady of Lyons;" and Juliet and Lady Macbeth. She arrived in England in the autumn of 1863, and appeared 210 times in the character of the Jewish maiden Leah, in an adaptation of the German play "Deborah," at the Adelphi Theatre. After a provincial tour, she reappeared at the Adelphi, playing Julia in the "Hunchback," and other characters. She took a farewell of the English public at Her Majesty's Theatre, in the character of Juliet, in "Romeo and Juliet," Dec. 22, 1865, and was married to Mr. George Crowe, in Oct., 1866. Mrs. Crowe returned to the stage in 1868, retaining her stage name of Kate Bateman. In 1868 she played the part of Mary Warner, in the play of that name written for her by the late Tom Taylor, at the Haymarket Theatre. In 1872, and subsequently, she appeared with great success in London as Medea, in the play of that name. In 1875, on a revival of "Macbeth" at the Lyceum (Mr. Irving as Macbeth), she played the part of Lady Macbeth. She also sustained the title-rôle in Mr. Tennyson's "Queen Mary," which was produced at the same house in April, 1876.

CROWE, Sir Joseph Archer, C.B., K.C.M.G., brother of Mr. Eyre Crowe, A.R.A., was born in London on Oct. 20, 1825. He started life as a reporter on the staff of the Morning Chronicle, and was afterwards foreign editor of the Daily News, a contributor to the Globe, and correspondent for the Illustrated London News in the Crimean War, and for the Times during the Indian Mutiny, and during the Franco-Austrian war, when he was present at Solferino. Was director of the Bombay School of Art, 1857-9. He was appointed British Consul-General for Saxony, at Leipzig, in 1860, and Consul-General at Düsseldorf in 1878. From Düsseldorf he went to Berlin as Commercial Attaché to the Embassies in Berlin and Vienna; and whilst at that post was made a Royal Commissioner for the negotiation of a Treaty of Commerce with Russia, May 25, 1881. On the 1st of July, 1882, he was made Commercial Attaché for Europe to reside in Paris; was Secretary and Protocolist to the Danube Conference in London from Feb. 8 to March, 1883; was appointed an Assistant to Sir E. Malet at the West African (Congo) Conference of Berlin, Oct. 24, 1884; and was made a C.B. in 1885. He was appointed British Plenipotentiary to the Samoan Conference in Berlin, April 20, 1889; and was made a K.C.M.G. May 25th, 1890; and delegate to the Electric Telegraph Congress of Paris in June, 1890. With the Hon. W. Barrington he was a British delegate for negotiating a commercial treaty with Spain (Feb. 18, 1892), and, with Mr. E. C. H. Phipps, he was a British Commissioner on the Anglo-French Niger Delimitation Commission (April, 1892). He is the author, conjointly with Mr. G. Cavalcaselle, of several art works, viz.: "Early Flemish Painters," 1857 and 1872; "History of Painting in Italy," 1864; "History of Painting in North Italy," 1871; "Life of Titian," 1877; and "Life of Raphael." He has also revised and edited "Burckardt's Cicerone," and "Waagen's Handbook of Italian Painting."

CROWFIELD, Christopher. See STOWE, MRS. H. E.

CUDLIP, Mrs. Annie Hall, was born at Aldborough, in Suffolk, where her father, Lieutenant George Thomas, was in charge of the coast-guard station. Her first novel, "The Cross of Honour," appeared in 1863, and has been followed by

"Sir Victor's Choice," "Denis Donne," 1864; "Theo Leigh," and "Barry O'Byrne," 1865; "Played Out," and "High Stakes," 1866; "Called to Account," 1867; "A Noble Aim," 1868; "Only Herself," "Mrs. Cardigan," "On Guard," "The Dower House," and "False Colours," 1869; "The Dream and the Waking," 1870; "A Passion in Tatters," 1872; "He cometh not, she said," 1873; "No Alternative," 1874; "A Narrow Escape," 1875; "Blotted Out," 1876; "A Laggard in Love," 1877; "A London Season," and "Stray Sheep," 1879; "Fashion's Gay Mart," and "Society's Verdict," 1880; "Eyre of Blendon," 1881; "Allerton Towers," and various other novels. Latterly "The Honourable Jane," 1892; "Utterly Mistaken," 1893; and "No Hero, but a Man," 1894, have been published. Miss Annie Thomas was married in 1867 to the Rev. Pender Hodge Cudlip.

CULLUM, George Washington, was born in New York, Feb. 25, 1809, graduated from the Military Academy at West Point in 1833, and was engaged for the next twenty-eight years in engineering labours and in instructing at West Point on practical military engineering. During the civil war he was Chief of Staff to the General-in-Chief from Nov., 1861, to Sept., 1864, and Superintendent of the Military Academy, West Point, from Sept., 1864, to Aug. 1866. From that time he was a member of the Board of Engineers for Fortifications, until he was placed on the retired list in 1874. At the time of his retirement he was Colonel of Engineers and brevet Major-General in the regular army. Besides numerous military memoirs and reports and miscellaneous papers, he has published "Military Bridges with India-rubber Pontoons," 1849; "Register of Officers and Graduates of the U.S. Military Academy from 1802 to 1850," 1850; a translation of Duparcq's "Elements of Military Art and History with Notes, &c.," 1863; "Systems of Military Bridges," 1863; a "Biographical Register of the Officers and Graduates of the U.S. Military Academy," 1868 (revised edition, 1879); "Campaigns of the War of 1812 criticised," 1880; and contributed a number of articles to Johnson's "Universal Cyclopædia," 1874-77. Since 1874 he has been Vice-President of the American Geographical Society.

CUMMINGS, William Hayman, F.S.A., Hon. R.A.M., was born at Sidbury, Devon, in 1831. He is Professor of Music at the Royal Academy of Music, at the Royal Normal College, and at the Guildhall School of Music; Hon. Treasurer of the Royal Society of Musicians; Hon. Treasurer of the Philharmonic Society; Vice-President of the Musical Association; Member of the Council of the National Society of Professional Musicians; Vice-President of the Cremona Society; an F.S.A. When Mr. Cummings was five his father moved to London, and the boy entered the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral at six-and-a half years of age. Goss was organist, and the sight-seeing test, which he successfully read off, was from an anthem by Jeremiah Clarke. Afterwards the boy was moved to the Temple Church, where he remained till his voice broke, studying the organ meanwhile under Mr. Hopkins, so that he was able when still in his teens to take an appointment as organist at Waltham Abbey. From there he returned to London, and the gradual development of a fine tenor voice fixed his musical path. He studied under Hobbs, a tenor singer and composer well-known in his day, and according to the custom of the times was articled to him for three years, during which he had to deputise for him, both in teaching and singing. Soon he was appointed as tenor singer in the choirs of the Temple, Westminster Abbey, and the Chapels Royal. It was, however, impossible that he should rest satisfied with laurels of this kind. The routine was too quiet, and the public soon found out the purity and ease of his voice, the refinement of his phrasing, and the delicacy of his pronunciation. Mr. Cummings stepped into the front rank of our native singers, and for a long period was in constant demand at oratorios and concerts. As a boy Mr. Cummings sang in the first performance in London of "Elijah." The alto part was too high for the men, and women altos at that time were few. So some of the Temple boys, who were good readers, were put on to the chorus alto part. When the performance was over, Mendelssohn in passing the boy patted him on the head and said, "What is your name?" took the programme from the little hand, and wrote his own name upon it in pencil as a memento. This power of singing at sight often stood Mr. Cummings in good stead. Once at the Birmingham Festival Mario was unexpectedly absent, and, at half an hour's notice, Mr. Cummings sang the tenor part in Sullivan's cantata "Kenilworth," which Mario should have taken. Twice he fulfilled engagements in America, where he was enthusiastically received. Sir Sterndale Bennett composed for him the air "His salvation is nigh them that fear Him," in "The Woman of Samaria;"

and Mr. Cummings possesses the autograph, which shows how readily the composer consented to some "cuts" which the singer suggested. Mr. Cummings has also done much useful work as a lecturer on musical subjects, and is rich in a knowledge of antiquarian music. He has composed a good deal of music, a large number of songs, a cantata ("The Fairy Ring"), and some glees. His first glee prize was won as long ago as 1847. Mr. Cummings' primer, "The Rudiments of Music," in Novello's series, is well known. The 81st thousand has recently been issued; also a Spanish edition, for Spain and South America. Mr. Cummings has also published a "Biographical Dictionary of Musicians," and a biography of Purcell.

CURRIE, Sir Donald, K.C.M.G., M.P., is the son of the late Mr. James Currie, and was born in 1825. He is at the head of the firm of Donald Currie & Co., owners of the Castle Line of steamships between London and South Africa. Sir Donald takes an active interest in all questions connected with South Africa, and he has rendered great services to the country and to the Government. For his services in the settlement of the Diamond Fields dispute and the Orange Free State Boundary he was made a C.M.G. in 1877, and in 1881 a K.C.M.G. for further assistance during the Zulu War, and especially in connection with the relief of Ekowe. He entered Parliament in 1880 as Liberal Member for Perthshire, and in 1885 and again in 1886 and 1892 was returned for the new division of West Perthshire. At the last two General Elections he stood as a Liberal-Unionist. Sir Donald Currie, it will be remembered, has on several occasions taken the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone long trips in his ocean steamers when he was in need of a voyage to restore him to health.

CURRIE, Sir Edmund Hay, was born in 1834, and educated at Harrow. He is the grandson of the late Sir James Hay, K.C.B., and has for many years been associated with various philanthropic movements for promoting the education and improving the social condition of the poor in the east end of London. He took an active part in promoting the success of the People's Palace, and is chairman of the trustees of that institution. Sir Edmund was formerly a member of the School Board for London and the Metropolitan Asylums Board. He was knighted in 1876.

CURRIE, Sir Philip Henry Wodehouse, K.C.B., son of the late Raikes Currie, Esq., was born in 1834. He entered the Foreign Office in 1854, and became senior clerk in 1874. In 1876 he accompanied the Marquis of Salisbury as secretary on his Special Embassy to Constantinople, and in 1878 was appointed (jointly with Mr. Montagu Corry, now Lord Rowton) secretary to the Special Embassy during the Congress at Berlin, and was made a C.B. He was in charge of the correspondence respecting the affairs of Cyprus from August, 1878, to April, 1880, and in 1882 was appointed Assistant Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs. He was Joint Protocolist to the Conference in London on Egyptian Finance, from June 28 to Aug. 2, 1884, and was made a K.C.B. December 1, 1885. He was appointed Permanent Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, April 2, 1889. He was made a G.C.B. in 1892. In 1894 he was appointed Ambassador at Constantinople in succession to the Rt. Hon. Sir Clare Ford, and has been the object of many flattering attentions from the Sultan.

CURTIUS, Ernst, LL.D., a German Hellenist, was born at Lübeck, Sept. 2, 1814, and after a preliminary training in the college of his native town, pursued his studies at the universities of Bonn, Göttingen, and Berlin, and in 1837 visited Athens in company with Professor Brandis in order to begin at headquarters his researches into Greek antiquities. Subsequently he accompanied Ottfried Müller in his archæological expedition to the Peloponnesus; and on the decease of that eminent scholar in 1840 he returned to his native country; was created Doctor by the University of Halle; taught for some time in the colleges of Berlin; became Professor Extraordinary there; and was appointed tutor to Prince Frederick William, the father of the present Emperor of Germany; and Secretary of the Royal Academy of Sciences. In 1856 he succeeded Hermann as Professor at Göttingen. He went to Athens to undertake excavations at Olympia in April, 1864, and in 1875 was sent by the German Government to Greece, where he concluded a convention with the Greek authorities by which the Germans obtained a monopoly of the excavations at Olympia. Since 1870 he has been director of the Antiquarian Department in the Royal Museum. Professor Curtius's works all relate to Greek antiquities; the best known is his "History of Greece," which has been ably translated into English by A. W. Ward, M.A., 5 vols., 1868-74. Amongst his other works are "Peloponnesos," "Naxos," "Olympia," and "Greek Sculpture by Springs and Streams;" "Attic Studies," 1862, 1865; "Ancient and Present Times," 3 vols.; "Materials for the History and Topography of Asia Minor," 1872; "Atlas of Athens," 1878; and "Maps of Attica." His speeches were published in 1875 under the title "Alterthum und Gegenwart gesammte Reden." Since 1889 he has been a foreign associate of the French Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres.

CURZON, Hon. George N., M.P., is the eldest son of the Rev. Alfred, Baron Scarsdale, a country clergyman. He was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, where he made his mark as a speaker at the Union Society's debates and afterwards as president of that famous club. He took his B.A. degree in 1884 and his M.A. in 1887, and was elected to a Fellowship at All Souls'. He has represented the Southport Division of Lancashire since 1886. He was Under-Secretary of State for India in 1891-92, and having travelled much in the East is one of the first living authorities on Eastern topics. He has published "Russia in Central Asia," "Persia and the Persian Question," and "Problems of the Far East" (1894), a work which contains exhaustive information about China, Japan, and Corea. He resides at Kedleston Hall, near Derby, and is J.P. and D.L. for Derbyshire, as well as director of Hadfield's Steel Foundry Co.

CUST, Robert Needham, LL.D. Edinburgh, son of the Hon. and Rev. Henry Cockayne Cust, and Lady Anna Maria Needham, daughter of the Earl of Kilmorey, was born in 1821 at Cockayne Hatley, Bedfordshire, and educated at Eton. He entered Her Majesty's Indian Civil Service and took honours in four Oriental languages in the College of Fort William, Calcutta. He held the highest judicial and revenue posts in Northern India, and served many years with Lord Lawrence in the Panjáb, being present at the battles of Múdki, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon, and at the taking of Lahore, 1845-46. He took part in the Panjáb War, 1848-49, and in the pacification of the country after the Mutinies in 1858. He was a member of the Legislative Council of the Viceroy, 1864-65, and is Barrister-at-Law, J.P. for the counties of London and Middlesex, Honorary Secretary of the Royal Asiatic Society, and Member of the Council of the Royal Geographical Society. He has published, among other works, "Modern Languages of East Indies," 1878; "Modern Languages of Africa," 1882; "Modern Languages of Oceana," 1887; "Linguistic and Oriental Essays" (Series I.—III., 1880-1891); "Sketches of Anglo-Indian Life;" "The Shrines of Lourdes, Zaragossa, and Loretto," 1892; "Essays on Bible Diffusion," 1892; "Notes on Missionary Subjects;" "Poems of Many Years and Places;" and is a constant contributor to oriental, literary, and religious publications, and an earnest supporter of all Protestant Missionary Societies. He was called upon to read a paper on "The Progress of African Philology," at the Chicago Congress, 1893, which has been published. Mr. Cust is a Member of Committees of the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and the Church Missionary Society, a Member of the German and French Oriental Societies, Hon. Sec. of the Royal Asiatic Society, and Honorary Member of the Geographical Society of Holland and the American Board of Foreign Missions, Boston, United States.

DAGONET. See SIMS, G. R.

DAHN, Professor Geheimrath Felix, German historian, a writer on German law, a novelist, and poet, son of the celebrated actors Friedrich and Constance Dahn of Munich, was born at Hamburg, Feb. 9, 1834, and educated at the Gymnasium and University of Munich. In 1862 he was appointed Professor of Jurisprudence at Würzburg, and in 1872 proceeded to Königsberg, where he still resides. He distinguished himself as a volunteer in the war of 1870-71. Amongst his historical works the chief are "The Germanic Kings" (Die Könige der Germanen), 6 vols., 1861-72; "Procopius of Cesarea," 1865; "West Gothic Studies," 1874; "Lombard Studies," 1876; "Reasons in Law," 1879; "The Early History of the Germanic and Romance Peoples," I.—IV., 1881-90; "German History," I., 1883, II., 1889. As a poet, Professor Dahn has written a number of ballads which take high rank; "Twelve Ballads," 1875; "Ballads and Songs," 1878, and others. As a novelist he ranks still higher. "Ein Kampf um Rom," which appeared in 1876, made a great impression throughout Germany; it was followed in 1878 by "Kämpfende Herzen," and "Odhins Trost," which reached a 6th ed. in 1883. He has written also "Kleine Romane aus der Völkerwanderung," I.—VII., 6 editions; "Bis zum Tode getreu," 6th ed. 1887; "Weltuntergang," 6th ed., 1889, and several novels on subjects from Northern and Scandinavian history. In 1888 he accepted a vocation to the University of Breslau.

DALE, Robert William, M.A., D.D., LL.D., an independent minister, born in London, Dec. 1, 1829, was educated at Spring Hill College, Birmingham, and graduated M.A. at the University of London in 1853. He began his ministry at Carr's Lane (Congregational) Church, Birmingham, in June, 1853, as co-pastor with the late John Angell James, on whose death he succeeded to the full charge of the church. Dr. Dale was Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, 1868-9. For seven years he edited the Congregationalist, and he is the author of "Discourses on Special Occasions;" "Week-day Sermons;" a "Life of the Rev. J. A. James;" "Discourses on the Epistles to the Hebrews;" "The Ten Commandments;" "The Ultimate Principle of Protestantism;" "The Atonement: a series of Lectures prepared at the request of the Congregational Union of England and Wales," which has been translated into French and German; "The Evangelical Revival;" "Lectures on the Epistle to the Ephesians;" "A Manual of Congregational Principles;" "Laws of Christ for Common Life;" "Impressions of Australia;" "The Living Christ and the Four Gospels;" "Fellowship with Christ;" and articles in the British Quarterly, Nineteenth Century, Fortnightly, and Contemporary Review. He has also edited a translation of "Reuss on the Theology of the Apostolic Age." In 1877 he delivered at Yale College, Connecticut, a series of lectures on Preaching, being the first Englishman appointed to the Lyman Beecher Lectureship; and in the same year he received from Yale the degree of D.D. The lectures have since been published both in England and in America. In 1883 he received from Glasgow the degree of LL.D. Dr. Dale has taken an active part in Nonconformist controversies, and liberal political movements. He was formerly Vice-Chairman of the Birmingham School Board, and has been appointed by the Senate of the University of London, Governor of King Edward VI.'s School, Birmingham. In 1886 he was appointed a member of the Royal Commission on the Elementary Education Acts, and he signed the Minority Report. He was President of the International Council of Congregationalists which met in London in 1891, and consisted of representatives of Congregational organisations in all parts of the world.

DALLINGER, The Rev. W. H., LL.D., F.R.S., F.L.S., son of Joseph S. Dallinger, artist, etcher, and line engraver, was born at Devonport in 1841, and educated privately. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1861, and was appointed successively to Faversham, Cardiff, Bristol, and Liverpool, remaining in the last place twelve years. From there he was appointed to the Governorship of Wesley College, Sheffield, which he resigned, in 1888, in order to devote himself wholly to the pursuit of minute biological research; and for that purpose has constructed a microscopical laboratory near London, where the work he is engaged in is still progressing. Fond of nature and science, from early school-days he made himself master of the use of the best and most powerful microscopical lenses, and being duly interested in the discussion then rife amongst biologists as to the origin of life, he, without leaning either to biogenesis or abiogenesis, gave himself to the working out, by microscopical research, of the life-histories of the minute forms of life the mode of whose origin was in dispute. The best lenses and appliances obtainable were employed; but under the influence of this work the defects and deficiencies of lenses of enormous power were disclosed, and all the years since have been employed by opticians and mathematicians in bringing them nearer perfection. The result has been that the life-histories of these minutest organisms have been worked out successfully by Dr. Dallinger; and it has been shown that, so far from their having origin in not-living matter, they actually arise in spores or germs, fertilized by a genetic process like all the higher and more complex forms above them. Dr. Dallinger's latest work (1885-94) has been, by the aid of still more nearly perfect lenses, to demonstrate that the cell-nucleus in these minute organisms (and probably in all simple cells) undergoes profound changes prior to the several changes of the body, and he is endeavouring by a study of the changes undergone by the nuclei of the majority of the unicellular animals to approximate an interpretation of what is involved in cellular multiplication. Dr. Dallinger's earliest work was rewarded by an unsought grant of £100 from the Royal Society for further research. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1880; gave a series of discourses on his researches at the Royal Institution, London, and was appointed Rede Lecturer to the University of Cambridge. He also discoursed on his researches before the University of Oxford. He was appointed President of the Royal Microscopical Society in 1883; and, at the request of the committee of the British Association, went to Montreal to give the principal results of his work to the British Association assembled there, in 1884, receiving on that occasion the honorary degree of LL.D. from the Victoria University; and in 1892 at the celebration of the ter-centenary of Trinity College, Dublin, he received, honoris causâ, the Doctor of Science degree of that University. The work done is recorded in the Proceedings of the Royal and the Royal Microscopical Societies, and has been, in connection with other more general biological work, communicated to several of the leading journals. He has also been for many years, and still is a lecturer on the Gilchrist staff. As a minister he has ever sought to inculcate the wisdom of a fearless acceptance of scientific truth, and has endeavoured to show that this may comport with a firm hold on the fundamental truths of Christianity.

DALMOCAND. See MACDONALD, GEORGE.

DAMALA, Madame, née Rosine Bernhardt, called Sarah, a French actress, was born at Paris, Oct. 22, 1844. She is a Jewess of French and Dutch parentage. She spent the greater part of her early life in Holland, visiting at the house of her grandfather, an Amsterdam optician, and she was educated in a convent. In 1858 she entered the Paris Conservatoire, became a pupil of MM. Provost and Samson, professors of elocution, gained a second prize for tragedy in 1861, and a second prize for comedy in 1862. She made her first public appearance on the stage at the Théâtre Français in Racine's "Iphigénie" and the "Valérie" of Scribe. She attracted hardly any notice, and after a brief withdrawal from the stage she reappeared at the Gymnase and the Porte Saint-Martin, in burlesque parts. In Jan., 1867, she returned to high art at the Odéon, playing several minor parts with much applause till she achieved a notable success in that of Marie de Neuborg in "Ruy Blas." She was thereupon recalled to the Théâtre Français, and first showed her higher power in Andromaque and Junie; but it was as Berthe de Savigne, in the play of "Le Sphinx," performed in March, 1874, that she won the greatest applause. In 1879 she visited London with the other members of the Comédie Française, who on June 2 in that year began a series of brilliant performances at the Gaiety Theatre, under the direction of Mr. John Hollingshead. In the following year Mdlle. Bernhardt returned alone to the Gaiety, M. Coquelin, who was expected to accompany her, being prevented from doing so by his tenure at the Théâtre Français. About this time Mdlle. Bernhardt severed her connection with the Comédie Française, and was condemned to pay £4,000 costs and damages for the breach of her engagement. In June, 1881, she again appeared in London at the Gaiety Theatre in "La Dame aux Camélias" for a short series of performances, and she afterwards made a successful tour, from a pecuniary point of view, in the United States. She revisited London in 1886 and played "Fédora" for the first time in England, at the Gaiety Theatre. Her subsequent visits have been in 1888, 1889, when she appeared as La Tosca at the Lyceum, 1890, 1892, and 1894, when she played Izëyl and Phèdre at Daly's. Some of her more recent appearances at the Porte Saint-Martin Theatre have been as Shakespearian heroines. She appeared at the Porte Saint-Martin in Sardou and Moreau's play of "Cléopâtre" in the autumn of 1890, and earlier in the year impersonated Joan of Arc at the same theatre. Her most recent creations are La Tosca, Izëyl, and (Nov. 1894) Gismonda. She is the authoress of a one-act play, "L'Aveu," produced in 1888; and has recently had the Order of the French Academy conferred on her. As a sculptor she has made a certain name. She has exhibited marble and bronze busts at the Salon, and obtained honourable mention in 1876. In April, 1882, she was married, in the Church of St. Andrew, Wells Street, London, to M. Damala, a Greek gentleman, from whom she was divorced shortly afterwards. He died in Aug., 1889.

DANA, Charles Anderson, born at Hinsdale, New Hampshire, Aug, 8, 1819, entered Harvard College in 1839, but remained there only two years. In 1842 he became a member of the Brook Farm community, in Roxbury, Massachusetts, and remained there till 1844. He edited, in connection with George Ripley, Parke Godwin, and John S. Dwight, The Harbinger, a weekly journal devoted to social reform and general literature, 1844-47. In 1847 he became connected with the New York Tribune, and was for thirteen years managing editor, until the spring of 1862. In 1855 he projected Appleton's "American Cylopædia," in 16 vols., and, in conjunction with Mr. George Ripley, was its responsible editor to its completion in 1863, as also of the revised edition, 1873-77. "The Household Book of Poetry" was compiled and published by him in 1858; and revised and enlarged in 1882. From 1862 to 1865 he was in Government service, during the last two years as Assistant-Secretary of War. About the beginning of 1866 he became editor of the Chicago Republican, a daily paper, published in Chicago, Illinois; but in 1868 became (and is still) editor and chief proprietor of the Sun, a daily political and literary journal of New York.

DANA, Professor James Dwight, LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Utica, New York, Feb. 12, 1813. He graduated at Yale College in 1833, and was a teacher of mathematics in the United States navy from 1833 to 1835. In 1836-37 he was assistant to Professor Silliman in chemistry, geology, &c. at Yale College. In Dec., 1836, he was appointed mineralogist and geologist to the U.S. exploring expedition, under Commodore Wilks, and accompanied it during its whole tour, returning home in 1842. In 1837 he published his work on "Mineralogy," which has since passed through its fifth edition in 1868 (and a sixth, by his son, E. S. Dana, in 1892). Since 1846 he has been one of the editors of the American Journal of Science. He prepared three voluminous reports of his observation of the expedition, with their accompanying atlases of figures, describing many new species, and the geological formations which he had observed. These reports were "On the Zoophytes," 1846; "On the Geology of the Pacific," 1849; "On Crustacea," 1852-54. In 1855 he became Professor of Natural History and Geology in Yale College, a position which he held until 1894, when he resigned, and was made professor emeritus. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, London, Member of the French Academy, Paris, and other learned societies in Europe. In 1872 he received the Wollaston gold medal of the Geological Society of London; and in 1877, the Copley medal of the Royal Society. Among his more popular works are: "Manual of Geology," 1862 (3rd edition 1880, with edition now in the press); "Text Book of Geology," 1864; "Corals and Coral Islands," 1872 (2nd edition 1890); "Geological Story Briefly Told," 1875; "Characteristics of Volcanoes, with facts from the Hawaiian Islands," 1890.

DARLING (Lord), Moir Tod Stormonth, M.A. Edinburgh, Senator of the College of Justice, was born in Edinburgh, Nov. 3, 1844, and is the youngest son of the late James Stormonth Darling, of Lednathie, Writer to the Signet, and Elizabeth Moir, daughter of James Tod of Deanstoun. He was educated at Kelso Grammar School, under the late Dr. Fergusson, and at the University of Edinburgh, where he graduated 1864, and was called to the Scottish Bar 1867, and made a Q.C. 1888. He unsuccessfully contested the county of Banff at the general election of 1885. He was appointed Lord Rector's Assessor in the University of Edinburgh, 1887, and Solicitor-General for Scotland Nov., 1888, whereupon he was elected without opposition member of Parliament for the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews. This position he resigned, on being, in Oct. 1890, raised to the dignity of Senator of the College of Justice, into which office he was installed with the usual ceremonies. He took the title of Lord Stormonth-Darling, and was succeeded by Sir Charles Pearson as Solicitor-General for Scotland. He married, in 1892, Ethel Hay, younger daughter of the late Major W. Baird Young, B.A., of Ascreadie, Forfarshire.

DARMESTETER, Madame, née A. Mary F. Robinson, the elder daughter of Mr. G. F. Robinson, F.S.A., was born at Leamington, Feb. 27, 1857. She is the widow of the late celebrated French Orientalist. For seven years she studied at University College, giving especial attention to Greek literature. She has published a volume of verses, "A Handful of Honeysuckles," 1878; "The Crowned Hippolytus," a translation of Euripides, 1880; "Arden," a novel, and "Emily Brontë," and "Marguerite, Queen of Navarre," in the "Eminent Women Series," 1883; "The New Arcadia, and other poems," 1884, and "An Italian Garden," 1886. Her younger sister, Frances Mabel Robinson, has won praise as a writer. Madame Darmesteter has of late been busily engaged in working up documentary material for her history of the Italian campaigns of the French King Charles V., which, until recently, have been strangely neglected by historians. In 1891 appeared "Lyrics selected from the Works of A. M. F. Robinson," etc. In 1893 Madame Darmesteter published "Retrospects and other poems."

DARWIN, Francis, M.A., M.B., F.R.S., son of the late Charles Robert Darwin, was born at Down, in Kent, Aug. 16, 1848, and was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and afterwards at St. George's Hospital, London. At College he took the Degrees of M.A., 1874, M.B., 1874, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, 1882. He was University Lecturer in Botany, 1884; University Reader in Botany, 1888; and became Fellow of Christ's College, 1888. He acted as his father's assistant from 1874 to 1882; and is the joint author of "The Power of Movement in Plants," 1880, and author of various papers on Physiological Botany, and is editor of "Life and Letters of Charles Darwin," 1887.

DARWIN, Professor George Howard, M.A., F.R.S., LL.D., Glasgow, is the second son of the late Charles R. Darwin. He was born in 1845, and in Oct. 1864, entered Trinity College, Cambridge, and was later elected a scholar. He graduated in 1868 as Second Wrangler, and was awarded the Second Smith's prize. He was elected to a Fellowship at Trinity College in Oct., 1868, and afterwards studied for the Bar, and was called at Lincoln's Inn, April 30, 1872, but never pursued the profession of the law, and in 1873 he returned to Cambridge. In 1879 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; in 1885 the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the University of Glasgow; and in the same year "a royal medal" was awarded to him by the Royal Society, in recognition of his scientific work. In 1875 he presented two papers to the Statistical Society, on consanguineous marriages, and in 1876 he contributed to the Transactions of the Royal Society a paper "On the Influence of Geological Changes on the Earth's Axis of Rotation." This was followed by several other contributions, many of them attracting great notice in the scientific world, especially one read in Dec., 1878, "On the Remote History of the Earth." Since 1875 Prof. Darwin has been principally occupied with mathematical and physical investigations connected with the study of astronomy. He has also been engaged in experimental investigations on the pressure of loose sand (Inst. C.E.), and, jointly with his brother, Mr. Horace Darwin, on small changes of level in the earth's surface, and minute earthquakes (Brit. Assoc. Reports). In 1882 he assisted Sir William Thomson in the preparation of the second part of the new edition of "Thomson and Tait's Natural Philosophy." Since 1882, he has been principally occupied with the theory and prediction of the tides, especially with reference to the operations of the tidal department of the survey of India. An account of his work in this branch will be found in Reports to the British Association for 1883-4-5. On Jan. 16, 1883, he was elected to the Plumian Professorship of Astronomy and Experimental Philosophy at Cambridge, vacant by the death of the Rev. James Challis, M.A., F.R.S. In 1885 he was appointed a member of the Council of the Meteorological Office. In addition to the works above enumerated, Professor Darwin is a frequent contributor to Nature and other scientific periodicals.

DASENT, Sir George Webbe, D.C.L., is the third but eldest surviving son of the late Mr. John Roche Dasent (Attorney-General of the Island of St. Vincent, West Indies, who died in 1832), by Charlotte Martha, daughter of Mr. Alexander Burrowes Irwin, of the Union Estates, St. Vincent, and the Kills, near Templemore, co. Tipperary. He was born at St. Vincent in 1817, and educated at Westminster School, King's College, London, and Magdalen Hall, Oxford, where he entered in 1836 and graduated B.A. in 1840, and D.C.L. 1852. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1852. His translation of "The Prose or Younger Edda," from the Norse, dedicated to Thomas Carlyle, appeared in 1842; that of "Theophilus Eutychianus," from the original Greek, "in Icelandic, Low German, and other tongues," in 1845. His essay "The Norseman in Iceland," appeared in 1858; "Popular Tales from the Norse, with an Introductory Essay on the origin and diffusion of popular Tales," in 1859; the second edition, enlarged, appeared in 1859, a third in 1888, and "Tales from the Fjeld," from the Norse of Asbjörnsen, in 1874. In 1861 he published the Saga of "Burnt Njal;" and in 1866, "The Story of Gisli, the Outlaw," from the Icelandic; and he has translated much from the German, the Norse, and the Icelandic languages. He has written also "Annals of an Eventful Life," a novel, 3 vols., 1870; "Three to One; or, some Passages in the Life of Amicia, Lady Sweetapple," 3 vols., 1872. "Half a Life," 3 vols., 1874; the "Vikings of the Baltic," a tale of the North in the Tenth Century, 3 volumes, 1875. In 1874 his name was associated with "An Icelandic-English Dictionary," printed by the Oxford University Press, based on the MS. collections of the late Richard Cleasby, enlarged and completed by Gudbrand Vigfússon, with an Introduction and Life of Richard Cleasby, by Sir G. W. Dasent. Sir George W. Dasent acted for twenty-five years as one of the assistant editors of The Times (1845-1870). He has frequently been employed as an examiner in English and modern foreign languages, in connection with the Civil Service appointments, and has been a frequent contributor to The Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviews, and the principal magazines. On Feb. 5, 1870, he was appointed by the Government to the post of Civil Service Commissioner, and retired in 1892. Sir George W. Dasent received the honour of knighthood "for public services," at Windsor Castle, on June 27, 1876, and he is an original member of the Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts. He is married to a daughter of the late W. F. A. Delane, Esq., father of John Delane, editor of The Times.

DAUBRÉE, Professor Gabriel Auguste, was born at Metz (Moselle), on June 25, 1814. After passing the École Polytechnique he was admitted into the Corps des Mines in 1834, and in 1838 was appointed Ingénieur des Mines in the Bas-Rhin, and Professor of Geology and Mineralogy at the Faculty of Sciences at Strasbourg, of which he became Dean in 1852. In 1861 he was (almost unanimously) elected Member of the Academy of Sciences, in succession to Professor Cordier, whom he also succeeded as Professor of Geology at the Natural History Museum, Paris; he was nominated Inspecteur-Général des Mines in 1867, and Director of the School of Mines in 1872. Professor Daubrée has written more than 300 memoirs, chiefly on Geological and Mineralogical subjects, but including investigations allied thereto, such as the permeability of rocks by water, and the effects of such infiltration in producing volcanic phenomena, the relation between thermal waters and the rocks whence they flow, the composition of meteoric masses and their classification in accordance therewith. Professor Daubrée is also distinguished for the long-continued and sometimes dangerous experiments which he has conducted in order to ascertain to what extent it is possible artificially to imitate the natural production of rocks. Professor Daubrée is President of the National Agricultural Society of France, Honorary President of the French Alpine Club, Past President of the Academy of Sciences, of the Geological, the Geographical, and the Mineralogical Societies of Paris, Honorary Dr. Phil. of Bologna and of Halle, Foreign Member of the Royal Society of London, of the Geological Society, and of the Mineralogical Society, of the Academy dei Lincei, of the Academies of Bologna, Boston, Brussels, Copenhagen, Göttingen, Munich, Philadelphia, St. Petersburg and Turin, of the Scientific Society of Batavia, and of the American Institute of Mining Engineers. M. Daubrée is also Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour, Grand Cross, Grand Officer, and Commander of numerous foreign orders.

DAUDET, Alphonse, a French novelist, was born at Nîmes, of poor parents, May 13, 1840. After studying in the Lyceum at Lyons, he became an usher in a school at Alais, and did the drudgery of that humble calling for two years. In 1857 he went to Paris with his brother Ernest, in order to try to gain a livelihood by literary pursuits. He first brought out a volume of poetry, entitled "Les Amoureuses," 1858, which immediately gained for him a reputation, and led to his employment on several newspapers. The Figaro opened its columns to a description of "Les Gueux de Province," in which he depicted with extreme earnestness and fidelity the miseries and sufferings of the ushers in provincial schools. He next published "La Double Conversion," a poem, 1861, which was followed in 1863 by "Le Roman du Chaperon Rouge," a collection of articles which had appeared originally in the Figaro. He also wrote for the stage with success, composing, in conjunction with M. Ernest Lépine, two little pieces, "La Dernière Idole" (Odéon theatre, 1862), and "L'Œillet blanc" (Comédie Française, 1865). Subsequently he wrote for the theatre three pieces which were decided failures, viz., "Le Sacrifice" (Vaudeville); "L'Arlésienne" (same theatre), 1872; and "Lise Tavernier" (Ambigu), 1872. Recently he has dramatised "Numa Roumestan," and has written two plays, "La Lutte pour la Vie," and "L'Obstacle." For five years he was private secretary to the Duc de Morny, President of the Corps Législatif (1861-65). M. Alphonse Daudet has contributed extensively to a large number of newspapers, particularly to the Monde Illustré and to the Figaro, in which his rhymed chronicles, signed "Jean Froissart," and his "Lettres de mon Moulin," signed "Gaston-Marie," deserve special mention. Subsequently he became one of the regular contributors to the Moniteur Universel, and he has published under the pseudonym of "Baptistet," or under his real name, a number of novels, tales, and collections of articles contributed originally to newspapers. Among these publications are:—"Le Petit Chose," "Tartarin de Tarascon," "Tartarin sur les Alpes," "Robert Helmont," "Lettres de mon Moulin," "Lettres à un Absent," "Contes du Lundi," "Les Femmes d'Artistes," "Jack, Histoire d'un Ouvrier," 1873; "Fromont jeune et Risler aîné," 1874, his best work, to which the French Academy awarded the Jouy prize in June, 1875, and which was successfully dramatised by M. Alphonse Belot in 1876; "Les Contes Choisis," 1877; "Le Nabab, Mœurs Parisiennes," 1878, a work in which the private life of the Duc de Morny is minutely described; "Les Rois en Exil," 1879; a dramatic version of "Jack," brought out at the Odéon, Jan. 11, 1881; "Numa Roumestan," 1880; "L'Evangeliste," 1882; and "Sappho," 1884; "L'Immortel," a severe satire on the French Academy, 1888; "Trente Ans de Paris," 1888; "Souvenirs d'un Homme de Lettres," 1888; "Port Tarascon," 1890. In "Trente Ans de Paris" he describes his struggles as a young unknown author. His son, M. Leon Daudet, who is himself a littérateur of great promise, was married to Mdlle. Jeanne Hugo, granddaughter of the poet, and heroine of "L'Art d'être Grandpère," but has recently been separated from her. M. Léon Daudet's most popular work is entitled "Les Morticoles." M. Alphonse Daudet has been long connected with the Journal Officiel, being entrusted with the theatrical department of that paper.

DAVENPORT, Sir Samuel, K.C.M.G., LL.D., fourth son of the late George Davenport, Esq., of Oxford, and of Great Wigston, Leicestershire, was born in 1818, and settled in South Australia in 1842. He became an enterprising cattle and sheep farmer, and also occupied himself with the cultivation of the olive and the manufacture of olive-oil as well as vineyards and wine. He was Crown Nominee of Legislative Council in 1846-7, and Member from 1857-66. He has taken a prominent part in the organisation of the various exhibitions that have been held in different parts of the world, being Executive Commissioner at London, 1851, Philadelphia, 1876, Sydney, 1879, Melbourne, 1880, and London, 1886. He was also for many years President of the Royal Agricultural and Horticultural Society and of the Chamber of Manufactures of South Australia. In 1885 he was appointed President of the South Australian Branch of the Geographical Society of Australasia. He was knighted in 1884; and in June, 1886, he was created a K.C.M.G., and in July, 1886, received the hon. degree of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge.

DAVEY, Lord Horace, of Fernhurst, Q.C., of Lincoln's Inn and of Blackdown House near Haslemere, is the son of Mr. Peter Davey, of Torquay, and formerly of Horton, Buckinghamshire, by marriage with Caroline Emma, daughter of the late Rev. William Pace, rector of Rampisham and Wraxall, Dorsetshire. He was born in the year 1833, and was educated at Rugby, from which school he was elected to a Scholarship at University College, Oxford. He obtained a double first-class on taking his degree, and was subsequently chosen a Fellow of his college. He was also Senior Mathematical Scholar and Eldon Law Scholar. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in January, 1861, and soon rose to eminence as an equity lawyer. He obtained a silk gown in 1875. He sat for Christchurch, Hants, from 1880 down to 1885, when he was defeated. He was Solicitor-General for a few months in 1886 under Mr. Gladstone's Administration, and was elected member for Stockton-on-Tees, Dec. 21, 1888. But in 1892 he was not re-elected. In the trial of the Bishop of Lincoln he was counsel for the prosecution, and in the Berkeley Peerage Case (1891) he was leading counsel. In Sept., 1893, he was appointed a Lord Justice of Appeal in the place of Lord Justice Bowen, and was afterwards created a peer with the title of Lord Davey of Fernhurst. He is married to Louisa, daughter of the late Mr. John Donkin.

DAVIDS, St., Bishop of. See JONES, the RIGHT REV. WILLIAM BASIL.

DAVIDS, Professor Thomas William Rhys, Ph.D., LL.D., was born at Colchester, May 12, 1843, and educated at the Brighton School, and in the University of Breslau. He was appointed a writer in the Ceylon Civil Service in Feb., 1866, and filled various judicial appointments in that island, where he also acted as Archæological Commissioner to the Government of Ceylon. He was called to the Bar by the Middle Temple in May, 1877. Professor Rhys Davids is the author of "Buddhism: a sketch of the life and teachings of Gautama, the Buddha," 1877; of "Buddhist Suttas," Oxford University Press, 1881; of "Vinaya Texts," Oxford University Press, 1882-85; of "Buddhist Birth Stories: being tales of the anterior birth of Gautama Buddha," and of "The Questions of King Milanda," Oxford University Press, 1890; and has edited in the original Páli various books of the Buddhist Scriptures for the Páli Text Society (1882—1890). He was the Hibbert Lecturer for the year 1881; is an honorary

Ph.D. of the University of Breslau, an honorary LL.D. of the University of Edinburgh, Professor of Páli and Buddhist literature at University College, London; Chairman of the "Páli Text Society," and Secretary of the "Royal Asiatic Society."

DAVIDSON, Professor George, A.M., Ph.D., Sc.D., for many years at the head of the field assistants of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, was born at Nottingham, May 9, 1825, but removed with his parents to Philadelphia in 1832. He received the rudiments of his education from his mother, then attended the public schools at Philadelphia, and graduated from the Central High School at twenty years of age. He was appointed to the United States Coast Survey in 1845, and from that year to 1850 he served on field duty from Maine to Texas. From 1850 to 1860 he was engaged on the Pacific Coast, and in 1861 he made surveys for the defence of the Delaware River. In 1862 he commanded the armed steamer Vixen in Florida. When General Lee's army invaded Pennsylvania (1863) he was appointed assistant engineer of fortifications for the defence of Philadelphia. Under direction of Prof. Peirce he undertook in May, 1867, a geographical reconnaissance of the Coasts of Alaska, for the purchase of which the government was then negotiating with Russia. In 1869 he took charge of the astronomical expedition to Alaska to observe the total solar eclipse of August, 1869, and was the first American who went up the Chilkaht River. In 1872 (and again in 1885) he was appointed by the President of the United States a member of the United States Assay Commission at the Philadelphia Mint. In 1873 and 1874 he largely influenced Mr. James Lick in the establishment of the Lick Observatory, and in the first-named year he was authorised to announce that "the greatest telescope in the world" would be installed on the Sierra Nevada at an elevation of 10,000 feet. In 1874, in charge of the American Transit of Venus Expedition to Japan, he observed the phenomena and took about sixty photographs at Nagasaki; and determined the telegraphic difference of longitude between that place and Vladivostock and Tokyo, the latter at his own cost. In 1874 he computed a field catalogue of 983 transit stars, and in 1883 he finished the computation of a second and enlarged edition of 1278 time and circumpolar stars. In 1874 he had finished the computation of a table of 57,500 transit star factors to three places of decimals; and has in part computed another equally extensive. In 1878 he was sent to the Paris Exposition to examine the instruments of precision applicable to geodesy and astronomy; and was there elected by the French and foreign jurors the president of the important jury of the moving powers of machinery, wherein the jury examined 3,800 pieces of machinery and awarded 850 prizes. For this service he received the large medal and diploma of the French Government. As one of the United States Commissioners of Irrigation he visited China, India, Egypt, Italy, and other countries of Europe, to examine and report upon the systems of irrigation, and their application to the needs of the United States west of the 100th meridian, but particularly to the Pacific Coast (1875). He has written four editions of the "Coast Pilot of California, Oregon and Washington," 1858, '62, '69, '88. The last edition (entirely re-written), embraces 721 quarto pages and contains 464 illustrations of landfalls, headlands, islands, rocks, &c. He also wrote (1869) the "Coast Pilot of Alaska," Part I. In 1888 he finished a monograph of the landfalls of Ulloa, Cabrillo, Ferrelo, Drake, and Vizcaino on the Pacific Coast between 1539 and 1603, and has located every one of the localities mentioned by these explorers. In a separate paper he has identified the anchorage of Sir Francis Drake on the Coast of California in 1579, and has thereby incidentally established the location where the Book of Common Prayer was first used in the territory now covered by the United States. In 1880 he carried his equatorial telescope to the summit of Santa Lucia, 6,000 feet above and overlooking the ocean, and observed the total solar eclipse of January 11. In 1882 he had charge of the United States Transit of Venus Party in New Mexico, and at an elevation of 5,500 feet he observed the four contacts of the planet and sun, made many micrometric measures, and took 216 photographs of the planet in transitu, every plate of which was accepted and measured. In these transits of Venus, in those of Mercury, and in occultations of stars by the moon, and in solar eclipses he has demonstrated that the phenomena of the "black drop," "ligament," "Baily's Beads," &c., are due solely to the unsteadiness of our atmosphere at the time and place of observation. In 1890, '92, and '93 he occupied trigonometrical stations in the Sierra Nevada and the Coast ranges at elevations reaching nearly 13,000 feet, and obtained remarkable results. In 1893 he was placed in charge of the location and measurement of the diagonal part of the boundary line between the States of California and Nevada. In the autumn of 1892, he finished a series of observations for the determination of the period of the variation of the latitude that embraced 5,479 observations of pairs of stars, and a larger number of observations for instrumental factors. In November, 1893, he commenced a second series to run through three months to determine the December obscure minimum in the variation. All such work is done independently of regular official duties. He has devised new forms of instruments, notably the New Meridian instrument for Latitude and Time named after him; break circuit chronometer; new vertical clam for transit instruments, &c., and the spirit level horizon to sextant; and has shown the obscure mechanical defects of micrometers, &c. In 1874 he was elected a member of the National Academy of Sciences. From the inception of the Geographical Society of the Pacific in 1881, he has yearly been elected President, and has published papers upon the ascent of Makushin Volcano, the eruptions of Bogoslov and other volcanoes of the Aleutian Islands. At his own expense he has maintained the first astronomical observatory on the Pacific Coast of the United States. Professor Davidson has held the position of Honorary Professor of Geodesy and Astronomy in the University of California since 1873, and was a Regent of the same institution from 1877 to 1884. In 1889 he was unanimously elected the first Honorary Member of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, for "Eminent Public Services." Since 1873 he has had charge of the main triangulation of the Pacific Coast and passes part of every year in the field, and more particularly in the mountain regions. In this work he has measured two long base lines of nearly eleven miles each, and repeated the measurements two and three times. In acknowledgment of the character of the scheme of triangulation developed from the Yolo Base Line to the coast range and to the Sierra Nevada, and the high standard of the observations, the Superintendent has designated it by the name of the "Davidson Quadrilaterals." In this work he has made three extended series of observations for the determination of the co-efficient of refraction, that are accepted as exhaustive. During his 48 years of active field service on the Survey his itinerary shows over 385,500 miles travelled—and always with instruments, note-book and sketch-block in hand. In answer to recent inquiries from the Geographical Society of France, he has shown that he has written over 2,500 octavo pages of geographical matter, illustrated by 530 views, maps, &c. In Oct., 1858, he married Ellinor, the youngest daughter of Mr. Robert Henry Fauntleroy, of Virginia, and is the father of two sons and one daughter.

DAVIDSON, John, poet, was born on April 11, 1857, at Banhead, Renfrewshire, where his father was Evangelical Union Minister. He went to school at Greenock, whither his father removed in 1862, and in his thirteenth year entered the chemical department of a sugar refinery. On the Food Act becoming law about a year after, he went to the Public Analyst's Office. In his fifteenth year he returned to school as a pupil-teacher, and, on finishing his apprenticeship, spent one session at Edinburgh University. He subsequently taught in various Scotch towns. He came to London in 1890, and has since busied himself as a journalist and as an author, chiefly of poetry. Mr. John Davidson has published "The North Wall, 1885; "Bruce: a Drama," 1886; "Smith: a Tragic Farce," 1888; "An Unhistorical Pastoral," "A Romantic Farce," and "Scaramouch in Naxos" (his best known volume of verse), 1889; "Perfervid," 1890; "The Great Men" and "In a Music-Hall," 1891; "Fleet Street Eclogues," 1893; "A Random Itinerary," "Baptist Lake," "The Wonderful Mission of Earl Lavender." and "Plays: Collected Edition," 1894.

DAVIDSON, The Right Rev. Randall Thomas, D.D., Bishop of Rochester, was born in 1848, and educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1871, and M.A. in 1875. Ordained in 1874 to the curacy of Dartford, in Kent, he was appointed in 1877 chaplain and private secretary to Dr. Tait, Archbishop of Canterbury. This position he held until the Archbishop's death in Dec., 1882. On him devolved, in large measure, the arrangements connected with the great Lambeth Conference of 100 Bishops in 1878. During those years, he contributed articles on various historical and ecclesiastical subjects to the Contemporary Review, Macmillan's Magazine, and other periodicals. Bishop Lightfoot of Durham appointed him Examining Chaplain in 1880, and in 1882 he became Sub-almoner and honorary Chaplain to the Queen, and one of the six preachers of Canterbury Cathedral. Archbishop Benson, on succeeding to the Primacy, retained Mr. Davidson's services as Resident Chaplain and Private Secretary, and after holding that office for six months he was, in June, 1883, appointed by the Queen to the deanery of Windsor, and became also Resident Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen and Registrar of the Order of the Garter. In the same year he received from the University of St. Andrews the honorary degree of D.D. In 1884 he became a trustee of the British Museum, in the management of which he takes an active part. In 1887 he was elected by the Masters of Eton College as their representative on the Governing Body of the School. He is also a Member of the governing bodies of Wellington College, Dulwich College, and the Royal Holloway College for Women. In 1888 Dr. Davidson acted as Hon. Secretary to the third Lambeth Conference, attended by 145 Bishops from all parts of the world, and a few months after the conclusion of its Sessions he published, through the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, a volume containing an exhaustive History of these Conferences from their commencement, together with all the official and other documents connected with them. In 1891 he published, in conjunction with Canon Benham, the biography of his father-in-law, Archbishop Tait, whose daughter, Miss Edith Tait, he had married in 1878. In April, 1891, Dr. Davidson was consecrated Bishop of Rochester, and in the same year he became, in succession to Bishop Philpott, Clerk of the Closet to the Queen.

DAVIES, The Rev. John Llewelyn, M.A., born at Chichester, Feb. 26, 1826, was educated at Repton School and Trinity College, Cambridge, and was elected a fellow of that society in 1850. He was appointed Incumbent of St. Mark's, Whitechapel, in 1852, and Rector of Christ Church, St. Marylebone, in 1856. He was appointed, in Feb., 1881, a Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen; and in Oct., 1882, Rural Dean of the deanery of St. Marylebone. In 1889 he became Vicar of Kirkby Lonsdale, and in 1890 Hulsean Lecturer at Cambridge. Mr. Davies has translated (jointly with D. J. Vaughan) "Plato's Republic;" and published several volumes of sermons; an edition of Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon; contributions to "Peaks, Passes, and Glaciers," and to periodical literature; also "Theology and Morality, Belief and Practice," 1873; "The Christian Calling," 1875; and "Social Questions," 1885. One of his most recent works is "Order and Growth as involved in the Spiritual Constitution of Human Society," 1891. He was a contributor to Dr. William Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," and "Dictionary of Christian Biography." For some years he was a member of the London School Board for the Marylebone Division, and Principal of Queen's College in Harley Street. He is a theologian of the school of the Rev. F. D. Maurice.

DAVIES, Mrs. Mary, born in London, of Welsh parents, Feb. 27, 1855, was Welsh scholar at the Royal Academy of Music for three years, studying principally under Signor Randegger, and winning successively bronze and silver medals, as well as the Parepa-Rosa gold medal, and the Christine Nilsson prize. After remaining at the Royal Academy five years, she was elected an associate, and was in 1882 elected a member of the Academy; acted as Honorary Examiner for the vocal competitions of the Academy in 1889 and subsequently; and delivered the medals and prizes to the successful students at the Royal Academy Annual Meeting in 1887; has sung at various festivals in the provinces, including those of Worcester, Gloucester, and Norwich, and in London at the Concerts of the Sacred Harmonic Society, the Philharmonic Society, and at the Richter Concerts, whilst she has been associated with Mr. Boosey's London Ballad Concerts since 1878. She also sang at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893. Mrs. Mary Davies, in 1880, created the part of Margaret in the English version of Berlioz's "Faust," produced by Sir Charles Hallé; the other artists associated with the work being Mr. Charles Santley and Mr. Edward Lloyd. She was married to Mr. W. Cadwaladr Davies, of the Inner Temple, March 22, 1888.

DAVIES, The Hon. Sir Matthew Henry, K.C.B., M.P., Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Victoria, was born at Geelong, 1850, and is the son of Ebenezer Davies, Esq., and Ruth, daughter of Mark Bartlett, Esq., Berkshire, and grandson of the Rev. John Davies, of Trevecca College, South Wales. He was educated at Geelong College, matriculated at Melbourne University in 1869, and was admitted as a Solicitor of the Supreme Court in 1875. For five years he was Honorary Secretary to the Council of the Law Institute of Victoria. He is a J.P. for the Central Bailiwick, and was Mayor of the City of Prahran, 1881-82, and represented the electoral district of St. Kilda in Parliament from 1883 to 1888. He was member of Royal Commission on the Transfer of Land and Titles to Land in 1885; was sworn an ex-Councillor, Feb., 1886; and joined the Gillies-Deakin Government as Minister without responsible office. He visited England in connection with the Indian and Colonial Exhibition, 1886-87; was Chairman of the Royal Commission on Banking, 1887; elected Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Oct., 1887 (from which post he retired in 1892); Chairman of the Royal Commission on the Electric Lighting and Ventilation of the Parliament Houses, 1888; Executive Commissioner and a Vice-President of the Centennial International Exhibition, Melbourne, 1888; returned unopposed for the electoral district of Toorak, 1889; and was unanimously re-elected Speaker, 1889. Sir Matthew Davies was created a K.B. in 1890. He married Elizabeth Locke, eldest daughter of the Rev. Dr. Mercer, Presbyterian minister, of Melbourne.

DAVIS, Henry William Banks, R.A., was born at Finchley, Aug. 26, 1833, and educated at home. When a student at the Royal Academy, in 1854, he obtained two silver medals—one for perspective, the other for a model in the Life School. He matriculated at Oxford in 1856, but after residing a few terms at the university, he resumed his art pursuits, and was elected an associate of the Royal Academy in Jan., 1873. In 1861 Mr. Davis painted "Rough Pasturage," exhibited at the Royal Academy; in 1865, "The Strayed Herd;" in 1866, "Spring Ploughing" (engraved); in 1870, "Dewy Eve;" in 1871, "Moonrise," and "The Prætorium at Neufchatel;" in 1872, "A Panic" (engraved), and "Trotting Bull," in bronze, which obtained a medal for sculpture at the Vienna Exhibition; in 1873, "A Summer Afternoon;" in 1874, "A French Lane," "The End of the Day," and "In Picardy;" in 1876, "Early Summer," "A Spring Morning," "The Rustling Leaves," and "Mares and Foals: Picardy;" in 1877, "After Sundown," "Reconnoitring," "Contentment," and "The Approach of Night;" in 1878, "Mid-day Shelter," "Afternoon on the Cliffs," "Evening Light," and "The Lowing Herd winds slowly o'er the Lea;" in 1879, "Cutting Forage on the French Coast," "A Midsummer Night," "Wanderers," "Picardy Sheep," and "Cloud and Sunshine;" in 1880, "Family Affection," and "Returning to the Fold," which was purchased by the President and Council of the Royal Academy under the terms of the Chantrey bequest; in 1881, "Mother and Son," "Noon," and "The Evening Star;" in 1882, "In Rossshire," "Sea and Land Waves," "Broken Weather in the Highlands," and "Showers in June;" in 1883, "Gathering the Flock," "Ben Eay," "At Kinlochewe;" in 1886, "A Flood on the Wye," and "Fording;" in 1887, "Now came Still Evening on," and "Summer;" in 1890, "A Placid Morning on the Wye," "The Picardy Dunes," and "A Ford on the Wye." All the above-mentioned pictures, as well as similar Highland scenes painted during the last three years, were exhibited at the Royal Academy. Mr. Davis was elected a full member of the Academy June 18, 1877. In 1889 Mr. Davis was one of the British jurors in the Fine Arts Department of the Paris International Exhibition. In 1892 he exhibited at the Champ de Mars Salon, and was elected associate (Associé) of the "Société Nationale des Beaux Arts" in Paris, and the following year was elected full member (Sociétaire). In 1893 he was appointed one of the British Judges in Fine Arts at the Chicago Columbian Exposition, and was President of the International Committee of Judges in Fine Arts there. He was also elected Chairman of the Judges in the section of painting. In June of the same year he was appointed Justice of the Peace for Radnorshire.

DAVISON, Mrs., née Arabella Goddard, pianist, daughter of Mr. T. Goddard, of Welbeck Street, born at St. Servan, near St. Malo, in Brittany, in Jan., 1836, almost from infancy showed an extraordinary taste for music. On her first appearance in public, at a concert given in her native village of St. Servan, when she played a fantasia on themes from Mozart's "Don Juan," she was little more than four years of age. At this time the promise of future celebrity in the child was so great that her parents removed with her to Paris, where she received lessons from Kalkbrenner. Returning to London soon after the revolution of Feb., 1848, Mr. and Mrs. Goddard confided the cultivation of their daughter's musical talents to Mrs. Anderson, her Majesty's pianiste. She was only eight years of age when she was called upon to perform at Buckingham Palace before her Majesty and the late Prince Albert, who highly complimented her on her playing. The completion of her musical education was intrusted to Thalberg. She first appeared in public, at a matinée at her father's residence, March 30, 1850; and in Oct. made her début at the Grand National Concerts, when she played the "Elisire" fantasia, and the "Tarantella" of Thalberg, with marked success. From that time she appeared frequently in public and established her fame by her performance of various fantasias by Thalberg, Prudent, &c. The first performances of Miss Goddard at the concerts given at Her Majesty's Theatre were confined principally to works of the modern romantic school. She has since become equally distinguished as a pianiste in more classical compositions. Miss Goddard afterwards became the pupil of Mr. G. A. Macfarren, under whom she studied harmony; and left England for a tour on the Continent in 1854, visiting nearly all the principal cities of France, Germany, and Italy; giving concerts, and meeting with great success. She returned to England in May, 1856, and in 1860 was married to Mr. Davison, a musical critic, though in public and private concerts she has retained her maiden name. Miss Goddard took her farewell of the British public at St. James's Hall, Feb. 11, 1873, and soon afterwards went on a professional tour through Australia, the Sandwich Islands, and the United States. She returned to England in April, 1876.

DAVITT, Michael, one of the best-known of the Irish leaders, was born in 1846 in the village of Straide, co. Mayo. His parents were of the poorer class of western Irish peasantry, and when Michael was five years old, his father was evicted from the small holding on which the family subsisted. This early experience of landlord power has doubtless largely tended to influence his action in the fierce crusade which he has waged of recent years against Irish landlordism. The family then emigrated to Lancashire, where he was employed in a cotton factory, and at the age of eleven lost his right arm through a machinery accident. He was then sent to the Wesleyan School at Haslingden, and at fifteen obtained work in a printing-office, where he remained for seven years. In 1866 he joined the Irish Revolutionary movement initiated by James Stephens, and in 1870 was arrested in London, tried on an indictment of "treason-felony," and sentenced to fifteen years' penal servitude. After undergoing seven years and a half of imprisonment, chiefly in Dartmoor Convict Prison, Mr. Davitt was released on ticket-of-leave. In conjunction with other amnestied Fenian prisoners he was tendered a public reception by the people of Dublin, and after making a tour of the West of Ireland and paying a hurried visit to America, he started the Land Agitation in his native county of Mayo early in 1879. In October of that year he, in conjunction with Mr. Parnell and others, founded the Land League organization, and became its guiding spirit. He was arrested and prosecuted in November of that year for a seditious speech, but after a week's imprisonment and an abortive trial the prosecution was abandoned. During the partial famine of 1879-80, he had the chief direction of the Land League relief funds. In May, 1880, he proceeded to America to superintend the organization of the American branch of the Land League, and made an organizing tour of the Northern States from New York to San Francisco and back. Recalled to Ireland by the State prosecution of the executive of the Land League, he was again arrested on Feb. 3, 1881, by order of the Government, and consigned to Portland Convict Prison on a revocation of his original ticket-of-leave. After an incarceration of fifteen months, during which, on his own admission, he was exempt from ordinary convict labour, he was again released on ticket-of-leave, Mr. Parnell and other Irish members going down to Portland to receive him on his discharge. On the very day of this release, May 6, 1882, Lord Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Burke were assassinated in the Phœnix Park. In conjunction with Messrs. Parnell and Dillon, he issued a manifesto to the Irish race condemnatory of the murder. After again visiting America and submitting to a meeting of Irish American representatives in New York a plan for the amalgamation of existing national organizations in the United States, he returned to Ireland, and succeeded in persuading Mr. Parnell to summon a National Convention in Dublin to effect the revival of the Land League movement. The National League organization was the outcome of this convention—with the restoration of Irish legislative independence as the first plank in its platform. In Feb., 1883, Mr. Davitt was again prosecuted for a violent speech against rent and landlordism, and, refusing to enter into bail to keep the peace, he underwent four months imprisonment in Richmond Bridewell, Dublin. Since then he has been an incessant propagandist of Land League principles and Nationalist aspirations in Ireland and Great Britain. While imprisoned in Portland in 1882 he was elected M.P. for Meath, but was disqualified by a vote of the House of Commons. When legally eligible on the expiration of his ticket-of-leave in 1885, he was solicited to become a candidate by several Irish constituencies, but refused to enter the Imperial Parliament from an objection to take the oath of allegiance. He at the same time refused to accept a national testimonial for his services to the Irish people. In Dec., 1884, Mr. Davitt published "Leaves from a Prison Diary," a work which was written during his imprisonment in Portland, and which has had a very large circulation. Occupied with literary work as a means of livelihood, Mr. Davitt is a constant contributor to American and Colonial newspapers, and an occasional writer in Irish and English journals and reviews. He has a decided leaning towards socialistic doctrines in his writings and speeches, and is far from being in union with the other Irish leaders; his theories of land being more in accordance with those of Mr. Henry George than with those of the late Mr. Parnell. He has been recently elected a member of the Dublin corporation, and is a delegate from that body to the Port and Docks Board of the city. He is a director of the Dublin North City Milling Co., and a member of the Executive Council of the Irish National League. He has undergone altogether over nine years' imprisonment for his connection with Irish political movements. He was one of those who were implicated in the charges made in the articles on "Parnellism and Crime," and conducted his own case with an ability which called forth commendations even from the presiding Judge (1889). In 1890 he started the short-lived Labour World, and in 1891 stood for Parliament at Waterford, but was not returned. In July, 1892, he was elected Member for North Meath, but was unseated for alleged "clerical intimidation." He was subsequently returned unopposed for North-East Cork, but had again to retire from Parliament in May, 1893, in consequence of proceedings in bankruptcy connected with the costs of the North Meath petition.

DAWKINS, Professor William Boyd, M.A., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.S.A., Assoc. Inst. C.E., geologist and osteologist, was born Dec. 26, 1838, at Buttington Vicarage, Welshpool, Montgomeryshire. He received his education at Rossall school and at the University of Oxford, where he became a scholar of Jesus College, and first Burdett-Coutts geological scholar. He was appointed assistant geologist in Her Majesty's Geological Survey of Great Britain in 1862; geologist in 1867; Curator of the Manchester Museum, 1869; lecturer on geology in Owens College, Manchester, in 1870; Professor in 1874; and President of the Manchester Geological Society in 1874. Professor Dawkins is the author of numerous essays in the "Proceedings" of the Geological, Anthropological, and Royal Societies, relating principally to fossil mammalia: "British Pleistocene Mammalia" in the "Proceedings" of the Palæontological Society, 1866-78, and "Cave-Hunting: Researches on the Evidences of Caves respecting the Early Inhabitants of Europe," 1874. In 1875 he went round the world, by way of Australia and New Zealand. In 1880 he published a work on "Early Man in Britain, and his place in the Tertiary Period;" and gave a series of lectures before the Lowell Institute, Boston, Massachusetts. He was appointed, in 1882, a member of the scientific committee of the Channel Tunnel, and intrusted with the geological survey of the English and French coasts for that enterprise. He presided over the Anthropological section of the British Association at Southampton, in Aug., 1882; and on Oct. 17 in the same year he was elected an honorary Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford. In 1883-4 he was engaged in laying down the line for a tunnel under the Humber, and in 1885 made a preliminary survey of the antiquities of the Isle of Man, in the same year being elected Examiner in the University in London. In 1886 he began the search for coal at Dover, which has recently resulted in the discovery of a coal-field in South-Eastern England. He was appointed President of the Geological Section of the British Association in 1888; and, in 1889, Lyell Medallist, and Examiner in the University of Oxford. During the last 20 years he has advised on various engineering works—the water-supply of the metropolis, of Croydon, Cardiff, Bristol and Liverpool, the salt of Northwich, the Manchester Ship Canal, and the Kerosene Shales of New South Wales.

DAWSON, George M., C.M.G., LL.D., F.R.S., son of Sir J. William Dawson, was born at Pictou, Nova Scotia, on Aug. 1, 1849. He was educated at McGill University (Montreal), and at Royal School of Mines (London), Murchison and Edward Forbes Medallist at Royal School of Mines. He was appointed Geologist and Naturalist to H.M. North American Boundary Commission in 1873, and in 1875 he published a detailed report on the country traversed from the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains, entitled "Geology and Resources of the 49th Parallel." He was appointed to the Geological Survey of Canada in 1875, and has since been principally engaged in the survey and exploration of the North-West Territory and British Columbia, and was placed in charge of the Yukon Expedition, undertaken by the Canadian government in 1887. He was appointed (with Sir George Baden-Powell) one of H.M.'s Behring Sea Commissioners in 1891, and spent the summer of that year in investigating the facts connected with the fur-seal fishery on the Northern Coasts of America and Asia. Meetings of the International Commission were subsequently held at Washington, and a Report of the Commissioners was published as a parliamentary paper in 1892. In 1893 he was on the staff of the Behring Sea Arbitration, convened at Paris. In 1890 he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Queen's University, Kingston, and in 1891 from McGill University, Montreal. He was awarded the Bigsby Medal of the Geological Society of London in 1891, for his researches into the Geological Structure of Canada. He was made a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George in 1892, and was elected President of the Royal Society of Canada, 1893. His geological work includes the first detailed account of the surface geology and glacial phenomena of the northern part of the Continent of America west of the Great Lakes, as well as the investigation of the great coal and lignite deposits of the North-West Territory and of large portions of British Columbia and the Queen Charlotte Islands. The results of these investigations are published in the Annual Reports of the Geological Survey of Canada, from 1875 to the present time. In Jan. 1895, he was appointed Director of the Survey. He is the author of numerous original scientific papers, principally geological, but including geographical, ethnological, and other observations made in the course of his explorations, published in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, Transactions of the Royal Society of Canada, Canadian Naturalist, Canadian Record of Science, and elsewhere.

DAWSON, Sir J. William, C.M.G., LL.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., a geologist and naturalist, was born at Pictou, Nova Scotia, in Oct., 1820. He studied in the University of Edinburgh, and returning home devoted himself to the study of the natural history and geology of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The results of these investigations are embodied in his "Acadian Geology," 3rd edit., 1878. In 1842, and again in 1852, he accompanied Sir Charles Lyell in his explorations in Nova Scotia, aiding him materially in his investigations. Since 1843, he has contributed largely to the "Proceedings" of the London Geological Society, and to scientific periodicals. He has also published numerous monographs on special subjects connected with geology, more especially on the Land Animals and Plants of the Palæozoic Period and on the Pleutocene Deposits of Canada. His two volumes on the "Devonian and Carboniferous Flora of Eastern North America," published by the Geological Survey of Canada, are among the most important contributions yet made to the palæozoic botany of North America; and he first described the Eozoön Canadense, of the Laurentian limestones, the oldest known form of animal life. In 1850 he was appointed Superintendent of Education for Nova Scotia, and in 1855 became Principal of the McGill University at Montreal, a position which he resigned in 1893 after a long and successful educational career. He is a member of many learned societies in Europe and America. Among his works not already mentioned are:—"Archaia, or Studies on the Cosmogony and Natural History of the Hebrew Scriptures," 1858; "The Story of the Earth and Man," 1872, in which he gives a popular summary of geological history; "The Dawn of Life," 1875, an account of the oldest known fossil remains, and of their relations to geological time and the development of the animal kingdom; "The Origin of the World," 1877; "Fossil Men and their Modern Representatives," 1878; and "The Chain of Life in Geological Time," 1880, a sketch of the origin and succession of animals and plants. He has also contributed largely to the Canadian Naturalist, and Canadian Record of Science, and to many educational, scientific, and religious publications in Great Britain, the United States, and Canada. In 1882 he received the Lyell medal of the Geological Society of London for eminent geological discoveries, was created a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George; was selected by the Governor-General, the Marquis of Lorne, to take the (first) Presidency of the Royal Society of Canada, and was President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. In the following year he attended the meeting of the British Association at Southport, and travelled in Egypt and Syria, on the geography and geology of which he has published several papers and a little popular work, "Egypt and Syria, their Geology and Physical Geography in relation to Bible History." He received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Edinburgh, and was knighted by her Majesty in 1884, and in 1885 was elected President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science for the meeting at Birmingham in 1886; and at that meeting he delivered a remarkable address, taking for his subject the geological history of the Atlantic Ocean. He has been elected an honorary Fellow of the Geological Society of Edinburgh and honorary member of the philosophical societies of Liverpool, Glasgow, Manchester and Leeds. Sir W. Dawson's more recent works are:—"Modern Science in Bible Lands," London, 1888; "The Geological History of Plants," International Scientific Series, 1888; "Modern Ideas of Evolution," London, 1890; "Salient Points in the Science of the Earth," 1893; and "The Canadian Ice Age," 1893.

DAY, The Hon. Sir John Charles, son of Captain John Day, of the 49th Regiment, by Emily, daughter of Jan Caspar Hartsinck, was born at the Hague, June 20, 1826. He was educated at Fribourg, and at the Benedictine College of St. Gregory, at Downside, near Bath, and graduated B.A. at the University of London. He entered the Middle Temple in 1845; was called to the Bar in Jan., 1849; joined the Home (now the South-Eastern) circuit; was made a Queen's Council in 1872; and elected a Bencher of his inn in 1873. For many years he enjoyed a very extensive practice both in London and on circuit. In June, 1882, he was appointed a judge in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, in succession to Mr. Justice Bowen, who had been elevated to the Court of Appeal; and he received the usual honour of knighthood. Mr. Justice Day is the editor of the "Common Law Procedure Acts," and "Roscoe's Nisi Prius." In 1886 he was made President of the special Commission sent to inquire into the origin and circumstances of the Belfast riots. In 1889 he was one of the Judges on the Royal Commission in the Parnell Inquiry.

DAY, The Right Rev. Maurice Fitzgerald, D.D., Protestant Bishop of Cashel, is the youngest son of the late Rev. John Day, rector of Kiltallagh, co. Kerry, by Arabella, daughter of Sir William Godfrey, of Bushfield, in the same county. He was born at Kiltallagh in 1816, and received his academical education at Trinity College, Dublin (B.A. 1838; M.A. 1858). For several years he was chaplain to St. Matthias, Dublin; was appointed Dean of Limerick, and vicar of St. Mary's, Limerick, in 1868; and was chosen to succeed the late Dr. Daly in the united Sees of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore, in March, 1872, the consecration ceremony being performed in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, on April 13.

DEACON, George Frederick, M.I.C.E., the eldest son of Mr. Frederick Deacon, of Maidenhead, was born at Bridgewater, in the county of Somerset, on July 26, 1843, and was educated at Haversham and Glasgow University. Having given proof of a strong taste for physical science and mathematics he was apprenticed, in 1859, to Messrs. Robert Napier & Sons, the eminent mechanical engineers of the Clyde. Glasgow University had then taken the lead in the establishment of a curriculum of engineering science, and in 1863 Mr. Deacon changed from the workshop to the University, where Macquorn Rankine held the Chair of Civil Engineering and Mechanics, and William Thomson (now Lord Kelvin) that of Natural Philosophy. In the first term, Mr. Deacon took several prizes, and his work in the physical laboratories, especially in connection with submarine telegraphy, was of so valuable a kind that Sir William, then scientific referee to the Atlantic Telegraph Company, recommended him at the age of twenty-one to fill a remunerative office in that company. This change prevented the completion of his University course; but Professor Rankine has recorded the fact that he highly distinguished himself. Mr. Deacon now inspected the manufacture, in the contractors' works at Greenwich, of the first successful Atlantic cable, and in the expedition of 1865 accompanied the Great Eastern to lay it. The temporary loss of this cable, its remarkable recovery, repeated loss, its abandonment until the following summer, the subsequent lifting of the broken end, and its completion and success, are now matters of history. In the autumn of 1865 Mr. Deacon's services were again sought for Atlantic work; but a business engagement previously made prevented his further connection with the company, and he commenced practice in Liverpool as a consulting Civil and Mechanical Engineer. His practice related chiefly to hydraulic engineering, to drainage, and to combustion, and he was consulted upon matters connected with the Mersey Estuary of which he subsequently made a special study. In 1869-70 he was lecturer on Civil Engineering and Mechanics at Queen's College, Liverpool. In 1871 Mr. James Newlands, the Borough Engineer, and Mr. Thomas Duncan, the Waterworks Engineer of Liverpool, having died, their offices were amalgamated, and out of a large number of candidates, Mr. Deacon, at the age of twenty-eight, was unanimously appointed to the joint office. Under him the reconstruction of the sewers, of the pavements, and of the tramways of Liverpool was rapidly undertaken. The supply of water, though good in quality, had become insufficient in quantity, and from the year 1865 only an intermittent supply could be afforded. Mr. Deacon's invention, now widely known as the differentiating waste-water meter, and applied to about six millions of persons, showed conclusively that the whole difficulty arose from leakage. By its aid the waste was automatically recorded, its localities separately detected, and, without any additional water, the Liverpool people were, before the end of 1875, in possession of a constant supply under higher pressure than before. Between 1873 when this work was begun and 1890, the population supplied has increased by 218,000 persons, and the value of the water saved from leakage and supplied to this additional population is estimated at considerably over £50,000 per annum. During Mr. Deacon's tenure of the office of Borough Engineer, which he resigned in 1881, the zymotic death-rate of Liverpool decreased about 34 per cent., a result which is still substantially maintained. The rapid growth of population has made it necessary to seek for an additional supply of water, and after investigating, at the instance of the Liverpool Corporation, the lake district of Cumberland and Westmoreland, North Lancashire, and Wales, Mr. Deacon, in the beginning of 1877, projected his great scheme of water supply, involving the restoration of an ancient lake—now known as Lake Vyrnwy—in Montgomeryshire, and the construction of an aqueduct 76 miles in length therefrom to Liverpool. The project received the support of Mr. Bateman and Mr. Hawksley, and from the autumn of 1879 until 1885 Mr. Hawksley was associated with Mr. Deacon in the undertaking, now completed under Mr. Deacon. He has been a successful inventor:—apparatus for smoke prevention, mechanical stoking, and grain drying; tramways, air vessels, differentiating meters, mechanical integrators, recording tide gauges, sewage meters, reducing valves and heat engines, have in turn been the subjects of his patents. He has received, among others, the Telford and the Watt medals of the Institution of Civil Engineers. He is the author of many scientific and engineering papers, and is a member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, of the Iron and Steel Institute and of other scientific societies, and past President of the Association of Municipal and Sanitary Engineers.

DEAKIN, Hon. Alfred, was born in Melbourne, 1856, and is the son of William Deakin, a well-known coach proprietor in the early days of the colony, and of Sarah Deakin, daughter of a Monmouthshire farmer. He was educated at the Church of England Grammar School, Melbourne, and at Melbourne University; became a barrister-at-law in 1877; journalist also till 1883; was elected for West Bourke in Feb. 1879, but owing to an informality at one polling place, which occasioned much ill-feeling, resigned and was defeated by 15 votes on a heavy poll in August, 1879; and was again defeated early in 1880; but was returned at the head of the poll six months later and continued to represent that constituency until it was divided in 1889, when he was returned for Essendon and Flemington, a portion of the same district. He joined the Service-Berry Ministry in March, 1883, as Minister of Public Works and Water Supply. In 1884 he exchanged the latter office for that of Solicitor-General. In 1886 he was elected leader of the Liberal party, and joined Mr. Duncan Gillies in forming a Government, in which he held office as Chief Secretary, Minister of Water Supply and Minister of Health. The two former offices he resigned in November, 1890. In 1885 he was appointed President of a Royal Commission on Water Supply, and in that capacity visited the United States, presenting upon his return an elaborate report upon irrigation as practised in the States, upon which Victorian legislation, introduced by himself, has since been largely founded. In 1887 he was the senior representative of the Colony at the Imperial Conference in London, when he was offered and declined the title of K.C.M.G. On the way thither he visited Egypt and Italy, and published a second report upon irrigation as practised in those countries. He was the second Victorian delegate to the Australian Conference at Sydney on the Chinese question in 1888. In 1889 he was appointed a member of the Federal Council of Australasia, and took an active part in its session at Hobart in the same year. In 1890 he was one of the two representatives of Victoria at the Federation Conference held in Melbourne; and, later in the same year, was appointed one of the seven representatives of the Colony at the forthcoming Convention in the early part of 1891, which was entrusted with the task of framing a constitution for a Federal Australasian State for submission to the several Colonies.

DE AMICIS, Edmondo, a popular Italian writer, born at Oneglia, Oct. 21, 1846, of a Genoese family. He began his studies at Cuneo, and after a preliminary training in the Instituto Candallero at Turin, he entered the military school of Modena, which he quitted in 1865 as sub-lieutenant in the 3rd Regiment of the line. In 1866 he took part in the battle of Custozza. The following year he was established at Florence as Director of the Italia Militare. After the seizure of Rome by the troops of King Victor Emmanuel, it appeared to him that his career as a volunteer in the army of Italian independence had naturally come to an end. He took up his abode at Turin, and devoted his energies exclusively to literature, in which he had already made a mark by his sketches of military life — "La Vita militare: bozzetti" (Milan, 1868). After composing his "Ricordo del 1870-71," he wrote a volume of "Novelle," comprising "Gli Amici di Collegio," "Camilla Furio," "Un Gran Giorno," "Alberto," "Fortezza," and "La Casa paterna" (Florence, 1872; 2nd edit. Milan, 1879). A series of tours through Spain, Holland, and Morocco, with visits to London, Paris, and Constantinople, afforded him the material for several works which, written in a lively and attractive style, increased the author's fame, had a wide circulation, and were translated into several European languages. Their titles are: — "La Spagna" (Florence, 1873); "Recordi di Londra," 1874; "Olanda" (Florence, 1874); "Constantinopolia" (6th edit., 2 vols., Milan, 1877-8); "Morocco" (Milan, 1879); "Ricordi di Parigi" (3rd edit., Milan, 1879). Of these the following have appeared at London in English versions by Caroline Tilton: — "Constantinople," 1878; "Morocco, its people and places," 1879; and "Holland," 1880. Signor De Amicis has also published "Ritratti letterari" (Milan, 1881); "Poesie" (2nd edit., Milan, 1881); "La Porta d'Italia," 1884; "Sull' Oceano," 1889, and "Scenes de de la Vie militaire."

DE CASSAGNAC, Paul Granier, son of Adolphe Granier de Cassagnac, born about 1840, became at an early age a contributor to the minor Parisian journals, and soon acquired notoriety by the fierceness of his personal attacks on his contemporaries and the numerous duels to which they gave rise. In 1866, under the auspices of his father, he joined the staff of Le Pays, of which soon afterwards he became the principal editor. Since then he has been perpetually embroiled in quarrels with his brother journalists and anti-Bonapartist politicans. It would be difficult to enumerate all the "affairs of honour" in which he has been engaged, but his duel with the late M. Gustave Flourens in 1869, may be mentioned as being one of the most desperate fought in recent times. M. Paul de Cassagnac was decorated with the Legion of Honour on the Emperor's fête-day in 1868, and in July, 1869, was elected a member of the Conseil Général for the department of Gers. On the declaration of war against Prussia in Aug. 1870, M. Paul de Cassagnac, who was still suffering from a recent wound in the chest, and who had just been appointed a Major of the Garde Mobile of the department of Gers, preferred to enrol himself as a volunteer in the first regiment of Zouaves. Taken prisoner at Sedan, he was imprisoned eight months at Kosel in Silesia. On recovering his liberty he went to Venice for the benefit of his health; and afterwards established in the department of Gers, L'Appel au Peuple, a political journal which met with considerable success. Returning to Paris in Jan., 1872, he resumed the editorship of Le Pays. In July of that year he was condemned to a week's imprisonment, and to pay a fine of 100 francs in consequence of his duel with M. Lockroy. On July 7, 1873, he fought a duel on the Luxemburg frontier with M. Ranc, a Paris journalist, both combatants being wounded, and M. Ranc disabled. He was tried in Paris, July 2, 1874, for the publication in Le Pays of articles calculated to disturb the public peace, and to stir up hatred and contempt between citizens. M. Paul de Cassagnac undertook his own defence and obtained a verdict of "Not Guilty," a result which was regarded by the Bonapartists as a signal triumph. In 1874 he published in his journal a series of violent articles in reference to the capitulation of Sédan, the whole responsibility of which was thrown on to General Wimpffen's shoulders. The General accordingly instituted a prosecution for libel in the Assize Court of the Seine, but M. Paul de Cassagnac was acquitted by the jury (Feb. 1875). On Nov. 24, 1875, he delivered at a meeting at Belleville, a speech in which he contended that the restoration of the Empire was the essential condition of the welfare of the people. The Pays and other newspapers were prosecuted for printing a report of this discourse, but they were all acquitted. M. Paul de Cassagnac was returned to the National Assembly by the arrondissement of Condom in the department of Gers, at the general elections of Feb., 1876, and Oct., 1877. The latter election was annulled by the Chamber, Nov. 11, 1878, but in the following Feb. M. de Cassagnac was elected, and he has been at subsequent general elections. Of late years his fiery zeal has somewhat abated, chiefly on account of the unfortunate dissensions in the Bonaparte family, but during the Boulangist agitation he sided strongly with the party of the late General, and in the September elections of 1889 his followers were directed to support Revisionist candidates wherever Conservatives failed to present themselves. In 1884 he ceased editing the Pays, and founded the Autorité, in the columns of which he constantly attacks the present Republican order.

DEFREGGER, Franz, an Austrian painter, born at Stronach, in the Tyrol, April 30, 1835, showed from his infancy a strong inclination for artistic pursuits, and received his first lessons from a sculptor at Innsbruck in 1860. Then he went to Munich, entered the School of Arts there, and continued his artistic studies under the direction of Piloty. In 1863 he proceeded to Paris, where he stayed two years, and then returned to Munich, where he painted a series of genre pieces representing the life of the people in his native country. Among his works may be mentioned "The Last Return of the Forester;" "The Poachers," "Joseph Speckbacher and his Son;" the "Zither Player," and the large painting "La Dernière Levée en 1809." In 1883 the King of Bavaria raised this celebrated painter to noble rank, by bestowing on him the Bavarian Order of the Crown.

DE FREYCINET, Charles Louis de Saulces, French senator and engineer, was born at Foix, Nov. 14, 1828. He received his professional training in the Polytechnic School, was fourth in the examination for the Corps des Mines in 1848, and was employed by the Government in the same year on several important public works. Appointed engineer of the mines at Mont-de-Marsan, he was, in the regular course of promotion, transferred to Chartres in 1854, and to Bordeaux in 1855. In the latter year he was appointed chief engineer to the Compagnie du Chemin de Fer du Midi; and during the five years of his tenure of this important post, he gave to the "Compagnie du Midi" a typical organization which the other French railway companies did not fail to imitate. M. de Freycinet was next employed by the Government in various scientific or industrial missions in France and in foreign countries. In 1864 he was nominated ordinary engineer of the first class, and he was likewise a member of the Conseil Général of the department of Tarn-et-Garonne, when the war of 1870 broke out. After the revolution of Sept. 4, he was appointed Prefect of Tarn-et-Garonne. On the 10th of Oct. following, M. Gambetta having taken possession, in the provinces, of the office of Minister of War, chose M. de Freycinet as his delegate, and entrusted him with the supreme control of that department. On the conclusion of peace M. de Freycinet retired for a time from public life. He was elected a senator by the department of the Seine, Jan. 30, 1876, being placed first on the list of successful candidates; his term of office expired in 1882. When the Dufaure Ministry was formed in Dec. 1877, he accepted the portfolio of Public Works. On May 8, 1878, he was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences as successor to M. de Bussy. His former studies on water supply, sewage, and engineering won for him this distinction. M. de Freycinet continued in his office of Minister of Public Works in the Cabinet presided over by M. Waddington (Feb. 4, 1879), after M. Grévy had succeeded Marshal MacMahon as president of the Republic. At the close of that year (Dec. 27), he was appointed President of the Council in place of M. Waddington, and he took the portfolio of Foreign Affairs. He resigned Sept. 19, 1880, in consequence of the difficulties relative to the execution of the decrees against the unauthorized religious Orders; and M. Jules Ferry was then entrusted with the formation of a new Cabinet. In Jan. 1882, M. Gambetta's Ministry was overthrown on the Scrutin de Liste proposal, by a majority in the Chamber of 305 to 110. M. de Freycinet was then recalled to power, and again held, with the Presidency of the Council, the portfolio of Foreign Affairs. His proposals for safeguarding the Suez Canal were rejected by a majority of 416 to 75 (July 29). The Ministry at once resigned, and, as the Chamber had declared in the plainest possible terms against intervention in Egypt, France became a passive spectator of England's action. After M. de Freycinet's resignation, President Grévy, after many difficulties, succeeded in forming a "Ministry of Affairs" under M. Duclerc. Then followed the second Government of M. Ferry, who in his turn was succeeded by M. Brisson; and he, after a short and feeble tenure of office, gave place to M. de Freycinet, who took the Presidency of the Council and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. He went out of office in Dec. 1886, and was succeeded by M. Goblet. At the Presidential election of Dec., 1887, he was one of the three candidates for the presidency, the other two being MM. Ferry and Floquet. But he retired from the contest in view of the improvised candidature of the late M. Carnot. In April, 1888, he returned to power as Minister of War in the Floquet Cabinet. He was the first civilian to hold that position since the days of the Ancien Régime, but he retained his portfolio during successive ministries, and in March, 1890, was for the fourth time premier and Minister of War. In Feb., 1892, he was defeated and succeeded by M. Loubet, in whose ministry he nevertheless retained the position of Minister of War. On the reconstruction of the Cabinet in Jan., 1893, he had to resign his post, having been to some extent affected by the Panama scandals. As Minister of War M. de Freycinet has left his mark on the constitution of the French Army. To him is owing the establishment of the three-years' system of obligatory military service, and the extension of such obligatory service to students preparing for the priesthood, and to young men in the learned professions. He has created a Conseil Supérieur de la Guerre, and has instituted the post of a General Chief of Staff to whom in war time are to be intrusted plans of mobilisation and all kinds of military preparations. During the four years he was at the Ministry of War he increased the number of fortresses on the frontiers, greatly strengthened those already in existence, gave an immense extension to the annual French military manœuvres, which now involve the movements of armies, and applied several secret improvements to French arms and ammunition. These important secrets were partially revealed by the Turpin-Triponin affair, which occurred in May and June of 1891. As President of Council, M. De Freycinet has frequently taken up a strong attitude, especially in matters affecting the clergy. In Dec., 1891, he called for stern repressive legislation in the matter of clerical associations, and the discussion of the law in which these measures were embodied, led to the fall of the strong ministry over which he presided. M. De Freycinet was re-elected Senator of the Seine in Jan., 1891. He has made his mark as an author, both scientific and literary, having published a "Traité de Mécanique rationnelle," 2 vols., 1858; "De l'Analyse infinitésimale," 1860; "Des Pentes économiques en Chemin de Fer," 1861; "Emploi des Eaux d'Égout en Agriculture," 1869; "Principes de l'Assainissement industriel," 1870; and "La Guerre en Province pendant le Siège de Paris," 1871; besides a series of literary Pensées contemporaines. In May, 1882, he was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences, and in 1890, he was chosen a member of the Academy in succession to Emile Augier.

DE HAAS, Maurits F. H., marine painter, was born at Rotterdam, Dec. 12, 1832. He studied under J. Spoel and at the Academy of Fine Arts in his native city, and finished his artistic education under Louis Meyer at the Hague. In 1857 he was made artist to the Dutch navy, and in 1859 he went to New York, where he has since lived. The subjects of his earlier pictures are chiefly from the English Channel and French Coast; and among them are "Storm off the Isle of Jersey," "After the Wreck," "Seashore near Hastings," "Calm off Newport," "Wreck off St. Heliers," "Yacht Henrietta," "Clearing Up," "British Channel," "The Rescue," "The Old Wreck," and "Moonrise at Sunset." His best known American works are "The Rapids above Niagara Falls" and "Farragut passing the Forts at New Orleans." He was elected an Associate of the National Academy in 1863, and an Academician in 1867, and was one of the original members of the American Society of Painters in Water-Colours. Of late years he has painted most of his subjects on the New England Coast.

DELAND, Margaretta Wade, née Campbell, an American writer, was born at Alleghany, Pennsylvania, Feb. 23, 1857. She was educated at Pelham Priory, New Rochelle, N.Y., then studied at Cooper Union (N.Y. City), and in 1878-79 taught industrial design in the girls' Normal College, at New York. In 1880 she was married to Lorin F. Deland, of Boston, Massachusetts. She has published "The Old Garden and other Verses," 1886; "John Ward, Preacher," 1888, a novel which has attracted very much attention; "Florida Days," 1889; "Sidney," 1890, and another story by her, entitled "Philip and his Wife," is now (1894) running in the Atlantic Monthly. In 1893 "The Old Garden and other Verses," was republished with decorations by Walter Crane.

DENISON, The Ven. George Anthony, Archdeacon of Taunton, fourth son of the late John Denison, Esq., M.P. (brother of the late Viscount Ossington, Speaker of the House of Commons, 1857-72, of the Bishop of Salisbury, 1837-54, and of the late Sir William Denison, K.C.B., Governor of Tasmania, Sydney, and Madras), was born in 1805. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1826, taking a first class in classical honours; in 1828 was elected Fellow of Oriel College; in the same year was University prizeman, gaining the Latin Essay, and the English Essay in 1829. He was curate of Cuddesdon, Oxfordshire, from 1832 to 1838; married in 1838, Georgiana, eldest daughter of the Right Hon. J. W. Henley, M.P. for Oxon; and became vicar of Broadwindsor, Dorset, whence he was transferred, in 1845, to the vicarage of East Brent, Somerset, and became examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Bath and Wells, who advanced him in 1851 to the Archdeaconry of Taunton. He has been an active member of the London and Bristol "Church Unions," and a strong opponent of all schemes of Government education. In 1853, in consequence of a charge of unsound doctrine publicly made against him by Bishop Spencer, who was at that time discharging the functions of the Bishop of Bath and Wells, the Archdeacon resigned his Examining Chaplaincy, and preached in the Cathedral at Wells three sermons on "The Real Presence," which he published as his defence. Proceedings were taken against him on account of matter contained in those sermons, in Jan., 1854. In 1856 the Archdeacon was sentenced to deprivation of all his preferments by judgment of a court held at Bath, and presided over by the then Archbishop of Canterbury. This sentence was set aside, upon appeal to the Court of Arches, on a point of law; and the judgment of the Court of Arches was confirmed, on further appeal, by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, Feb. 6, 1858. The Archdeacon was editor of the Church and State Review, from its establishment in 1862 till Aug., 1865; and, as a member of the Lower House of Convocation in 1861 and 1864, was Chairman of the Committees, the Reports of which issued in the condemnation of "Essays and Reviews," and of Dr. Colenso's published writings. Archdeacon Denison published his autobiography under the title of "Notes of My Life," 1878. After the election of 1885, the Archdeacon published in December a pamphlet, "Mr. Gladstone;" in its seventh thousand, March, 1886. In 1893 he published an Appendix to "Notes of My Life," and to "Mr. Gladstone."

DENMAN, The Rt. Hon. George, is the fourth son of Thomas, first Lord Denman (who was many years Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench), by Theodosia Anne, eldest daughter of the late Rev. Richard Vevers, rector of Kettering, Northamptonshire. He was born at No. 50, Russell Square, London, Dec. 23, 1819, and was educated at Repton Grammar School, whence he proceeded to Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was successively Scholar and Fellow. He took his B.A. degree in 1842 as "Captain of the Poll." He was also Senior Classic. As a son of a peer he was exempted from the general rule then in force, which made a place in the mathematical tripos a necessary qualification for competing for classical honours. He proceeded M.A. in 1845, was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1846, and went the Home Circuit. He held for some years the office of auditor of his former college. In 1857 he was appointed one of the University counsel. Mr. Denman unsuccessfully contested the University of Cambridge in 1856, and the borough of Tiverton in 1865. He was first elected member for Tiverton as Lord Palmerston's colleague in the Liberal interest in May, 1859, and represented the borough from that time until 1872, with the exception of a very brief interval in 1856-66, when he was out of Parliament. He promoted and carried a Bill in 1864 for assimilating the law on criminal trials to that on civil trials in certain matters of evidence and practice; and in 1869 a Bill for further amending the law of evidence by abolishing the disqualification of witnesses for want of religious belief and on other grounds. Mr. Denman was appointed one of the new governing body of the Charterhouse School in 1872. In Oct., 1872, he was chosen to succeed to the vacancy caused in the Court of Common Pleas by the death of Mr. Justice Willes. Being the son of a peer he did not receive the customary honour of knighthood, according to the precedents in such cases. In Nov., 1875, by the operation of the Judicature Act, he became a Judge of the High Court of Justice. In Oct., 1892, after twenty years' service as a Judge, first of the Common Pleas, then of the Common Pleas Division of the High Court of Justice, and finally of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court, he retired from the Bench, and on Jan. 30, 1893, he was sworn in at Osborne as a Privy Councillor, and became a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. He is one of the governing body of Repton School, a member of the Committee for administering Gardner's Trust for the Blind, a deputy chairman of the Directors of the Equity and Law Life Assurance Society. He published in 1871 a translation of "Gray's Elegy" into Greek elegiac verse; and in 1873 "The First Book of Pope's Homer's Iliad, translated into Latin elegiacs."

He married, in 1852, Charlotte, daughter of the late Mr. Samuel Hope, banker of Liverpool, by whom he has a numerous family. His eldest son, George Lewis, born in 1854, was appointed one of the Police Magistrates of the Metropolis in 1890, and sits at the South Western Police Court.

DENMARK, King of. See CHRISTIAN IX.

DENNING, William Frederic, F.R.A.S., was born at Braysdown, near Bath, Somerset, on Nov. 25, 1848. His father was Isaac Poyntz Denning (born in the East Indies in Dec., 1819), then manager of the Braysdown Collieries; but who in Jan., 1850, removed to Bristol, and became a public accountant. The son attended several private schools, and early evinced a love for natural history. In Oct., 1865, when acting as clerk to a manufacturing firm at Bristol, he was drawn to the study of astronomy, not by any special incident, or by the interest awakened by any celestial event, but by the mere bent of his inclination. He had probably inherited this taste from his mother, who had long been led to "consider the heavens," and had first aroused in him that love for science which developed itself in his after-life. Procuring some lenses he soon constructed a small telescope, and commenced that observational work which he pursued with so much diligence in later years. His father encouraged these initiatory efforts by presenting him with a three-inch refracting telescope, and afterwards with one of 4¼ inches. The latter was superseded by a 10-inch reflector by With and Browning in 1871, and this has since formed the chief working instrument of Mr. Denning. He has effected many planetary observations, and obtained some interesting facts with regard to the varieties and motions of the spots on Jupiter. On the morning of Oct. 4, 1881, he discovered a periodical comet of 8¾ years, which is now called by his name. Mr. Chambers, in the new edition, 1890, of his large work on "Descriptive Astronomy," states that this is the first comet of short period discovered by an Englishman. Another comet was discovered by Mr. Denning on July 23, 1890. Mr. Denning's chief work has, however, been effected in the field of meteoric astronomy. For many years he watched the fall of meteors and recorded their numbers and directions. A large quantity of materials was accumulated in this way, and in May, 1890, a paper by Mr. Denning was published by the Royal Astronomical Society in which he gave the positions of 918 radiant points of meteor showers. No other observer has obtained such extensive results in this branch of astronomy. In 1877 he discovered that the August meteors (called "Perseids") present a radiant which changes its position, from night to night, amongst the fixed stars, and he subsequently detected many showers of long duration. Mr. Denning has written about sixty papers which have been printed in the Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society, and he has been a very frequent contributor to English and foreign scientific journals. He acted as President of the Liverpool Astronomical Society in 1887-8, and is the author of a work now in the press entitled "Telescopic Work for Starlight Evenings." He became a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society in June, 1877, and was elected an honorary member of the Liverpool Astronomical Society in 1882.

DEPEW, Chauncey Mitchell, LL.D., American lawyer, was born at Peekskill, New York, April 23, 1834. He graduated at Yale College in 1856; studied law, and was admitted to the Bar. In 1861-62 he was a member of the New York Assembly, and from 1863-65 was New York Secretary of State, an office to which he declined a re-election. He was also a tax-commissioner for New York city, and for a brief time Minister to Japan. In 1866 he became attorney for the New York and Harlem Raised Railway Co., and on its consolidation, in 1869, with the New York Central Raised Railway Co. he was appointed the general counsel of the united companies. He was the candidate of the Liberal Republican party in 1872 for the Lieut.-Governorship of the State, but was not elected. The legislature, in 1874, chose him a Regent of the State University, and he was also placed on the Commission for building the Capitol at Albany. He was a prominent candidate in 1877 for election to the United States Senate, but after a prolonged contest, during which he received three-fourths of the votes of the Republican members of the legislature, he withdrew in favour of Mr. Warner Miller. In 1882 he became Second Vice-President of the New York Central Raised Railway, and since 1885 has been its President. He is also President of the West Shore Raised Railway, and of the Union League Club of New York, and for ten years of the Yale Alumni Association, and also of the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution. He is a director in 34 companies. In 1884 he was offered the election for United States Senator from the State of New York, but declined. In 1888, he was a candidate before the Republican National Convention for President of the United States, receiving 100 votes. In the Convention of 1892, he led the forces of President Harrison. He was tendered the position of Secretary of State of the United States, to succeed James C. Blaine, but declined it. Mr. Depew is distinguished not only as an eminently succesful railway manager and as a prominent leader of his political party, but also as one of the most popular speakers of his country, his orations on public occasions and his after-dinner addresses being in great demand. In 1887 the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Yale College. A volume of his "Orations and After-dinner Speeches" was published in 1890.

DERBY, Bishop of. See WERE, THE RT. REV. EDWARD ASH.

DERBY, The Right Hon. Frederick Arthur, 16th Earl, G.C.B. P.C., late Governor-General of Canada, younger son of the fourteenth and brother of the late Earl of Derby, by Emma, second daughter of the first Lord Skelmersdale, was born in London in 1841, and received his education at Eton. He entered the Grenadier Guards in 1858, was appointed Lieutenant and Captain in 1862, and retired in 1865. He represented Preston in the House of Commons, in the Conservative interest, from July, 1865, till Dec., 1868, when he was elected for North Lancashire. He was a Lord of the Admiralty from Aug. to Dec., 1868, and Financial Secretary for War from Feb., 1874, till Aug., 1877, when he became Financial Secretary to the Treasury. On April 2, 1878, Colonel Stanley was appointed Secretary of State for War, in succession to Mr. Hardy, now Lord Cranbrook, and was sworn of the Privy Council. In the autumn recess of that year he and Mr. W. H. Smith, the First Lord of the Admiralty, with a numerous suite, visited the island of Cyprus. He went out of office with his party in April, 1880. In Lord Salisbury's government he was Secretary of State for the Colonies from June, 1885, till Feb., 1886, and in the Cabinet of Aug., 1886, was appointed President of the Board of Trade, and raised to the peerage with the title of Lord Stanley of Preston. In 1888 he became Governor-General of Canada, and was succeeded in 1893 by Lord Elgin. In the same year he succeeded to the title of the late Lord Derby. He married, in 1864, Lady Constance, eldest daughter of the fourth Earl of Clarendon.

DERRY AND RAPHOE, Bishop of. See ALEXANDER, THE RIGHT REV. WILLIAM.

DERVISH PACHA, a Turkish General and diplomatist, was born in the year 1223 of the Hegira (1817), at Eyoub, a suburb of Constantinople, where his father exercised the functions of an Imam and primary school teacher. At the age of twelve he entered the Preparatory School of Engineering which had been recently founded by the Sultan Mahmoud. He was one of the Turkish youths sent to Europe by that monarch to make special studies, in 1837. After spending several years in England, he proceeded to Paris, where he attended from 1839 to 1842 the lectures in the School of Mines. On his return to his native country he was nominated Engineer-in-Chief of the mines of Keban and Argana, in Asia Minor, and afterwards Professor of Chemistry and Physics in the Military School of Constantinople. At a somewhat later date he became Director of the same school, with the rank of General of Brigade. He was advanced to the grade of General of Division in 1849, and was appointed Ottoman Commissioner for settling the frontier line between Turkey and Persia. On his return from this mission, which lasted nearly four years, Dervish was sent to the Danubian Principalities (1854) in the capacity of Plenipotentiary, in order to reinstate the Hospodars, Hirbey and Ghika. The following year he was appointed Chief Commander of all the military schools of the Turkish Empire; and at the beginning of the year 1856 he was delegated by the Porte to attend the great council of war which had been summoned to assemble in Paris. After the treaty of March 30, he was nominated Commissioner of the Porte for the rectification of the frontiers of Bessarabia. When the new Sultan Abd-ul-Aziz created in Turkey a Special Administration of Mines and Forests, he intrusted the direction of it to Dervish Pacha, Aug., 1861. The following year Dervish Pacha was engaged in the military operations which took place in Montenegro, and in concert with Husein Pacha, he compelled, by a series of successful encounters in the field, the Prince Nicholas and his father Miako to sign the peace of Scutari in Aug., 1862. In Feb., 1886, he was sent to Syria as special commissioner charged with the pacification of the Lebanon. In the Russian war of 1878 Dervish Pacha was engaged in the military defence of Batoum, then besieged by the Russians under Prince Mirsky. The siege was effectually repulsed; but it was finally stipulated by the treaty of peace concluded at Constantinople that Batoum should be ceded to Russia. The Civil Governor of Batoum, however, incited by the Lazis, 10,000 of whom were in arms, to defend the place, refused to surrender it to the enemy; and it became the task of Dervish Pacha to put down the Lazis, and to deliver Batoum over to the Russians. Two years later, in 1880, he was called upon to perform a very similar act in the case of Dulcigno. The Albanian League were in arms to prevent the delivery of that Adriatic seaport to Montenegro in accordance with the decision of the European Conference. The repugnance of Turkey to execute this promise was at last overcome, either by the naval demonstration in the Adriatic, or by a menace of the seizure of the Customs' revenues at Smyrna; and Dervish Pacha was then sent with a large Turkish force to put down the Albanian League. On April 20, 1881, the opposition of the Albanians was completely crushed by the decisive victory he gained over 10,000 troops of the League; and the rebellious Beys of Albania were mulcted in heavy sums of money, with which the Porte was content. At the beginning of June, 1882, a week before the now historic riot and massacre at Alexandria, the Sultan of Turkey sent Dervish Pacha as special commissioner to Egypt to settle the dispute between the Khedive, Tewfik Pacha, and Arabi Pacha, leader of the military party, who had again forced himself on the Khedive as Minister of War.

DESCHANEL, Émile Martin, was born at Paris, Nov. 14, 1819, and, after a brilliant course of study at the Collège Louis-le-Grand, was appointed Professor of Rhetoric at the College of Bourges; shortly afterwards he returned in the same capacity to Paris. He wrote successively for the Revue Indépendante, the Revue des Deux Mondes, and the National, and several articles on literary criticism for La Liberté de Penser. To this last-named journal he contributed also a series of essays on politics and social philosophy, entitled "Catholicisme et Socialisme," and in consequence was cited to appear before the Council of Public Instruction, and, in spite of an eloquent appeal, was suspended from all his offices. He then gave his entire energies to the Republican press. On Dec. 2, 1851, he was arrested, imprisoned for some time, and subsequently banished. Until 1859 he resided in Brussels, when he returned to France and became one of the editors of the Journal des Débats. In 1869 he joined the staff of the National. At the general elections of Feb., 1876, M. Deschanel was returned for the Seine, and after the act of May 16, 1877, he was one of the 363 deputies who refused a vote of confidence in the Broglie Ministry. He is the author of "Les Courtisanes de la Grèce," 1854; "Histoire de la Conversation," 1858; "La Vie des Comédiens," 1860; "Physiologie des Ecrivains et des Artistes," 1864; "Études sur Aristophane," 1867; "A Bâtons rompus," 1868; "Les Conférences à Paris et en France," 1870; "La Question des Femmes et la Morale laïque," 1876; "Le Peuple et la Bourgeoisie," 1881; "Le Romantisme des Classiques," which is a carefully re-edited reprint of many of his lectures. He contributes to the Indépendance Belge under the signature of ΔΕΣ. In June, 1881, he was elected a Life Senator and Honorary Professor of French Literature at the Collège de France.

DE STAAL, Georges, entered the diplomatic service as Secretary of Embassy at Constantinople. He subsequently became Minister to the Court of Würtemberg, and was thence transferred to London as Russian Ambassador in July, 1884. He, with M. Lessar as special coadjutor, had the management of the delicate diplomatic negotiations that attended the despatch of the Afghan Frontier Commission, the "unfortunate incident" of Penjdeh, &c.; and those also which followed the various crises in Bulgarian Affairs, 1885-6.

DES VŒUX, Sir G. William, G.C.M.G., is a younger son of the late Rev. Henry Des Vœux, and brother of the present baronet of that name. He was born at Baden-Baden on the 22nd of September, 1834, and was educated at the Charterhouse and at Balliol College, Oxford. Intended for the Church, he preferred to seek his fortune in the Colonies. In 1862 he was called to the Bar of Ontario (then Canada West); and having passed his legal examinations with distinction, he was appointed in 1863 to be a special magistrate in British Guiana by the Duke of Newcastle, then Secretary of State for the Colonies. After five years' service in Demerara, his representations to the Home Government caused the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the treatment of the Coolie immigrants, and resulted in a large amelioration of their condition. In 1869 Mr. Des Vœux was appointed Administrator of St. Lucia, and on taking charge of that post he found the colony in a state of extreme depression, due largely to corruption in the administration of justice and other official misconduct. But the severe measures which he adopted quickly brought about improvement, and within three years the revenue nearly doubled. During his tenure of office in this island he initiated a great number of useful measures, and also, with the assistance of Chief Justice Armstrong, prepared the code of law now in force, which, being based on the ancient law of the island (the Coutume de Paris), embodies with it improvements taken from the code of Quebec, the Code Napoleon, and the code of Louisiana, as well as many modifications required by modern and local conditions. This code, unlike other codes of a similar character, contains a chapter of definitions which was entirely the work of Mr. Des Vœux. In 1877 he was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Trinidad, and though received there with coolness, owing to his views and action with reference to contract-labour, he, on leaving the colony after a year's administration, had won the regard of all classes—employers as well as employed. In 1878 he was appointed to act for Sir Arthur Gordon (now Lord Stanmore) in the government of Fiji, and during this administration her Majesty's Government recognised by special despatch his "energy and resource" as displayed in the protection of the colony under peculiarly difficult circumstances on the arrival of a ship containing six hundred coolies infected with cholera and small-pox. In May, 1880, he was appointed Governor of the Bahamas; but when on the point of departure for that colony he, on the request of the Secretary of State, proceeded again to Fiji, being appointed Governor in succession to Sir A. Gordon, and arrived there in December of that year. In 1882, on the resignation by Sir Arthur Gordon of the government of New Zealand, Mr. Des Vœux, by virtue of a commission, until then dormant, assumed the functions of High Commissioner of the Western Pacific, an office which he retained until his departure from Fiji in 1885. In that capacity he attended the Australasian Convention held at Sydney in 1883, forming one of the committee which drafted the Federal Council Bill, and initiating some of the resolutions of the Convention with reference to New Guinea and the Western Pacific. Mr. (now become Sir G. William) Des Vœux returned to England in ill-health in the spring of 1885; and being in 1886 appointed Governor of Newfoundland, received on his departure for that colony a joint address from the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Societies, bearing testimony to his "prolonged and successful efforts in the cause of humanity and civilisation." Sir William arrived in Newfoundland at a time of great political and sectarian excitement (aroused by an appointment to the office of Governor, which had to be withdrawn and was superseded by his own), and at once set himself to bring about peace with so much success that within a few months three Catholic members were taken into the Government which had been formed as exclusively Protestant. When leaving the colony after a year's administration, Sir William received addresses of very unusual warmth from both Houses of the Legislature, while the leaders of the two most opposed sects (Catholics and Wesleyans) separately attributed to him a religious peace such as had not been known for many years. Appointed in 1887 Governor of Hong Kong, Sir William proceeded thither in October of that year, and when after an administration of little more than two years he was compelled by ill-health to seek a change of climate, he experienced on his departure for England a demonstration of respect on the part of all classes of the community, Europeans and Chinese alike, such as was said to have been unprecedented in the history of the Colony. Sir William returned to Hong Kong in Dec., 1880, when his health, having again broken down, he felt compelled to resign his office, and returning to England viâ Japan and America, he for the fourth time during his service completed the circuit of the globe. Sir William was appointed C.M.G. in 1877, was promoted to K.C.M.G. in 1882, and in 1883 to G.C.M.G., in recognition of his "long and valuable services." He married in 1875 Marion Denison, daughter of Sir John Pender, G.C.M.G., M.P., and has four children living. Sir William's writings have been mostly of an official character, and except some articles in the Nineteenth Century, have been published exclusively in Blue-books.

DE VERE, Aubrey Thomas, a poet and political writer, third son of the late Sir Aubrey de Vere, Bart., of Curragh Chase, co. Limerick, was born in 1814, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He has published "The Waldenses; or the Fall of Rora; a lyrical tale," 1842, "The Search after Proserpine, and other Poems," 1843; "Poems, Miscellaneous and Sacred," 1853; "May Carols," 1857 and 1881; "The Sisters: Inisfail; and other Poems," 1861; "The Infant Bridal, and other Poems," a selection from his poetry, 1864; "Irish Odes and other Poems," 1869; "The Legends of St. Patrick," 1872; "Alexander the Great, a Dramatic Poem," 1874; "St. Thomas of Canterbury, a Dramatic Poem," 1876; "Legends of the Saxon Saints," 1879; "The Foray of Queen Meane, and other Legends of Ireland's Heroic Age," 1882; "Legends and Records of the Church and the Empire," 1887; "St. Peter's Chains," 1888. His prose works are: "English Misrule and Irish Misdeeds," 1848; "Picturesque Sketches of Greece and Turkey," 2 vols., 1850; "Ireland's Church Property and the right use of it," 1867; "Pleas for Secularization," 1867; "The Church Establishment of Ireland," 1867; "The Church Settlement of Ireland, or Hibernia Pacanda," 1868; "Constitutional and Unconstitutional Political Action," 1881; "Essays chiefly on Poetry," 2 vols., 1887; "Essays chiefly Literary and Ethical," 1889. He edited in 1878 a correspondence on religious and philosophical subjects, under the title of "Proteus and Amadeus." In 1890 appeared "Aubrey De Vere's Poems: a selection," edited by Mr. John Dennis. Among Mr. De Vere's latest books and compilations are: "The Household Poetry Book," "Mediæval Records and Sonnets," and "Religious Poems of the Nineteenth Century," 1893.

DEVONSHIRE, The Right Hon. Spencer Compton Cavendish, Duke of, P.C., eldest surviving son of the late William, 7th Duke of Devonshire, by Lady Blanche Georgina Howard, daughter of George, 6th Earl of Carlisle, was born July 23, 1833, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1854, and was made LL.D. in 1862. He was attached to Earl Granville's special mission to Russia in 1856. In March, 1857, he was returned to the House of Commons in the Liberal interest as one of the members for North Lancashire. At the opening of the new Parliament in 1859, he moved a vote of no confidence in Lord Derby's Government, and it was carried by 323 votes against 310. In March, 1863, he was appointed a Lord of the Admiralty, and in April in the same year Under-Secretary for War. On the reconstruction of Lord Russell's second Administration, in Feb., 1866, the Marquis of Hartington, as he then was, became Secretary for War, and retired with his colleagues in July of that year. At the general election of Dec., 1868, he lost his seat for North Lancashire, but was immediately afterwards returned for the Radnor boroughs, having first received the office of Postmaster-General in Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet. He held that office till Jan., 1871, when he succeeded Mr. Chichester Fortescue as Chief Secretary for Ireland. His lordship went out of office with his party in Feb., 1874. When Mr. Gladstone, shortly before the assembling of Parliament in 1875, announced his intention of abandoning the post of leader of the Liberal party, a meeting of the members of the Opposition was held at the Reform Club (Feb. 3), under the presidency of Mr. John Bright. On the motion of Mr. Villiers, seconded by Mr. Samuel Morley, a resolution was unanimously passed to the effect that the Marquis of Hartington should be requested to undertake the leadership of the Liberal party in the House of Commons. His lordship accepted this responsible position, and became the acknowledged leader of the Opposition in the Lower House. He received the freedom of the city of Glasgow, Nov. 5, 1877; and was installed as Lord Rector of the University of Edinburgh, Jan. 31, 1879. At the general election of April, 1880, he was elected M.P. for North-East Lancashire. On the resignation of the Conservative Government, the Marquis of Hartington was sent for by the Queen to form an Administration; but this task, having been declined by him and Earl Granville, eventually devolved on the former leader of the Liberal party, Mr. Gladstone, who constructed a Cabinet, in which the Marquis of Hartington occupied a seat as Secretary of State for India, from May, 1880, till Dec. 16, 1882, when he was transferred to the War Office in succession to Mr. Childers, who had become Chancellor of the Exchequer. He resigned with the Government in June, 1885, and was elected for the Rossendale division of Lancashire, Dec., 1885. In 1886, on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Cabinet, Lord Hartington declined to join it; but, on the contrary, took up the position of leader of the Unionist Liberals. He moved the first resolution at the great Opera House meeting; and also, in the House of Commons, the rejection of the Bill at the debate on the second reading. His election for the Rossendale division in 1886 was looked upon with immense interest. He was returned by 5,399 votes against 3,949. When the new Government was formed, he declined to become a member of it, preferring to give Lord Salisbury an "outside support." After the secession of Lord Randolph Churchill, Lord Salisbury again endeavoured to induce Lord Hartington to join the Cabinet, but in vain. He has since allied himself closely with Lord Salisbury, and his antagonism to Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule policy has become more and more decided. In 1890 he was severely ill for some time. In April, 1891, he was appointed Chairman of the Royal Commission on Labour. At the close of the same year he succeeded his father as Duke of Devonshire, and in January, 1892, was inaugurated as Chancellor of Cambridge University in succession to the late Duke. His installation took place in June. In August he was married privately at Christ Church, Mayfair, to Louise, Duchess of Manchester, widow of the seventh Duke, who died in 1890. Shortly afterwards the Duke of Devonshire was invested with the Order of the Garter. On Sept. 5, 1893, he moved the rejection of the Home Rule Bill in the House of Lords.

DEWAR, Professor James, M.A., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., was born in 1842 at Kincardine-on-Forth, Scotland, and was educated at Dollar Academy and the University of Edinburgh. He was assistant to Sir Lyon Playfair, when Professor of Chemistry in the University of Edinburgh, from whom he received his chemical training. Subsequently he studied at Ghent, under the celebrated Professor Auguste Kekulie. He has been Lecturer on Chemistry at the Dick Veterinary College, Chemist to the Highland and Agricultural Society, and Examiner in the Universities of London and Edinburgh. At present he is Jacksonian Professor of "Natural Experimental Philosophy" in the University of Cambridge, and Fullerian Professor of Chemistry in the Royal Institution of Great Britain. He is M.A., and Fellow of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, and F.R.S. of London and Edinburgh, Vice-President of the Chemical Society, &c. Professor Dewar is the author of papers on organic and physical chemistry, viz., on "The Oxidation Products of Picoline," "Transformation of Chinoline into Aniline," "Physical Constants of Hydrogenium," "Specific Heat of Carbon at High Temperatures," "The Physiological Action of Light," "Spectroscopic Investigations," &c. The Professor has taken an active part in the conduct of recent Exhibitions, having occupied the respective positions of Chairman of the Heating and Lighting Jury of the Health Exhibition, and a member of the Executive Council of the Inventions Exhibition. During 1886 and 1887 he gave demonstrations at the Royal Institution to the Prince and Princess of Wales on the formation of Liquid Oxygen and Air and the production of temperatures approaching that of the absolute zero. He is a member of the Government Committee on Explosives, and, in association with Sir Frederick Abel, has made inventions with regard to Smokeless Powders, and their application to Military Purposes.

DIAZ, General Porfirio, Mexican soldier and statesman, was born at Oaxaca, Sept. 15, 1830. He was educated in his native city, and began the study of law, but abandoned it to enter the National Guards when the Americans invaded Mexico in 1847. In 1854 he joined in the insurrection against Santa Anna, and from that time until his election to the Presidency in 1876 was actively engaged in the many attempts against the various Governments which in rapid succession tried to rule Mexico. During this period he displayed great abilities as a leader and military commander; and as early as 1861, at the request of Gen. Ortega, his superior officer, was made a General. Twice (1863 and 1865) he was taken prisoner, but each time effected his escape. His first administration as President was a stormy one, and much of his time was occupied in quelling revolts. At the end of his term (1880) he secured the election of Gen. Gonzalez (his Secretary of War) as his successor; and he himself took charge of one of the departments of the Government, and was also appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, but never took his seat. When Gonzalez's term expired in 1844, Diaz was elected for a second term; and by successive re-elections has been continued in the presidential office to the present time (1894). His administration on the whole has been a successful one. The country has become pacified, its trade increased, its resources developed, its education advanced, and its railroads and telegraphs extended.

DIBBS, Sir George, Premier of New South Wales, has for many years been representative of Murrumbidgee in the New South Wales Legislature. From 1883 to 1885 he was Colonial Treasurer under Sir Alexander Stuart, whom he succeeded in the Premiership. He was Colonial Secretary in 1886-87, and in 1889 was again Premier for a short period. On the defeat of Sir H. Parkes in 1891 he became Premier for the third time, and signalised his tenure of power by introducing a strong Protectionist tariff. In 1892 he received the honour of knighthood, having come to England to establish confidence in Australian and more especially in New South Wales Stock. In 1893 he became bankrupt, and resigned his seat in the Legislative Assembly whilst retaining the Premiership, but he was at once re-elected. He was defeated at the elections of 1894, and resigned office.

DICEY, Edward, C.B., second son of the late T. E. Dicey, Esq., of Claybrook Hall, Leicestershire, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took honours both in the mathematical and in the classical tripos. He has frequently contributed to the Nineteenth Century, Fortnightly Review, St. Paul's, and Macmillan's Magazine, and other periodicals, and was for some years a leader writer on the staff of the Daily Telegraph, for which he has acted as special correspondent in different parts of the continent. While travelling in the East, Mr. Dicey was asked to undertake the editorship of the Daily News. He held this post for about three months in 1870. Immediately on quitting the Daily News Mr. Dicey was offered and accepted the editorship of the Observer, a position which he held up to 1889. He is the author of "A Memoir of Cavour;" "Rome in 1860;" "The Schleswig-Holstein War," 1864; "The Battlefields of 1866," published in 1866; "A Month in Russia during the Marriage of the Czarewich," 1867; "The Morning Land," an account of three months' tour in the East, 1870; and "Victor Emmanuel" in the "New Plutarch Series." 1882. Mr. Dicey is an authority on Egypt, and has been a strong advocate of a British annexation of that country. He was made a C.B. in 1885. Of late years he has taken much interest in South African affairs, and has recently paid a long visit to the Transvaal. He has also travelled in Bulgaria, and has published a work on the Bulgarian people and politics. His brother, Mr. Albert Dicey, is Vinerian Professor of English Law at Oxford, and is the author of a remarkable book on the British Constitution (1886).

DICKINSON, William Howship, M.D., was born June 9, 1832, at Brighton, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge, and St. George's Hospital, London. He is an Honorary Fellow of Caius College. After holding the offices of medical registrar and curator of the museum he became assistant physician to St. George's, then physician and lecturer on medicine. He was also in succession assistant physician, physician, and consulting physician to the Hospital for Sick Children. Dr. Dickinson held at different times the offices of Examiner in Medicine to the Universities of Cambridge, London and Durham, and the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons. He was appointed in 1869 Secretary to the Pathological Society, and in 1889 President. In 1885 he became Censor to the College of Physicians. He has made researches in connection with pathology and other branches of medicine, of which the following are the more important:—On the Action of Digitalis upon the Uterus, describing for the first time its contractile effect upon that organ (1855); on the Pathology of the Kidney, distinguishing disease of the intertubular structures from that of the tubes, and asserting the intertubular origin of granular degeneration (1859, 1860, 1861); on the Function of the Cerebellum, assigning to that organ an especial effect upon the lower limbs (1865); on the nature of the so-called Amyloid or Lardaceous Degeneration, pointing out its connection with Suppuration (1867); on the Nature of the enlargement of the Viscera, which occurs in rickets, showing the affection of those organs to be analogous to that of the bones (1869); on the Futility of Counter-irritation as a Method of Treatment; on the Changes produced in the Nervous System by the Amputation of Limbs; on Chronic Hydrocephalus, pointing out the frequent origin of the disease in cranial relaxation; on Diabetes, showing the general presence of structural changes in the nervous system, and referring the symptoms to organic change, instead of, as hitherto, to functional derangement; on the Pathology of Tetanus and of Chorea, with reference to structural alterations in the nervous centres; on the Pathological Results of Alcohol; and on the Presystolic Murmur, falsely so-called. Most of the preceding papers are published in the Transactions of the Medico-Chirurgical Society. Dr. Dickinson is also the author of works on Albuminuria, Diabetes, and Renal and Urinary Affections, and of a course of Lumleian Lectures on "The Tongue as an Indication in Disease." In 1888 he delivered these lectures, and in 1891 the Harveian Oration.

DICKSEE, Frank, R.A., son of Thomas Francis Dicksee, was born Nov. 27, 1853, and received his first artistic instruction from his father. In 1870 he became a student of the Royal Academy, and in 1872 obtained a silver medal for a drawing from the antique. In 1875 he gained the gold medal for an historical painting, "Elijah confronting Ahab and Jezebel in Naboth's Vineyard," and in the following year exhibited the picture. At that time he worked also at drawings for book illustrations, and made some designs for stained glass. In 1887 he exhibited "Harmony," which was purchased by the trustees of the Chantry Bequest Fund; this was followed in 1879 by "Evangeline." He has since exhibited "The House Builders," 1880; "Portraits of Sir William and the Hon. Lady Welby-Gregory," "The Symbol," 1881; "The Love Story," 1881; "The Foolish Virgins," 1883; "Romeo and Juliet," 1884; "Chivalry," 1885, and "Memories," 1886. In 1887 "Hesperia;" in 1888 "Within the Shadow of the Church;" in 1889 "The Passing of Arthur," and in 1890 "The Redemption of Tannhäuser," were exhibited. In 1881 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy. In 1891 Mr. Dicksee was elected a Royal Academician, and in the same year exhibited "The Mountain of the Winds," and "The Crisis." In 1892 he exhibited "Leila" and "Startled," the latter being his diploma work; in 1893 "The Funeral of a Viking;" and in 1894 "The Magic Crystal," and "A Summer Sea."

DIDON, Henri, a celebrated French Dominican preacher and author, was born at Touvet, Isère, on March 17th, 1840. At an early age he came under the influence of Lacordaire, and became a novice in a Dominican convent, taking his vows in 1862 and being shortly afterwards sent to Rome to complete his studies. At the age of twenty-eight he made his first appearance as a preacher in Paris, and was thenceforward regarded as a disciple of Lacordaire, whose Liberal Catholicism he warmly espoused. In 1871 he preached the funeral sermon at Nancy on Monseigneur Darboy. He was subsequently appointed Prior of the Dominicans of the Rue Saint-Jean de Beauvais in Paris, and in their chapel began giving a series of addresses which made him famous. Science and faith chiefly occupied his attention. He was himself a student of physiology, and his friendship for Claude Bernard was well known. In 1879, however, he treated of divorce, and alarmed his clerical superiors, who forbade him to continue his lectures on that subject. He was summoned to Rome, and was sent into disciplinary seclusion in the Convent of Corbara in Corsica. At the end of eighteen months spent in study and retirement, he went into Germany and, as a student, followed courses of lectures on Greek, Hebrew, &c. He made a very thorough study of German opinion, manners and customs, and on his return to France published an interesting work on that country, in which he pointed out that theory and practice, speculation and reality, have nothing in common in the Fatherland. Père Didon has published numerous volumes of sermons, of which the first, "What is a Monk?" appeared in 1868. His best known work is his "Vie de Jesus," in the writing of which he sought impressions in Palestine itself, as M. Renan had done before him. The work was published in 1890, and has had an immense circulation. At the beginning of that year Père Didon was appointed director of the College of Albert le Grand at Arcueil, and solemnly installed on March 27. In January, 1891, he preached a notable sermon at the Madeleine in Paris, the subject of which was "The Church and the Papacy." In Lent, 1892, he preached in the same church.

DICKSON, General Sir Collingwood, R.A., V.C., G.C.B., entered the army, and became Second Lieutenant, Dec. 18, 1835; First Lieutenant, Nov. 29, 1837; Captain, April 1, 1846; Brevet-Major, May 22, 1846; Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, June 20, 1854; Lieut.-Colonel, Feb. 23, 1856; Brevet Colonel, June 29, 1855; Colonel, April 5, 1866; Colonel-Commander, Nov. 17, 1875; Major-General, Aug. 24, 1866; Lieut.-General, June 8, 1876; General, Oct. 1, 1877. Sir Collingwood Dickson served on the staff of Lord Raglan during the Eastern Campaign, 1854-55, and was present at the affairs of Bulganac and M'Kenzie's Farm, the battles of Alma and Inkerman, the charge at Balaklava, the Expedition to Kertch, and the siege of Sebastopol (wounded Feb. 4, 1855). He commanded the right siege train, and was present at the bombardments of Oct. 17, April 9, and June 17 (medal with four clasps, C.B., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, and Colonel, Victoria Cross, Officer of the Legion of Honour, 2nd Class of the Medjidieh, and Turkish Medal). He was awarded the V.C., "for having, on Oct. 17, 1854, when the batteries of the Right Attack had run short of powder, displayed the greatest coolness and contempt of danger in directing the unloading of several wagons of the field battery which were brought up from the trenches to supply the want, and having personally assisted in carrying the powder-barrels under a severe fire from the enemy." Sir Collingwood is also a Knight of Charles the Third; 1st class St. Fernando; and Knight of Isabella the Catholic.

DIGGLE, Joseph Robert, M.A., was born in 1849, in Lancashire, and completed his education at Wadham College, Oxford.

He was ordained priest in 1875, and was Curate of St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, till 1878. In 1879 he was elected a member of the London School Board for Marylebone, and in 1885 was chosen Chairman in place of Mr. Buxton, who was defeated. He was re-elected to the Chair in 1888, and again in 1892. He heads the clerical party in the School Board, and during 1894 has been involved in the controversy with regard to religious education in the Board Schools of London. He was succeeded in the Chairmanship of the Board, towards the close of 1894, by Lord George Hamilton.

DILKE, The Right Hon. Sir Charles Wentworth, Bart., was born at Chelsea, Sept. 4, 1843, being the son of the late Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke, and grandson of Charles Wentworth Dilke, the critic, who both were noticed in previous editions of this work. He received his academical education at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated as senior legalist in Jan., 1866. In the same year he was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple, and soon afterwards he proceeded to Canada and the United States, where he travelled alone for some months. At the end of Aug., 1866, he met at St. Louis Mr. Hepworth Dixon, with whom he crossed the Great Plains and Rocky Mountains, and visited the Mormon cities. Parting at Salt Lake City from Mr. Dixon, who returned to England, and shortly afterwards dedicated to him "New America," Mr. Dilke passed on to Nevada and California, and after a considerable stay at San Francisco, sailed for Panama, and thence to New Zealand, Tasmania and Australia, where he visited all the Colonies, and gathered much information as to their political present and their prospects of a great commercial future. Visiting Ceylon on his way, Mr. Dilke passed from West Australia to Madras and Calcutta, whence he crossed Upper India to Lahore, and returned to England by the Indus, Kurrachee, Bombay, and Egypt; thus completing the circuit of the globe. The result of these journeyings was the publication of "Greater Britain: a Record of Travel in English-speaking Countries during 1866-67," 2 vols., 1868—a work which, treating the new subject of the influence of race on government and of climatic conditions upon race, had perhaps the greatest success that ever attended the publication of an author's first work. It passed through four editions in a single year in England, and, having been republished by two firms in America, has also passed through a still larger number of editions there. One of its results was the election, in 1868, of its author, who is in politics a Radical, to represent the new borough of Chelsea. He was returned at the head of the poll, and by a majority of nearly two to one over Dr. W. H. Russell, and was at that time the youngest man who ever represented a metropolitan constituency; in Parliament he chiefly spoke upon foreign, Indian, and Colonial affairs. Sir Charles Dilke has succeeded his father and grandfather in the proprietorship of the Athenæum, and is understood to have at one time followed his grandfather's example in assuming the editorship himself. He is also the proprietor of Notes and Queries, and one of the proprietors of the Gardeners' Chronicle. Having in 1871 been attacked for holding Republican opinions, he admitted publicly that he had always preferred a Republican form of Government to a Constitutional Monarchy. His re-election at Chelsea was in consequence violently opposed in Feb., 1874, but he was again returned at the head of the poll. In the same year he published an anonymous satire, the authorship of which remained a secret for four months. It was called "The Fall of Prince Florestan of Monaco," and passed through three editions, and was translated into French. In 1875 he published the works of his grandfather, with a memoir, under the title of "Papers of a Critic." In the same year he again went round the world, and wrote on China and Japan in the monthly magazines. His chief legislative achievements before 1880 were the creation of School Boards directly elected by the ratepayers (in place of committees of boards of guardians, as proposed by Mr. W. E. Forster), by an amendment of the Education Bill; the conferring of the municipal franchise on women; the abolition of the barbarous penalty of drawing and quartering; and, in 1878, the extension of the hours of polling at parliamentary elections in the metropolis by the measure known as "Dilke's Act." On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's administration in May, 1880, Sir Charles Dilke was appointed Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. In 1881-82 he was Chairman of the Royal Commission for the Negotiation of a Commercial Treaty with France, which sat for many months in conference with the French Government High Commissioners both in London and in Paris. In Dec., 1882, he was made President of the Local Government Board (with a seat in the Cabinet), in succession to Mr. Dodson, who had been transferred to the Chancellorship of the Duchy of Lancaster. In 1883 Sir Charles Dilke had charge of the unreformed Corporation Bill, which he carried. In 1884 he was appointed Chairman of the Royal Commission on the Housing of the Working Classes, of which the Prince of Wales, Lord Salisbury, and Cardinal Manning were other members. In 1885 he had charge of the Bill for the Redistribution of Seats. In the same year he carried the Diseases Prevention (Metropolis) Act. At the general election of 1885, he was again returned for Chelsea (reduced borough), but in 1886 was defeated by Mr. Whitmore, the Conservative candidate. In 1885 Sir Charles Dilke married Mrs. Mark Pattison, widow of the late rector of Lincoln College, Oxford. In 1887 he published, through Chapman & Hall, "The Present Position of European Politics," which was translated into French under the title of "L'Europe en 1887," and published by Quantin of Paris. In 1888 he published, through Chapman & Hall, "The British Army;" and at the beginning of 1890, through Macmillan & Co., "Problems of Greater Britain," which has passed through several editions in England, the United States, and the Colonies. In 1891 Sir Charles Dilke wrote, with Mr. Spencer Wilkinson, a volume entitled "Imperial Defence," which was published by Macmillan & Co. In 1892 he was elected Member of Parliament for the Forest of Dean division of Gloucestershire.

DILKE, Emilia Frances (Lady), daughter of the late Colonel Strong, of the Madras army, married first, in 1862, the Rev. Mark Pattison (who died on July 30, 1884), Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford; and second, in 1885, the Right Hon. Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke, Bart. Lady Dilke was long a writer in the Saturday and Westminster Reviews, and afterwards became, for some time, fine-art critic of the Academy. In 1879 Lady Dilke published, through Kegan Paul, Trench & Co., a work in two volumes, illustrated by herself, and entitled "The Renaissance of Art in France." In 1884 she published, in French, through the Librairie de l'Art, a monograph on Claude. In 1886 she published, through Routledge and Sons, "The Shrine of Death," a volume of stories. In 1888 she published, through Chapman & Hall, "Art in the Modern State." In 1888, '89, '90 she contributed several archaic stories to the Universal Review, and wrote in the Fortnightly Review and the New Review on Trades Unions for Women, in which she takes a deep interest. Lady Dilke has since published, through Chapman & Hall, "The Shrine of Love." For many years Lady Dilke wrote the articles on Italy and France in the Annual Register.

DILLMANN, Christian Friedrich August, Ph.D., D.D., was born April 25, 1823, at Illingen, in the district of Maulbronn, in Würtemberg, and educated in the Gymnasium at Stuttgart, and the Lower Evangelical Theological Seminary at Schönthal. From 1840 to 1844 he studied philosophy, Oriental philology, and theology, in the University and in the Higher Theological Seminary at Tübingen. In the autumn of 1844 he passed the first theological official examination, and then devoted another year to the study of the Oriental languages. In 1845 he became a parish vicar in Tersheim, in the district of Vaihingen in Würtemberg. From 1846 to 1848 he made a scientific tour, visiting the libraries in Paris, in London, and at Oxford, where he received from the authorities of the libraries the proposal that he should draw up catalogues of their Æthiopic MSS. In April, 1848, having returned to Würtemberg, he became Repetent in the Theological Seminary at Tübingen, and as such discharged at the same time the professorate of Old Testament Exegesis in the University for the four years, during which, through the departure of Ewald, the office was vacant. In 1852 he became Privat Docent in the Theological Faculty of the University of Tübingen; and in 1853 was nominated by the King a Professor Extraordinary in the same Faculty. After filling various posts at Kiel and Geissen, he became Professor in Ordinary of Old Testament Exegesis in the Theological Faculty of the Metropolitical University of Berlin, which office he still holds. In May, 1846, he graduated as M.A. and Ph.D. in the University of Tübingen. In October, 1862, Professor Dillmann received the honorary degree of D.D. from the University of Leipsic. The learned Professor has written or edited: "Catalogus Codicum MSS. Orientalium qui in Museo Britannico asservantur. Pars III. Codices Æthiopicos continens," 1847; "Catalogus Codicum MSS. Bibliothecæ Bodleianæ Oxoniensis, Pars VII., Codices Æthiopici," 1848; "The Book of Enoch translated and explained," 1853; "The Book of the Jubilees or the little Genesis translated from the Æthiopic and elucidated by Observations," and "The Christian Adam-book of the Orient translated from the Æthiopic," both in Ewald's Jahrbuch der biblischen Wissenschaft. Dr. Dillmann has also undertaken to edit the Old Testament in Æthiopic. Of this splendid work several portions have already been issued. In 1859 Professor Dillmann edited the Book of Jubilees in Æthiopic. Already in 1857 this indefatigable Orientalist had published his "Grammar of the Æthiopic Language;" and in 1865 followed his great work, the "Lexicon Linguæ Æthiopicæ cum Indice Latino" (Leipsic), in large quarto size with 1,522 columns of letterpress. In 1866 came his "Chrestomathia Æthiopica edita et glossario explanata," and in 1869 his commentary on the Book of Job, or "Job Newly Explained," for the third edition of the "Brief Exegetical Handbook." In 1877 appeared his edition of the "Ascencio Isaiæ," Latin and Æthiopic text. He is a corresponding member of the Royal Society of Sciences in Göttingen, and a Chevalier of the first class of the Order of Merit of Philip the Magnanimous of Hesse.

DILLON, John, M.P., second son of the late Mr. John Blake Dillon (M.P. for Tipperary, and one of the rebels of '48), was born in 1851, and educated at the Roman Catholic University of Dublin, where he was distinguished for his proficiency in mathematics. He afterwards studied medicine, and became licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons of Ireland. In 1880 he was returned as member for Tipperary, but in March, 1883, was obliged to resign his seat on account of ill-health. During his parliamentary career he was one of Mr. Parnell's most active supporters, and on Feb. 2, 1881, was the first member "suspended" on the occasion of the suspension of the whole Parnellite party. He was twice imprisoned as a "suspect" under Mr. Forster. In 1885 he was returned unopposed for East Mayo; and in 1886 was re-elected. Mr. Dillon, in company with Mr. W. O'Brien, having been liberated on bail, pending a political trial in November, 1890, forfeited the bail and escaped to the United States to fulfil a lecturing engagement there. In February, 1891, he gave himself up to the authorities, and was imprisoned in Ireland. He was released on July 30, and in a speech, delivered at Mallow on August 9, threw in his lot with the McCarthyites, as opposed to the Parnellites.

DITTMAR, Professor William, LL.D., F.R.S. and F.R.S.E., an eminent chemist, born April 14, 1833, at Umstadt, near Darmstadt, was educated at the Polytechnic School of Darmstadt. He passed his examination there as apothecary (pharmaceutist) in 1856. Subsequently he studied at Heidelberg under Bunsen, who appointed him to an assistantship in his laboratory. Afterwards he became assistant to Dr. H. E. Roscoe in Owens College, Manchester. From 1861 to 1869 he was Chief Assistant in the chemical laboratory of the University of Edinburgh. In March, 1873, he was appointed Assistant Lecturer in Owens College; and in Sept. 1874, Professor in Anderson's University, Glasgow, which institution was, in 1887, incorporated with the Glasgow and West of Scotland Technical College. Professor Dittmar has published numerous chemical papers on original researches. He is also the author of articles in Watt's Dictionary, and in Liebig's "Handwörterbuch," and of part of Jahresbericht uber die Fortschritte der Chemie for 1870. On the return home of the "Challenger" Expedition he was appointed Analyst to the Expedition, and in that capacity carried out an extensive investigation on the composition of Ocean Water; the results of which are embodied in a memoir forming part of the volume "Physics and Chemistry" in the series of the "Challenger Memoirs." Professor Dittmar is the author also of two handbooks of Chemical Analysis and of one on "Chemical Arithmetic." He is a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and of Edinburgh, and an hon. Doctor of Laws of the Edinburgh University.

DIX, Morgan, D.D., American clergyman, was born at New York city, Nov. 1, 1827, and was graduated from Columbia College in that city in 1848. He studied at the Theol. Seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church (New York), and became a deacon in 1852 and priest in 1853. In 1855 he was appointed an assistant minister in Trinity parish (the largest and most important in New York), of which he has been rector since 1862. His principal publications are "Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans," 1864; "Exposition of the Epistles to the Galatians and Colossians," 1865; "Lecture on the Pantheistic Idea of an Impersonal-Substance Deity," 1865; "Essay on Christian Art," 1853; "Lectures on the Two Estates, that of Wedded in the Lord and that of Single for the Kingdom of Heaven's Sake," 1872; "Memoirs of John A. Dix," 1883; "The Gospel and Philosophy," 1886; and some volumes of sermons and devotional manuals.

DIXON, Professor Harold Bailey, F.R.S., second son of the late William Hepworth Dixon, was born in London Aug. 11, 1852. He was educated at Westminster School, where he was elected on the Foundation in 1867. In 1871 he obtained a junior studentship at Christ Church, Oxford. At Oxford he studied Chemistry under Mr. A. G. Vernon Harcourt in the Christ Church Laboratory. In 1874 he accompanied his father through the United States and Canada, visiting the mines of Nevada and California. At the end of 1875 he took a first class in the Natural Science School, and became assistant to Mr. Vernon Harcourt. In 1876 he began the researches on the reactions of pure gases, to which he has since devoted himself. In 1879 he was appointed Millard Lecturer at Trinity College, and in 1881 Bedford Lecturer at Balliol College, Oxford, of which College he was afterwards elected Fellow. In 1880-81, Mr. Dixon experimented for the Board of Trade on Standards of Light to be used in Photometry, and in 1884-85 he made photometric determinations of various illuminants at the experimental lighthouses erected at the South Foreland by the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House. In 1886 he was elected Fellow of the Royal Society, and in the same year was chosen to succeed Sir Henry Roscoe as Professor of Chemistry and Director of the Chemical Laboratories of the Owens College, Manchester. At the meeting of the British Association at Manchester in 1887 Professor Dixon gave, in a lecture in the Free Trade Hall, a popular account of his researches on the explosions of gases. Professor Dixon acted as Secretary of the General Board of Studies of the Victoria University in 1888-90. In 1890 he was elected Deputy Chairman of the Board, and in 1892 Chairman. In 1891 Mr. Dixon was appointed a member of the Royal Commission to investigate the explosive action of dust in coal-mines. In carrying out this inquiry he has visited the scenes of all the colliery explosions during the past three years, examining the air and analysing the dust of the mines. In 1893 he delivered the Bakerian Lecture of the Royal Society, "On the Rate of Explosion in Gases." His chief papers are "The Conditions of Chemical Change in Gases;" Phil. Trans. of Royal Society, 1884; "On the Combustion of Cyanogen," "On the Decomposition of Carbonic Acid by the Electric Spark," and "On the Combustion of Carbonic Oxide and Hydrogen," in the Journal of the Chemical Society; "On the Oxidation of Sulphurous Acid," and "On the Rate of Explosions in Gases," Phil. Trans., 1893. Mr. Dixon married, in 1885, Olive Beechey Hopkins, daughter of the late Edward Martin Hopkins, of Montreal, and granddaughter of Admiral Beechey, F.R.S.

DIXON, The Rev. Canon Richard Watson, was born in London 1833, and educated at King Edward's School, and at Pembroke College, Oxford. After being ordained he became Curate of St. Mary-the-Less, Lambeth, in 1858, and Second Master of the High School, Carlisle, 1863; he was made hon. Canon of Carlisle in 1874, accepted the Vicarage of Hayton 1875, and the Vicarage of Warkworth in 1883. While at Oxford he started the Oxford and Cambridge Magazine in conjunction with Mr. Burne-Jones and Mr. William Morris, advocating pre-Raphaelite principles. In 1861 he published "Christ's Company and other Poems," followed in 1863 by "Historical Odes." In 1873 he gained the second Peek Prize for an essay on the "Maintenance of the Church of England as an Established Church." In 1875 he published the "Life of James Dixon, D.D.," his father. He has since been occupied in writing a "History of the Church of England," vol. i., 1877, vol. ii. 1880, vol. iii. 1885, vol. iv., 1890. In 1833 he published "Mano, a Poetical History;" in 1884 "Odes and Eclogues," in 1886 "Lyrical Poems," and in 1888 "The Story of Eudocia and her Brothers;" the latter being printed at the private press of the Rev. Henry Daniel, of Worcester College, Oxford. In 1885 Canon Dixon was invited to stand for the Poetry Professorship at Oxford, but withdrew his candidature before the election.

DOBSON, George Edward, F.R.S., born 4th Sept. 1844, at Edgeworthstown, co. Longford, Ireland, is the son of Dr. Parke Dobson, and was educated at the Royal School of Enniskillen, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated B.A. 1866, and was first Senior Moderator, and First Gold Medallist in Experimental and Natural Science; Gold Medallist Pathological Society, M.B., M.Ch., 1867; M.A. and member of the Senate of the University of Dublin, 1875; F.R.S. 1883; Corresponding Member of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia and of the Biological Society of Washington, 1884, etc. He entered the Army Medical Department in 1868, and retired in 1888; and is the author of the following original works: "Monograph of the Asiatic Chiroptera," 1876; "Catalogue of the Chiroptera in the Collection of the British Museum," 1878 (a complete natural history of the order, the first published work of the kind on any of the orders of Mammalia); "Monograph of the Insectivora, Systematic and Anatomical," 1883. (In this work the systematic zoology and anatomical structure of the species are, for the first time, concurrently investigated.) He is also the author of sections "Insectivora," "Chiroptera," and "Rodentia," in art. "Mammalia," and of the articles "Mole," "Shrew," and "Vampire," in the 9th edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica;" "On the Respiration of Indian Fresh Water Fishes," 1874; "On the Digastric Muscle, its Modifications and Functions," 1882; "On the Homologies of the Long Flexor Muscles of the Feet of Mammalia," 1883; and of numerous other papers on Zoology and Comparative Anatomy contributed to various British and foreign scientific journals.

DOBSON, Henry Austin, son of Mr. George Clarisse Dobson, civil engineer, was born at Plymouth, Jan. 18, 1840. At the age of eight or nine he was taken by his parents to Holyhead, in the island of Anglesea; he was educated at Beaumaris, at Coventry, and finally at Strasburg, whence he returned, at the age of sixteen, with the intention of becoming a civil engineer. It was decided, however, that he should enter the Civil Service, and accordingly, in Dec. 1856, he was appointed to a clerkship in the Board of Trade, where he is now a Principal. When Mr. Anthony Trollope first started his magazine, St. Paul's, in 1868, Mr. Dobson was one of the authors whom he first introduced to the public. In 1873 Mr. Dobson first collected his scattered lyrics into a volume dedicated to Mr. Trollope, and entitled "Vignettes in Rhyme, and Vers de Société." It was followed by "Proverbs in Porcelain" in 1877. A selection from these two volumes was published at New York in 1880, and dedicated to Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes. This was reprinted in England in 1883, under the title of "Old World Idylls," which has since been succeeded by a companion volume, "At the Sign of the Lyre," 1885. Mr. Dobson is also the author of a "Life of Hogarth," in the "Biographies of Great Artists," 1879; and of a chapter on "Illustrated Books," in the "Library" by Andrew Lang ("Art at Home Series"), 1881. For the "Parchment Library," he has edited "Eighteenth Century Essays," 1882; "Gay's Fables," 1882; and "The Vicar of Wakefield," 1883; for the Clarendon Press he has edited Beaumarchais' "Le Barbier de Séville," 1884; "Selections from Steele" and "Selections from Goldsmith," 1885. He was also one of the contributors to Ward's "English Poets," 1880; to which he supplied the critical sketches of Prior, Praed, Gay, and Hood. Mr. Dobson has also contributed to the Cornhill, Blackwood, Century, Scribner's, Longman's, Temple Bar, Contemporary, Good Words, and other magazines. He was one of the first to introduce the French forms of verse now so popular in England and America—i.e., rondeau, ballade, villanelle, and so forth, and he contributed a chapter on these forms to Mr. Davenport Adams' "Latter Day Lyrics." Mr. Dobson also wrote the "Life of Fielding" for Macmillan's "English Men of Letters," the series edited by Mr. John Morley; and he has written a long study of Bewick, the artist and wood engraver, for the Century Magazine, which has since been republished under the title of "Thomas Bewick and his Pupils," 1884. He has written also a "Life of Steele" ("English Worthies"), 1886, and a "Life of Goldsmith" ("Great Writers"), 1888. Since 1888 Mr. Dobson's chief works have been a "Memoir of Horace Walpole," 1890, and an exhaustive expansion of his smaller life of Hogarth. This appeared in 1891, as a bulky demy 8vo volume. He has also issued, as volumes of essays, "Four Frenchwomen" (1890) and "Eighteenth Century Vignettes" (1892), a second series of which appeared in 1894; and he has edited "Goldsmith's Plays and Poems" (1889) and "Citizen of the World" (1891), for the "Temple Library;" "Prior's Selected Poems" (1889), for the "Parchment Library;" Fielding's "Journey to Lisbon" (1892), for the "Chiswick Press Reprints," and Holbein's "Dance of Death" (1892), and Dürer's "Little Passion" (1894), for the "Ex-Libris Series." Mr. Dobson is on the councils of the Royal Literary Fund and the Society of Authors, and a member of the Athenæum Club, to which he was elected in 1891 under Rule II.

DOBSON, William Charles Thomas, R.A., was born at Hamburg in 1817, where his father was an English merchant. He soon showed a great taste for drawing, and began his studies from the antique in the British Museum about 1831, and was admitted a student of the Royal Academy in 1836. In 1843 he was appointed head master of the Government School of Design at Birmingham. In 1845 he resigned this office and paid a visit to Italy and Germany. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1860, and became an Academician in Jan. 1872. In 1870 he was elected an Associate of the Society of Painters in Water Colours, and in 1875 a member of the same society. His principal pictures are:—"Tobias, with Raphael, his guardian angel; on their journey to Media," 1883;

"The Charity of Dorcas," 1854; "The Alms Deeds of Dorcas," 1855, painted by command of the Queen; "The Parable of the Children in the Market Place" and "The Prosperous Days of Job," 1856; "Reading the Psalms" and "The Child Jesus going down with his parents to Nazareth," 1857, both in the possession of the Baroness Burdett-Coutts; "Fairy Tales," "The Holy Innocents," and "Hagar and Ishmael sent away," 1858; "Die Heimkehr," "The Plough," "Bethlehem," and "Emilie aus Görwitz," 1860; "Drinking Fountain," "Flower-Girl," and "Bauer Madchen," 1861; "Mamma's Birthday," "The Picture-Book," and "A Fancy Portrait," 1862; "Frühling," "At the Well" and "The Holy Family returned from Egypt," 1863; "Girl with Ferns" and "Morning," 1864; "The Good Shepherd," 1865; "In Memoriam," and "The Child Jesus in the Temple," 1866; "Stragglers," 1867; "Happy Thoughts," "Trespassing," and "Too Tired," 1868; "Autumn's Wreck supplies the winter store," "A Picture-Book," and "Summer," 1869; "Nunc Dimittis," "The Cottage Garden," 1870; "Alms" and "Schwesterliebe," 1871; "The Crown to the Husband" and "Faith," 1872; "St. Paul at Philippi," deposited in the Academy on his election as an Academician, "Pyrrha," and "Kate Kearney," 1873; "Father's Welcome Home," 1874; "The Young Bather," 1875; "The Offering" and "At the Well," 1876; "The Fern Gatherer," "Una Fascina di Olive," and "Waiting," 1877; "At the Masquerade," "Mother and Child," and "Ligeia," 1878; "A Venetian Girl," 1879; "Mignon" and "Ione," 1880; "Ada with the Golden Hair" and "Kezia," 1881; "The Golden Age" and "Christmas Carols," 1882; "Morning" and "Bianca Capella," 1883. In the past year (1894) he exhibited two portraits at the Royal Academy Exhibition. Many of the above have been engraved. Amongst his water-colour drawings may be mentioned "The Young Nurse;" "The Camellia," 1873; and "Nursery Tales," 1874.

DODGE, Mary, née Mapes, American authoress, was born at New York in 1838. Early in life she married Mr. William Dodge, a lawyer in New York, and on his death was left a widow with two sons to support. She took up literature, and for a number of years was one of the editors of Hearth and Home, assisting Harriet Beecher Stowe and Donald G. Mitchell ("Ik Marvel"). When in 1873 St. Nicholas, an illustrated monthly for children, was started by the owners of The Century Magazine, it was placed in charge of Mrs. Dodge, and under her able direction it has met with very great success. In addition to her editorial labours she has contributed to a number of English and American periodicals, and has published: "Irvington Stories," 1864; "Hans Brinker, or the Silver Skates," 1865, which has been translated into French, German, Dutch, and other European languages; "A Few Friends and How They Amused Themselves," 1869; "Rhymes and Jingles," 1874; "Theophilus and Others," 1876; "Along the Way," 1879, poems; and "Donald and Dorothy," 1883. An amusing sketch by her called "Miss Malony on the Chinese Question," which appeared in Scribner's Monthly (now The Century) 1870, attracted many readers at the time, and is included in "Theophilus and Others." So, likewise, is "The Insanity of Cain," which appeared originally in Scribner's Monthly.

DODGE, Mary Abigail (known by her pseudonym of "Gail Hamilton,") was born at Hamilton, Massachusetts, about 1830. In 1851, and for two or three years thereafter, she was a teacher of physical science in the public High School of Hartford, Connecticut. She was at that time a contributor to several periodicals, and became a frequent writer for the Atlantic Monthly soon after its establishment, and has continued to write for that and other magazines and papers to the present time. She has published: "Country Living and Country Thinking," 1862; "Gala Days," 1863; "Stumbling Blocks," 1864; "A New Atmosphere," 1865; "Skirmishes and Sketches," 1865; "Red-Letter Days in Applethorpe," 1866; "Summer Rest," 1866; "Wool Gathering," 1867; "Woman's Wrongs," 1868; "Battle of the Books," 1870; "Little Folk Life," 1872; "Woman's Worth and Worthlessness," 1872; "Child World" (2 vols.) 1872-73; "Twelve Miles from a Lemon," 1874; "Nursery Noonings," 1874; "Sermons to the Clergy," 1875; "What think ye of Christ?" 1877; "First Love is Best," 1877; Our Common School System," 1880; "Divine Guidance," Memorial of Allen W. Dodge, 1881; and "The Insuppressible Book," 1885."

DODS, Professor, The Rev. Marcus, D.D., was born in 1834 at Belford, Northumberland, and is the youngest son of the Rev. Marcus Dods, of the Scotch Church, Belford. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and University, where he took his M.A. degree in 1854. He entered the Theological Training College of the Free Church in Edinburgh (New College), and after four years curriculum was licensed in 1858. He was ordained in 1864 as minister of Renfield Free Church, Glasgow, where he remained until appointed Professor of New Testament Exegesis in New College, Edinburgh, in 1889. He received the honorary degree of D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1871. The following is a list of his published works: "The Prayer that Teaches to Pray," 1st edit, 1863, 6th edit., 1889; "The Epistle to the Seven Churches," 1865; "Israel's Iron Age," "Mohammed, Buddha, and Christ," "The Parables of Our Lord," 2 vols., "The Book of Genesis," in the Expositors' Bible, "The First Epistle to Corinthians," the Expositors' Bible, 1889, "The Gospel of John," 2 vols., and 2 vols. in Clark's handbooks for Bible classes, as well as articles in the 9th edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and in the "Expositor," &c.

DODDS, Alfred Amédée, a French general, was born on Feb. 6, 1842, at Saint-Louis, in Senegal, where his father held an administrative post. He entered the Marine Infantry in 1864, and rose to the rank of General of Brigade in Nov., 1892. He served in the Réunion campaign in 1869, and in the War of 1870 was taken prisoner by the Prussians at Sedan, but escaped and served in the campaigns of the Loire and the East. He was sent to Senegal in 1872, and remained there for twenty years, only leaving it in order to take part in the Cochin-China and Tonkin expeditions. During his long sojourn in Africa he repressed numerous revolts against the French, notably that of the people of Fonta in 1891. In April, 1892, Col. Dodds, who had returned to France and was in command of the 8th Regiment of Marine Infantry at Toulon, was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Expedition against King Behanzin of Dahomey, who had recently shown himself hostile to France. He hurried to the scene of action, conducted a difficult campaign, and by Nov. 17 was master of the capital of Dahomey and had put Behanzin to flight. He returned to France to rest, and was enthusiastically received, but Behanzin's conduct rendered a second expedition necessary, which was again placed under his command and started from Marseilles on Aug. 10, 1893. In December, 1892, General Dodds was promoted Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour.

DONALDSON, Professor James, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S.E., born April 26, 1831, at Aberdeen, was educated at the Grammar School and Marischal College and University in Aberdeen, New College in London, and the University of Berlin. He was appointed Greek Tutor in Edinburgh University in 1852, Rector of the High School of Stirling in 1854, Classical Master in the High School of Edinburgh in 1856, Rector of the same school in 1866, and Professor of Humanity in the University of Aberdeen in 1881, and Principal of the United College of St. Salvator and St. Leonard in St. Andrews University in 1886; and in 1890 by the Universities (Scotland) Act, he became Principal of the University of St. Andrews. He has published a "Modern Greek Grammar for the use of Classical Students," 1853; "Lyra Græca: Specimens of the Greek Lyric Poets from Callinus to Soutsos," with Critical Notes and a Biographical Introduction, 1854; "Critical History of Christian Literature and Doctrine from the death of the Apostles to the Nicene Council," 3 vols., 1864-66; "The Anti-Nicene Christian Library," edited by him in conjunction with the Rev. Alexander Roberts, D.D., 24 vols., 1867-72; the article "Greek Language" in Kitto's "Cyclopædia," 3rd edit.; "Lectures on the History of Education in Prussia and England, and on kindred topics," 1874; the article "Education" in Chambers' "Information for the People," 1874; a paper "On the Expiatory and Substitutionary Sacrifices of the Greeks," read before the Royal Society of Edinburgh, May 17, 1875; and articles on the Characters of Plautus, on the Position of Women in Ancient Greece, Rome, and early Christianity, and, in the Contemporary Review, on University Reform. Besides these, he edited the Museum, or English Journal of Education, for several years, and he has contributed to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and "Edinburgh Review, Scottish Review, and other periodicals.

DOUCET, Camille, Perpetual Secretary of the French Academy, was born in Paris, May 16, 1812, studied law, and, for some time, practised as a notary. His earlier dramas were produced at the Odéon with considerable success. "Un Jeune Homme," 1841; "L'Avocat de sa Cause," 1842; "Le Dernier Banquet," 1847; "Ennemis de la Maison," 1850, (was reproduced at the Théâtre Français in 1854); "Le Fruit Défendu," 1857. These were, in 1858, published under the title of "Comédies en Vers." In 1853 M. Doucet was named Divisional Chief of Theatres, and in this capacity was charged with supreme direction of the Imperial Theatres of Paris and the Departments. He was elected a member of the French Academy, April 7, 1865, in the place of Alfred de Vigny, and on March 30, 1876, succeeded M. Patin as perpetual secretary. He has been several times elected Member of the Council-General of Yonne for district of Villeneuve-l'Archevêque, and in July, 1891, was promoted to the rank of Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour.

DOUDNEY, Sarah, was born in a suburb of Portsmouth, Hants, in 1842. A great portion of her childhood, and nearly the whole of her girlhood, were spent in a remote village in Hampshire. She studied with Mrs. Kendall, of Southsea, and also at Madame Dowell's College at Southsea, a small establishment, chiefly for French girls. Sarah Doudney began to write verses and stories at an early age. At eighteen she wrote two poems, which Charles Dickens commended, and published in All the Year Round. Some of her earliest verses, which attracted notice, appeared in The Churchman's Family Magazine, conducted by the Rev. F. Arnold. For this serial she wrote a story in verse, entitled "Sister Margaret," and in 1864 "The Lesson of the "Water-Mill," which has since become one of the National Songs of America. But it is as a writer of tales for girls that she is most widely known. The following is a list of her publications:—"Under Grey Walls," 1871; "Monksbury College," 1872; 'Faith Harrowby," 1872; "Wave upon Wave," 1873; "The Pilot's Daughters," 1874; "Miss Irving's Bible;" "Marion's Three Crowns;" "Loser and Gainer;" "Oliver's Oath," 1877; "Archie's Old Desk," 1877; "The Great Salterns;" "Old Anthony's Secret;" "Janet Darney's Story;" "Strangers Yet," 1880; "Stepping Stones," 1880; "Thy Heart's Desire," 1880; "When We Two Parted," 1880; "Michaelmas Daisy," 1882; "Stories of Girlhood," 1882; "Nothing but Leaves," 1882; "Anna Cavaye," 1882; "Nelly Channell," 1883; "What's in a Name?" 1883; "A Woman's Glory," 1883; "When We Were Girls Together," 1884; "A Long Lane with a Turning," 1884; "The Strength of Her Youth," 1884; "Prudence Winterburn," 1886; "A Son of the Morning," 1887; "The Missing Rubies," 1888; "Miss Willowburn's Offer," 1888; "Under False Colours," 1889; "Where the Dew Falls in London," 1889; "Gatty Fenning," 1890; "A Romance of Lincoln's Inn;" also the following volumes of verses:—"Psalms of Life," 1871; "Drifting Leaves," 1889; "Thistle Down," 1890; "Godiva Durleigh," and "My Message," a poem, 1892, and "Violets for Faithfulness," 1893.

DOUGLAS, The Hon. and Right Rev. Arthur Gascoigne, Bishop of Aberdeen and Orkney, is the youngest son of George Sholto, late Earl of Morton, by Frances Theodora, eldest daughter of the late Right Hon. Sir George Henry Rose, G.C.B., of Sandhills, Hants. He was born in January, 1827, and graduated at University College, Durham, taking his B.A. degree in 1849, and proceeding M.A. in 1850, in which year he was ordained deacon by Dr. Maltby, Bishop of Durham. He was admitted into priest's orders by the Bishop of Worcester in 1851. Having held for a short time the curacy of Kidderminster, Mr. Douglas was appointed in 1855 to the rectory of St. Olave, Southwark, and in the following year was collated to the Rectory of Scaldwell, Northamptonshire, which living he held till 1872, when he accepted the vicarage of Shapwick, in the diocese of Salisbury. On May 1, 1883, he was consecrated, in the church of St. Andrew, Aberdeen, to the Scottish Bishopric of Aberdeen and Orkney, in succession to the late Bishop Suther. He married, in 1855, Anna Maria Harriett, youngest daughter of the late Richard Richards, Esq., of Caerynwch, M.P. for Merionethshire.

DOUGLAS, Robert Kennaway, was born Aug. 23, 1838, at Larkbear House, near Ottery St. Mary, Devon, and educated at a private school at Bath, and at the Blandford Grammar School. He was appointed, by the Foreign Office, Student Interpreter in the China Consular Service in 1858; in 1860 he became Secretary to the Allied Commission for the Government of the City of Canton; was temporarily attached to Her Britannic Majesty's Legation at Pekin in 1861; was the same year appointed Interpreter on the staff of General Sir Charles Staveley, K.C.B.; and was appointed Acting Vice-Consul at Taku in 1862, which post he held until his return to England on leave in 1864. In the following year he resigned his appointment in the Consular Service in order to take up the post of Assistant of the Upper Section of the 1st class in the Library of the British Museum, with special charge of the Chinese and Japanese Libraries; he was promoted to the office of Assistant Keeper in 1880, with the additional charge of the Sub-Department of Maps; and was made Keeper of the Department of Oriental Printed Books and MSS. in 1892. In 1873 he was appointed Professor of Chinese at King's College, London. Professor Douglas is the author of "Two Lectures on the Language and Literature of China," 1875; "The Life of Jenghiz Khan," 1877; "Confucianism and Taouism," 1879; "China," in 1882; "A Chinese Manual," 1889; and "Chinese Stories," 1893. He was honorary Secretary to the International Conference of Orientalists during the session in London in 1874, and edited the "Proceedings;" he also represented England at the session held at St. Petersburg in 1876. He compiled and edited a catalogue of the Chinese books and manuscripts in the British Museum, which was printed by order of the Trustees in 1876; and he further edited a catalogue of the Printed Maps, Plans, and Charts in the British Museum, which was published in 1885. He is the author of several articles on China and the Far East, in the 9th edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica;" he has also contributed linguistic and other articles relating to the same subjects in the periodicals of the day. During the summer and autumn of 1894 he contributed many letters to the Times relative to the Corean War. Professor Douglas is a governor of Dulwich College.

DOUGLAS-LITHGOW, Robert Alexander, M.D., LL.D., F.S.A., F.R.S.L., F.R.G.S.I., &c., is the eldest son of Robert Thomas Lithgow, Esq., of Sefton Park, near Liverpool, the descendant of a good old Scotch family, a branch of which settled in the North of Ireland, during the plantation of Ulster, in 1607, and whose uncle was one of the claimants in the celebrated "Douglas Peerage Case." Dr. Douglas-Lithgow was born at Belfast, on June 13, 1846. He was educated at the Diocesan School of Down, Connor, and Dromore (Downpatrick), and subsequently at the Royal Academical Institution, Belfast. Having chosen the medical profession, he successfully passed his matriculation examination, Dublin, on his 14th birthday. He then served his apprenticeship with an apothecary for several years, and afterwards entered as a student at Queen's College, Belfast, completing his curriculum at the Ledwich School of Medicine and Mercer's Hospital, Dublin, and subsequently studying at the Liverpool Royal Infirmary, Guy's Hospital, London, and the Royal Infirmary, Edinburgh. Dr. Douglas-Lithgow acquired his all-round practical knowledge of his profession in actual practice of a very varied character, having, both before and after he was qualified, for some years acted as locum tenens in many of the largest practices in England, including many Government appointments. He became L.S.A. London, 1871, L.R.C.P., L.R.C.S. Ed. and L.M., in 1872, M.R.C.P. in 1880, and M.D. St. Andrews, in 1890, having previously had the degree of LL.D. conferred upon him, causâ honoris. Dr. Douglas-Lithgow began the study of English Literature at a very early age, and contributed to Duffy's Hibernian Magazine, The Ulster Magazine, and other periodicals, as far back as 1862; when only 16 years of age, and even before this period, he had delivered several public lectures on literary and scientific subjects. These early essays so commended the author to the late Mr. Charles Dickens that the latter accepted the dedication of a small volume which incorporated them, but for several reasons this was never published. Since this time Dr. Douglas-Lithgow has been a most industrious writer, contributing much to periodical literature, and to the transactions of many of the scientific and other learned societies. His recent series of papers, read before the Royal Society of Literature, on Anglo-Saxon and Early-English Alliteration are well known, and his Studies in Elizabethan Literature have shown him to be a cultured critic in this department of literary history. He is also esteemed as a writer on antiquarian subjects, and has written numerous short stories of a pathetic character. In 1877 he published a volume of poems entitled "Pet Moments," which was dedicated by permission, to the late Lord Tennyson, with whom he occasionally corresponded. This little volume was well received, and brought the author under the notice of Eliza Cook, Martin F. Tupper, the late Lord Houghton, and others. In 1880, he edited the works of the Lancashire poet John Critchley Prince, and also wrote his biography, which appeared together in three large volumes. In 1889 was published his original work, entitled "Heredity: a Study; with special reference to Disease," in which the author made the first systematic effort to trace the influence of heredity in all the main diseases which affect humanity. He has also contributed many important papers to the medical journals. Dr. Douglas-Lithgow is a Fellow, Member of Council, and Vice-President of the Royal Society of Literature, a Fellow of the Royal Society of Antiquaries, of the Royal Geological Society of Ireland, of the Obstetrical Society of London, the Medical Society of London, and of the Surgical Institute; a member, and member of Council of the British Archæological Society; member, and member of Council of the Irish Schools' and Graduates' Association; member, and member of Council of the St. Andrew's Graduates Association, member of the General Council of the University of St. Andrews, the Manchester Literary Club, the Irish Literary Society; a member of the House, and General Committee of the Grosvenor Club, and a Foundation member of the Royal Societies Club, &c. In 1875, Dr. Douglas-Lithgow married the only daughter of Sir Robert Murray, Bart., of Clermont and Hill-Head, N.B., and of the late Lady Murray of Ardeleybury, Herts, soon after which he settled at Wisbech, Cambridgeshire, where he held several Government appointments, and practised for several years. In 1881 he removed to London, where he is still engaged in the practice of his profession.

DOUGLASS, Frederick, American orator, was born a slave (of a white father) at Tuckahoe, Maryland, in Feb. 1817. Being sent while still a child to Baltimore, and hearing his new mistress read the Bible, his strong desire to learn to read emboldened him to ask her to teach him. Not having been bred a slave-owner, she consented, and the alphabet and words of two and three letters were mastered, when a sudden stop was put to this exercise. By incredible exertions and in secret, he continued to learn, and when about fifteen years of age began to hire his own time from his master, paying the latter three dollars a week and retaining for himself the balance of his earnings. After working in this way for some years, he made his escape in Sept. 1838, and reached New Bedford, Massachusetts. Encouraged by William Lloyd Garrison in his efforts at self-education, he soon developed such power as an orator, that he was employed, 1841, by the American Anti-Slavery Society as one of their lecturers, and soon drew crowds to hear his portraitures of slavery. In 1845, he came to England, where his eloquence attracted great attention. His friends here raised, in 1846, £150, which was sent to his former master, and his legal emancipation thereby secured. He returned to America in 1847, and began the publication at Rochester, N.Y., of Frederick Douglass's Paper, aftewards The North Star, a weekly journal which he continued for some years. During the Civil War he was often consulted by President Lincoln on questions affecting the coloured race, and at its close he resumed his place on the lecture platform. In 1870 he started, at Washington, a journal entitled The New National Era, the publication of which was continued by his sons. In 1871 he was appointed Secretary of the Commission to San Domingo, and upon his return was made a member of the Territorial Council of the District of Columbia. In 1872 he was chosen a Presidential Elector for the State of New York; and from 1877 to 1881 was U.S. Marshal for the District of Columbia. He then became Commissioner of Deeds for the District of Columbia, and on his retirement from that office in 1886, paid a third visit to England. In June, 1889, he was made U.S. Minister to Hayti, which republic, as a mark of its esteem, appointed him Senior Commissioner at the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, U.S.A. His published works are "Narrative of my Experience in Slavery," 1844, "My Bondage and my Freedom," 1855; "Life and Times of Frederick Douglass," 1881, and various speeches and addresses.

DOUGLASS, Sir James Nicholas, Civil Engineer, F.R.S., was born at Bow, Middlesex, Oct. 16, 1826. After a regular training in Civil and Mechanical Engineering, his first important employment was in 1847, as assistant engineer to his father, who was superintending engineer to the Hon. Corporation of the Trinity House, and then engaged in the erection of the Lighthouse on the Bishop (the westernmost of the rocks of Scilly), probably the most exposed of these sea structures. On the completion of this work he was appointed resident engineer in sole charge at the erection of the lighthouse on the chief rock of the dangerous group of the Smalls, situated about eighteen and a half miles off Milford Haven. This work he completed at a cost of £50,125, being about £15,800 under the lowest amount at which it had been ascertained that it could be executed by contract. In 1862, on the death of the late Engineer-in-Chief to the Trinity House, Mr. James Walker, F.R.S., he was appointed to that office, and has since carried out many important engineering works both at home and abroad, such as the Wolf, Longships, Great and Little Basses, Eddystone, and Muricoy Lighthouses, &c., and has effected numerous improvements in the construction of lanterns, optical apparatus, electrical apparatus, oil and gas illuminating apparatus, and the machinery in general connected with lighthouses, also iron and steel buoys, beacons, &c. On the completion of the present lighthouse on the Eddystone, he received the honour of knighthood. This work was executed at a cost of £59,255, being £24,000 below that at which it had been ascertained that it could be executed by contract. He is a Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, Mechanical Engineers, and Electrical Engineers, and in 1887 was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. Early in 1892, Sir James was suddenly afflicted with a serious illness which necessitated his retirement from active work under the Trinity House, after a service of about forty years.

DOVER, Bishop of. See EDEN, THE RT. REV. G. R.

DOW, Neal, an ardent advocate of total abstinence and prohibition, was born at Portland, Maine, March 20, 1804, of Quaker parentage. While Mayor of Portland in 1851 he drafted a bill to prohibit the liquor traffic, known the world over as the Maine Law, and on his personal application to the legislature of that year it was passed through all its stages in one day by a majority of 18 to 10 in the Senate, and 86 to 40 in the House without change even of a word, and took effect upon its approval by the governor. Under this law, liquors intended for unlawful sale are confiscated and destroyed, and those who sell or keep them for sale are fined and imprisoned; and the places where they are sold or kept are declared to be nuisances. In 1884 prohibition was put into the Constitution of the State by a majority of 47,075, the affirmative vote being three times larger than the negative. By special invitation of the United Kingdom Alliance he made three visits to England in aid of the agitation for prohibition in this country, and spent nearly four years here and on the Continent in gratuitous labour in that movement. Mr. Dow has been twice Mayor of his native city, and twice a member of the Maine Legislature. He served in the Civil War as Brigadier-General, commanding in the department of the Gulf, holding at different times three separate commands. He was twice wounded and once taken prisoner, when he was confined for eight months before an exchange could be effected. He raised for the public service against the rebellion a regiment of infantry of a thousand men, and a battery of artillery of eight guns, and named the officers for the whole regiment. The result of the Maine Law has been to reduce the liquor traffic in the State to less than one-twentieth of its former volume. There were many distilleries and breweries but not one now remains, nor has there been one for many years. The importation of rum from the West India Islands was on a very large scale; there is not now even one puncheon of it imported. In more than three-fourths of the State containing more than three-fourths of the people, the liquor traffic is practically unknown. An entire generation has grown up, these never having seen a grog-shop or the effects of one. The State saves annually directly or indirectly more than twenty million dollars, which but for prohibition would be spent and wasted in drink, as in the old time. Maine, from being the poorest state in the Union, is now one of the most prosperous.

DOWDEN, Professor Edward, Litt. D., LL.D., was born in Cork, May 3, 1843. He was educated by private teachers, and at Queen's College, Cork, and Trinity College, Dublin. He obtained in Trinity College the Vice-Chancellor's prizes in English Verse and English Prose; was elected President of the Philosophical Society; and gained the first Senior Moderatorship in Logic and Ethics, 1863. In 1867 he was elected to the Professorship of English Literature. He has published the following works:—"Shakspere: A Study of his Mind and Art," which has been translated into German and Russian; "Poems;" "Shakspere Primer;" "Introduction to Shakspere;" "Studies in Literature;" "Transcripts and Studies;" "Southey" (in "English Men of Letters"); "Southey's Correspondence with Caroline Bowles;" "The Correspondence of Sir Henry Taylor;" an edition of "Shakspere's Sonnets," with notes; an edition of "The Passionate Pilgrim;" an edition of "Lyrical Ballads, 1798;" "Wordsworth's Poetical Works," edited in seven vols.; "Shelley's Poetical Works;" "The Life of Percy Bysshe Shelley," two vols., founded on the papers in the possession of the Shelley family, &c.; this last, his most important work, will probably remain the standard Life of Shelley. He has also written articles in The Contemporary Review, The Fortnightly Review, The Nineteenth Century, and other periodicals. He has received the Cunningham Gold Medal of the Royal Irish Academy, is an honorary LL.D. of the University of Edinburgh and an honorary D.C.L. of Oxford. He was elected President of the English Goethe Society in 1888, in succession to Professor Müller. In 1889 he was appointed the first "Taylorian Lecturer," in the Taylor Institution, University of Oxford. In 1893 he was appointed "Clark Lecturer," Trinity College, Cambridge. He is secretary to the Liberal Union of Ireland, a Vice-President of the Irish Unionist Alliance, and has taken an active part in opposing Home Rule. He married in 1866 Mary, daughter of David Clerke, Esq., whose death, in 1892, deprived him of an active helper and adviser in all his literary work.

DOWDEN, The Right Rev. John, D.D., Bishop of Edinburgh, was born in Cork, June 29, 1840 (elder brother of Professor Edward Dowden), and was educated at Queen's College, Cork, and Trinity College, Dublin. He graduated as B.A., obtaining a Senior Moderatorship and Gold Medal in Logic and Ethics in 1861. After studying for two years in the Divinity School of the University of Dublin, and taking a First Class at the final examination, he was ordained deacon in 1864 and priest in 1868 by the Bishop of Kilmore. He served as curate at St. John's, Sligo, till 1867, when he became perpetual curate of Calvy, in the same town. In 1870 he was appointed one of the chaplains to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (Earl Spencer), and the following year become assistant at St. Stephen's Chapel of Ease, Dublin. In 1874 he accepted an invitation of the Scottish bishops to become Pantonian Professor of Theology and Bell Lecturer at the Theological College of the Scottish Church, then situated at Trinity College, Glenalmond, in Perthshire. After two years the Theological Department of Trinity College was removed to Edinburgh, and there he served as Head of the Theological College and Canon of St. Mary's Cathedral, till he was elected, in 1886 to the Bishopric of Edinburgh. Dr. Dowden was Donellan Lecturer in the University of Dublin in 1885, and Select Preacher in the University of Cambridge, 1888. Besides several separate sermons and articles in magazines, Dr. Dowden published, in 1884, "The Annotated Scottish Communion Office," a copious historical and liturgical account of the Scottish and American liturgies.

DOWNER, Sir John William, K.C.M.G., Q.C., was born in Adelaide, South Australia, July 6, 1844, and educated at St. Peter's College, Adelaide, and was a Scholar and Prize Essayist there. In 1862 he obtained the First Prize at the Government Public Competition examinations, open to all the Colony of South Australia, and, at the same examination, special prizes for Greek, political economy, physiology, and zoology. He became Practitioner of the Supreme Court of South Australia in 1867; was made Queen's Counsel in 1878; and in the same year was elected member of the House of Assembly. From 1881 till 1884 he was Attorney-General, during which time he caused some important law reforms to be effected; amongst others, persons accused of criminal offences were made competent witnesses on their own behalf. In 1883 he was one of the members of the Federal Convention held in Sydney, New South Wales. From 1885 till 1887 he was Premier and Attorney-General of South Australia. In 1887 he was a member of the Colonial Conference in London, and was made a K.C.M.G. Since then he has introduced a bill for the amendment of the law of divorce, on lines similar to the bill since carried in Victoria. In 1890 he was elected by the Parliament of South Australia to be a member of the Federal Convention to be held in 1891. In 1892-93 he was Chief Secretary and Premier of South Australia.

DOWNING, Arthur Matthew Weld, born April 13, 1850, at Bagnalstown, co. Carlow, Ireland, is the younger son of Arthur Matthew Downing, of The Lodge, Bagnalstown, and 22, Waterloo Road, Dublin. He was educated at Nutgrove School, Rothfarnham, co. Dublin, and Trinity College, Dublin, where he won a Mathematical Scholarship in 1871, B.A. 1871, M.A. 1881. He was appointed Second-Class Assistant at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, in Jan., 1873; promoted to be First-Class Assistant in August, 1881. He is the author of thirty papers contributed to the "Monthly Notices" of the Royal Astronomical Society from May, 1877, to June, 1890; and was elected a member of the Council of the Royal Astronomical Society in Feb., 1882; Honorary Secretary of the Royal Astronomical Society in Feb., 1889; and a member of the "Astronomische Gesellschaft," of Leipzig, in 1884.

DRAGOUMIROW, General, one of the most distinguished generals in the Russian Army during the Russo-Turkish war, and the author of a well-known manual on the preparation of troops for battle. He commanded the advance guard at the passage of the Danube in 1877.

DREYER, John Louis Emil, M.A. and Ph.D., Copenhagen University, born Feb. 13, 1852, at Copenhagen, is the third son of Lieut.-General Dreyer, late Inspector-General, Royal Danish Engineers. He was Astronomer at the Earl of Rosse's Observatory, Birr Castle, 1874; Assistant Astronomer at the Observatory of Trinity College, Dublin, 1878; Director of Armagh Observatory, 1882; and was Joint Editor of Copernicus: an International Journal of Astronomy, Vols. I.-III., 1881-84. He is the author of "Second Armagh Catalogue of 3300 Stars for 1875, from Observations made in the Years 1859-83 under the Direction of T. R. Robinson," 8vo, 1886; "A new General Catalogue of Nebulæ and Clusters of Stars," 4to, 1888 (Mem. R. Astr. Soc.); "Tycho Brahe: a Picture of Scientific Life and Work in the Sixteenth Century," 8vo, 1890; and various papers in Proc. R. Irish Acad., Monthly Notices R. Astr. Soc., Copernicus, and in the Encyclopædia Britannica, 9th edit.

DRIVER, Professor, The Rev. Samuel Rolles, D.D., born in 1846, was educated at Winchester College and New College, Oxford, of which he was elected Scholar in 1865, and graduated with First Class honours in Literæ Humaniores in 1869, was Fellow of New College from 1870 to 1882, and Tutor from 1875 to 1882. He applied himself early to the study of Hebrew and of other Semitic languages, and obtained the two University Hebrew Scholarships in 1866 and 1870 respectively; and in 1875 he was elected a member of the Old Testament Revision Company. In 1882, upon the death of Dr. Pusey, he was appointed to the Regius Professorship of Hebrew at Oxford (with a Canonry of Christchurch attached), a position which he still holds. Since 1884 he has also been Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Southwell. He is the author of "A Treatise on the Use of the Tenses in Hebrew, and some other syntactical questions," 1874, 3rd edit., 1892; of "Isaiah: his Life and Times, and the Writings which Bear his Name," 1888, ed. 2, 1893 (in the series known as "Men of the Bible"); of "Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Samuel, with an Introduction on Hebrew Paleography, &c.," 1890; and of various articles relating to the Old Testament and Hebrew Philology, in the Philological Journal, the Expositor, the Contemporary Review, &c. In 1891 he published an "Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament," which attracted considerable attention (ed. 4, 1893); and in 1892 a volume of Sermons on subjects connected with the Old Testament. In these works he claims to show that the modern critical view of the origin and structure of the Old Testament can be presented in a form compatible with a sincere belief in its inspiration and religious authority. He is also the joint editor (with Professors Cheyne and Sanday) of "The Holy Bible (authorised version), with Various Renderings and Readings from the best Authorities," published by the Queen's Printers, 3rd edit., 1889; and joint translator (with Dr. A. Neubauer) of a catena of Jewish commentaries on the 53rd chapter of Isaiah, called "The 53rd Chapter of Isaiah according to the Jewish Interpreters." He is at present engaged (with Professors C. A. Briggs and Francis Brown, of New York) upon a new Hebrew Lexicon, which is now in course of publication by the Clarendon Press. As a Hebraist and student of the Old Testament, he enjoys a reputation upon the Continent and in America.

DROZ, Antoine Gustave, son of a well-known French sculptor, was born in Paris in 1832. A series of brilliant sketches which had previously appeared in La Vie Parisienne, published in 1868 under the title of "Monsieur, Madame et Bébé," secured for him a literary reputation which was well sustained in "Entre Nous," 1867; "Le Cahier bleu de Mademoiselle Cibot," 1868; "Autour d'une Source," 1869; "Un Paquet de Lettres," 1870 (the two last mentioned first appeared in the Revue des Deux Mondes); "Babolein," 1872; "Les Etangs," 1875; "Tristesses et Sourires," 1884, which was rewarded by the French Academy with the Halphen prize; and "L'Enfant," 1885. Since 1868 M. Droz has been one of the editors of the Revue des Deux Mondes. He was decorated in 1879 with the Legion of Honour.

DRUMMOND, Professor Henry, the son of Mr. Henry Drummond, J.P., of Stirling, was born at Stirling in 1851, and educated at the Universities of Edinburgh, and Tübingen in Germany. He subsequently passed through the Free Church Divinity Hall, and, after his ordination, was appointed to a Mission Station at Malta. On his return to Scotland, he was appointed a Lecturer in Science at the Free Church College, Glasgow, 1877, and Professor in 1884. He also took charge of a Working Men's Mission in that city. He subsequently travelled with Professor Geikie in the Rocky Mountains and South Africa. He is the author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," 1883, a work of original thought, which has elicited much criticism, and is now in the 29th edition, and has been translated into French, German, Dutch, and Norwegian. Professor Drummond has also written some interesting accounts of his travels, one of the most noticeable of which is "Tropical Africa," 1888, 3rd edit., 20th thousand, 1890. In the latter year he travelled in Australia. His most recent works are "The Greatest Thing in the World—Love;" a sermon based on the text "The greatest of these is Charity; and "Pax Vobiscum"—(Peace be with you)—the second of the series, of which "The Greatest Thing in the World" is the first. In 1894 he published "The Ascent of Man," a work which insists on the existence of certain altruistic factors in the process of Natural Selection. This work was severely criticised by Mrs. Lynn Linton, writing from the orthodox scientific point of view in the Fortnightly for Sept. 1, 1894.

DRUMMOND, Professor James, M.A., LL.D., D.Litt., was born in Dublin on May 14, 1835, and is the son of the Rev. William Hamilton Drummond, D.D., M.R.I.A. He went to school at the Rev. D. Flynn's, Dublin, and entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1851, passing the examination for the degree of B.A. in 1855, and obtaining the first gold medal in classics. Subsequently, in 1882, the University conferred on him the degree of LL.D., and in 1893, on the occasion of its tercentenary, added, honoris causâ, the degree of D.Litt. In 1889 he incorporated at Oxford University, after the removal of Manchester New College to Oxford, and took the degree of M.A. In 1856 he went to Manchester New College, London, where he studied for the Ministry under the Rev. J. J. Tayler and the Rev. James Martineau, and in 1859 he settled at Cross Street Chapel, Manchester, as colleague to the late Rev. William Gaskell. In 1869 he was appointed Professor of Theology at Manchester New College, London, and in 1885 succeeded Dr. Martineau as Principal; a position which he retained on the removal of the College to Oxford in 1889, and which he still holds, the College having recently entered a new and commodious building, and changed its designation to Manchester College. His principal works are "Spiritual Religion: Sermons on Christian Faith and Life," 1870; "The Jewish Messiah: a Critical History of the Messianic Idea among the Jews from the Rise of the Maccabees to the Closing of the Talmud," 1877; "Introduction to the Study of Theology," 1884; "Philo Judæus; or, the Jewish-Alexandrian Philosophy in its Development and Completion," in 2 vols., 1888; and the Hibbert Lectures for 1894, on "Christianity."

DUBLIN, Archbishop of. See PLUNKET, THE HON. AND MOST REV. LORD WILLIAM CONYNGHAM.

DUBOIS, Paul, one of the greatest of living sculptors, was born at Nogent-sur-Seine, July 18, 1829. He was destined by his father for the legal profession, but his artistic tastes constrained him to devote himself to sculpture, and he went to Paris to become the pupil of the sculptor Toussaint, with whom he remained three years. In 1859 he went to Italy, and in 1860 executed at Florence the model for "St. John a Child," which was finished at Rome, exhibited at the Salon of 1863, and is now at the Luxembourg, together with "A Florentine Singer of the Fifteenth Century." This last is in silvered bronze, and through its many reproductions in smaller size has become very popular. Other works which may be cited are the tomb of General la Moricière, one of the masterpieces of modern statuary (1878), which is at Nantes; and busts of Bonnat, Cabanel, Paul Baudry, Gounod, Pasteur (1890), and other celebrities. M. Dubois has also studied painting, and has executed fine portraits and beautiful copies of old masters, but has been a very irregular contributor to the Salon exhibitions. In 1873 he was appointed keeper of the Luxembourg Museum, and director of the École des Beaux-Arts, May 30, 1878. Elected a member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts in 1876, he was one of the Jury of Admission for the selection of sculpture at the Exposition of 1878. He is a grand officer of the Legion of Honour (1889).

DU BOIS-REYMOND, Professor Emil Heinrich, M.D., F.R.S., Member and Perpetual Secretary of the Royal Academy of Sciences of Berlin, Professor in Ordinary of Physiology in the University of Berlin, and Director of the Physiological Institute, was born in Berlin, Nov. 7, 1818. In 1851 Dr. Du Bois-Reymond, who by his researches in the department of Animal Electricity has rendered the most important services to science, was elected a member of the Academy. In 1858, after John Müller's death, he was nominated Professor of Physiology in the University, and in 1867 was made a Perpetual Secretary of the Academy. He has written "Investigations on Animal Electricity" (vol. I., 1848, vol. II., Pt. I., 1849, Pt. II., 1860–84). Most of his scientific papers are collected under the title "Gesammelte Abhandlungen zur allgemeinen Muskel und Nervenphysik" (2 vols., Leipsic, 1875 and 1877), and his discourses and speeches on several subjects under the title "Reden" (2 vols., Leipsic, 1886 and 1887).

DUCANE, Major-General Sir Edmund Frederick, K.C.B., son of Major Richard Du Cane, by Eliza, daughter of Thomas Ware, Esq., of Woodfort, near Mallow, co. Cork, was born at Colchester, in 1830. He was educated at the Military Academy, Woolwich, and obtained his commission as second Lieutenant in the Royal Engineers Dec. 19, 1848. In 1850 he was appointed to assist in preparing for the Great Exhibition of 1851, and he appears in the list of the Staff as assistant secretary to the jurors and assistant superintendent of the foreign side. At that time Lord Grey was forming a convict establishment in Western Australia to carry out a system embodying all the improvements which nearly a century of experience had suggested, and a company of sappers, to which Lieutenant Du Cane was appointed, was sent out to assist in the operation. He was made a magistrate of the colony and a visiting magistrate of convict dépôts, and directed the labour of the convicts, who were employed in developing the communications of the colony. In July, 1856, he was attached to the War Department for special service, and after being engaged for some time in connexion with the design and sanitary arrangement of barracks, was employed on the design of the large works of defence undertaken under the auspices of Lord Palmerston. Among other works, the fortification of the western heights at Dover; and the long line of works miles in extent which protect the dockyard at Plymouth on the land side between the Tamar and the east side of Plymouth Sound have been carried out on plans submitted by him to the Defence Committee. In Feb. 1854, he had been promoted to be first lieutenant, and on April 16, 1858, he became second captain. In July, 1863, he was appointed by Sir George Grey a director of Convict Prisons when the Board was reconstructed after the death of Sir Joshua Jebb, and when the report of the Royal Commission on Penal Servitude suggested considerable modifications in the convict system. He was at the same time appointed by Lord Ripon to be Inspector of Military Prisons. In 1869, Captain Du Cane was made Chairman of Directors of Convict Prisons, Surveyor-General of Prisons, and Inspector-General of Military Prisons. In July, 1872, he was promoted to be Major, and on Dec. 11, 1873, to be Lieutenant-Colonel, having also in the same year been made a Companion of the Bath. The Emperor of Brazil has conferred on him the Order of the Rose. In Dec. 1878, he was promoted to be Colonel. In July, 1877, he was created a K.C.B., and made Chairman of the Prison Commissioners, appointed by Royal Warrant under the Prisons Act, 1877, to undertake the difficult task of reorganising and administering the county and borough prisons, which from April 1, 1878, came under the control of the Government. In pursuance of this object the number of prisons has been reduced from 113 to 58, the rules have been made uniform, many important improvements introduced, and the cost has been very largely diminished. In Dec., 1886, Colonel Du Cane retired from the effective list and was made a Major-General. He is the author of various articles in magazines, and also of a book on the "Punishment and Prevention of Crime," and his reports on military prisons are yearly issued as Parliamentary papers. In July, 1855, he married Mary Dorothea, daughter of Lt.-Col. J. Molloy, formerly of the Rifle Brigade. She died in 1881, and in 1883 he married Florence Victoria, daughter of Col. and Lady Marie Saunderson and widow of M. J. Grimston, Esq., of Kilnwick and Grimston Gaeltor, Yorkshire.

DU CHAILLU, Paul Belloni, was born in New Orleans in Louisiana, July 31, 1837. His father was a trader on the west coast of Africa, whither Paul went at an early age, and where he acquired a knowledge of the languages and modes of life of the neighbouring tribes, also devoting much attention to natural history. In 1855, after a sojourn in New York, he returned to Africa, and spent about four years exploring the then unknown region lying two degrees on each side of the equator, penetrating to about longitude 14° 15′ E. During this time he shot and stuffed a great number of birds and quadrupeds, among which were several gorillas, a species probably never before seen by any European. He returned to New York in 1859, taking with him a large collection of native arms and implements, and numerous specimens in natural history, which were publicly exhibited, and many of which were afterwards purchased by the British Museum. The history of this expedition was published under the title "Explorations and Adventures in Equatorial Africa," 1861; revised edition, 1871. A sharp controversy arose concerning the truthfulness of this book, and to vindicate himself Du Chaillu again visited Africa in 18 63, where he remained until 1865. He published an account of this expedition under the title "A Journey to Ashango Land," 1867. During this journey he discovered the "Pigmies." On his return to the States he lectured frequently, and published a series of books for the young, comprising:—"Stories of the Gorilla Country," 1868, "Wild Life under the Equator," 1869; "Lost in the Jungle," 1869; "My Apingi Kingdom," 1870; and "The Country of the Dwarfs," 1871. More recently he has made an extended visit to Sweden, Norway, Lapland, and Finland, which he described in "The Land of the Midnight Sun," 1881, and "The Viking Age," 2 vols., 1889. Two of his earlier works he reissued in a condensed form in 1890 under the title of "Adventures in the Great Forest of Equatorial Africa and the Country of the Dwarfs." In 1893 he published "Ivor the Viking."

DUCKETT, Sir George Floyd, Bart., F.S.A., son of the late Sir George Duckett, Bart., F.R.S. (the translator from the German of Michaëlis's "Burial and Resurrection of our Saviour," of Herder on the "Revelation of St. John," of "Luther's Preface to St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans," &c.); born March 27, 1811, was educated at Harrow, and Christ Church, Oxford, and succeeded to the title on his father's death, June 15, 1856. He is the author of a "Technological Military Dictionary in German, English, and French," for which he has received the "Great Gold Medal of Science" from the Emperor of Austria; the gold medal of literary merit from the Emperor of the French; and another, "The Great Gold Medal of Science and Art," from the late King of Prussia. Sir George is the author of a genealogical work entitled "Duchetiana," which forms a valuable and important addition to the county histories of Westmoreland, Wiltshire, and Cambridgeshire. He has also edited the "Test Act and Penal Law Returns in 1687–8" for the entire counties of England and Wales; the "Monasticon Cluniacense Anglicanum; Visitations of English Cluniac Foundations in 1262, 1275, 1279, 1298, 1390, 1405;" "Naval Commissioners from the Restoration to Geo. III;" "Charters relating to John, King of France, and the Treaty of Brétigny in 1360;" besides numerous contributions to the Antiquarian Societies of Westmorland, Yorkshire, Sussex, and Wilts. Sir Floyd Duckett obtained the highest literary honour which the French Government has to bestow, the Palmes d'Or, as an officer of Public Instruction in France. He is also a corresponding member of the Société d'Antiquaires de Normandie; and received a grant of £200 in 1890 from the Royal Bounty Fund for special literary services. Sir George Floyd Duckett was made a Knight of the Gold Cross of Merit of Saxe Coburg-Gotha in 1890.

DUCKHAM, Thomas, was born Sept. 26, 1816, at Shirehampton, near Bristol, and was educated at the village school, and afterwards at Hereford and Bristol. He began his agricultural career at Warham in 1849, when, on the severe depression following the Repeal of the Corn Laws, he agreed for his farm upon a corn-rent regulated by the corn averages under the Tithe Commutation Act. Five years later he removed to Baysham Court, near Ross. Here he took an active interest in the game question, and frequently drew attention to the evils arising from excessive preservation. In 1857 he purchased the copyright of the "Hereford Herd Book," and was its editor for 20 years, at the end of which time he gave it up on account of ill-health. In 1866 he presided at the first two meetings in London for the formation of the Central and Associated Chambers of Agriculture; has been a member of Council since their formation, and was President in 1884, and devoted so much time and labour to the interests of the agricultural classes that he was invited to stand for Herefordshire in 1880, when he was elected without any canvassing expenses, and again returned for North Herefordshire in 1885. Many of the reforms for which Mr. Duckham had long agitated became law in the parliament of 1880, such as a better system for obtaining Corn Returns, the Ground Game Act, the Repeal of the Malt Tax, the amending of the Agricultural Holdings Act, the Law of Distress, the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, and Relief of Local Taxation. Mr. Duckham has been a member of the Council of the Bath and West of England Association since 1863, is a member of the Council of the Smithfield Club, and of the Council of the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution. At the general election of 1886 he was defeated by Mr. Biddulph, Unionist-Liberal. He long agitated for a County Government Act, and repeatedly pressed upon the late Government his views thereon. Upon the Act coming into operation he was elected a senior Alderman. He is a J.P. for the county.

DUCKWORTH, Sir Dyce, M.D., LL.D., brother of the Rev. Canon Duckworth, D.D., and youngest son of the late Robinson Duckworth, Esq., of Liverpool. He was born in that city in 1840, and educated at the Royal Institution School there, and at the University of Edinburgh, where he graduated M.D. (Gold Medallist) in 1863, also at St. Bartholomew's Hospital. He served as Assistant-Surgeon in the Royal Navy 1864-65; was elected Medical Tutor at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, subsequently Assistant-Physician there in 1869, and full Physician and Lecturer on Clinical Medicine in 1883. He was made a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1870; is hon. M.D. of the Medical College of Ohio, U.S.A., and M.D., honoris causâ, of the Royal University of Ireland. He was elected hon. Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in Ireland in 1887; and is the Representative of the Royal College of Physicians of London in the General Medical Council of the United Kingdom, and at the International Colonial Medical Congress at Amsterdam, 1883. He has been an Examiner in the Universities of Edinburgh and Durham, and on the Conjoint Board for England; and in the Victoria University. He is the author of a "Treatise on Gout," 8vo., 1889 (translated into German and French), and Editor of Warburton Begbie's Works, and is the author also of numerous contributions to clinical medicine. He received the honour of Knighthood in 1886; was appointed treasurer of the Royal College of Physicians in 1884; and made an hon. member of the Royal Medical Society of Edinburgh in 1887, and hon. LL.D. of Edinburgh in 1890. He was elected President of the Clinical Society of London in 1891. He is in practice as a Consulting Physician in London. In 1892 he received the honour of Knighthood in the Order of St. John of Jerusalem.

DUCKWORTH, The Rev. Canon Robinson, D.D., second son of the late Robinson Duckworth, Esq., of Liverpool. He was born in 1834, elected to an open scholarship at University College, Oxford, in 1853, and graduated B.A. in first-class classical honours in 1857; he was afterwards elected a Fellow of Trinity, and was Assistant-Master at Marlborough College from 1858 to 1860, and Tutor of Trinity College from 1860 to 1866. In 1864 he was appointed Examining Chaplain to the late Bishop of Peterborough, and in 1866 was selected by her Majesty as instructor to his Royal Highness the late Prince Leopold. In 1867 he was appointed Governor to his Royal Highness, and held that post for three years. On his retirement in 1870 he was appointed Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, and presented to the crown living of St. Mark's, Hamilton Terrace, N.W. He was appointed a Canon of Westminster in succession to the late Rev. Charles Kingsley in March, 1875. In the same year he was appointed Honorary Chaplain to the Prince of Wales, and in that capacity accompanied his Royal Highness on his visit to India. He was appointed Rural Dean of St. Marylebone in 1891, and Chaplain of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in 1892.

DUFF, The Right Hon. Sir Mountstuart Elphinstone Grant, G.C.S.I., F.R.S., P.R.G.S., son of the late James Cuninghame Grant Duff, Esq., of Eden, Aberdeenshire (formerly Resident at Sattara, and author of "The History of the Mahrattas"), by Jane Catherine, only child of the late Sir Whitelaw Ainslie, M.D. Mr. M. E. Grant Duff was born in 1829, and educated at Edinburgh, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1850, and proceeded M.A. in 1853. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1854, having obtained a certificate of honour and a studentship in the preceding year. He entered the House of Commons in Dec., 1857, as member for the Elgin district of burghs, and he continued to represent that constituency in the Liberal interest till July, 1881. He was appointed Under-Secretary of State for India in Dec., 1868, and he held that office till the downfall of Mr. Gladstone's administration in Feb., 1874. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's second administration in May, 1880, he was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies. This office he resigned, together with his seat in Parliament, in July, 1881, on being appointed Governor of Madras in the place of the late Mr. William Patrick Adam. During his successful administration of this great province, Sir M. E. Grant Duff made several tours from end to end of the Presidency in order to see with his own eyes what required to be done. In 1886 he resigned the Governorship, and was succeeded by Mr. Bourke. Sir M. E. Grant Duff was Lord Rector of the University of Aberdeen from 1866 to 1872. He is the author of "Studies in European Politics;" "Elgin Speeches;" "A Political Survey;" and other works. He married, in 1859, Anna Julia, only child of Mr. Edward Webster, of Ealing, Middlesex.

DUFF, Sir Robert W., Governor of New South Wales, was born in 1835, and received his education at Blackheath School. He entered the navy in 1848, served sixteen years, and retired with the rank of commander. He succeeded to his uncle's estates in 1861, and became Member of Parliament for Banffshire, afterwards representing that county till his appointment to the Governorship of New South Wales in Feb., 1893. In Parliament he held office as Junior Lord of the Treasury, 1882–85; Civil Lord of the Admiralty, 1886. He was made a Privy Councillor in 1892. In 1871 Sir Robert Duff married a daughter of Sir W. Scott, of Ancrum.

DUFFERIN and AVA (Marquis of), The Right Hon. Frederick Temple Blackwood, K.P., G.C.B., G.C.M.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., P.C., British Ambassador at Paris, is the only son of Price, fourth Baron Dufferin, by Helen Selina, eldest daughter of the late Thomas Sheridan, Esq. (she re-married in 1862 the Earl of Gifford, and died in 1867). From Eton School his lordship was sent to Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degree. He succeeded to his father's title, July 21, 1841, while still in his minority; and for some years he was a lord-in-waiting on the Queen under Lord John Russell's first administration, and again in 1854–58. Accompanied by a friend he went from Oxford to Ireland at the time of the famine in 1846–47, and on his return published an account of his experiences under the title of "Narrative of a Journey from Oxford to Skibbereen during the year of the Irish Famine." In Feb., 1855, he was specially attached to the mission undertaken by Lord John Russell to Vienna. In 1859 he made a yacht voyage to Iceland, a well-known narrative of which expedition he published in the following year under the title of "Letters from High Latitudes." He was sent to the East by Lord Palmerston in 1860, as British Commissioner in Syria, for the purpose of prosecuting inquiries into the massacre of the Christians there. For his services on that occasion he was nominated on his return a K.C.B. (civil division). He was Under-Secretary of State for India from 1864 to the early part of 1866, and Under-Secretary for War from the latter date to the following June. On the advent of Mr. Gladstone to power in Dec., 1878, he was nominated Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and Paymaster-General, and he held that office till April, 1872, when he was appointed Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada. In the summer of 1876 his lordship, who was accompanied by Lady Dufferin, made a very successful tour through British Columbia, where much discontent had prevailed in consequence of a belief that the conditions had been broken on which that remote province had joined the Dominion of Canada. He held the post of Governor-General of Canada till Oct., 1879, when he was succeeded by the Marquis of Lorne. In May, 1878, he was elected President of the Royal Geographical Society, and in the following month he attended the Harvard University Commemoration, when the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Dublin also, Jan. 22, 1879, that of D.C.L. by the University of Oxford in the following June, and that of LL.D. by the University of Cambridge on June 16, 1891. In Feb., 1879, he was appointed ambassador at St. Petersburg in succession to Lord Augustus Loftus. He was transferred to Constantinople as ambassador to the Ottoman Porte in May, 1881. On Oct. 30, 1882, he was directed by Her Majesty's Government to proceed from Constantinople to Cairo, there to assume the control of the whole body of our relations with Egypt, and the settlement of all questions growing out of Arabi's rebellion. He left Egypt in April, 1883, and in Nov., 1884, proceeded to India as Viceroy. In 1888 he was appointed British Ambassador at Rome, from whence he was transferred to the Embassy at Paris in Dec., 1891. His lordship was created an English baron in 1850; nominated a Knight of St. Patrick in 1863; appointed Lord Lieutenant of the county of Down in 1864; sworn a Privy Councillor Dec. 12, 1868; was made an Earl of the United Kingdom in Nov., 1871; and created a G.C.B. in 1883. In the same year he became Vice-Admiral of Ulster, and G.C.S.I. and G.C.I.E. in 1884. In 1888 he was created Marquis of Dufferin and Ava. In addition to the works already mentioned, Lord Dufferin is the author of "Irish Emigration and the Tenure of Land in Ireland;" "Mr. Mill's Plan for the Pacification of Ireland examined;" and "Contributions to an Inquiry into the State of Ireland;" and has edited a sumptuous collection of his mother's poems, 1894, many of which had long been separately popular. A collection of his "Speeches and Addresses" was published in 1882 under the editorship of Mr. Henry Milton, and his "Speeches in India," edited by Sir Donald Wallace, in 1890. In the autumn of 1894 he delivered the inaugural address to the Library Association Congress at Belfast. The Marquis married, in 1862, Harriet, eldest daughter of the late Captain Archibald Rowan Hamilton, of Killyleagh Castle, county Down.

DUFFY, The Hon. Sir Charles Gavan, K.C.M.G., was born in Monaghan in 1816, descended of a native family which produced eminent scholars and ecclesiastics. In his twentieth year Mr. Duffy became sub-editor of the Dublin Morning Register, and a little later editor of an influential journal in Belfast. He returned to Dublin in 1842, and established the Nation in conjunction with Thomas Davis and John Dillon. A remarkable literature sprang up in connection with the Nation, one of Mr. Duffy's contributions to which, the "Ballad Poetry of Ireland," has run through forty editions. In 1844 Mr. Duffy was tried and convicted of sedition along with O'Connell; the conviction, however, was set aside, on appeal, by the House of Lords. In 1846 O'Connell quarrelled with the Young Ireland Party, and they established the Irish Confederation, of which Mr. Duffy was one of the founders. He was tried with the other leaders of that body for treason-felony in 1848, but after four indictments it was found impossible to procure a conviction. He then revived the Nation, which had been suppressed, and opposed Sir Thomas Redington, Under-Secretary for Ireland in the Government which had prosecuted him, and defeated that gentleman at New Ross, for which borough Mr. Duffy was elected member in July, 1852. It should be mentioned that Mr. Duffy had been called to the Bar in 1846; but he practised for only a short period. He was one of the founders of the Tenant League; and, in connection with Frederick Lucas and George Henry Moore, founder of the Independent Irish Party in the House of Commons, which sprang out of the League. The defection of a large section of that party induced him to resign his seat in Parliament in 1856, when he emigrated to Australia. He practised for some time at the Bar in Melbourne, but was finally drawn back to politics, and in 1857 became Minister of Public Works in the first administration under responsible government in Victoria. In the same year he was Chairman of a Select Committee in the Legislature to procure the federation of the Australian Colonies, and at a later period Chairman of a Royal Commission for the same purpose, and author of the Reports of these bodies, on which the plan of federation has since been advocated. In 1858 he became Minister of Lands, which office he again accepted in a third administration in 1862. After a visit of two years to Europe, he re-entered Parliament in Victoria, and became Prime Minister in 1871. While he held this office he was Chairman of a Conference of all the Australian Governments to procure certain enlargements of their powers, which has since been conceded by the Imperial Parliament. In the following year he resigned office, and in 1873 was knighted. On his return to the colony in 1876, after two years' absence in Europe, he was chosen a member of the Legislative Assembly on the first vacancy occurring; and on the meeting of a new Parliament in May, 1877, he was unanimously elected Speaker of the Legislative Assembly. In the same year he was created a Knight Commander of the Order of SS. Michael and George. Sir Gavan Duffy was Chairman of the Trustees of the National Gallery of Victoria, and has taken an active share in projects for encouraging art, literature, and industrial enterprise in that new country. He returned to Europe in 1880, and has since published "Young Ireland: a Fragment of Irish History, 1840-50," London, 1880; and "Four Years of Irish History, 1845-1849," published in 1883, being a sequel to "Young Ireland;" and written on Colonial and Irish questions in the Contemporary Review, Nineteenth Century, and National Review. In 1891 he became President of the newly-founded Irish Literary Society (London), and delivered an inaugural address.

DUMAS, Alexandre, the younger, son of the late M. Alexandre Davy Dumas, novelist and dramatic writer, was born in Paris, July 28, 1824, and received his education in the Collège Bourbon. At the age of seventeen he published a collection of poems, "Les Péchés de Jeunesse," a work of small literary merit. He travelled with his father in Spain and in Africa, and on his return wrote "Les Aventures de Quatre Femmes et d'un Perroquet," published in 1846-7. He may be said to belong to the sensuous school of French literature. His principal work of fiction, "La Dame aux Camélias," became one of the best-known productions of the day. A dramatic version was played in 1852, after having been interdicted by M. Léon Faucher, and, reproduced in Verdi's opera, "La Traviata," created a still greater sensation. M. Dumas, who has written many dramatic pieces, is considered by the public the greatest living dramatic exponent of the Demi-monde. A comedy from his pen, entitled "Les Idées de Madame Aubray," was produced at Paris early in 1867. His "Visite de Noces" and "La Princesse Georges" were brought out at the Gymnase Dramatique in 1871. In 1872 he published a pamphlet entitled "L'Homme-Femme." It repeated the thesis of his novel "L'Affaire Clémenceau," and a dramatic version of it was produced at the Gymnase, in 1873, under the title of "La Femme de Claude," a play which was brought out again at the Renaissance Theatre by Madame Sarah Bernhardt in Sept., 1894. M. Dumas' fine collection of pictures was sold in 1892 for a sum exceeding half a million francs. M. Dumas was installed as a member of the French Academy, Feb. 11, 1875, and has been promoted to the rank of Commander of the Legion of Honour. His drama, "Joseph Balsamo," based on his father's romance of "Cagliostro," was represented for the first time at the Odéon, March 18, 1878. He published, in 1880, "Les Femmes qui tuent et les Femmes qui votent;" in 1881, "La Princesse de Bagdad;" in 1885, "Denise;" and in 1887, "Francillon."

DU MAURIER, George Louis Palmella Busson, artist, was born March 6, 1834, and educated in Paris, but is a British subject. His grandparents on his father's side were émigres from France during the Reign of Terror. He came over to England at the age of seventeen, and studied chemistry under Dr. Williamson at University College, London. Afterwards he studied painting in Paris under the famous M. Gleyre, also in Antwerp and Düsseldorf. He first began to draw on wood in England for Once a Week, afterwards for Punch and the Cornhill Magazine, and subsequently he joined the Punch staff. Since that time his weekly drawings have made him one of the best known and most admired of contemporary artists and satirists. Mr. Du Maurier has illustrated "Esmond," "The Story of a Feather," Thackeray's "Ballads," and many other books. He is also an Associate of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours. A special exhibition of his works was held at the rooms of the Fine Art Society in 1885. In 1891 Mr. Du Maurier published a novel, "Peter Ibbetson," in Harper's Magazine, and in 1894 his novel "Trilby" appeared. He has lectured occasionally on subjects connected with his work as an artist.

DÜMMLER, Ernst Ludwig, a German historian, was born at Berlin, Jan. 2, 1830, studied at Bonn and Berlin, and settled in 1855 at Halle, where he was appointed Extraordinary Professor of History in 1858, and ordinary Professor in 1866. He is a member of the Academy of Munich, and since 1871 he has been an ordinary member of the Historical Commission of Munich, and of the central committee for the publication of Monumenta Germaniae. He was elected a corresponding member of the French Academy of Sciences, March 30, 1882. Among his works we may mention: "The Pilgrim of Passau, and the Archbishopric of Lorch," 1854; "On the Early History of the Slavs in Dalmatia," 1856; "The Formulary of Bishop Salomo III. of Constance," 1857; "History of the Kingdom of the Eastern Franks," 2 vols., 1862-65, his principal work, which was "crowned" with two prizes; "Auxilius and Bulgarius," 1866; "Anselm the Peripatetic," 1872; and "The Emperor Otho the Great," 1876.

DUNCKLEY, Henry, M.A., LL.D., J.P., was born at Warwick, Dec. 24, 1823, and educated at the Baptist Academy, Accrington, and the University of Glasgow, where he graduated M.A. in 1848. In the same year he became minister of the Baptist Church, Great George Street, Salford, retiring from that position in 1855, to undertake the editorship of the Manchester Examiner and Times, of which he became a co-proprietor a few years later. In 1850 a First Prize, offered by the Religious Tract Society, was awarded to his essay on the condition of the working classes, entitled "The Glory and the Shame of Britain." In 1853 a First Prize, offered by the Council of the Anti-Corn Law League for the best work, "showing the results of the repeal of the Corn Laws, and the Free Trade Policy, on the moral, the social, the commercial, and the political interests of the United Kingdom," was awarded to his essay, entitled, "The Charter of the Nations." In 1877 he began, in the Manchester Weekly Times, the publication of a series of weekly letters on current topics, with the signature of "Verax," a pseudonym but slightly veiling the authorship. Five of these letters, suggested by the third volume of Sir Theodore Martin's "Life of the Prince Consort," and entitled "The Crown and the Cabinet," were published separately, and had a very wide circulation. A volume of "Letters" was published in 1878; and smaller selections have been published from time to time. In 1878 Mr. Dunckley was elected a member of the Reform Club, as a recognition of services rendered to the Liberal party. He has since been a contributor to some of the leading periodicals. In 1883 the University of Glasgow conferred on Mr. Dunckley the honorary degree of LL.D. In 1886 he was put on the Commission of the Peace for the city of Manchester. His connection with the Examiner and Times ceased on Jan. 25, 1889, when the paper was transferred to new proprietors. In 1890 he contributed a "Life of Lord Melbourne" to the series of "The Queen's Prime Ministers," and has recently edited, with an Introduction, Bamford's "Passages in the Life of a Radical."

DUNKIN, Edwin, F.R.S., F.R.A.S., is the third son of the late Mr. William Dunkin, of the "Nautical Almanac" office, by his wife, Mary Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Mr. David Wise, surgeon, of Redruth, Cornwall. He was born at Truro on Aug. 19, 1821, and educated at private schools, first at Truro, and afterwards in London and at Guines, near Calais. In August, 1838, he joined the staff at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich. In July, 1856, he was appointed a First-class Assistant, and in August, 1881, Chief Assistant, from which post he retired in August, 1884, after forty-six years' service. During this period he was the representative of the Astronomer-Royal in several important astronomical expeditions, including the observations at Christiania, of the total solar eclipse of July 28, 1851; the determination of the telegraphic difference of longitude between the Royal Observatory and the observatory at Brussels in 1853, of Paris in 1854, and of the island of Valencia, Ireland, in 1862. In the autumn of 1854, Mr. Dunkin had the sole charge of the Astronomer-Royal's elaborate series of pendulum experiments in the Harton coal-pit, near South Shields, undertaken to determine the mean density of the earth, a work of considerable responsibility and delicacy. Besides taking a prominent part in the duties belonging to his official position, Mr. Dunkin is the author of several memoirs and papers on astronomical questions, published in the "Memoirs" and "Monthly Notices" of the Royal Astronomical Society, the Journal of the Royal Institution of Cornwall, the "Companion to the British Almanac," and in various periodicals. In 1860 he rearranged and rewrote a large portion of Dr. Lardner's "Handbook of Astronomy" for a second edition, which rendered the work of more practical use to students. Some of his most popular articles, originally published in the Leisure Hour, were in 1869 collected into a volume under the title of "The Midnight Sky," and in 1879 appeared a series of short biographical sketches entitled "Obituary Notices of Astronomers." Mr. Dunkin was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society on March 13, 1845. From 1871 to 1877 he served as Honorary Secretary, and subsequently as Vice-President on several occasions. On Feb. 8, 1884, he was elected President of the Society, and delivered special addresses on the presentation of the Gold Medal to Dr. Huggins in 1885, and to Professors Pickering and Pritchard in 1886. On June 1, 1876, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1879-81 had a seat in the Council. In November, 1889, Mr. Dunkin was elected President of the Royal Institution of Cornwall for two years, and delivered the Annual Address at its spring meetings.

DUNRAVEN, Wyndham Thomas Wyndham-Quin, fourth Earl of, K.P., the only son of the third earl by his first wife, Augusta, daughter of Thomas Goold, Esq., was born at Adare Abbey, Feb. 12, 1841. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and entered the 1st Life Guards in 1865. Whilst an officer in the Household Brigade he won popularity as a steeplechase rider. He left the army in 1867, and went to Abyssinia as correspondent of the Daily Telegraph. He followed the Franco-German war again as a special correspondent for the same journal, and in 1871 succeeded to the title and estates. In 1875 he was appointed lord-lieutenant and sheriff principal of the county of Stirling. He was Under-Secretary for the Colonies in Lord Salisbury's two Administrations, but resigned in February, 1887. Lord Dunraven is an authority on hunting. In economical matters he is a believer in the doctrine of what is called "Fair Trade." He is the author of "The Great Divide," "Notes on Irish Architecture," "The Soudan: its History, Geography, and Characteristics," and various papers on hunting which have appeared in the Nineteenth Century. His name, during the last few years, has been prominently before the public as that of a yachtsman. With his magnificent yacht, the Valkyrie, he has twice tried to wrest the America Cup from the New York Yacht Club, but has twice failed, his opponent on both occasions (1893 and 1894) having been the Vigilant, a vessel of the American centre-board type.

DUNSTAN, Wyndham Rowland, M.A., F.R.S., is the eldest son of the late John Dunstan, Governor of Chester Castle (1810-1869), by his marriage with Emily Catherine, eldest daughter of Ciprian Potter, the well-known musician, who was Principal of the Royal Academy of Music from 1820 to 1865. He was born on May 24, 1861, and was educated at the Bedford Grammar School. On leaving school, where he had already acquired a strong interest in physical science, he came to London and devoted himself to the study of chemistry, in which subject he attended the principal lectures given in the metropolis. He also gave a considerable amount of time to the study of logic and mental philosophy, and in 1880 he took a leading part in founding the Aristotelian Society, which was the means of bringing together those who were interested in these subjects, particularly in their relation to physical science. Professor Dunstan was a Vice-President of the Society from 1882 to 1889, and when in 1890 the Society decided to publish a journal he became its first editor. In 1883 he was appointed Demonstrator of Chemistry in the University Laboratories, Oxford, and from that time forward he has devoted his attention almost exclusively to educational and scientific work in this subject. At Oxford he organised a systematic course of practical instruction in Organic Chemistry, which had not then attained the importance as a branch of chemical instruction which it now has. At this time the University had commenced to develop the scientific teaching of medicine, and Mr. Dunstan was entrusted by the Waynflete Professor of Chemistry with the organisation of the teaching of chemistry in its relations to medicine. For several years he was Lecturer in Organic Chemistry in its relations to physiology and medicine, and afterwards University Lecturer in Chemical Pharmacology, an appointment which he resigned in 1892 on becoming Lecturer on Chemistry at St. Thomas's Hospital. Mr. Dunstan has been for some years Professor of Chemistry to the Pharmaceutical Society, in which capacity he has initiated the work of a laboratory for scientific research, from which numerous contributions to chemistry and chemical pharmacology have been made by him and his pupils. Professor Dunstan took a prominent part in the movement in favour of reforming the methods of teaching elementary science in schools, which led in 1887 to the appointment by the British Association of a Committee, which was charged to inquire into and report upon the methods of teaching then adopted. Of this Committee, which sat for three years, Professor Dunstan was the secretary, and he was largely concerned in drawing up the several reports which it made. The recommendations of the Committee have been widely adopted, and the improvement which has taken place during the last few years, both in the status and mode of teaching elementary science in schools, has been chiefly due to its action. In 1886 Professor Dunstan received the degree of Master of Arts, honoris causa, from the University of Oxford, and in 1893 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He is also a Fellow of the Chemical Society and of the Institute of Chemistry, and has been a member of the Council of both these societies. In 1893 he became Secretary to the Chemical Society. Professor Dunstan is Examiner in Chemistry to the University of London, the Royal College of Physicians, and the Institute of Chemistry. He has been an Examiner in the University of Cambridge, and an Assistant Examiner to the Science and Art Department. He is also a member of the Committee of Scientific Advice of the Imperial Institute, and a Governor of the London School of Medicine for Women. Professor Dunstan's contributions to chemical science are many of them in the shape of memoirs, which have appeared in the "Philosophical Transactions" and the "Proceedings of the Royal Society," the "Transactions of the Chemical Society," and in other journals. The following are the titles of some of the more recent papers:—"The Physiological Action of the Nitrites of the Paraffin Series considered in connection with their Chemical Constitution" (with Professor Cash, F.R.S.I., Phil. Trans., 1893); "Contributions to our Knowledge of the Accurate Alkaloids" (Trans. Chem. Soc., 1891-1894); "The Occurrence of Skutole in the Vegetable Kingdom" (Proc. Royal Soc., 1893); "The Isomerism of the Paraffinic Aldoxines" (Trans. Chem. Soc., 1894); "Mercuric Zinc Cyanide: Study of the Formation and Properties of an Insoluble Double Salt" (Trans. Chem. Soc., 1893).

DUPRÉ, August, Ph.D., F.R.S., F.I.C., &c., born at Mainz (Mayence), on Sept. 6, 1835, where his father, although a citizen of the then free city of Frankfort, at that time resided. Both father and mother were descendants of Huguenot families who, after revocation of the Edict of Nantes, had immigrated into the Bavarian Palatinate. After passing through the polytechnic schools of Geissen and Darmstadt, he studied for three years at the Universities of Giessen and Heidelberg, under Bunsen, taking his degrees of M.A. and Ph.D. in 1855 at the latter university. Soon afterwards he came to London, where he has remained ever since. In 1863 he was elected Lecturer on Chemistry to the Westminster Hospital Medical School (a post which he still occupies). He has since that time been actively engaged as a scientific and consulting chemist. He has published many original papers on subjects connected with Chemistry, Physiology, Toxicology, Food Analysis, and Water, in the "Philosophical Transactions," "Proceedings of the Royal Society," "Journal of the Chemical Society," Analyst, and in the Annual Reports of the Medical Officer to the Local Government Board, &c. In 1871 he was appointed Chemical Referee to the Medical Department of the Local Government Board; in 1872, Chemical Adviser to the Explosive Department of the Home Office; in 1873, Public Analyst for the Westminster District; and in 1888 he was appointed a member of the War Office Committee on Explosives, under the presidency of Sir F. Abel, C.B. (which post he now holds). In his connexion with the Home Office his name came prominently before the public in relation to the various dynamite outrages. He has frequently been consulted by various Government Departments, viz., the Treasury, the Board of Trade, the Wreck Commissioners' Court, &c.; and also by the late Metropolitan Board of Works, especially with regard to the treatment and disposal of the metropolitan sewage. He has, in conjunction with Dr. Thudicum, published a book on "The Nature, Origin, and Use of Wine," 1872; and, in conjunction with Dr. H. Wilson Hake, "A Short Manual of Chemistry," 1886. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1875, and was President of the Society of Public Analysts in the years 1877-78; was one of the chief scientific witnesses on behalf of the Crown in the famous Dr. Lamson's poisoning case; was President of Section III. of the British Sanitary Congress held at Bolton in 1887. In 1870 he was for some time attached to a field-hospital, established by the English Red Cross Society, for the treatment of both German and French wounded in the late Franco-Prussian War. He married, in 1876, Florence M. Robberds, daughter of H. T. Robberds, of Manchester, by whom he has a family of four sons and one daughter.

DUPUY, Charles Alexandre, French statesman, was born at Le Puy on Nov. 5, 1851. His parents were in humble circumstances, his father having been an official at the local prefecture. M. Dupuy began life as a professor of philosophy at the colleges of Nantua and Aurillac, and at various Lycées. In 1880 he was appointed School Inspector at Mende, and afterwards inspected schools at Caen and at Ajaccio, where he was appointed Vice-Rector of the Corsican College. At the elections of 1885 he was returned to the Chamber of Deputies as Opportunist Republican Member for the Haute-Loire. In parliament he has been particularly devoted to the interests of primary education, and in 1886 brought forward a proposal to transfer the nomination of schoolmasters from the prefects of departments to the rectors of academies, but he withdrew his proposition in face of the opposition it met with. He has been a member of various Public Instruction Commissions. At the elections of Sept., 1889, he was returned for the Puy by a large majority over his monarchist opponent. In Dec., 1892, he took office, for the first time, under M. Ribot, and succeeded that statesman as Premier in March, 1893. He was one of the candidates for the Presidency of the French Republic, his marked courage on the occasion of the bomb explosion in the Chamber having made a great impression in his favour. He went out of office at the beginning of 1895, and was succeeded by M. Ribot.

DURAND, Alice Marie Céleste, French authoress (who writes under the name of Henry Gréville), was born in Paris. She was carefully educated at home, and when, at the age of fourteen, she accompanied her father, Prof. Fleury, to St. Petersburg, she was familiar with several modern languages. She soon began to publish novels and stories on Russian life and character, and continued writing after her marriage with M. Durand, a French professor of law. In 1872 she returned to France, and began to write for the Revue des Deux Mondes, Figaro, Le Temps, and other periodicals and papers. Under the name of Henry Gréville she has published a large number of novels, amongst which may be mentioned, "Dosia," "L'Expiation de Savéli," 1876; "Nouvelles Russes," "Sonia," "La Maison de Maurèze," "Autour d'un Phare," 1877; "Bonne Marie," "L'Amie," "Un Violon Russe," "Lucie Rodey," 1879; "Croquis," "Cité Menard," 1880; "Mme. de Dreux," "Perdue," 1881; "Le Fiancé de Sylve," "Rose Rozier," 1882; "Une Trahison," "Le Vœu de Nadier," "Louis Breuil," 1883; "Le Mors aux Dents," 1885; "Cleopâtre," 1886; "La Fille de Dosia," 1887; "Comédies de Paravent," 1888; "L'Avenir d'Aline," 1889; "Le Passé," and "Un Mystère," 1890, and "L'Héritière," 1891.

DURAND, Charles Auguste Emile, known as Carolus-Duran, French painter, was born at Lille, July 3, 1838. He received his early art education at the municipal school in his native town, and in 1855 went to Paris. He gained the Wicar travelling scholarship and went to Italy, and at Rome painted "La Prière du Soir," exhibited at the Salon in 1863.

For "L'Assassiné," 1866, he was awarded his first medal. This picture was purchased by the Government for the Museum at Lille. M. Carolus-Duran resided for a year in Spain, and the influence of Velasquez is clearly seen in his "St. Francis of Assisi," exhibited at the Paris Salon in 1868. But the fame of Carolus-Duran rests principally on his portraits, which are very numerous. Among them may be mentioned that of Emile Girardin, those of his daughter, and the equestrian portrait of Mdlle. Croizette, the well-known actress. In 1890 he joined the dissentient party among French painters, who in that year opened the Champ-de-Mars exhibition in opposition to the old Salon. Here he exhibited five portraits of ladies. He is a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and of several foreign orders.

DURAND, Sir Henry Mortimer, K.C.S.I., K.C.I.E., is the second son of the late Major-General Sir Henry Marion Durand, and was born in 1850. Entering the diplomatic service he became Junior Attaché (Foreign Department) in 1874, and Assistant-Secretary in the same in 1877. In 1879 he was sent out on political duty with the Kabul field force. From 1880 to 1885 he was Under-Secretary in the Foreign Department of the Government of India, and subsequently became Secretary. In 1885 he was made C.I.E. and C.S.I. In 1893 he conducted an important diplomatic mission at Cabul, the object of which was to establish cordial relations between the Ameer's Government and our own. On his return from Afghanistan he was made K.C.S.I. and K.C.I.E. He was subsequently appointed British Minister Plenipotentiary to Persia, and started for the Shah's dominions on Oct. 2, 1894. Sir Mortimer Durand married, in 1875, Ella, daughter of T. Sandys, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn.

DURNFORD, The Right Rev. Richard, D.D., Bishop of Chichester, eldest son of the Rev. Richard Durnford, rector of Goodworth Clatford, Hampshire, by Louisa, daughter of Mr. William Mount, of Wasing Place, Berkshire, was born at Sandleford, Berkshire, in 1802. He received his education at Eton, where he was a contributor to the celebrated Etonian, of which the late Mr. Winthrop Mackworth Praed was editor; and many of his Latin verses appear in the "Musæ Etonenses." He passed in due course from Eton to Oxford, and was elected successively a Demy and a Fellow of Magdalen College, where he took his B.A. degree in 1826, obtaining a first-class in classical honours, and proceeded M.A. in 1829. In 1835 he was appointed Rector of Middleton, Lancashire. He was preferred to the archdeaconry of Manchester in 1867, and made a Canon of Manchester Cathedral in 1868. He was chosen to be one of the Proctors in Convocation. In 1870, on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, he was nominated by the Crown to the bishopric of Chichester, being consecrated at Whitehall on May 8. Bishop Durnford has devoted himself earnestly to the prominent movements of the time within the Established Church, especially temperance, middle-class education, and the organized work of women. He has published some sermons and charges. He married in 1830, Emma, daughter of the late Rev. John Keate, D.D., head-master of Eton and Canon of Windsor.

DUSE, Signora Eleonora, was born in Venice about thirty-five years ago, and received her dramatic training in a company of strolling players. She learned the gospel of self-restraint at an early age, and has kept it. Her dramatic method is remarkable. "She does not 'make up' her face—she uses no cosmetics, no rouge, no powder. She does not make an artificially-prepared entry, but mingles with the crowd on the stage, glides silently among them, all unnoticed by the audience, but when she steps out of the ranks, and speaks . . . . she throws herself into her work with so much spirit and feeling that the play seems an actuality." She won her first laurels in New York, and enjoyed an immense success in Boston. In 1893 and 1894 she played in London during the season, her répertoire including the best-known plays of Victorien Sardou and Dumas, Ibsen's "Doll's House," and the Italian dramatists. She had the honour of appearing before the Queen at Windsor in 1894, the comedy chosen for representation being "La Locandiera," by Goldoni.

DVORÁK, Pan Antonin, Bohemian musician, was born on Sept. 8, 1841, at the village of Nelahozeves, near Prague, where his father was a butcher and innkeeper. As a child he showed great aptitude for the violin; but for a long time he was ignorant of the most elementary rules of music. After leaving school he earned his living by playing in a band of wandering village minstrels, and his first attempt at composition was a dance which the members of this band tried to play; but as the young composer was unaware that the music should have been written in different clefs for the different instruments, the result was terrible discord and utter failure. He then gave up composing, and went to Prague in 1857, where for the first time he heard the names of the great composers, and was present at the performance of an opera; here he was able to hire a piano and give lessons, and in 1874, a year after his marriage, he gained a competition scholarship at Vienna. In 1875 he gained £50, and in 1876 £60, but it was not until 1878 that his name became at all well known; at that time he published his "Moravian Duets" at Berlin, which were at once favourably received, and opened the way for further compositions. His dances, songs, and symphonies have all found favour with the best critics; but the "Stabat Mater" (performed at the Birmingham Festival) and "König und Köhler" (The King and the Charcoal-Burners) are perhaps his most popular works. One of his later works is the oratorio "St. Ludmila," founded on the poem of the young Bohemian poet, Yaroslav Vrchlicky, the subject being the introduction of Christianity into Bohemia. This was performed with great success at the Leeds Musical Festival, Oct., 1886, under the personal direction of Herr Dvorák. He has also composed several operas which have been either performed or published in Germany. Of these "Le Paysan Mutin," may be mentioned.

DWIGHT, Timothy, D.D., LL.D., was born at Norwich, Connecticut, Nov. 16, 1828. He graduated from Yale College in 1849, continued his studies at New Haven for two years, and then entered the Theological Seminary connected with Yale College, 1851-53, filling meanwhile a tutorship at the College 1851-55. He was licensed to preach in 1855; spent 1856-58 in Europe; and on his return was appointed, 1858, Professor of Sacred Literature at Yale. On May 20, 1886, he was elected President of the College, to succeed Dr. Noah Porter, resigned. President Dwight was an associate editor of The New Englander, and was an active member of the American Committee for the Revision of the English Version of the Bible from 1872 to 1885. He has published many articles on various topics, and has annotated the English translation of Meyer on Romans, and on other Epistles. In 1886 he translated (with notes) Godet on the Gospel of John.

DYKE, The Right Hon. Sir William Hart, Bart, M.P., son of the late Sir Percyvall Hart Dyke, was born at East Hall, St Mary Cray, Kent, Aug. 7, 1837, and educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degree in 1861. He represented West Kent in the Conservative interest from 1865 to 1867, and the Mid-Division of the same county until 1885, when he was returned for the N. W or Dartford Division. He was Whip of the Conservative party from 1868 to 1880; Patronage Secretary to the Treasury from 1874-80, and Chief Secretary for Ireland in Lord Salisbury's Government from June, 1885, to Jan., 1886. At the General Elections in 1886 and 1892 he was again returned for North-West Kent. From 1887 to 1892 he was Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education. He is a J.P. and D.L. for Kent.

E.

EARLE, Professor, The Rev. J., of Swanswick Rectory, Bath, was born Jan. 29, 1824, at Elston, in the parish of Churchstow, near Kingsbridge, South Devon. He became a private pupil in the house of the Rev. Orlando Manley, then incumbent of Plymstock; and from Mr. Manley's he went to the Plymouth New Grammar School, where he stayed, until the ancient Grammar School at Kingsbridge having been reconstituted, he was entered there for the last year before he went to Oxford. He began to reside in 1842. In 1845 he was in the First-class of Litteræ Humaniores, and took his B.A. In 1848 he was elected Fellow of Oriel on a Devonshire foundation. In 1849 he took the degree of M.A., and was elected Professor of Anglo-Saxon, an office at that time tenable for only five years. In the same year he was ordained Deacon by Samuel Wilberforce, Bishop of Oxford. In 1852 he became College Tutor in succession to Mr. Buckle, now Canon of Wells. On March 5, 1856, in a game of racquets, he was struck in the left eye, which caused a permanent infirmity of sight. In 1857 he was presented by Oriel College to the rectory of Swanswick, near Bath. He was appointed by the Bishop of Bath and Wells (Lord Arthur Hervey), in 1871 to the prebend of Wanstrow in Wells Cathedral; and in 1873 to be Rural Dean of Bath, an office which he discharged until 1877. In 1876 he was re-elected Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Oxford, the tenure of this Professorship having in the meantime been made permanent. The following is a list of his chief publications: "Gloucester Fragments (St. Swithun, &c."), 1861; "Bath, Ancient and Modern," 1864; "Two of the Saxon Chronicles Parallel," 1865; "The Philology of the English Tongue," 1871; Fifth Edition, 1892; "A Book for the Beginner in Anglo-Saxon," 1877; Third Edition, 1884; "English Plant Names from the Tenth to the Fifteenth Century," 1880; "Anglo-Saxon Literature," 1884; "A Hand-Book of the Land Charters and other Saxonic Documents," 1888; "English Prose: its Elements, History, and Usage," 1890; "The Psalter of 1539: A Landmark in English Literature," 1894.

EBERS, Georg, orientalist and novelist, was born at Berlin, March 1, 1837. His father, a banker, having died before the birth of his son, the latter received his early instruction from his mother, and subsequently studied in Fröbel's school at Keilhau. At the Universities of Göttingen and Berlin he made Egyptology his central study, and at the termination of his academical career he visited the principal museums of Egyptian antiquities in Europe. In 1865 he established himself at Jena as a private tutor for the Egyptian language and antiquities, and in 1870 he was called to Leipzig as Professor, where he has since remained. Apart from his scientific services, his thesis on obtaining the Degree of Doctor "On the Twenty-sixth Egyptian Dynasty," and his larger work on "Egypt and the Books of Moses," and his "Scientific Journey to Egypt," 1869-70, were the cause of his promotion to that chair. In his second journey to Egypt in 1872-73, he succeeded in discovering the Papyrus E, which was subsequently named after him. This papyrus, although its contents primarily relate to medical subjects, is very important on account of the insight it gives into the language and culture of the ancient Egyptians. Ebers also discovered the important biographical inscription of the "Amen em Neb." In 1876 he had a severe attack of paralysis, which still prevents him from walking. To this illness the further development of his literary activity is mainly attributable, for since the state of his health incapacitated him from pursuing more serious studies, he sought and obtained a means of recreation and agreeable occupation in imaginative composition. This was the origin of "Uarda, a Romance of Ancient Egypt," 1877, which like several of Ebers' other works, has been translated into English by Clara Bell. This was the second of his works of fiction based upon facts in the history of Egypt, for he had previously, in 1864, published "An Egyptian Princess," which has been translated into English by E. Grove, and which gives in the attractive form of a romance a description of popular life in Egypt about the time of the Persian war of conquest. The extraordinary success achieved by "Uarda," induced the author to turn his Egyptian studies still further to account for literary purposes. He composed in succession "Homo Sum," a novel, 1878; "The Sisters," a romance, 1880; and "The Emperor," 1881, the scene of all these works being laid in Egypt. Meanwhile Ebers did not neglect the acquisition of solid learning. It is true that his splendid work on "Egypt—Descriptive, Historical, and Picturesque," 1878, English translation, by Clara Bell, with introduction and notes by Dr. Birch, 1880, is of a popular character, as are also his previous publications "Through Goshen to Sinai," 1872, and his work, written in collaboration with Guthe, on "Palestine—Descriptive, Historical, and Picturesque," 1881. On the other hand, his numerous articles in periodicals on the Egyptian language and antiquities, his remarkable treatise on "Papyrus E, a Hieratic Manual of Egyptian Medicine," 2 vols., 1872, afford ample proof of the most profound scientific study. His later works are "The Burgomaster's Wife: a Tale of the Siege of Leyden;" "Serapis, a Romance," 1885; "Die Nilbraut," 1887; the "Papyros Ebers," 1890; "Coptic Art" and "Per Aspera," 1892.

EDEN, The Right Rev. George Rodney, Suffragan Bishop of Dover in succession to the late Bishop Parry. Educated at Pembroke College, Cambridge, of which he was a scholar, he took his B.A. in 1876, after being placed in the Second Class of the Classical Tripos. He was afterwards in the Second Class of the Theological Tripos, and obtained the Carus Greek Testament prize in 1878. He was ordained in 1878. He has been Assistant-Master at Asygarth School, 1878-79; Domestic Chaplain to the Bishop of Durham, 1879-83; Vicar of Auckland St. Andrew with St. Anne and St. Philip, 1883-90; Rural Dean of Auckland, 1887-90; Canon and Archdeacon of Canterbury, 1890. He was consecrated Bishop of Dover in Oct., 1890. In 1892 he was appointed Chaplain to the Cinque Ports.

EDEN, The Rev. Robert, M.A., son of the late Rev. Thomas Eden, born at Whitehall, near Bristol, was educated at a private school near that city. Having first entered at St. John's College, Oxford, as Bible Clerk, he became Scholar, and afterwards Fellow of Corpus Christi College, where he graduated B.A. in 1825, and M.A. in 1827. He was appointed an Examiner at Oxford in 1828-9, was successively Head-Master of Hackney and Camberwell Collegiate Schools between 1829 and 1838; and held the post of Examiner for the East India Civil Service from 1839 to 1856; was Chaplain to the Bishop of Norwich in 1849; Vicar of North Walsham in 1851; Honorary Canon of Norwich in 1852, and Vicar of Wymondham in 1854. Canon Eden is the author of the "Churchman's Theological Dictionary;" "The Examination and Writings of Archdeacon Philpot, with Biography," for the Parker Society; "Some Thoughts on the Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures," 1864, and "The Title Page of the Revised Version," 1887. He has also edited theological works for the Clarendon Press, and has published a volume of sermons.

EDHEM PACHA, a Turkish statesman, was born in 1823. He studied in Paris, where for three years he attended the lectures in the School of Mines. On returning to Turkey he was attached to the staff of the army with the rank of captain, rapidly attained to that of colonel, and was appointed a member of the Council of Mines at the time of its formation. Having been appointed Aide-de-Camp to the Sultan in 1849, he soon was placed at the head of his Majesty's household troops. Meanwhile, he had been promoted General of Brigade, and then General of Division. In 1856 he resigned the functions which he had fulfilled at the palace, and was appointed a member of the council of the Tanzimat, and afterwards Minister of Foreign Affairs, with the rank of Muchir. He held that post for only one year. Subsequently he played an important part in the affairs of his country, where he was nominated President of the Council of State. He was also for some time Ambassador at Berlin. At the Conference of Constantinople, 1876-7, he acted as the second Turkish plenipotentiary, and he was appointed to succeed Midhat Pacha as Grand Vizier, Feb. 5, 1877, and in 1885 became Turkish Ambassador in Paris.

EDINBURGH, Duke and Duchess of. See SAXE-COBURG AND GOTHA.

EDIS, Robert William, F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A., architect, born at Huntingdon in 1839, was educated at the Local Grammar School, and afterwards at the Brewers' Company's School at Aldenham. He became a member of the Architectural Association early in his professional life, and was elected President for two successive years; Associate of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1862, a Fellow in 1867, a member of Council in 1888, and Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in 1870. He has travelled much in many countries, and in the early part of his career made a series of architectural sketches in France, Italy, and Germany, some of which were published in the Building News and other professional journals. He has written and lectured on domestic art and sanitation, and published various books on those subjects. He is one of the leaders of the modern revival of red brick and so-called "Queen Anne" architecture. In 1882 he went to America to advise as to the laying out of a new city in Kansas State. In 1880 he was invited by the Society of Arts to give a series of Cantor Lectures on the "Decoration and Furniture of Town Houses," since illustrated and published in book form. He wrote the article on "Internal Decoration from a Sanitary Point of View," in Our Homes; and the hand-book on "Healthy Furniture," for the Council of the International Health Exhibition. Amongst his principal and latest works are the additions to the Inner Temple Library, the Constitutional Club in Northumberland Avenue, the Junior Constitutional Club in Piccadilly, enlargement of the London School Board offices (Victoria Embankment), various blocks of houses on the Duke of Westminster's Estate in Green Street and other parts of London, and ball-room and additions at Sandringham, for H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, &c. In 1893 Mr. Edis acted as Honorary Architect to the Royal Commission for the Chicago Exhibition, and from his designs the "Victoria" House at the World's Fair was erected. He is also Honorary Architect to the Gordon Boys' Home, and has recently designed a new chapel for the Home. Mr. Edis joined the "Artists" Corps at its formation in 1859, and is now Colonel of the regiment. He was Aide-de-Camp to Lord Bury in the French and German war under the General Convention; and was in Paris during the last days of the Commune, when he wrote, as the result of his observations, a paper on "Fireproof Materials," which was read before the Royal Institute of British Architects. Mr. Edis was elected a member of the London County Council for South St. Pancras.

EDISON, Thomas Alva, was born at Milan, Erie Co., Ohio, Feb. 11, 1847, being of Dutch descent on his father's side, and Scotch on his mother's. His early education was derived chiefly from his mother's lessons and from his omnivorous reading, his entire school attendance not exceeding two months. When about twelve he became a railway newsboy, conducting at the same time (with the help of boy associates) three small stores at Port Huron, Michigan. Later he established an amateur paper, which he printed and sold on the train, and also improvised a laboratory in a baggage-car for chemical experiments. Having at great peril saved the life of the little son of a station-master, the father, out of gratitude, assisted him to learn telegraphy; and in a short time he acquired so much skill as an operator that he was successively employed at Port Huron, Stratford (Canada), Indianapolis (Indiana), Cincinnati (Ohio), Memphis (Tennessee), Boston, and at many other places. During the years he was thus engaged he was constantly experimenting in every direction. At Indianapolis he made his first essay towards an automatic telegraphic repeater, which he completed while at Memphis. His first patent was for a chemical vote-recording apparatus (for use in legislative bodies), and was taken out while he was at Boston. It was at Boston also that he began work upon duplex telegraphy, but it was not until 1872 that it was perfected. He went to New York in 1871, and shortly afterwards was appointed Superintendent of the Law Gold Indicator Co., which supplied gold and stock quotations to brokers' offices. From this point his career has been an uninterrupted success. He invented the gold and stock printing telegraph; the system for quadruplex and sextuplex telegraphic transmission; the carbon telephone transmitter; the microtasimeter for detection of small variations in temperature; the aerophone and megaphone for amplifying and magnifying sound; the electric pen; the electric railway, &c. One of his latest inventions is the kinetograph, an instrument for photographing or recording and then reproducing motion, which performs the same service for the eye that the phonograph does for the ear; it is designed for use in combination with the latter instrument, and when so combined effects simultaneously the duplex sensation of vision and sound. The total number of patents issued to him already exceeds 400, and is constantly increasing; one-fourth of them refer to telegraphy. But it is with the phonograph and electric lighting that his name is the most closely associated, and by which he is best known. He resigned his superintendency in 1876, to devote himself entirely to invention and research, and has a large laboratory at Orange, New Jersey, the most ample in the world for electrical experiment. At the present time (1894) Mr. Edison is devoting most of his time to ore-milling operations, and is now erecting a large mining plant at Edison, in the northern part of the State of New Jersey, where a number of his magnetic separators will be installed for the separation and concentration of iron ore.

EDMUNDS, The Hon. George Franklin, LL.D., American lawyer and statesman, was born at Richmond, Vermont, Feb. 1, 1828. He was educated at the common schools and by a private tutor, studied law at an early age, and began the practice in 1849. In 1851 he removed to Burlington, Vermont. From 1854 to 1859 he was a member of the lower branch of the State Legislature, serving as Speaker for three of those years. In 1861-62 he was a State Senator acting as President pro tem. On the death of Mr. Foote in 1866 he was appointed to the vacancy in the U.S. Senate, which position he continued to fill by successive re-elections until his retirement from public life in 1891. He was one of the prominent Republican leaders of that body, a member and chairman of some of its most important committees, and was twice its President pro tem. He was a member of the Electoral Commission in 1876, which decided the Presidential controversy between Mr. Hayes and Mr. Tilden. At the Republican National Conventions in 1880 and 1884 he received some votes for the nomination to the Presidency. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him in 1887 by Trinity College, Hartford.

EDWARDS, The Right Rev. Alfred George, M.A., bishop of St. Asaph, is the youngest son of the late Rev. William Edwards, vicar of Llangollen, and a brother to the late Dean of Bangor; was born in 1850, and educated at Llandovery School and at Jesus College, Oxford. He obtained a second-class in Classical Moderations in 1872, and a third in the Final Classical School in 1874, taking his degree in the same year. He was ordained deacon in 1874, and priest in 1875, by the present Bishop of St. David's at his first ordination, and in the latter year was appointed Warden and Head-Master of Llandovery School, and after ten years' work at Llandovery was appointed vicar and rural dean of Carmarthen, and private secretary and chaplain to the Bishop of St. David's. He was consecrated Bishop of St. Asaph in March, 1889. The importance of a knowledge of Welsh for a Welsh bishopric is undeniable; and it is satisfactory that the choice fell on a Welsh-speaking clergyman. Bishop Edwards has been twice married, his present wife being the youngest daughter of Mr. Watts John Garland, of Lisbon.

EDWARDS, Henry Sutherland, born 1828, was educated at one of the branch schools of King's College, London, and in France, where he lived many years. In 1856 he visited Russia, on the occasion of the coronation of Alexander II., and, remaining some months in Moscow, studied the Russian language. He published, in 1858, a collection of "Sketches and Studies" (contributed originally to a magazine), under the title of the "Russians at Home." This was followed, in 1862, by a "History of the Opera." In that year Mr. Edwards went to Poland, where an insurrection seemed to be preparing, and to Russia, where measures were being taken for the emancipation of the serfs, as special correspondent to the Times; and, on his return to England, published "The Polish Captivity." In 1863, immediately after the rising in Poland, he was again sent out by the Times. He took part in and described some of the principal expeditions from Galicia into the kingdom of Poland; went, at the crisis of the insurrection, to Warsaw, and, soon after his arrival, was ordered to quit the city within twenty-four hours. Allowed to choose his route, he proceeded to St. Petersburg, and thence to Moscow and the South of Russia, returning to Galicia through Kieff and Volhynia. In 1864 he published the "Private History of a Polish Insurrection;" was special correspondent of the Times at Luxemburg, when, in 1867, the "Luxemburg Question" threatened to produce war; and in July, 1870, when war between France and Prussia actually broke out, was appointed one of the special correspondents of the Times on the German side. In that capacity he followed the King's headquarters from Saarbrück to the neighbourhood of Beaumont; went through the battle of Beaumont with a Bavarian Infantry Regiment; after Beaumont and Sedan, joined General von Werder before Strasburg, and on the fall of Strasburg, traversed the occupied country from Alsace to Normandy, remaining at Rouen and Amiens, with the Army of the North until the end of the war. He has written a few novels, and many pieces for the stage. He published "Malvina," 3 vols., 1871, and subsequently a translation of the "Statistics of all Countries," compiled by Dr. Otto Hübner, the Director of the Prussian Statistical Archives, 1872; and "The Germans in France," 1874. More recent works from his pen are "The Prima Donna: her history," &c., 1888; "Dutiful Daughters; a tale of London Life," 1890; and "The Romanoffs," a history of the house of the Czars of Russia, 1890.

EDWARDS-BETHAM, Miss Matilda Barbara. See BETHAM-EDWARDS.

EGERTON OF TATTON, The Right Hon. Lord Wilbraham, is the eldest son of the late Lord Egerton of Tatton, first baron, and was born at Tatton Park, Knutsford, on Jan. 17, 1832. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, where in 1854, he was in Class II. of the Final School of Law and Modern History. In 1858, his Lordship (then Mr. Wilbraham Egerton), succeeded his father, who in 1859 entered the peerage, as M.P. for North Cheshire, which he continued to represent in the Conservative interest till 1868, when he was returned, at the head of the poll, for Mid-Cheshire. This constituency he represented until 1883, when he succeeded his father in his present title. Lord Egerton has always taken an active interest in matters relating to agriculture, education, and the church, and has given evidence bearing on these subjects before committees of the House of Lords. In 1880 he was appointed an Ecclesiastical Commissioner by Lord Beaconsfield. He has been Chairman of the Church Defence Institution since 1874, is president of the Central Council of Diocesan Conferences, and has contributed many papers to Church Conferences and Congresses. Since 1887 he has been prominently before the public as Chairman of the Manchester Ship Canal Company, with which he has been actively connected since 1886, when he became a member of the Consultative Committee; he has rendered material assistance to the undertaking in Parliament. In 1857 Lord Egerton married Lady Mary Sarah Amherst, daughter of Earl Amherst. She died in 1892. Their only daughter is married to Viscount Bury, M.P.

EGGLESTON, Edward, S.T.D., L.H.D., was born at Vevay, Indiana, Dec., 10, 1837. After holding several posts as a Methodist minister, and acting as editor of two periodicals at Chicago, he removed, in 1870, to Brooklyn, New York, and became literary editor of the New York Inde- pendent, a religious weekly, of which he had previously been the western correspondent. A few months later he was made superintending editor, which position he resigned in July, 1871, to take charge of Hearth and Home. His first two novels, contributed as serials to this latter paper, having opened a new and tempting path to him, he resigned the editorship of Hearth and Home about the end of 1872, and has not since acted as editor to any periodical. In 1874 he carried out a long-cherished plan of establishing an Independent Church without a creed. This "Church of Christian Endeavour" was located in the eastern district of Brooklyn, and was remarkably successful in its philanthropic work, carried out on original plans, many of which have been widely copied. He was obliged, in 1879, to resign this pastorate on account of the complete breaking-down of his health; and since his recovery he has wholly given up preaching, and has devoted himself entirely to literature. He has published in all seven novels, some of which have been translated into several European languages. They are: "The Hoosier Schoolmaster," 1871; "The End of the World," 1872; "Mystery of Metropolisville," 1873; "The Circuit Rider," 1874; "Roxy," 1878; "The Graysons," 1888; "The Faith Doctor," 1891. His other books are: "Schoolmaster's Stories for Boys and Girls," 1874; "The Hoosier Schoolboy," 1883; "Queer Stories for Boys and Girls," 1884; "A History of the United States and its People for Schools," 1888; "The Household History of the United States," 1888; "A First Book in American History," 1889; and a volume of short stories under the title "Duffels," 1893. In connection with others he published, 1878–80, a series of books for young people under the title, "Famous American Indians." Mr. Eggleston has been a contributor to the Century Magazine since the issue of its first number in 1870. To its pages he has contributed, besides works of fiction and essays of various sorts, a series of papers, published at intervals, 1882–90, on early American life and manners. These are the result of careful research for a "History of Life in the United States," upon which he has been engaged for many years.

EIFFEL, Gustave, Engineer of the Eiffel Tower, Paris, was born at Dijon, in the Côte d'Or, in 1843, and educated at the Central School of Arts and Manufactures, Paris. His professional reputation was established by his construction of the Bordeaux Bridge, the Garabit Viaduct, and other important works. He has introduced many improvements in the art of bridge-building upon arches. An elaborate description of the famous Tower, from a popular point of view, was given in the Times of April 30, 1889, when it was asserted that it was a M. Nouguier, a young engineer in M. Eiffel's employment, who first conceived the idea, and worked it out with the aid of an architectural friend. M. Eiffel himself described the Tower in a paper read before the Society of "Travail Professionel" in 1889, and since published with six plates. In April, 1889, he was promoted to the rank of Officer of the Legion of Honour. He offered himself for election to the Senate in Jan., 1891, and was returned in the Côte d'Or, but desisted from his candidature in favour of M. Joigneaux.

EISENLOHR, Professor August, Ph.D., Egyptologist, was born Oct. 6, 1832, at Mannheim, in the Grand Duchy of Baden, where his father was a physician. After a preliminary training in the Lyceum of his native town he entered the University of Heidelberg in 1850, applying himself to the study of Protestant theology, which he continued at Göttingen till 1853, when he returned to Heidelberg, and entered the theological seminary. Illness compelled him to avoid serious study for several years, and on his recovery he abandoned theology, and devoted his attention to the natural sciences, especially chemistry, under the instruction of Professors R. Bunsen and Erlenmeyer. He graduated Ph.D. in 1859, and afterwards established a chemical manufactory. By commercial intercourse with China he became acquainted with the Chinese language, and was thus led to the study of hieroglyphics, which he has prosecuted with great zeal since 1864, aided by the advice of MM. Chabas and Brugsch. On giving up commercial pursuits, he entered, after some years, the academical career as Privat-docent of the Egyptian language and Archæology by a dissertation "Die Analytische Erklärung des demotischen Theils der Rosettana," Theil i., Leipzig, 1869. In the same year, generously aided by the Grand Duke of Baden, he undertook a scientific exploration of Egypt. Having been present at the inauguration of the Suez Canal, he sailed up the Nile to the second cataract of Wadi Halfa, studying, copying, and photographing the inscriptions. On this occasion he had the good fortune to be allowed to study the celebrated Harris Papyrus in the house of the late Consul Harris, at Alexandria. In March, 1870, he left Egypt and returned home. Coming to this country in 1872, he assisted Miss Harris in selling to the British Museum for 3,300*l.* her valuable collection of Greek and Egyptian papyri. Of this collection, and especially of the great Harris Papyrus, he gave a description, translation, and commentary in a pamphlet "Der grosse Papyrus Harris. Ein wichtiger Beitrag zur Aegyptischen Geschichte, ein 3000 Jahr altes Zeugniss für die Mosaische Religion stiftung enthaltend," Leipzig, 1872. In Dec., 1872, he was nominated a Professor Extraordinary in the University of Heidelberg, and was elected an honorary member of the Society of Biblical Archæology of London, and of the Society "El Chark" at Constantinople. In 1885 he became Honorary Professor at the University of Heidelberg.

ELGIN, Victor Alexander Bruce, ninth Earl of Elgin and Kincardine, Governor-General of India, LL.D., G.M.S.I., G.M.I.E., was born in 1849, and in 1863 succeeded his father, who was Viceroy and Governor-General of India in 1862-63. He was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, where he took his M.A. degree in 1877. The University of St. Andrews conferred the LL.D. degree upon him in 1886. He was Treasurer of the Household and First Commissioner of Works in Mr. Gladstone's third administration in 1886. He is a University Commissioner of Scotland, and Lord Lieutenant of Fife. He was appointed Governor-General of India in 1893, and on Jan. 27, 1894, assumed office as Viceroy.

ELIOT, Charles William, LL.D., President of Harvard University, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, March 20, 1834. He was prepared for college at the Boston Public Latin School, and graduated (A.B.) at Harvard in 1853. He was Tutor in Mathematics at Harvard, 1854-58; Assistant Professor of Mathematics and Chemistry, 1858-61; of Chemistry, 1861-63; Professor of Chemistry in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 1865-69; and was chosen President of Harvard, May, 1869. Since his appointment to this post, President Eliot has exercised very great influence over the course of education in the United States. Prior to his accession to the Presidency, he wrote, in conjunction with F. H. Storer, a "Manual of Inorganic Chemistry," 1866, and a "Manual of Qualitative Chemical Analysis," 1869, besides various contributions to scientific journals. Since 1869 his principal publications have been his successive Annual Reports as President of Harvard, and various addresses on educational topics.

ELIOT, The Very Rev. Philip F., D.D., Dean of Windsor, was born in 1835; educated at King Edward's School, Bath, and Trinity College, Oxford, ordained deacon by the Bishop of Winchester, and priest by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and became successively curate of St. Michael's, Winchester, private chaplain at Cally, North Britain, and curate of Walcot, Bath. In 1867 he was appointed first vicar of the new parish of Holy Trinity, Bournemouth. In 1881 he was appointed honorary canon of Winchester; in 1886 was nominated by the Crown to a canonry at Windsor; and in 1891 was made Dean of Windsor, Registrar of the Order of the Garter, and Domestic Chaplain to the Queen. In August, 1883, he married as his second wife the Hon. Mary Pitt, daughter of the late Lord Rivers, and until her marriage maid of honour to her Majesty.

ELIOT, Samuel, LL.D., was born in Boston, Dec. 22, 1821. He graduated at Harvard College in 1839; was for two years engaged in mercantile pursuits in Boston, and subsequently travelled and studied in Europe. His first school was a charity school to rescue children from the streets. In 1847 he published some "Passages from the History of Liberty," that were intended to form a part of a "History of Liberty," which he had meditated for several years. The first instalment appeared in 1849, under the title of "The Liberty of Rome," altered to that of "History of Liberty, Part I., the Ancient Romans;" followed in 1853 by Part II., "The Early Christians." In 1856 he published "A History of the United States from 1492 to 1850" (revised edition, to 1872); and in 1880 a selection of "Poetry for Children." Many addresses, reports, and articles have been printed by him in periodicals. He was Professor of History and Political Science in Trinity College, Hartford, from 1856 to 1864, and President of the College from 1860 to 1864. In 1871-73 he was University Lecturer at Harvard; from 1872-76 Head-Master of the Girls' High School in Boston; and from 1878 to 1880 Superintendent of the Boston Public Schools. He is at the head of several literary and charitable institutions in Boston.

ELIZABETH, Queen of Roumania (Pauline Elizabeth Ottilie Louise), daughter of the late Prince Hermann of Wied, by his marriage with the Princess Maria of Nassau, was born at Neuwied, Germany, Dec. 29, 1843. In her parents' home she became acquainted with the chief writers, poets, scholars, and artists of the day, and early showed a great gift for poetical composition, writing verses with facility before the age of ten. As she grew older she showed remarkable intelligence in all branches of study, and became especially proficient in languages, both ancient and modern. The years 1863 to 1868 were spent chiefly in travel. In 1869 she married Prince Charles of Roumania, second son of Prince Anthony of Hohenzollern; and her great popularity in the land of her adoption dates from her first appearance among her people when, as a bride, she accompanied her husband to his capital. She began at once to enter with her characteristic energy into the life of the Roumanian people, to study their customs, and to endeavour to understand their thoughts and aspirations. In 1870, on the day after receiving from her brother the news of the battle of Sedan, in which he had fought with honour, her only child, a daughter, was born, whose death from diphtheria occurred in 1874. During the anxious days of the war of 1877, in which Prince Charles and his Roumanians so greatly distinguished themselves, the Princess worked day and night in the hospitals, sustaining by her presence the courage of the victims of battle, and setting an example which was followed by the Roumanian women in the most unselfish manner. When the victorious Roumanian army, headed by the Prince, entered Bucharest on their return from the campaign, the war-song which they sang, and which had inspired them in many battles, was composed by their own Princess, "the mother of her people." In March, 1881, Roumania was declared a kingdom, and on May 22 of the same year the Princess was crowned Queen. In 1882 the Academy of Sciences of Bucharest received her among the number of its members. During 1890 she suffered from a long and serious illness in Venice. The same year she visited England, and was present at the Welsh Eisteddfod. Under the name of "Carmen Sylva," she has published several volumes of stories and poems, with translations of Roumanian poetry into German. Some of her most beautiful and touching poems are those written on the death of her only child in 1874. Her life has been written by the Baroness Stachelberg, and Pierre Loti has in recent years given interesting accounts of her character and surroundings.

ELLICOTT, The Right Rev. Charles John, D.D., Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, was born April 25, 1819, at Whitwell, near Stamford, of which parish his father, the Rev. Charles Spencer Ellicott, was rector. He received his early education at Oakham and Stamford schools, and then proceeded to Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. with honours in 1841, and was elected a Fellow of St. John's College. In 1842 he carried off the first Member's prize, and in the following year the Hulsean prize on "The History and Obligation of the Sabbath." In 1848 he was collated to the rectory of Pilton, in Rutlandshire, but he resigned this small living ten years later on being chosen to succeed Dr. Trench, the late Archbishop of Dublin, as Professor of Divinity in King's College, London. In 1859 he was appointed Hulsean Lecturer, and in the following year was elected Hulsean Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. The Hulsean Lectures for 1860, "On the Life of Our Lord Jesus Christ," displayed profound theological erudition, and showed that their author possessed a critical knowledge of the Greek language. They attracted much attention even beyond the limits of the University, and it became obvious that Dr. Ellicott would be selected for high preferment in the Church. He was nominated by the Crown to the Deanery of Exeter in 1861, and in 1863 to the united sees of Gloucester and Bristol, which had been vacated by the translation of Bishop Thomson to York. A principal feature of Bishop Ellicott's episcopate is said to be his hearty sympathy with the clergy of different theological "schools of thought." To him the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol owes its Theological College, and the city of Bristol its "Church Aid Society," and its "Church Extension Fund" for supplying spiritual help of a missionary kind to its overgrown parishes. He has also instituted a plan of issuing every year a Pastoral Letter, in which he comments on passing ecclesiastical events, without waiting to deal with them for the first time in a Triennial Charge. His lordship takes an active part in the deliberations of the Upper House of the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury. Besides his Hulsean Lectures, already referred to, which have reached a 5th edition (1869), Bishop Ellicott has published a "Treatise on Analytical Statics," 1851; "Critical and Grammatical Commentaries" on the Epistles to the Galatians (1854), and Ephesians (1855), Philippians, Colossians, Thessalonians, Philemon, and on the "Pastoral Epistles" (1858); an essay on the "Apocryphal Gospels" in Cambridge Essays, 1856; "The Destiny of the Creature, and other sermons, preached before the University of Cambridge," 1858; an article on "Scripture, and its Interpretation" in Archbishop Thomson's "Aids to Faith," 1861; "The Broad Way and the Narrow Way," two sermons, 1863; "Considerations on the Revision of the English Version of the New Testament," 1870; "Six Addresses on Modern Scepticism," published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1877; "Six Addresses on The Being of God," published by the same Society, 1879; "Present Dangers to the Church of England," 1881; "Are we to modify Fundamental Doctrines?" 1885; papers in the publications of the Christian Evidence Society; annual addresses to the clergy of his diocese, published under the title of "Diocesan Progress" (1879 — 1890); "Salutary Doctrine," 1890; and "Foundations of Sacred Study," 1893. The bishop was for eleven years the Chairman of the company of the Revisers of the Authorized Version of the New Testament, published in 1881. He is also the editor of "A New Testament Commentary for English Readers, by various Writers," in 3 volumes; and of a "Commentary on the Old Testament," on a similar plan, in 4 volumes (1884). In 1893, Bishop Ellicott re-edited "Plain Introductions to the Books of the Bible" from his Commentaries.

ELLIOT, The Right Hon. Sir Henry George, G.C.B., P.C., second surviving son of the second Earl of Minto, by Mary, eldest daughter of Patrick Brydone, Esq., was born in 1817. He was educated at Eton, and held the post of Secretary and Aide-de-Camp to Sir John Franklin in Tasmania from 1836 to 1839. He was appointed a précis writer in the Foreign Office in 1840; an attaché to the embassy at St. Petersburg in 1841; Secretary of Legation at the Hague in 1848; transferred to Vienna in 1853; and nominated Envoy to Denmark, March 31, 1858. In 1859 he was sent on a special mission to the King of the Two Sicilies, and in 1862 to the King of Greece; was appointed Envoy to the King of Italy, Sept. 12, 1863, in succession to Sir James Hudson; and Ambassador to the Sublime Ottoman Porte in 1867. Shortly afterwards he was sworn of the Privy Council, and on Nov. 22, 1869, he was created a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath. He was associated with the Marquis of Salisbury as joint-plenipotentiary at the Conference of the representatives of the great Powers held at Constantinople in 1876-77 for the purpose of considering the critical position of affairs in the East. At the close of that conference the plenipotentiaries returned to England, and Sir Henry Elliot, who happened to be extremely unpopular among the section of the Liberal party who sympathised with Russia, was not sent back to Constantinople, but retained his post as Ambassador to the Sultan, the late Mr. Layard being named Ambassador "ad interim" till Dec. 31, 1877, when, on Sir Henry's nomination as Ambassador to Vienna, he received the permanent appointment. In 1883, Sir Henry resigned the Embassy at Vienna, and was succeeded by Sir Augustus Paget.

ELLIS, George Edward, D.D., LL.D., was born in Boston, Aug. 8, 1814. He graduated at Harvard College in 1833, studied theology at the Cambridge Divinity School, and after travelling for a year in Europe, was in 1840 ordained pastor of the Harvard Church (Unitarian), Charlestown, Massachusetts, a position which he resigned in 1869. In the meanwhile, from 1857 to 1864, he was Professor of Systematic Theology in the Cambridge Divinity School. For some time he edited the Christian Register, the organ of the Unitarians of Massachusetts, and in conjunction with the Rev. George Putnam, D.D., the Christian Examiner. He is President of the Massachusetts Historical Society. He has published many sermons and addresses, has contributed largely to periodicals, and has delivered three courses of Lowell Lectures. He wrote the lives of John Mason, Ann Hutchinson, and William Penn, in Sparks's "American Biography," and has published "The Half Century of the Unitarian Controversy," 1857; "The Aims and Purposes of the Founders of Massachusetts," 1869; "History of the Battle of Bunker's Hill," 1875; "The Red Man and the White Man," 1882; "The Puritan Age and Spirit in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay," 1888; and Memoirs of Jared Sparks, Sir Benjamin Thompson (Count Rumford), Dr. Luther V. Bell, Hon. Charles W. Upham, Dr. Jacob Bigelow, and Nathaniel Thayer.

ELLIS, Professor Robinson, LL.D., son of James Ellis, Esq., born Sept. 5, 1834, at Barming, near Maidstone, was educated at Elizabeth College, Guernsey, and Rugby School, then at Balliol College, Oxford. He was elected a Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford, in 1858, and appointed Professor of Latin in University College, London, Jan. 8, 1870. In 1876 he returned to Oxford, where in 1883 he was appointed University Reader in Latin Literature, and in 1893 Corpus Professor of Latin. Professor Ellis published in 1867 a large and elaborate edition of the text of Catullus (2nd edition, 1878); and an English commentary on the poet in 1876 (2nd edition, 1889). In 1881 appeared his edition of the Ovidian or pseudo-Ovidian poem "Ibis;" in 1885 a contribution to the series known as "Anecdota Oxoniensia," containing various unedited materials drawn from MSS. in the Bodleian or other libraries; in 1887 "The Fables of Arianus," edited with prolegomena, critical apparatus, and commentary; in 1888 the Commentorium of the Christian poet Orientius in vol. XII. of the Vienna Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum; in 1891 "Noctes Manilianæ," a series of dissertations on the astrological poem of Manilius. Besides these works, he translated Catullus into English, retaining the metres of the original, in 1871. He is a contributor to the Cambridge Journal of Philology, the American Journal of Philology, Hermathena, the Academy, the Philologische Rundschau, the Berlin Hermes, the Göttingen Philologus, the Rheinisches Museum, the Archiv für Lateinische Lexicographie, the American Nation, and the Classical Review. The University of Dublin conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. in July, 1882.

ELLIS, T. E., M.P., chief Liberal Whip in the present Parliament, is the son of Thomas Ellis, a tenant-farmer of Cynlas, Merionethshire, and was born in 1859. He is among the number of those who have learnt English as a foreign language, and was educated at University College, Aberystwith, and New College, Oxford, where he took honours in "Greats" and Modern History. He began life as a journalist, and in 1892, when private secretary to Mr. Brunner, stood for Merionethshire, and was returned for that constituency in the Gladstonian interest. He was appointed a Junior Lord of the Treasury in Aug., 1892, and is now Patronage Secretary to the Treasury in succession to Lord Tweedmouth. He is a telling speaker on questions affecting Wales, and is regarded as a leader of the Welsh Party in the House of Commons.

ELWIN, The Rev. Whitwell, M.A., a member of a good family in Norfolk, born Feb. 25, 1816, was educated at Caius College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1839. He held for some years the curacy of Hemington-with-Hardington, Somerset, and was appointed, in 1849, rector of Booton, Norfolk, a living in the patronage of his family. He became in July, 1853, editor of the Quarterly Review in succession to Mr. Lockhart, and resigned the post in July, 1860. He then began to prepare a new edition of "The Works of Alexander Pope," the eighth volume of which appeared in 1872. This work, however, he afterwards resigned.

ELWYN, The Rev. Richard, son of the Rev. William Elwyn, was born at Sandwich, Kent, Sept. 14, 1827, and educated at Charterhouse and at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was Scholar and Fellow; he was Senior Classic and B.A. 1849, M.A. 1852. In 1855 he became Second Master of Charterhouse School, and in 1858 Head Master. In 1864 he was appointed Head Master of St. Peter's School, York, and non-residentiary Canon of York. In 1872 he accepted the living of St. George's, Ramsgate, and was made Rural Dean of Westbere and Hon. Canon of Canterbury in 1879. He became Vicar of East Farleigh in 1880, and Rural Dean of North Malling in 1883. In 1884 he was appointed one of the Examining Chaplains of the Archbishop of Canterbury. In 1885 he was elected Master of the Charterhouse, in succession to the late Dr. Currey, and in 1886 was appointed to the Principalship of Queen's College, London.

ELY, Bishop of. See COMPTON, THE RIGHT REV. LORD ALWYNE SPENCER.

EMERY, Miss Winifred (Mrs. Cyril Maude), was born at Manchester, on August 1, 1862. She is the only daughter of the late Sam Emery, comedian, who was famous in such parts as "Captain Cuttle," and the Carrier in the "Cricket on the Hearth." Her grandfather and great-grandfather were also distinguished comedians, and her husband, Mr. Cyril Maude, is one of the most artistic actors on the English stage. Miss Emery was educated in London, and went on the stage as a child-actress, making her début at Liverpool, as the child in "Green Bushes." Her next appearance was in a pantomime at the Princess's. She subsequently went to school for five years, and then took an engagement under Mr. Wilson Barrett, at the Court Theatre. During a tour in the country Mr. Barrett offered her the alternative of playing leading parts in the provinces or appearing in very small ones in London, and by her mother's advice Miss Emery decided to choose the latter course. She understudied Madame Modjeska as Juliet, and, though never called on to play the part, acknowledges her indebtedness to the great tragédienne's method and manner. Subsequently she played in "A Clerical Error," and then made her first success in "The Old Love and the New." Mr. Barrett's tenancy of the "Court" now expired, and Miss Emery entered upon an important phase in her career as understudy to Miss Ellen Terry at the Lyceum. Her connection with that theatre lasted from about 1881 to 1887, and during these years she often took Miss Terry's place in such plays as "Faust," and the "Vicar of Wakefield," and played on her own account in "Louis XI" and "The Bells." Since 1887 she has played at the Vaudeville, as Lydia Languish, as Fanny in "Joseph's Sweetheart," and as Clarissa. Other important parts have been the mother in "Little Lord Fauntleroy," Vashti Dethic in "Judah" at the Shaftesbury Theatre, Lady Windermere in "Lady Windermere's Fan," at the St. James's, Rosamond in "Sowing the Wind" at the Comedy, and the old-fashioned wife in "The New Woman."

EMMA, Queen Regent of the Netherlands (Adelaide Emma Wilhelmina Thérèse), is the second daughter of the Duke of Waldeck Pyrmont, and consequently the sister of our Duchess of Albany. One child's life, that of the young Queen Wilhelmina, now alone represents the Orange dynasty, which has brought forth so many heroes. Until the Princess reaches her majority, when, in her own right she will be crowned first Queen of Holland, her mother will reign as Regent. Queen Emma was born Aug. 2, 1858, at Arolsen, the capital of her father's state, Waldeck. Four daughters and one son formed the family circle. She was married to King William III. of Holland on Jan. 7, 1879, and her daughter was born in 1881. As years went on, and the King, who was in ill-health, became gradually insane, she shut herself up in the sick room, and it was with difficulty the physicians prevailed upon her to take air and exercise. When in March, 1889, Ministers proposed to convoke the States General, and, with the consent of physicians, to declare the King incapable of reigning, and Queen Emma Regent until the Princess Wilhelmina had attained her majority, the Queen earnestly opposed the scheme. At the last moment she unwillingly accepted the offered Regency; and in a few days afterwards the King died (Nov., 1890). Queen Wilhelmina I. nominally succeeded to the throne on her father's death. The Queen watches with unceasing vigilance over the bringing-up of her child, and her maternal zeal has deepened the esteem felt for her by her subjects.

ERCKMANN, Emile, was born at Phalsbourg, in the department of the Meurthe, May 20, 1822. He is the son of a bookseller, and after studying by fits and starts in the college of his native town, he proceeded to Paris to study law, but never practised that profession. He resolved to earn a living with his pen, and accordingly began a series of works of fiction in conjunction with M. Alexandre Chatrian, who was born in the hamlet of Soldatenthal, in the commune of Abreschwiller, in the department of the Meurthe, Dec. 18, 1826, and who was an usher in the college of Phalsbourg when M. Erckmann made his acquaintance in 1847. From that time the two friends composed numerous tales, all signed "Erckmann-Chatrian," and characterised by such unity of composition, that no one doubted they were the production of a single individual. At first they contributed feuilletons, which attracted little attention, to provincial journals, and wrote some dramatic pieces, which were failures. They at length despaired of being able to gain a subsistence by their literary efforts, and accordingly M. Erckmann returned to his law books, while M. Chatrian obtained a situation in the offices of the Eastern Railway Company. It was not until 1859 that the publication of "L'Illustre Docteur Mathéus" gave a certain amount of popularity to the name of Erckmann-Chatrian. From that time forth their reputation as writers of romances constantly and steadily increased, in consequence of a series of their works containing faithful and graphic narratives of the manners and customs of Germany, especially of Alsace, and of the glories and military reverses of the Revolution and the First Empire. The titles of these works are—"Contes Fantastiques," 1860; "Contes de la Montagne," 1860; Maître Daniel Rock," 1861; "Contes des Bords du Rhin," 1862; "Le Fou Yégof," 1862; "Le Joueur de Clarinette," 1863; "La Taverne du Jambon de Mayence," 1863; "Madame Thérèse, ou les Volontaires de '92," 1863, originally published in the Journal des Débats; "L'Ami Fritz," 1864; "Histoire d'un Conscrit de 1813," 1864, translated into English under the title of "The Conscript: a Tale of the French War of 1813;" "L'Invasion—Waterloo," 1865, translated under the title of "Waterloo; a Story of the Hundred Days;" "Histoire d'un Homme du Peuple," 1865; "La Maison Forestière," 1866;

"La Guerre," 1866; "Le Blocus," 1867, translated under the title of "The Blockade of Phalsbourg: an Episode of the Fall of the First French Empire;" "Histoire d'un Paysan," 1868, an historical romance, which has also been translated into English; and "Le Juif Polonais," a play brought out successfully at the Théâtre de Cluny in 1869. Among their more recent productions are—"The Story of the Plébiscite, related by one of the 7,500,000 who voted 'Yes'" (translated into English, 1872); "Brigadier Frederic: A Story of an Alsatian Exile" (translated into English, 1875); "Maître Gaspard Fix; suivi de l'Education d'un Féodel;" "Histoire d'un Conservateur;" "L'Isthme de Suez;" and "Souvenirs d'un ancien Chef de Chantier: suivi de l'Exilé," 1876. Their three-act comedy "L'Ami Fritz," was brought out successfully at the Théâtre Français, Dec. 4, 1876, notwithstanding the discredit which the Bonapartists had endeavoured to cast beforehand on the piece by accusing the authors of want of patriotism, and sympathy with Germany. Their novel, "Les Vieux de la Vielle," was published in 1882; and "Les Rantzau" in 1884. M. Chatrian died Sept. 4, 1890. In the previous year there had been a quarrel between the two collaborators, which resulted in a lawsuit decided by the Courts in M. Erckmann's favour.

ERICHSEN, John Eric, F.R.S., LL.D. (Edinburgh), Hon. M.Ch. (Dublin), and Hon. F.R.C.S. (Ireland), was born July 19, 1818, and educated at the Mansion House, Hammersmith, and at University College, London. He is a Fellow and ex-President of the Royal College of Surgeons, a Fellow of the Royal Society, of the Royal Academy of Medicine of Belgium, the Imperial Society of Physicians of Vienna, the Accademia di Guereti (Rome), the University of New York, and the American Surgical Association, and a member of various other learned and scientific institutions, home and foreign. He was appointed Professor of Surgery and of Clinical Surgery at University College, and surgeon to the hospital in 1850. Mr. Erichsen is now Emeritus Professor of Surgery and consulting surgeon to the hospital, and to many other medical charities. He has been President of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, and of the Surgical Section of the Great International Medical Congress of 1881. He was appointed Secretary to the Physiological Section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science in 1844; was member of the Royal Commission on Vivisection in 1875, is Surgeon-Extraordinary to the Queen, and has been President of University College, London, since 1887. Mr. Erichsen is the author of many works and essays on physiology and surgery—more especially of an "Experimental Inquiry into the Nature and Treatment of Asphyxia," to which the Royal Humane Society awarded the Fothergillian Gold Medal (value £50) in 1845, and of the "Science and Art of Surgery," which has gone through nine large editions in this country, and many editions in America, besides being translated into German, Spanish, and Italian, and in part into Chinese. This work, from its extensive circulation, has probably exercised more influence on the progress of surgery in all English-speaking countries than any other publication of the day. He has also published a Treatise on "Concussion of the Spine." Mr. Erichsen has for many years been largely engaged as a consulting and operating surgeon, and has devoted much attention to surgery in its medico-legal and hygienic aspects. In compliance with an influential requisition, he contested, but unsuccessfully, the representation of the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews at the General Election of 1885.

ESCOTT, Thomas Hay Sweet, was born at Taunton, April 26, 1844, being the eldest son of the Rev. Hay S. Escott, and member of a very old West Somerset family, whose seat is Hartrow Manor, near Taunton. He was educated at Oxford, where he graduated second class in the final examination in Litteris Humanioribus in June, 1865. Mr. Escott was lecturer in logic at King's College, London, from 1868 till 1872, and during the year 1870 he acted as Professor Lonsdale's deputy as Professor of Classics. He adopted journalism as a professor immediately after he came up to London, in 1865, from Oxford, and he has been closely and actively connected with the London daily and weekly press ever since. He has also written much for the chief monthly magazines, for the most part anonymously. He edited the "Satires of Juvenal and Persius," in 1866, and "The Comedies of Plautus," in 1867. In 1879 he published "England, its People, Polity, and Pursuits," since translated into most European languages, and accepted as a standard work. Mr. Escott was appointed editor of the Fortnightly Review in Oct. 1882, on the resignation of Mr. John Morley, but was obliged to resign in 1886 on account of ill-health.

In the autumn of 1894 Mr. Escott once more appeared before the literary public, contributing as many as three articles to leading reviews.

ESHER, Lord, The Right Hon. William Baliol Brett, Master of the Rolls, eldest surviving son of the Rev. Joseph George Brett, of Ranelagh, Chelsea, by Dora, daughter of the late George Best, Esq., of Chilston Park, Kent, was born in 1815. From Westminster School he was sent to Caius College, Cambridge (B.A. 1840; M.A. 1845). In 1846 he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn. In March, 1860, he obtained his silk gown, and at the same time he was made a Bencher of his Inn. His political career began in 1866, when, in view of a general election, he went down to Rochdale to oppose Mr. Cobden, and in this advanced Liberal Borough declared himself to be, not merely a Conservative, but a Tory. Nevertheless he made so much progress among the constituents, that Mr. Cobden deemed it prudent to visit Rochdale personally, in order to defend his seat. Mr. Brett did not succeed in his bold attempt, and he failed in the contest against Mr. T. B. Potter. In July, 1866, he stood for Helston, in Cornwall. This election became famous from the circumstance of there being a tie, and the Mayor assuming to give after four o'clock a casting vote. For doing this the Mayor was summoned before the House of Commons, and Mr. Brett was seated on petition. Mr. Brett represented Helston till 1868, being in Feb. of that year appointed Solicitor-General. on which occasion he received the honour of knighthood. During the short period he remained in office he took a prominent part in passing, in 1868, the Registration Act, which enabled the general election to be taken in that year, and the Corrupt Practices Act, which is now in force. In Aug., 1868, when it was known that the Conservative party had failed to gain the support of the country, he was appointed a Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and by the operation of the Judicature Act, he became a Judge of the High Court of Justice in 1875. In Oct., 1876, he was made a Judge of the intermediate Court of Appeal, and added to the Privy Council. In April, 1883, he was appointed Master of the Rolls, on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, in the place of the late Sir George Jessel. In 1885 he was raised to the peerage in recognition of his long and eminent services as a Judge. He married, in 1850, Eugenie, daughter of Louis Mäyer, Esq., and step-daughter of the late Captain Gurwood, C.B. (editor of "The Duke of Wellington's Despatches").

EU (Comte d'), Prince Louis Philippe Marie Ferdinand Gaston d'Orléans, born at the Château de Neuilly, in the department of the Seine, April 28, 1842, is the eldest son of the Duc de Nemours, and one of the grandsons of King Louis Philippe. Brought up in exile, he was educated in England, and entered the military service of Spain in 1859, serving in Morocco. Later he joined the Artillery College at Segovia, from which he graduated in 1863. In 1864 he married Isabella, the eldest daughter of Dom Pedro II. of Brazil. He was made a Field Marshal in the Brazilian Army in 1865, and in 1869 was appointed Commander-in-Chief of all the forces on land and sea, a position he retained until the war with Paraguay (begun in 1864) was ended in 1870 by the death of Lopez, Dictator of Paraguay. From 1865 to 1889 he held the post of Commander-General of the Brazilian Artillery, and was President of various Commissions. In the many absences of Dom Pedro from the Empire during this period, the Comte d'Eu had the virtual direction of all Brazilian affairs. When the revolution of Nov., 1889, occurred, establishing the Republic of Brazil and deposing the Emperor, the Comte d'Eu with his wife accompanied Dom Pedro to Portugal, and he has since resided in Europe.

EUGÉNIE, ex-Empress of the French, Eugénie-Marie de Guzman, Countess of Téba, born May 5, 1826, is the daughter of Doña Maria Manuela Kirkpatrick, of Closeburn, Dumfriesshire, Countess-dowager de Montijos, whose father was English consul at Malaga at the period of her marriage with the Count de Montijos, an officer in the Spanish army, connected, more or less closely, with the houses of the Duke de Frias, representative of the ancient admirals of Castile, of the Duke of Fyars, and others of the highest rank, including the descendants of the Kings of Aragon. On the death of the Count de Montijos, his widow was left with a fortune adequate to the maintenance of her position, and two daughters, one of whom married the Duke of Alba and Berwick, lineally descended from James II. and Miss Churchill. For Eugénie, the second, a still higher destiny was reserved. In 1851, the Countess Téba, accompanied by her mother, paid a lengthened visit to Paris, and was distinguished at the various entertainments given at the Tuileries by the dignity and elegance of her demeanour, and by great personal beauty,—of the aristocratic English rather than the Spanish style. Her mental gifts were not less attractive, for her education, partly conducted in England, was very superior to that generally bestowed upon Spanish women, who seldom quit their native country. Shortly after the opposition of the higher Northern Powers had put an end to the idea of a union between the Emperor Napoleon III. and the Princess Carola Wasa of Sweden, he apprised the Council of Ministers of his intended marriage with the daughter of the Countess Montijos; a measure which excited some disapproval among them, and even led to their temporary withdrawal from office. During the short time which intervened between the public announcement of the approaching event and its realisation, the Countess Téba and her mother took up their abode in the palace of the Elysée. The marriage was celebrated with much magnificence on Jan. 29, 1853, at Notre Dame. The life of the Empress Eugénie after her marriage was comparatively uneventful, being passed chiefly in the ordinary routine of state etiquette; in visits to the various royal maisons de plaisance, varied by an extended progress through France in company with her husband; by an annual sojourn for the benefit of her health at Biarritz, her favourite summer resort in the days of her girlhood; by a journey in England and Scotland in the autumn of 1861, and in 1864 to some of the German baths. The Empress Eugénie, who became the mother of an heir to the house of Bonaparte, March 16, 1856, was a devoted supporter of the claims of the Holy See, and to her influence much of the policy of the Emperor towards Italy has been attributed. Accompanied by the Emperor, she visited the cholera hospitals in Paris, in Oct., 1865, and her conduct on this occasion was very highly commended. In July, 1866, she made with the Prince Imperial, an official tour in Lorraine, and was present at the fête held at Nancy in commemoration of the reunion of that province with France. On the occasion of the centenary of Napoleon I., in Aug., 1869, she proceeded with the Prince Imperial to Corsica. In Oct. of the same year, Her Majesty made a voyage to the East on board the steam yacht l'Aigle. She went first to Venice, thence to Constantinople, next to Port Saïd, where she was present at the formal opening of the Suez Canal (Nov. 17), visited the most interesting places in Turkey and Egypt, and returned to France at the end of November. On the outbreak of the war between France and Germany she was appointed Regent (July 27, 1870) during the absence of the Emperor. Immediately after the revolution in Paris, on Sept. 4, she hurriedly left the Tuileries, and escaped from France. She landed at Ryde, in the Isle of Wight, Sept. 9, 1870, and shortly afterwards proceeded to join the Prince Imperial at Hastings. Camden House, Chislehurst, was subsequently selected as a residence by the Imperial exiles. In Oct., 1871, the Empress went to Spain on a visit to her mother. The Emperor died at Chislehurst, Jan. 9, 1873; and in 1879 the Prince Imperial, who had accompanied the English army in the Zulu war, was killed. His body was brought to England and buried at Chislehurst, and the following year the Empress went to Zululand to visit the fatal spot on the anniversary of her son's death. At the beginning of the year 1881 the Empress removed from Camden House to the Farnborough estate in Hampshire, close to the borders of the county of Surrey. The estate, which was purchased for £50,000, consists of about 257 acres, with a picturesque mansion. Since 1870 the Empress has several times crossed France on her way South, and in 1883 and on other occasions she spent some days in Paris, but no political significance was attached to these sojourns. In the summer of 1894 the Emperor of Germany visited her during his stay at Aldershot.

EUSTIS, Hon. James Biddle, American Statesman, was born in New Orleans, Aug. 27, 1834. He graduated at Harvard Law School in 1854, and was admitted to the bar in 1856. He practised in his native city until the outbreak of the Civil War, when he entered the Confederate Army and served as Judge-Advocate until the close of the war. He was elected a member of the Louisiana Legislature prior to the passage of the reconstruction acts by Congress, and was one of the Commissioners sent to Washington to confer with President Johnson on the re-admission of Louisiana to the Union. From 1872 to 1874 he was a member of the lower branch of the Louisiana legislature, and from 1874 to 1876 of the State Senate. In 1876 he was elected U.S. Senator. This position he retained until 1879, when he became Professor of Civil Law in the University of Louisiana. In 1885 he again entered the U.S. Senate, where he remained until 1891, when he resumed his law practice in New Orleans. At the beginning of Mr. Cleveland's second term as President (March 1893) Mr. Eustis was appointed American Minister to France, and a few weeks later was made Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the same country, the position which he still occupies.

EVANS, Arthur John, M.A., F.S.A., eldest son of John Evans, D.C.L., F.R.S., &c.; born in 1851, at Nash Mills, Hemel Hempsted, Herts; was educated at Harrow School and Brasenose College, Oxford, of which he is now an Hon. Fellow, taking a first class (in History) 1874, and continuing his historical studies at Göttingen University, under Dr. Pauli. At an early period he undertook a series of journeys having for their object antiquarian and ethnological researches through some of the least-known European regions. In the course of these he twice explored the Finnish and Lapp countries between the Arctic and Baltic Seas, in company with Mr. F. M. Balfour (afterwards Professor), and obtained interesting materials regarding the survival of heathen rites in those regions. In 1875 he travelled through the Slavonic parts of South-Eastern Europe, and after the insurrection broke out, took up his residence at Ragusa, in Dalmatia, and, while continuing to explore the antiquities and study the languages and ethnology of the Peninsula, followed the revolutionary movement with warm interest, and described the course of events from the camps of the insurgents. His correspondence, mostly communicated to the Manchester Guardian, and partly re-published as "Illyrian Letters," afforded Parliamentary weapons to the enemies of Turkish dominion in Europe. He was also instrumental in calling attention to the state of the Bosnian refugees, and he gave active assistance to Miss Irby's Relief Fund. During the comparatively tranquil period that succeeded he was able to continue his explorations of the interior, the archæological results of which have appeared in "Archæologia," under the title of "Antiquarian Researches in Illyricum," and in accounts of new discoveries of Illyrian coins in the Numismatic Chronicle, &c. In 1882 a revolt broke out in the Crivoscian Highlands of South Dalmatia, consequent on the attempt of the Austrian Government (in violation of their agreement) to introduce military service into the country. The Austrian Government, highly irritated with Mr. Evans, had him arrested on a charge of complicity with the insurgents, and confined him in the prison at Ragusa. After seven weeks' solitary confinement he was released by Imperial orders, but expelled from the Austrian dominions. He then settled in Oxford, and continued his archæological studies. In 1883 he was chosen as University Lecturer on the Ilchester Foundation, and delivered a course of Lectures "On the Slavonic Conquest of Illyricum." In 1884, on the death of Mr. J. H. Parker, he was made Keeper of the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford, with the re-organization of which he has since been occupied. He has also been engaged in archæological researches in Sicily and Great Greece, and in 1889 published "The Horsemen of Tarentum," a monograph on the coinage of that city, in 1892 "Syracusan Medallions and their engravers," and in 1893-4 edited with supplements, the Fourth Volume of Mr. Freeman's "Sicily," from his posthumous MSS. He has married a daughter of the late Prof. Freeman.

EVANS, John, Honorary D.C.L. Oxford, and LL.D. Dublin, Treas. and V.P.R.S., Pres. S.A., F.G.S., &c., is son of the late Rev. A. B. Evans, D.D., who was head master of Market Bosworth Grammar School, Leicestershire. He was born in 1823, and educated by his father. He has devoted much attention not only to archæology, but to geology and numismatics, as well as to other branches of science. For many years he was engaged in business as a paper manufacturer, and is the President of the Paper Makers' Association. In 1864 he published "The Coins of the Ancient Britons," for which he received the Allier d'Ilantersche Prize from the French Academy, and in 1872, "The Ancient Stone Implements, Weapons and Ornaments of Great Britain," which was translated into French and published in Paris in 1875. "The Ancient Bronze Implements, Weapons, and Ornaments of Great Britain and Ireland," appeared in 1881, and a French translation of it in the following year. He has also written on the "Flint Implements in the Drift," in the "Archæologia," vols. 38 and 39; and a variety of papers in the "Archæologia," and in the Numismatic Chronicle, of which he is one of the editors. He was President of the Geological Society in 1875-76, and of the Anthropological Institute in 1878-79, and has been President of the Numismatic Society since 1875, and of the society of Antiquaries from April, 1885, to 1891, and is, in consequence, an ex officio Trustee of the British Museum. He is a correspondent of the French Institute (Académie des Inscriptions), and an honorary member of a large number of foreign learned societies; and his antiquarian and numismatic collections rank among the first in this country. He is a J.P. and D.L. for Hertfordshire, of which county he was High Sheriff in 1881-2. He is Chairman of Quarter Sessions for the St. Albans Division of Herts, and also Vice-Chairman of the Hertfordshire County Council.

EVANS, Sebastian, LL.D., youngest son of the late Rev. Arthur Benoni Evans, D.D., born at Market Bosworth, Leicestershire, March 2, 1830, was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, graduating B.A. in 1853, M.A. in 1857, and LL.D. in 1868. He became manager of the artistic department in Messrs. Chance Brothers and Co.'s glass works in 1857, in which capacity he designed the "Robin Hood" window exhibited in the International Exhibition of 1862, and lithographed by Mr. Waring in his "Masterpieces of Industrial Art." In 1865 he published a volume entitled "Brother Fabian's MS. and other Poems," and in 1875, a second, "In the Studio, a decade of Poems." In 1867 he became editor of the Birmingham Daily Gazette, and in 1868 unsuccessfully contested the borough of Birmingham in the Conservative interest. He resigned the editorship in Oct., 1870, and was called to the Bar in 1873, when he joined the Oxford Circuit. After practising for some years in Birmingham, he removed to London in 1878, and took an active part in the organization of the Conservative party in connection with the National Union of Conservative Associations. In Oct., 1881, he undertook the editorship of a new Conservative Sunday newspaper, the People, which, under his management, has become an important organ of the party. Dr. Evans is author of a number of essays and poems, which have appeared in various periodicals. Several of his lectures have also been separately published.

EVARTS, Hon. William Maxwell, American Statesman, LL.D., was born in Boston, Feb. 6, 1818. He graduated at Yale College in 1837, studied at the Harvard Law School, and in 1841 was admitted to the New York Bar, where he soon took a high position. From 1849 to 1853 he was Deputy U.S. District Attorney. In the impeachment trial of President Andrew Johnson, in the spring of 1868, Mr. Evarts was the leading counsel for the defendant, and from July, 1868, to the close of Mr. Johnson's administration, he was Attorney-General of the United States. In 1872 he was counsel for the United States in the tribunal of arbitration on the Alabama claims at Geneva; and in the celebrated Tilton-Beecher case, in 1875, he was at the head of Mr. Beecher's counsel. He also argued the Republican side of the case before the Electoral Commission in 1877. Upon the accession, in March, 1877, of Mr. Hayes, to the Presidency, he was made Secretary of State, a position which he retained until the close of Mr. Hayes' term, 1881. From 1885 to 1891 he was U.S. Senator from New York. Although an accomplished scholar and able speaker, he has published only a few occasional discourses and addresses. Among these are the "Centennial Oration before the Linonian Society of Yale College," 1853; an "Address before the New England Society," 1854; a Eulogy on Chief Justice Chase; the Centennial Oration at Philadelphia, and at the unveiling of the statues of Webster and Seward in New York.

EVERETT, Professor Joseph David, D.C.L., F.R.S., was born at Rushmere, near Ipswich, Sept. 11, 1831. In 1854 he entered the University of Glasgow, where he took the degrees of B.A. and M.A., with honours in all the subjects of the curriculum. After successively occupying the posts of Secretary to the Meteorological Society of Scotland, Professor of Mathematics at King's College, Nova Scotia, and Assistant Professor of Mathematics in the University of Glasgow, he was appointed, in 1867, Professor of Natural Philosophy in Queen's College, Belfast. He was Secretary to the Units Committee of the British Association, and published in 1875 a volume of "Illustrations," since enlarged into a work entitled "Units and Physical Constants," which has largely contributed to the general adoption of the system of units recommended. He was made Secretary to the Underground Temperature Committee at its appointment in 1867, and has directed the observations which have since been taken in various places for determining the rate at which temperature increases downwards in the earth. He has contributed to the Greenwich Observations and to the Royal Societies of Edinburgh and London, papers on Underground Temperature, on Atmospheric Electricity, and on Rigidity. His papers on Mirage in the Philosophical Magazine for 1873, cleared up several points which had previously been obscure. Professor Everett published in 1870–72 a version of Deschanel's "Traité de Physique," partly translated and partly rewritten; in 1877 an "Elementary Text Book of Physics;" in 1885, "Outlines of Natural Philosophy for Schools;" in 1882 a work on Vibratory Motion and Sound, and in 1891 "Illustrations of the C. G. S. System of Units." He is a skilled shorthand writer on a system invented by himself, which was published in 1877, and has attracted much attention.

EWART, James Cossar, M.D., Professor of Zoology at Edinburgh University, was born at Penicuik, Midlothian, Nov. 26, 1851. He was educated at Penicuik and at the University of Edinburgh, where, in 1874, he was appointed Demonstrator of Anatomy. In 1875 he was elected Conservator of the Museums of University College, London. While at University College, he completely reorganised the Museums and investigated the life history of the Bacillus of Splenic Fever and of other minute organisms. In 1878 he was appointed by the Crown to the Chair of Natural History in the University of Aberdeen, and in 1882 he was transferred to the corresponding chair in the University of Edinburgh—the most desirable post a naturalist can hold in this country. In the same year he was elected a member of the Fishery Board for Scotland. While in Aberdeen Professor Ewart introduced classes for the practical study of zoology, and organized a small marine laboratory. At this, the first marine laboratory started in Britain, Professor Ewart and the late Mr. Romanes made their investigations for their memoir on the Echinoderms, which the Royal Society constituted the Croonian lecture for 1881. Since returning to Edinburgh, Professor Ewart has devoted himself to developing the Natural History Department, and to creating a scientific department in connection with the Fishery Board; considerable progress has already been made in working out the natural history and development of the herring and other food fishes. In this work Professor Ewart has the use of three marine stations, and is assisted by a staff of three naturalists and several fishery officers, and the government, in addition to voting grants for carrying on the scientific work, has provided boats for trawling and other operations. Recently he has been endeavouring to discover improved methods for preserving fish, and to introduce the famous Loch Fyne herring to the Antartic ocean. In addition to the laborious work of his chair, Professor Ewart has found time to have two lectureships instituted in the University—one on "Embryology," and one on the "Philosophy of Natural History," and he has done much to obtain for the students a much-wanted Union such as exists at Oxford and at Cambridge.

EWING, Professor James Alfred, B.Sc. (Edin.), Hon. M.A. (Cantab.), F.R.S., M.Inst.C.E., Professor of Mechanism and Applied Mechanics in the University of Cambridge, son of the Rev. James Ewing, of Dundee, was born March 27, 1855, and was educated at the High School of Dundee, and at Edinburgh University, where he graduated in Science. He assisted Lord Kelvin (Sir William Thomson) and the late Professor Fleeming Jenkin for four years in their work as engineers, taking part in a number of telegraph cable expeditions on their behalf. In 1878 he was appointed by the Japanese Government Professor of Mechanical Engineering in the University of Tokio, which office he held till 1883, when he resigned his chair in Japan to become Professor of Engineering in University College, Dundee. In 1890 he was elected Professor of Mechanism at Cambridge, where he has organised an Engineering Laboratory, with teaching adapted to the new Tripos in Mechanical Science which was established by the Senate of the University in 1892. He has twice been Examiner in Engineering at Victoria University, Manchester, and at the Royal College of Science, London. While in Japan he gave special attention to the study of earthquakes, and devised seismographs by which a complete analysis of the motion of the ground was obtained. His apparatus for earthquake measurement is now used in many observatories, and was the subject of a Friday evening discourse at the Royal Institution in 1888. He is the author of a treatise on "Earthquake Measurement," published by the University of Tokio, 1883, and of many papers on the same subject in the Transactions of the Seismological Society of Japan. He has given much attention to electricity and its applications, and especially to the study of Magnetism, and is the author of a treatise on "Magnetism in Iron," 1890, and of many papers on this and kindred subjects, of which the chief are:—"Experimental Researches in Magnetism," Phil. Trans., 1885; "Effects of Stress and Magnetisation on the Thermo-electric Quality of Iron," Phil. Trans., 1886; "Magnetic Qualities of Nickel," Phil. Trans. 1888; "Magnetism of Iron in Strong Fields," Phil. Trans. 1889; "Time-Lag in the Magnetisation of Iron," Proc. Roy. Soc. 1889; "Contributions to the Molecular Theory of Magnetism," Proc. Roy. Soc. 1890; "Magnetic Qualities of Iron," Phil.

Trans. 1893. His "Magnetic Curve-Tracer," for investigating these qualities, was exhibited in an evening lecture at the Edinburgh Meeting of the British Association (1892), and his experiments in illustration of the molecular process in magnetic induction, were shown at the Royal Institution in 1891. Professor Ewing is also the author of a treatise on "Steam Engines and other Heat Engines" (1894), and of several of the longer articles on engineering subjects in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and is also a contributor to Chambers's Encyclopædia (articles, "Dynamo," "Electric Light," &c.). He is a member of the Institution of Civil, Mechanical, and Electrical Engineers, and was elected F.R.S. in 1888.

EXETER, Bishop of. See BICKERSTETH, THE RT. REV. EDWARD HENRY.

EYRE, The Most Rev. Charles, a Roman Catholic prelate, son of the late John Lewis Eyre, Esq. (Count Eyre, in the Papal dominions), and brother of the late Very Rev. Monsignor Eyre, of Hampstead, was born 1817, at Askam Bryan Hall, York, and educated at Ushaw College, Durham, and in Rome. He was appointed assistant priest at St. Andrew's church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, in 1843; removed to St. Mary's, Newcastle, in 1844; became senior priest at St. Mary's Cathedral, Newcastle, in 1847, and remained there, with a short interval, till Christmas, 1868. He was for many years canon of the diocese of Hexham and Newcastle, and for some time was Vicar-General; was appointed R.C. Archbishop for the Western district, and Delegate-Apostolic for Scotland in Dec., 1868; and was consecrated in the church of St. Andrea della Valle, Rome, Jan. 13, 1869, by the title of Archbishop of Anazarba, in partibus infidelium. When the ancient heirarchy was restored in Scotland by Pope Leo XIII., on March 4, 1878, Mgr. Eyre was appointed R.C. Archbishop of Glasgow. Archbishop Eyre is the author of a "History of St. Cuthbert," 1849 (3rd edit. 1889). He is a "Grand Cross" of the Order of Isabella the Catholic, a chaplain of the Order of Malta, and a Knight of the Holy Sepulchre.

EYRE, Edward John, some time Governor of Jamaica, son of the late Rev. Anthony Eyre, vicar of Hornsea and Long Riston, in the East Riding of Yorkshire, was born in Aug., 1815, and educated at the Louth and Sedbergh Grammar Schools. Finding he would have to wait nearly a year to obtain a commission in the army (for which the purchase-money was lodged) he elected, when only seventeen years of age, to accept the purchase-money (£450) and go out to Australia at once to try his fortune. He arrived in New South Wales early in 1833 with £400, engaged in sheep farming, and then in transporting stock overland from New South Wales to South Australia. In the latter colony he purchased property on the Lower Murray River, where he remained several years, having been appointed resident magistrate of his district, and protector of the Aborigines. In a work entitled "Discoveries in Central Australia," published in 1845, he earnestly pleads the cause of the wandering native tribes. In the meantime he distinguished himself as an Australian explorer of the then unknown shore, extending from 118 deg. to 134 deg. of east longitude between King George's Sound in West Australia, and Port Lincoln in South Australia. In 1845 Mr. Eyre returned to England, and in 1846 received from Earl Grey, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, the appointment of Lieut.-Governor of New Zealand, as second to the Governor, Sir George Grey. Having served his full term as a colonial governor he returned to England in 1853, and about a twelvemonth afterwards was appointed Lieut.-Governor of the Island of St. Vincent. This post he held for six years; and in the year 1859 and 1860 he was in the island of Antigua, filling the place of the Governor of the Leeward Islands, who was on leave of absence. In 1860, upon the termination of his Governorship of Antigua, Mr. Eyre returned to England to recruit his health; and in 1862 he was chosen by the late Duke of Newcastle, Secretary of State for the Colonies, to administer the Government-in-Chief of Jamaica and its dependencies during the absence of Governor Darling, who had returned to England on account of ill-health. In consequence of the non-return of Governor Darling, Mr. Eyre was appointed Captain-General and Governor, General-in-Chief and Vice-Admiral of the Island of Jamaica, July 15, 1864; and an insurrection having broken out in Oct., 1865, he proclaimed martial law, and used very vigorous measures for its suppression. As a result, what was believed to be a dangerous insurrection was crushed. But his measures, more especially in the trial by court-martial, and condemnation to death of George William Gordon, a mulatto of property, excited much resentment among certain sections at home, and a commission of inquiry was despatched to Jamaica, Governor Eyre being superseded and Sir Henry Storks temporarily appointed in his place. The report of the committee published in June, 1866, exonerated Governor Eyre from the heavy charges brought against him, but he was recalled, and Sir P. Grant appointed his successor. Mr. Eyre's health having suffered from long service in the tropics, he retired from the Public Service in 1874 upon pension as a retired Colonial Governor.

FAED, John, R.S.A., artist, born in 1820, at Burley Mill, in the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, where his father was an engineer and millwright, showed an early taste for art, and, encouraged by a successful painting, which he finished at the age of twelve, began to paint miniatures in his own neighbourhood. He repaired, in 1841, to Edinburgh, where he exhibited in 1850, some pictures of humble life, which met with a ready sale. His principal works are—"Shakespeare and his Contemporaries;" and two series of drawings, illustrating "The Cotter's Saturday Night," and "The Soldier's Return." Since coming to London, in 1864, Mr. Faed has painted "The Wappenschaw; or Shooting Match;" "Catherine Sefton;" "The Old Style;" "Tam O'Shanter;" "Haddon Hall of Old;" "The Ballad;" "Old Age;" "The Stirrup Cup;" "The Old Crockery Man;" "John Anderson, my Jo';" "Parting of Evangeline and Gabriel;" "The Old Brocade;" "Auld Mare Maggie;" "Gamekeeper's Daughter;" and "The Hiring Fair."

FAED, Thomas, R.A. (brother of Mr. John Faed), born at Burley Mill, in the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, in 1826, lost his father in his boyhood, but, aided by his brother, who was working his way to reputation as an artist in Edinburgh, resolved to follow the bent of his genius. While a student at the School of Design in Edinburgh, where for a short period he was under the tuition of Sir W. Allan, he was annually successful at the competition for prizes in various departments. The earliest work of art he exhibited in public was a drawing in water colours from the "Old English Baron." He soon after took to oil painting, exercising his brush on such subjects as draught-players and shepherd boys. Mr. Faed became an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1849, settled permanently in London in 1852, and began to exhibit at the Royal Academy, generally choosing domestic and pathetic subjects, or subjects appealing to Scotch religious sentiment. In 1855 his "Mitherless Bairn" elicited very high praise. Other works by Mr. Faed are—"Home and the Homeless;" "The First Break in the Family;" "Sunday in the Backwoods;" and "The Last o' the Clan;" "Hush! Let him Sleep;" "The Anxious Look Out;" "Highland Tramp crossing a Headland;" and "The Shepherd's Wife." He exhibited "The Rustic Bather" in the Royal Academy's Exhibition, 1893. Mr. Faed was made A.R.A. in 1859, and R.A. in 1864. He was elected an honorary member of the Vienna Royal Academy in Jan., 1875.

FAIRBAIRN, Sir Andrew, born at Glasgow on March 5, 1828, is the only son of Peter Fairbairn, afterwards Mayor of Leeds, and knighted by the Queen. He was educated at Leeds, Geneva, and Glasgow, and in 1846 became a pensioner at Christ's College, Cambridge, but migrated to Peterhouse in January of the following year. He graduated B.A. in Jan., 1850, and took his M.A. degree in 1853. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple on April 30, 1852, and attended the West Riding Sessions and Northern Circuit until 1856. He then relinquished practice, and in 1860 became a partner in the firm of his father, on whose death in 1861 he succeeded to the business. In 1866 he was elected Mayor of Leeds, and was re-elected to the same office in 1867. During the latter year he was a Commissioner of the Leeds Exhibition of Fine Arts, and was knighted (by patent) in 1868, during the Ministry of Mr. Disraeli. He resigned his mayoralty in September, 1868, in order to stand as Liberal candidate for Leeds. He was unsuccessful, as also in 1874, when he contested Knaresborough. He became a director of the Great Northern Railway in 1878, and the same year he was appointed Royal Commissioner to the Paris Exhibition. In 1880 he was elected Member for the Eastern Division of the West Riding, and when the Division was split up into six sub-divisions in 1885 he was chosen as the first representative of the Otley Division. The same year he was appointed Vice-President of the Railway Congress at Brussels, and was made a Knight Commander of the Order of Leopold by the King of the Belgians. Having become a Liberal Unionist he successfully contested the Otley Division in 1886. He was President of the First Section of the International Railway Congress (Paris, 1889), when he was made a Commander of the Legion of Honour. He was High Sheriff of Yorkshire in 1892-93.

FAIRBAIRN, Andrew Martin, M.A., D.D., Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford, born near Edinburgh, Nov. 4, 1838; was educated there, and studied in the Universities of Edinburgh and Berlin, and became Minister of the Independent Church, Bathgate, West Lothian, in 1860. He was transferred to Aberdeen in 1872; appointed Principal of Airedale Independent College in 1877; and Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales in 1883; and became first Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford, in 1886. Is D.D. of the University of Edinburgh, 1878, and of Yale, 1889; is M.A. (honorary) of the University of Oxford, 1887; was Muir Lecturer on the Philosophy and History of Religion in the University of Edinburgh, 1878-83; Lymon Busher Lecturer in the University of Yale, 1891, and Gifford Lecturer in the University of Aberdeen, 1892-94. Mr. Fairbairn is the author of "Studies in the Philosophy of Religion and History," 1876; "Studies in the Life of Christ," 1880; "The City of God," 1882; "Religion in History and in Modern Life," 1884; Enlarged Edition with Essay on "The Church and the Working Classes," 1894; "The Place of Christ in Modern Theology," 1893 (5th ed. 1894); "Christ in the Centuries" (sermons), 1893; and has been a frequent contributor to the Contemporary and other reviews.

FAITHFULL, Miss Emily, daughter of the late Rev. Ferdinand Faithfull, was born at Headley Rectory, Surrey, in 1835, and educated in a school at Kensington. She was presented at Court in her twenty-first year. On becoming interested in the condition of women, she devoted herself to the extension of their remunerative spheres of labour. In 1860 she collected a band of female compositors, and, in spite of great difficulties, founded a typographical establishment in Great Coram Street, W.C., in which women (as compositors) were employed, and for which she obtained the approval of Her Majesty. Among many other specimens of first-rate workmanship produced at the Victoria Press is the "Victoria Regia," dedicated by special permission to the Queen, who signified her approbation by giving a warrant appointing Miss Faithfull Printer and Publisher in Ordinary to Her Majasty. In May, 1863, Miss Faithfull started a monthly publication called The Victoria Magazine, in which for eighteen years the claims of women to remunerative employment were earnestly set forth. In the spring of 1868 Miss Faithfull published a novel, entitled "Change upon Change," which ran into a second edition within a month. Shortly after this, Miss Faithfull made her début as a lecturer, and achieved a marked success in this capacity, and has since frequently lectured in our leading literary and philosophical institutions. In 1872-73 Miss Faithfull visited the United States. After a third tour in America, in 1882-83, she published a book entitled "Three Visits to America," containing vivid descriptions of various feminine industries, and life as she found it among the Mormons in Salt Lake City, Colorado, California, &c. Miss Faithfull is a member of the staff of the Lady's Pictorial, to which she contributes two articles every week; and articles on the subject which she has made specially her own are frequently to be found in our leading papers and magazines. Miss Faithfull had the honour of giving an address on the Queen's influence on women at the Town Hall, Manchester, in the Jubilee year, the two other speakers being the Bishop of Manchester and the Bishop of Salford, now Cardinal Vaughan, Archbishop of Westminister. She also personally presented a copy of these addresses to the Princess of Wales during Her Royal Highness's visit to Manchester, and subsequently to the Duchess of York on her marriage. In commemoration of thirty years dedicated to the interests of her sex, Miss Faithfull received, in 1888, an engraving of Her Majesty, which was sent to her by the Queen, bearing an inscription in Her Majesty's own handwriting, and followed by a Civil Service Pension. In Sept., 1890, she visited, by request, the Queen of Roumania, who was then in England, and detailed to Her Majesty the various movements of woman's work in England.

FALGUIÈRE, Jean Alexandre Joseph, a French painter and sculptor, was born at Toulouse, Sept. 7, 1831. He was a pupil of Jouffroy, and at the École des Beaux Arts gained the Prix de Rome in 1859. In 1857 he sent to the Salon a plaster statue of the Infant Theseus, which was reproduced in marble and exhibited in 1865. Since then he has executed "A Christian Martyr," now in the Gallery of the Luxembourg, 1867; "Ophelia," 1869; "Vainqueur au Combat de Coq," 1870; "Pierre Corneille," 1872, (purchased by the Government); "Danseuse Egyptienne," 1873, for the Théâtre Français; "La Suisse accueillant l'armée Française," 1874, presented to the town of Toulouse by the Federal Council; a bust of Lamartine, 1876, which was solemnly unveiled at Mâcon in August, 1878; "Coquelin Cadet," 1886; "Diane," 1887; "la Musique," 1889; "la Femme au Paon," 1890; and many other busts and statues, including a monument of Admiral Courbet at Abbeville and a monument of Lafayette for Washington. M. Falguière is also well-known as a painter. His first picture, "Près du Château," 1873, attracted much attention; "Les Lutteurs," 1875, was warmly praised, as were also "Cain and Abel," 1876; and "The Beheading of John the Baptist," 1877. Amongst more recent paintings may be mentioned "Acis et Galatée," 1885; "Madeleine," 1887; "Nain Mendiant," 1888; and "Junon," 1889. At the Paris Exhibition of 1868 he was awarded a medal of the first class. He is a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and was elected a member of the Académie in succession to his master, Jouffroy, in 1882.

FALK, Dr. Paul Ludwig Adalbert, a German statesman, born at Metschkau, in Silesia, in 1827, is the son of a Lutheran minister, who was a "liberal theologian." He studied first in the "Realschule" of Landeshut, then at the Gymnasium in Breslau, and finally at the university of the latter city. In 1847 he began his legal career; in 1850 he became an assistant of the Public Prosecutor in Breslau; in 1853 chief of this office at Lyck; in 1861 he assumed the same functions before the Kammergericht or Superior Court, with duties in the Ministry of Justice; in 1862 he became Judge of the Court of Appeals at Glogau; and in 1868 he was permanently assigned as Privy Councillor, or Geheimrath, to the Ministry of Justice. He sat in the Prussian House of Deputies from 1858 to 1861; he was elected to the Constituent North German Reichstag in 1867; and he has been a member of the Imperial Parliament ever since its establishment. When Prince Bismarck resolved to weaken the influence of the Roman Catholic Church in Prussia, he caused Dr. Falk to be nominated Minister of Public Worship (Jan. 22, 1872), in succession to Dr. von Mühler. During his tenure of office, Dr. Falk succeeded in passing various repressive laws directed against the hierarchy and the clergy, and his name has thus become known beyond the limits of the German Empire. He resigned the post of Minister of Public Worship, July 14, 1879, and was succeeded by Herr von Puttkamer. In Jan., 1892, he was appointed President of the Higher Tribunal of Westphalia at Hamm, and retired from Parliamentary life. The Emperor has decorated him with the order of the Black Eagle.

FARLEY, James Lewis, only son of the late Mr. Thomas Farley, of Meiltran, co. Cavan, was born at Dublin, Sept. 9, 1823. After the Crimean war and the peace of Paris in 1856, the attention of English capitalists was directed to Turkey, and the Ottoman Bank was formed. Mr. Farley accepted the Post of Chief Accountant of the branch at Beyrout, which he assisted in successfully establishing. In 1860 he was appointed Accountant-General of the State Bank of Turkey at Constantinople, which subsequently became merged in the Imperial Ottoman Bank. He has been a frequent contributor to the newspaper press on questions relative to the trade and finances of Turkey, and was special correspondent for the Daily News during the Sultan's visit to Egypt in 1863, and during the Imperial and Royal visits to Constantinople in 1869. He is also the author of "Two Years in Syria," 1858; "The Druses and Maronites," 1861; "The Resources of Turkey," 1862; "Banking in Turkey," 1863; and "Turkey," 1866. In recognition of his literary services to the Turkish empire, he was, in March, 1870, appointed Consul at Bristol for his Imperial Majesty the Sultan. He is a Fellow of the Statistical Society of London, and a Corresponding Member of the Institut Égyptien, founded by the first Napoleon in Alexandria.

FARRAR, The Ven. Frederic William, D.D., F.R.S., Archdeacon of Westminster, son of the Rev. C. R. Farrar, Rector of Sidcup, Kent, was born in Bombay, Aug. 7, 1831. He received his education at King William's College, in the Isle of Man, and at King's College, London. He became a classical exhibitioner of the University of London in 1850, graduated B.A. there, and was appointed a University scholar in 1852. Mr. Farrar was successively a Scholar and Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and in 1854 he took his Bachelor's degree in that University as fourth in the first class of the Classical Tripos, and a Junior Optime in mathematics. He had already obtained the Chancellor's Prize for English Verse by his Poem on "The Arctic Regions," and he subsequently gained the Le Bas Classical Prize, and became also Norrisian Prizeman. In 1854 he was ordained deacon by the Bishop of Salisbury, and in 1857 he was admitted into priest's orders by the Bishop of Ely. For many years he was one of the Assistant Masters at Harrow under Dr. Vaughan, and under his successor Dr. Butler; and he held, with great distinction, the Head Mastership of Marlborough College from Jan., 1871, till April, 1876. Dr. Farrar was a select preacher before the University of Cambridge in 1868, and again in 1874-75, and often since, and he preached the Hulsean Lectures in 1870. He has frequently been appointed to preach before the University of Oxford, and was Bampton Lecturer in 1885. He was an Honorary Chaplain to the Queen from 1869 to 1873, when he was nominated one of her Majesty's Chaplains in Ordinary. In April, 1876, he was appointed to a canonry in Westminster Abbey and the rectory of St. Margaret's, vacant by the death of Canon Conway. He was appointed Archdeacon of Westminster, April 24, 1883; and has three times been elected by the clergy of Westminster as their Rural Dean. In 1890 Archdeacon Farrar was offered by the Speaker, and accepted, the Chaplaincy of the House of Commons, rendered vacant by the death of the Rev. Henry White. Dr. Farrar is the author of the following works of fiction:—"Eric, or Little by Little," 1858; "Julian Home," 1859; and "St. Winifred's, or the World of School," 1863. His philological works are:—"The Origin of Language," 1860; "Chapters on Language," 1865; "Greek Grammar Rules," 6th edit., 1865; "Greek Syntax," 3rd edit., 1867; "Families of Speech," 1870; and "Language and Languages," being a revised edition of "Chapters on Language" and "Families of Speech," comprised in one volume, 1878. He has also published "A Lecture (before the Royal Institution) on Public School Education," with notes, 1867; and edited "Essays on a Liberal Education," 2nd edit., 1868. His theological works are:—"Seekers after God" (Sunday Library), 1869; "The Witness of History to Christ; being the Hulsean Lectures for 1870," 1871; "In the Days of thy Youth," sermons preached in the chapel of Marlborough College," 1877; "The Life of Christ," 2 vols., 1874, which reached its twelfth edition in a single year; "Life of St. Paul," 1879; and "The Early Days of Christianity," 2 vols., 1882; besides several volumes of sermons; and notably that bold work, "Eternal Hope," 1880, in which Canon Farrar combats the doctrine of eternal torture in hell. All Dr. Farrar's works have passed through many editions, and many of them have been translated into French, German, Dutch, Russian, Swedish, and Italian. Besides these works, Dr. Farrar has been a contributor to the Speaker's Commentary (Book of Wisdom) and Bishop Ellicott's Commentary (Book of Judges); to the Cambridge Bible for schools he has contributed commentaries on St. Luke and the Epistle to the Hebrews, both in the Greek and in the English editions. He also furnished articles to Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," Kitto's "Biblical Cyclopædia," the "Encyclopædia Britannica," &c. In 1883 he was appointed Rural Dean by the late Bishop of London, and was re-elected by the clergy to the same office in 1885. Archdeacon Farrar is Honorary Chaplain of the 2nd Volunteer Battalion Royal Fusiliers, and of the Church Lads' Brigade. In 1885 he was appointed Bampton Lecturer before the University of Oxford, and delivered a course (since published) on "The History of Interpretation." In 1885 he visited America, where he received a hearty welcome from all classes, and especially from the members of all religious denominations. He has taken a prominent part in temperance reform, in the Diocesan Council for the Welfare of Young Men, in the Westminster Sanitary Aid Associations, in the Westminster Sunday School Association (of which he was the founder), in the formation of a Sea-side Camp for London Youths, in the Support of Brotherhoods, and in many other philanthropic works.

FAUCIT, Helen. See MARTIN, LADY.

FAURE, Jean-Baptiste, a famous French baritone singer, born at Moulines, Jan. 15, 1830, was educated at the Conservatoire, from 1843 to 1852, and made his début at the Opéra Comique in the latter year. M. Faure performed at the Opera House in Paris, in "Pierre de Medicis," Oct. 14, 1861. In 1857 he was appointed Professor of Singing to the Conservatoire, in succession to M. Frédéric Pouchard, and appeared during several seasons at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden. For many years M. Faure was acknowledged head of the French lyric stage. He was nominated a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour in Dec., 1881. He is the possessor of a fine collection of works of art.

FAURE, François Felix, President of the French Republic, is of Protestant descent, although personally he is a Roman Catholic, and was born in Paris on Jan. 30, 1841. He is a self-made man, and began life as a journeyman tanner in Touraine, but eventually became a shipowner in Havre, where for some time he was President of the local Chamber of Commerce. During the Franco-German War he was at the head of a detachment of volunteers, and brought supplies from Havre to Paris in aid of those burnt out by the Commune. At the election of August 21, 1881, he presented himself as a parliamentary candidate in the third circonscription of Havre, and was elected as a Republican by 5,876 votes as against 5,675 polled by M. Le Vaillant du Douët, his Monarchist opponent. In the cabinet formed by Gambetta on Nov. 14, 1881, Felix Faure was Under Secretary of State to the new Ministry of Commerce and the Colonies. He went out of office with the other members of the Government in January, 1882, but was recalled to the same post in M. Jules Ferry's last cabinet, formed in September, 1883. He retired with his colleagues in March, 1885. Subsequently, as one of the chiefs of the group of the Republican Union, he often spoke on colonial questions, and is at present understood to be an authority on the Chinese, Japanese, and kindred questions. At the election of October, 1885, M. Felix Faure was returned as a Republican for the Seine-Inférieure, and for the third time occupied his old post at the Colonial Ministry in the Tirard Cabinet (Jan. 5, 1888, to the following February). At the elections of September, 1889, he was returned for the second division of Havre, beating his Monarchist opponent, M. Anselme, by a large majority. In the Dupuy government he was Minister of Marine, and in this capacity showed a reforming spirit. On Jan. 17, 1895, he was elected, on a second ballot, to the Presidency of the French Republic, rendered vacant by the sudden retirement of M. Casimir-Perier. At the first ballot M. Brisson was returned by an insufficient majority, and when this was announced, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, another candidate for the Presidency, retired in favour of his fellow-moderate, M. Faure, who was elected by 430 votes, as against 361 given to M. Brisson. M. Faure is a Government or moderate republican of M. Perier's point of view, and will, it is supposed, fulfil the duties of his office much as did the late President Carnot.

FAWCETT, Edgar, an American man of letters, was born at New York, May 26, 1847, and graduated at Columbia College in 1867. He has published "Short Poems for Short People," 1871; "Purple and Fine Linen," 1874; "Ellen's Story," 1876; "Fantasy and Passion," poems, 1877; "A Hopeless Case," 1880; "A Gentleman of Leisure," 1881; "An Ambitious Woman," 1883; "Tinkling Cymbals;" "Adventures of a Widow;" "Song and Story, later Poems;" "Rutherford," and "The Buntling Ball," 1884; "Social Silhouettes," 1885; "Romance and Revery," 1886; "The Confessions of Claud;" "The House at High Bridge;" "Douglas Duane;" and "The New King Arthur," 1887; "A Man's Will;" "Olivia Delaplaine;" and "Divided Lives," 1888; "A Demoralising Marriage;" "Agnosticism and other Essays;" "Miriam Balestier;" and "Solarion," 1889; "The Evil that Men Do;" "Fabian Dimitry;" "A Daughter of Silence;" and "How a Husband Forgave," 1890; "A Romance of Two Brothers;" "A New York Family;" "Loaded Dice;" and "Songs of Doubt and Dream." 1891; "Women must Weep;" "An Heir to Millions;" "American Push;" and "The Adopted Daughter," 1892; "The New Hero;" and "A Round Unvarnished Tale," 1893.

FAWCETT, Sir (John) Henry, K.C.M.G., created 1887, was born on Dec. 11, 1831. being the eldest son of John Fawcett, Esq., of Great Petterill Bank, Cumberland, J.P., D.L. for that county, by his wife, Sarah, daughter of J. Hodgson, Esq., Clerk of the Peace for the county. He was educated at Rugby School under Dr. (afterwards Archbishop) Tait, and at Cambridge. He was elected a scholar of Trinity Hall in that university in 1851, and took his degree as first-class in the law tripos in 1853. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in Jan., 1857, and joined the northern circuit. He was appointed a revising barrister in 1868; and unsuccessfully contested the borough of Cockermouth in Feb., 1874, in the Conservative interest. He was appointed Assistant-Judge and Vice-Consul at Constantinople in June, 1875; and was Acting-Judge and Consul-General from the August, 1876, to Feb. 14, 1877, when he was appointed Judge of the Supreme Consular Court of the Levant, and her Britannic Majesty's Consul-General for Turkey. After the raid of General Gourko across the Balkans in July, 1877, and his subsequent retreat, Sir Henry, then Mr. Fawcett, was requested by her Majesty's ambassador to proceed to the valley of the Tundja to carry relief to the starving populations. He visited Rodosto, Adrianople, Philippopoli, Tatar Bazarjik, Sofia, Korlova, Kalnfar, Kesanlick, Shipka, and the whole valley of the Tundja, and for some weeks remained in the country distributing relief to the suffering populations. Mr. Fawcett's despatches to her Majesty's ambassador were the means of a large amount of money being subscribed by the British public to the Compassionate Fund. In May, 1878, he was requested by the Marquis of Salisbury to proceed to Volo, in Thessaly, to investigate, in concert with his Excellency Redjib Pasha, the circumstances concerning the death of Mr. Ogle, correspondent of the Times newspaper. He remained there some time, and made a report which was the subject of a debate in Parliament on the last day but one of the Session in Aug., 1878. Mr. Fawcett was selected by her Majesty's Government to be the English member of the International Commission of the Rhodope; he thereupon proceeded to Philippopoli, and thence to Enos, Fuerti, Gurvulgena, and during a month traversed the Rhodope mountains, taking evidence of the state of the refugees and the sufferings of the Mahometan population. He retired on a pension (Feb., 1893), and has received the orders of the Medjidieh and the Lion and Sun of Persia.

FAWCETT, Mrs. Millicent Garrett, born at Aldeburgh, in Suffolk, June 11, 1847, is sister to Mrs. Garrett Anderson, M.D. In 1867 she married the late Professor Fawcett, and soon after her marriage she became a prominent leader of the Women's Suffrage movement. She is also an urgent pleader on the subject of girls' education. In 1889 she was appointed President of the Women's Unionist Association. In 1870 she published "Political Economy for Beginners;" "Tales in Political Economy," 1874; "Janet Doncaster," a novel, 1875; "Some Eminent Women of our Time," a series of twenty-four short biographical sketches, in 1889. In conjunction with her husband, Mrs. Fawcett wrote a volume of "Essays and Lectures," 1872; the article on "Communism" in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" is by her, as is also the article on Henry Fawcett in the 1888 edition of Chambers' Encyclopædia. Mrs. Fawcett is the mother of the Miss Fawcett who, in the Mathematical Tripos at Cambridge in 1890, was declared "Above the Senior Wrangler."

FAYE, Professor Hervé Auguste Etienne Albans, astronomer, was born at Saint Benoît du Sault (Indre), Oct. 1, 1814, and finished his studies at the École Polytechnique. He afterwards went to Holland, and on returning to France, became, on the recommendation of M. Arago, a pupil in the Observatory. He discovered, Nov. 22, 1843, a new comet, to which his name was assigned, and received the Lalande prize from the Academy of Sciences, to which learned association he submitted, in 1846, a paper, entitled "La Parallaxe d'une Etoile anonyme de la Grande Ourse." This was followed by a work entitled "Sur un Nouveau Collimateur zénithal et sur une Lunette zénithale nouvelle." He was elected a member of the section of Astronomy in place of Baron de Damoiseau, Jan. 18, 1847; a member of the Bureau of Longitudes, March 26, 1862; and was decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honour in 1843. In 1864 he was appointed a member of the Imperial Council of Public Instruction, and was promoted to the rank of officer of the Legion of Honour. M. Faye was Professor of Geodesy at the École Polytechnique from 1848 to 1854, and in the latter year he was appointed Rector of the University Academy of Nancy. He succeeded M. Delaunay as Professor of Astronomy in the Polytechnic School in 1873. In 1877 M. Faye was for a short time at the Ministry of Public Instruction, and from the end of that year until 1888 he was Inspector-General of Higher Education. In addition to th eworks already mentioned, M. Faye is the author of "Sur l'Anneau de Saturne," published in 1848; "Sur les Déclinaisons Absolues," in 1850; "Des Leçons de Cosmographie," in 1852; "Cours d'Astronomie nautique," 1880; "Cours d'Astronomie de l'École Polytechnique," 1881; and "Sur l'Origine du Monde," 1889. M. Faye was promoted to the rank of grand officer of the Legion of Honour in 1889.

FAYRER, Sir Joseph, K.C.S.I., LL.D., M.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., second son of the late R. J. Fayrer, Esq., Commander R.N., by Agnes, daughter of W. Wilkinson, Esq., of Westmorland, was born at Plymouth, Dec. 6, 1824. He was brought up under private tuition in Scotland, and afterwards continued his studies in London, in Edinburgh, and on the Continent. He took the degree of M.D. in the University of Edinburgh, and became a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London, a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of London and Edinburgh, and a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh; entered the medical service of the Navy and served in the military hospital of Palermo during the siege of that city (1847-48); and he was also present at the siege of Rome (1848). In 1849 he entered the medical service of the army. In 1850 he entered the Bengal Medical Service, from which he retired in 1874. He served throughout the Burmese war of 1852, and the Indian Mutiny of 1857; also at the defence of Lucknow, where he was Political Assistant and Residency Surgeon. For these services he received medals and clasps and the brevet rank of Surgeon. He was Professor of Surgery in the Medical College of Bengal from 1859-74; was Fellow, Member of Senate, and during two years President of the Medical Faculty of the Calcutta University; and was successively Vice-President and President of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. He was created C.S.I. Dec. 22, 1868; and advanced to K.C.S.I. in March, 1876, at an investiture of the Order held at Allahabad by the Prince of Wales, whom during his travels in India he accompanied as physician. In acknowledgment of his service he received a letter from the Queen. He had previously accompanied the Duke of Edinburgh in his visit to India in 1870. He was appointed Surgeon-General and President of the Medical Board of the India Office in Dec., 1874. He is honorary physician to the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and physician to the Duke of Edinburgh. Sir J. Fayrer has written "Clinical Surgery in India;" a work on the poisonous snakes of India, which he presented to the Indian Government, from whom he received thanks, and by whom it was published in 1872; "Clinical and Pathological Observations in India;" "Lettsomian Lectures on Dysentery;" "Croonian Lectures on Climate and Fevers of India;" and many contributions to European and Indian journals, including papers on "Disease in India;" "European Child Life in Bengal;" "Malarial Splenic Cachexia of Tropical Climates;" "Bronchocele in India;" "Liver Abscess;" "Physiological Action of the Poison of Naja Tripudians" (in conjunction with Dr. Brunton); "Some of the Physical Conditions of the Country that Affect Life in India;" "Health in India;" "Rainfall and Climate of India;" "The Claws of Felidæ;" and "Anatomy of the Rattlesnake." He has received the second class of the Order of the Conception from the King of Portugal, the third class of the Redeemer of Greece from the King of Greece, and the third class of the Medjidieh from the Viceroy of Egypt. In Aug., 1878, the hon. degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the University of Edinburgh, and in April, 1890, by the University of St. Andrews. He is Vice-President of the Zoological Society of London. In Dec., 1892, he represented the Royal College of Physicians of London and the University of Edinburgh at the Tercentenary of Galileo at Padua.

FEARON, Daniel Robert, M.A. Oxon., 1862, Barrister-at-Law, eldest son of the late Rev. Daniel Rose Fearon, successively Vicar of Assington, Suffolk, and St. Mary Church, Devon, by Frances Jane, daughter of the late Rev. Charles Andrewes, Rector of Flempton, Suffolk, was born at Assington Dec. 1, 1835, and educated at Marlborough College and Balliol College, Oxford, where he took a First Class in Moderations and in the Final Schools. He entered as a student at Lincoln's Inn, Nov. 10, 1859, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, Nov. 17, 1874. He was appointed, in 1860, one of H.M. Inspectors of Schools; and in 1865 an Assistant Commissioner to the Schools Inquiry Commission, and in that capacity reported on Secondary Education in London and the neighbourhood, and on the system of education in the Burgh Schools of Scotland. In 1869 he was appointed a Commissioner to enquire into the condition of elementary education in Manchester and Liverpool, in preparation for Mr. Forster's Elementary Education Act of 1870. In 1870 he was appointed an Assistant Commissioner to the Endowed Schools Commission, of which the late Lord Lyttelton was chairman. In 1873 he was commissioned by the Treasury, together with Mr. W. H. Gladstone, M.P., Sir Robert Hamilton, K.C.B., and Mr. Murray, to enquire into the Administration of the Irish Education Department. In 1875 he was appointed an Assistant Commissioner to the Charity Commission for England and Wales, on the transfer to that Commission of the administration of the Endowed Schools Acts. In 1883 he was appointed Acting Secretary to that Commission; and by Royal Warrant dated June 16, 1886, was appointed to be Secretary to the Charity Commission. Mr. Fearon is the author of a work on "School Inspection." He married, July 2, 1861, Margaret Arnold, second daughter of the late Bonamy Price, Esq., hon. Fellow of Worcester College, and Professor of Political Economy in the University of Oxford.

FEARON, The Rev. William Andrewes, D.D., Head Master of Winchester College, is the third son of the Rev. D. R. Fearon, Vicar of Assington, Suffolk, afterwards of St. Mary Church, Devon. He was born at Assington, Feb. 4, 1841. His mother was Frances Jane, daughter of the Rev. Charles Andrewes, Rector of Flempton, Suffolk, a member of the same family as the celebrated Bishop Andrewes. He was educated at home till he entered Winchester College as a scholar in 1852. During his school career he twice obtained the Queen's Gold Medal, also the Goddard Scholarship for Classics, and the Duncan Mathematical Scholarship. In 1859 he gained a Scholarship at New College, Oxford. In 1863 he took a double first-class in the Final Schools of Classics and Mathematics. In 1864 he was elected Fellow of New College, and also became Tutor of that College, retaining his post until 1867, when he was asked by Dr. Ridding to open a tutor's house at Winchester College, and to undertake the Junior Sixth Form. He was ordained deacon in 1867, priest in 1868. In 1882 he was elected Head Master of Durham School, and was appointed Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Newcastle, which offices he held till 1884, when he was elected to the Head Mastership of Winchester College. In the same year he took his D.D. degree, and in 1889 became Honorary Canon of Winchester Cathedral.

FELLOWS, James J., F.R.C.I., F.R.G.S., F.R.S.S., Agent-General for New Brunswick, is the only son of Mr. J. Fellows of Annapolis, Nova Scotia (d. 1864), by the daughter of Mr. James Hall, J.P., of Annapolis, and was born in 1828, and educated at Acadia College, Nova Scotia. He married 1st, 1851, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Thomas Allan, J.P., of Portland, New Brunswick; 2nd, 1871, Jane Hamlin, only daughter of James R. Crane, of St. John, New Brunswick, J.P. for the city and county of St. John, New Brunswick, of which province he has been Agent-General in London from 1887.

FENN, George Manville, was born at Pimlico in 1831, and received his education at private schools. At twenty-one he entered one of the training colleges of the National Society, and, after the usual time of probation, obtained the mastership of a country school. His next step was to the post of private tutor; but the responsibilities of married life soon induced him to enter into business, printing offering itself as the most congenial. This led to small literary ventures—the production of a magazine in 1862, and a participation in the proprietorship of one of the provincial newspapers in 1864. Then followed the writing and offering of short sketches to the various magazines and periodicals. One of these, after endless disappointments, was sent to the late Charles Dickens for All the Year Round, and immediately accepted, others appearing subsequently in the same periodical. A busy pen soon produced sketches which were readily accepted by Mr. James Payn for Chambers's Journal, and by Mr. Edward Walford for Once a Week. About the same time—1866—Mr. Justin McCarthy, then editing the Star, was running a series of short papers through the evening edition, and willingly enlisted the services of the young writer. Hence, about thirty or forty working-life sketches appeared in the Readings by Starlight. These papers, and others of a similar class, were published in four volumes in 1867, the same year witnessing the production of Mr. Fenn's first boy's story, "Hollowdell Grange," and a natural history tale for children, "Featherland." From that period, in rapid succession, novel after novel appeared in magazine, newspaper, and volume form, the principal breaks to this production occurring when Mr. Fenn succeeded Mr. Haweis as editor of Cassell's Magazine in 1870, and when he afterwards became the purchaser of Once a Week from Mr. Besant's partner, Mr. James Rice, in 1873. In this venture, however, no better success attended him than had befallen the previous owners of what may certainly be dubbed a most unlucky magazine, in spite of the long list of famous writers and artists who contributed to its pages. Mr. Fenn's principal three-volume novels are "Bent, Not Broken," and "Webs in the Way," 1867; "Mad," 1868; "The Sapphire Cross," and "By Birth a Lady," 1871; "That Little Frenchman," 1874; "Thereby Hangs a Tale," 1876; "A Little World," 1877; "Pretty Polly," 1878; "The Parson of Dumford," 1879; "The Clerk of Portwick," 1880; "The Vicar's People," 1881; "Eli's Children," 1882; "The New Mistress," 1883; "The Rosery Folk," and "Sweet Mace," 1884; "Stained Pages," 1885; "Double Cunning," and "The Master of the Ceremonies," 1886; "One Maid's Mischief," and "This Man's Wife," 1887; "The Man with a Shadow," 1888; "The Lass that Loved a Soldier," and "Of High Descent," 1889; "A Fluttered Dovecote," "Lady Maude's Mania," and "A Double Knot," 1890; "Mahme Nousie," and "The Mynns Mystery," 1891; "King of the Castle," and "Nurse Elisia," 1892; "Witness to the Deed," "The Star Gazer," and "In an Alpine Valley," 1893. Mr. Fenn's boy's stories, which have attained to a world-wide circulation, have been mainly written during the past few years:—"Off to the Wilds," 1881; "In the King's Name," "Middy and Ensign," and "Nat the Naturalist," 1883; "The Silver Cañon," and "The Golden Magnet," 1884; "Bunyip Land," and "Menhardoc," 1885; "Patience Wins," and "Brownsmith's Boy," 1886; "Yussuf the Guide," and "Devon Boys," 1887; "Mother Carey's Chicken," "Dick of the Fens," "Commodore Junk," and "Nolens Volens," 1888; "Quicksilver," "Crown and Sceptre," and "Three Boys," 1889; "Mass' George," "Cutlass and Cudgel," and "The Boy who would not go to Sea," 1890; "Burr, Junior" "The Rajah of Dah," and "The Crystal Hunters," 1891; "Gil the Gunner," "The Weathercock," "The Dingo Boys," and "The Grand Chaco," 1892; "The Black Bar," "Real Gold," "Sail Ho!" "Steve Young," and "Bluejackets," 1893. Many of the above books were reprinted and have obtained their share of popularity in the United States, where "The Fenn Books," as thus advertised, are well known. In addition to hundreds of short tales and sketches, written expressly for the popular magazines of the day, Mr. Fenn is also the author of many Christmas stories, notably "Ship Ahoy," and, wholly or in part, of several dramas and three-act farces, two of which, "The Barrister" and "The Balloon," were written in collaboration, and produced in 1888 and 1889. Mr. Fenn has been a member of the Savage Club since 1868, and of the Reform Club since 1875.

FERDINAND IV. (Salvator-Marie-Joseph-Jean-Baptiste-François-Louis-Gonzague-Raphael-Renier-Janvier), ex-Grand Duke of Tuscany, eldest son of Leopold II., grandson of Ferdinand III. and of Marie Antoinette Anne, daughter of Francis I., king of the Two Sicilies, the late grand duke's second wife, was born June 10, 1835, succeeded to the grand duchy on the abdication of his father, July 21, 1859, and reigned as Ferdinand IV.; but his career as a sovereign prince was brief, he having been obliged to quit his dominions on the consolidation of the kingdom of Italy under Victor Emmanuel in 1861. He married the Archduchess Anne Marie, daughter of the King of Saxony, Nov. 24, 1856. She died in 1859. In 1868 he married his second wife, Alice, Princess of Bourbon-Parma, by whom he has ten children. The grand duke is an archduke of Austria, Prince-Royal of Hungary and Bohemia, and a Colonel of Austrian Dragoons.

FERDINAND, Prince, of Bulgaria, was born in Vienna in 1861, and is the youngest son of Prince Augustus of Saxe-Coburg and the Princess Clémentin of Bourbon-Orleans, a daughter of King Louis Philippe. The Prince served as an officer in the Austrian Army, and possesses large estates in Hungary. After the deposition of Prince Alexander in 1886, followed by a Regency, Prince Ferdinand received a deputation from the Sobranje offering him the vacant throne. He accepted the offer, and, on the 14th of Aug., 1887, took the oath to the Bulgarian constitution at Tirnova. His sovereignty, however, has not been recognized by the Powers, although he has been received by the Emperor of Austria and by Queen Victoria, and his tenure is believed to be very precarious, as Russia is firmly opposed to his continuance on the throne. On the other hand, his reception by the Bulgarian nation has been most enthusiastic, and in M. Stambuloff he has had an admirable minister. In April, 1893, he married Princess Marie Louise of Parma, daughter of the Duke of Parma, of the house of Bourbon.

FERGUSON, Richard S., the eldest son of the late Mr. Joseph Ferguson, J.P. and D.L., was born at Carlisle, July 28, 1837, and was educated at Shrewsbury and St. John's College, Cambridge. He graduated B.A. as 27th wrangler in 1860, M.A. in 1863, and subsequently LL.M. Mr. Ferguson was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1862, and practised there as an equity draftsman and conveyancer, until his health failed in 1871. After travelling abroad for two years, he settled at Carlisle. He is a J.P. for Carlisle and Cumberland; has been Chairman of Quarter Sessions for that county since 1886, and Chancellor of the diocese of Carlisle since 1887. He is also an alderman for Carlisle (Mayor 1881–2, 1882–3) and for Cumberland; President, since 1886, of the Cumberland and Westmorland Antiquarian and Archæological Society; a Fellow of the Societies of Antiquaries of London and Scotland, and Vice-President of the Royal Archæological Institute and Surtees Society, and a member of several other learned societies. He is the author of "Cumberland and Westmorland M.P.s, from the Restoration to the Reform Bill," 1871; "Early Cumberland and Westmorland Friends," 1871; "Moss Gathered by a Rolling Stone," 1873. He is the editor of "Old Church Plate in the Diocese of Carlisle," 1882; of "Bishop Nicolson's Miscellany Accounts of the Diocese of Carlisle in 1703," and "Some Municipal Records of Carlisle," 1887; "A History of the Diocese of Carlisle," 1889; and "A Popular History of Cumberland," 1890. He is also editor of the "Transactions of the Cumberland and Westmorland Antiquarian and Archæological Society;" and author of several papers in transactions of various societies, including one "On an Astrolabe of Early English Make," in the Archæologia.

FERRERS, Norman Macleod, D.D., F.R.S., formerly Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, was born at Prinknash Park, Gloucestershire, Aug. 11, 1829, and educated at Eton. He entered as a student at Gonville and Caius

College, Cambridge, in 1847, and graduated in the Mathematical Tripos of 1851, when he attained the distinguished position of Senior Wrangler and first Smith's Prizeman. Mr. Ferrers was elected to a Fellowship, and, after filling various college offices, was appointed Tutor in 1865. For 38 years he has been constantly occupied in collegiate and university work. As a lecturer in mathematics he obtained considerable distinction. He examined for the Mathematical Tripos no fewer than eleven times, and he was especially prominent as an advocate for the various important changes which were effected in the scheme of the Mathematical Tripos examinations. For a considerable period he has been a member of the Council of the Senate, and he has been also a member of various syndicates and boards in the University. He was elected Master of Gonville and Caius College, in succession to Dr. Guest, Oct. 27, 1880. He is the author of an "Elementary Treatise on Trilinear Co-ordinates," 1861; and "Elementary Treatise on Spherical Harmonics," 1877. In 1871 he edited and published the mathematical writings of the late George Green. From 1855 he was, with Professor Sylvester, joint editor of the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, and he has been a frequent contributor to its pages. In 1876 he was elected a governor of St. Paul's School (from which position he retired in 1891), in 1885 of Eton College, and in 1877 a Fellow of the Royal Society. For the years 1884 and 1885 he filled the office of Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge.

FERRIER, Professor David, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.P., born at Aberdeen in 1843, was educated at the University of Aberdeen, where he graduated in Arts, with First Class Honours, in 1863. In the same year he gained the Fergusson Scholarship in Classics and Philosophy, open to competition by graduates of the four Scotch Universities. He has studied Philosophy in Germany, and Medicine in the University of Edinburgh, where he graduated as M.D. in 1870, with First Class Honours, and Gold Medal for his Thesis. He was appointed Professor of Forensic Medicine in King's College, London, in 1872. In 1889 he vacated this chair for that of Neuro-Pathology, specially founded for him by the authorities of King's College. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1876, and in 1890 received a Royal Medal for his researches on the Brain. He has also received the Baly Medal (Royal College of Physicians), the Marshall Hall Prize (Medical Chirurgical Society), the Cameron Prize (Edinburgh University), and various other honours. He is a Member of various learned Societies at home and abroad. He is Physician to King's College Hospital, and to the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic. Dr. Ferrier practises as a physician, and is the author of a work on the "Functions of the Brain," besides numerous papers relating to the functions and diseases of the brain and nervous system. He has incurred the special hostility of the extreme anti-vivisectionists by reason of the number, and the extraordinary success, of his experiments on animals. It may be said that Dr. Ferrier's researches have increased our knowledge of brain disease, epilepsy, &c., almost more than those of any other living man.

FESTING, The Right Rev. John Wogan, M.A., Bishop of St. Albans, is the elder son of the late Richard Grindal Festing, and brother of Major-General Festing, late of the Royal Engineers, and was educated at Wells Theological College and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his B.A. degree in 1860, and M.A. in 1863. In 1860 he was ordained deacon, and in 1861 priest. He was curate of Christ Church, Westminster, from 1860 to 1873; was appointed vicar of St. Luke's, Berwick Street, in 1873, and vicar of Christ Church, Albany Street, 1878. The Bishop is Treasurer of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa. He was made rural dean of St. Pancras in 1887, Prebendary of St. Paul's in the following year, and Bishop of St. Albans in 1890. Among pamphlets from his pen may be mentioned "Whose treatment of the Lord's Supper does St. Paul condemn?" 1866.

FESTING, Edward Robert, F.R.S., Maj.-Gen. Royal Engineers, son of Richard Grindal Festing and Eliza Mammatt, was born at Frome, Aug. 10, 1839, and was educated at King's School, Bruton, at Carshalton, and Woolwich. He received his commission in the Royal Engineers April 20, 1855; went to India in 1857, and was twice mentioned in despatches. He was appointed Assistant Director of the South Kensington Museum July, 1864, and made Fellow of the Royal Society in 1887. He is at present Director of the Science Museum at South Kensington.

FIELD, Henry Martyn, D.D., brother of the late Cyrus West Field, was born at Stockbridge, Massachusetts, April 3, 1822.

He graduated at Williams College in 1838, studied theology, and in 1842 became pastor of a Presbyterian church in St. Louis, Missouri. In 1847 he resigned his charge, and visited Europe, where he remained over a year. Returning to America he published "The Good and the Bad in the Roman Catholic Church" in 1848; and "The Irish Confederates, a History of the Rebellion of 1798," in 1851. The same year he became pastor of a church at West Springfield, Mass. In 1854 he removed to New York, and became one of the proprietors and editors of The Evangelist, a religious weekly newspaper, of which he has now been for twenty years the sole proprietor. In 1858 he made another European tour, which he has described in "Summer Pictures from Copenhagen to Venice." In 1866 he published the "History of the Atlantic Telegraph." In 1867 he again came to Europe, to visit the Paris Exhibition, and as Delegate to the Free Church of Scotland and the Presbyterian Church of Ireland. In 1875-76 he made a tour round the world, which he described in two volumes, "From the Lakes of Killarney to the Golden Horn," and "From Egypt to Japan," which have passed through seventeen editions. In 1881-82 he made a second visit to the East, the result of which was three volumes in the three years following, viz., "On the Desert, a visit to Mount Sinai;" "Among the Holy Hills;" and "The Greek Islands and Turkey after the War." A still more recent visit to Southern Europe has been followed by "Old Spain and New Spain" and Gibraltar." In 1890 appeared "Bright Skies and Dark Shadows," devoted principally to a discussion of the negro question.

FIELD, Hon. Stephen Johnson, LL.D., brother of the late Cyrus West Field and of Dr. Henry Martyn Field, was born at Haddam, Connecticut, Nov. 4, 1816, and graduated at Williams College, 1837. He studied law, with his brother David Dudley Field, at New York, and on his admission to the Bar entered into a partnership with him which lasted until 1848, when Stephen went to Europe. In 1849 he settled in California, where he resumed the practice of his profession. In 1851 he was a member of the Legislature, and in 1857 was chosen a Judge of the Supreme Court of the State, of which, in 1859, he became Chief Justice. In 1863 he was appointed by President Lincoln a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, a position which he still holds. In 1873 he was nominated by the Governor of California one of a commission to examine the code of laws of the State, and to prepare amendments to it for the action of the legislature, and in 1877 he was chosen a member of the Electoral Commission to decide the disputed presidential contest between Mr. Hayes and Mr. Tilden. He received the degree of LL.D. from Williams College in 1864, and in 1869 was appointed Professor of Law in the University of California. In 1889 an attempt was made to assassinate him while on circuit duty in California by a disappointed litigant, Judge Terry (his predecessor in the chief Justiceship of California), but his life was saved by the prompt interposition of an accompanying court officer.

FIELD, The Rt. Hon. Lord William Ventris, eldest son of Mr. Thomas Flint Field, of Fielden, Bedfordshire, was born in 1813. On leaving school he was at first articled to Messrs. Terrell, Barton, and Smale, solicitors, of Exeter, but was afterwards with Messrs. Price and Bolton, of Lincoln's Inn. He practised in that branch of the profession in London from 1840 to 1843, as one of the firm of Thompson, Debenham, and Field, of Salters' Hall Court; but from 1843, having entered himself as a member of the Inner Temple, and reading in the chambers of Mr. T. Kingdom, of the Western circuit, he prepared for the Bar. He began in 1847 to practise under the Bar as a special pleader. In 1850 he was called to the Bar, and joined the Western circuit. This he afterwards exchanged for the Midland, where he gained a large practice, as well as in London, both in commercial cases at Guildhall and before the Privy Council. In 1864 Mr. Field was appointed a Queen's Counsel, and was elected a Bencher of the Inner Temple. He became Leader of the Midland circuit, besides practising largely before the Judicial Committee and Railway Commission, and other tribunals. Mr. Field was nominated a Justice of the Queen's Bench Division in the High Court of Judicature in Feb. 1875, and shortly afterwards he received the honour of knighthood. On his retirement from the Bench in Feb., 1890, he was created a peer.

FIFE, Duke of, Alexander William George Duff, Marquis of Macduff, K.T., P.C., was born on Nov. 10, 1849, succeeded his father as 6th Earl of Fife in 1879, created Duke of Fife in 1889, on his marriage with H.R.H. the Princess Louise Victoria Alexandra Dagmar, the eldest daughter of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

The Duke was educated at Eton; is Lord Lieutenant of Elginshire; a Deputy Lieutenant of the counties of Aberdeen and Banff; Hon. Colonel of the Banffshire Artillery Volunteers; a member of the Council of the Duchy of Lancaster; and a partner in the metropolitan banking firm of Sir Samuel Scott and Co. The Duke sat as M.P. for Elgin and Nairn, in the Liberal interest, in 1874-79; was Captain and Gold Stick of the Corps of Gentlemen at Arms 1880-85; went on a special mission to the King of Saxony in 1882; and received the first Order of Saxony. The Duke and Duchess of Fife have two daughters, of whom the elder, Lady Alexandra Victoria Alberta Edwina Louise, was born at East Sheen Lodge on May 17, 1891. The second, Lady Maud Alexandra Victoria Georgia Bertha, was born there on April 3, 1893.

FIFE, Her Royal Highness the Duchess of (Princess Louise Victoria Alexandra Dagmar), eldest daughter of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, was born at Marlborough House on Feb. 20, 1867, and married at Buckingham Palace on July 27, 1889, to Alexander William George Duff, First Duke of Fife. The Duchess of Fife has accepted the office of President of the Edinburgh School of Medicine for Women, which is the first school where a medical education has been afforded to women in Scotland.

FINLAY, Robert Bannatyne, Q.C., M.P., son of Dr. William Finlay, of Edinburgh, was born in 1842, and educated at the Edinburgh Academy and at Edinburgh University, where he studied medicine and took his doctor's degree in 1863. Two years later he gave up medical practice and began to study for the English Bar. He was called in 1867, at the Middle Temple. He joined the South-Eastern Circuit, and was made a Queen's Counsel in 1882. In the following year Mr. Finlay contested Haddingtonshire against Lord Elcho at a by-election, but was unsuccessful. At the General Election of 1885 he succeeded in gaining a seat for Inverness Burghs, and in 1886 he was again returned for the same constituency as a Unionist Liberal, defeating Sir Robert Peel (Gladstonian) by 273 votes. Up to the election of 1885 and the rise of the Home Rule question, Mr. Finlay had made no great mark in the House, but during the first debates on Mr. Gladstone's Government of Ireland Bill he rose into a very important position. Since that time Mr. Finlay has been before the public in several capacities, especially as Counsel for Lord Colin Campbell in the celebrated lawsuit brought by him for the dissolution of his marriage. In 1892 he was not re-elected to Parliament.

FISCHER, Professor Kuno, was born July 23, 1824, at Sandewald, in Silesia, and educated at the Universities of Leipzig and Halle, where he devoted himself to the study of Philosophy, Theology, and Philology. In 1850 he began to lecture at Heidelberg, and in 1856 was appointed Professor of Philosophy at the University of Jena, where he remained until called to fill a similar chair at Heidelberg in 1872. His chief works are:—"Diotima, the Idea of the Beautiful," 1849; "History of Modern Philosophy," 1852-72; "Logic and Metaphysics," 1865; "Life of Kant and the Principles of his Teaching;" "Life and Character of Spinoza;" "The Confessions of Schiller;" "Lord Bacon;" "Goethe's Faust;" and "Lessing as the Reformer of German Literature," 1881. He is one of the most brilliant modern representatives of Hegelianism.

FITCH, J. G., was born in 1824; was educated at University College, London, and is M.A. of the University of London. He was from 1852 to 1856 Vice-Principal, and afterwards Principal, of the Normal College of the British and Foreign School Society. In 1863 he was appointed one of her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools, but has since been repeatedly detached for special services, first in 1865 as Assistant Commissioner to the Schools Inquiry Commission, afterwards, in 1869, as one of two Special Parliamentary Commissioners to investigate the educational condition of four great towns, with a view to the framing of the Education Act of 1870; and subsequently as Assistant Commissioner under the Endowed Schools Act from 1870 to 1877. In that year he returned to the service of the Education Department, and in 1881 became Chief Inspector of the Eastern Division, and afterwards Inspector of Training Colleges until 1894, when he retired from the public service. He was Examiner in the English Language, Literature, and History in the University of London during ten years, and was appointed a Fellow of the University by the Crown, on the nomination of Convocation. He has acted during many years as one of the special Examiners employed by the Civil Service Commission for the Indian and other higher branches of the Civil Service. In 1880 he delivered before the University of Cambridge a course of Lectures on Teaching, since published by the Cambridge Press in a volume which has been largely used by teachers in England and America, and translated into several foreign languages. He has written numerous articles on literary and academic topics in the leading reviews, is joint author of a work on "The Science of Arithmetic," and is the writer of the article "Education" in Chambers's Cyclopædia. The University of St. Andrews in 1885 conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D., and he has received from the French Government the Cross of a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, in recognition of services he has rendered to the Professors of French Normal Colleges who have visited England to study educational institutions and methods. In 1888 he visited America, and wrote for the English Education Department "Notes on American Schools and Colleges," which were published in the Blue Book for the following year, and have since been reprinted, with additions, in England and in the United States. He also prepared for the Department in 1890, in view of the proposals of the Government to abolish fees in elementary schools, a Parliamentary paper on the "Working of the Free School System in France and other Countries," which was reproduced in the Annual Report of the Committee of Council in 1891. He is a member of the governing bodies of St. Paul's School, Girton College, Cambridge, and Cheltenham Ladies' College, and an Honorary Fellow of the Scottish Educational Institute. Since his retirement he has, at the request of the Government, served on several special Committees of enquiry in reference to Admiralty and to Poor Law Schools.

FITZGERALD, George Francis, was born on Aug. 3, 1851, in Lower Mount Street, Dublin. His father was William Fitzgerald, sometime Bishop of Cork, and afterwards Bishop of Killaloe. Mr. G. F. Fitzgerald was educated at home by a private tutor, Charles J. Hooper, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1871, and M.A. in 1874. He was elected a Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, in 1877, Erasmus Smith Professor of Natural and Experimental Philosophy in the University of Dublin, Hon. Secretary of the Royal Dublin Society, 1881 till 1889, Fellow of the Royal Society, 1883; head of the Dublin Univ. School of Engineering, 1886; President of Section A British Association, Bath, 1888; and Examiner for London University in Experimental Science, 1888. The following is a list of his principal works:—"On the Rotation of the Plane of Polarisation of Light by Reflection from the Pole of a Magnet," Proc. R. S., No. 176, 1876; "On the Electromagnetic Theory of the Reflection and Refraction of Light," Trans. R. S., Part II., 1880; "On the Possibility of originating Wave Disturbances in the Ether by means of Electric Forces," Trans. R. D. S., Vol. I.; "On the superficial tension of fluids and its possible relation to Muscular Contractions," Trans. R. D. S., Vol. I.; "On the Energy transferred to the Ether by a variable Current," Trans. R. D. S., Vol. III.; "On an analogy between Electric and Thermal Phenomena," Proc. R. D. S., 1884; "On a Model illustrating some Properties of the Ether," Proc. R. D. S., 1885; "On the Structure of Mechanical Models illustrating some of the Properties of the Æther," Phys. Soc. Proc. and Phil. Mag., 1885; "Note on the Specific Heat of the Ether," Proc. R. D. S., 1885; "On the Limits to the Velocity of Motion in the working parts of Engines," Proc. R. D. S., 1886; and "On the Thermodynamic Properties of a Substance whose Intrinsic Equation is a Linear Function of the Pressure and Temperature," Proc. R. S., 1887.

FITZGERALD, Sir Gerald, K.C.M.G., youngest son of the late Francis Fitz-Gerald, of Galway, was born 1st Jan., 1833, at Galway, and educated at St. Mary's College, Galway, and in France. He was appointed Junior Clerk, War Office, 1856; was Estimate Clerk, 1861-63; selected in 1863 to proceed to India as assistant to the Commission for the Reorganisation of Indian Accounts; Deputy-Comptroller-General of Military Accounts, 1864-66; Accountant-General of Madras, 1871; of British Burmah, 1872; and was Deputy-Comptroller-General of India, 1872-4. He was allowed to accept temporary service under the Egyptian Government in 1876; and was Director-General of Accounts in Egypt, 1879-85; and was appointed Accountant-General of the Navy, 1st June, 1885. Sir G. FitzGerald was created C.M.G., 1880; K.C.M.G., 1885; and has received First-Class of the Medjidieh; Third Class of the Osmanieh; and Egyptian War Medal and Bronze Star. He married the eldest daughter of the late Lord Houghton.

FITZGERALD, Percy Hethrington, M.A., F.S.A., son of the late Thomas Fitzgerald, M.P., born in 1834, at Fane Valley, co. Louth, Ireland; was educated at Stoneyhurst College, Lancashire, and at Trinity College, Dublin, after which he was called to the Irish Bar, and appointed a Crown Prosecutor on the North-Eastern Circuit. He is the author of many works of fiction, most of which originally appeared in All the Year Round and Once a Week:—"Never Forgotten," "Bella Donna," "Second Mrs. Tillotson," "Dear Girl," "Diana Gay," Novels of "Young Cœlebs," "The Lady of Brantome," "The Night Mail," and many others. Also the following biographies, &c.:—"Croker's Boswell;" "The Life of Wilkes;" "Lives of the Sheridans;" "Lives of Dukes and Princesses," "Life of Mrs. Clive," "King Theodore of Corsica," "Life of William IV.," 2 vols.; "Life of George IV.," 2 vols.; "The Life of Sterne," 2 vols.; "Life of Garrick," 2 vols.; "Charles Townshend;" "A Famous Forgery," being the life of Dr. Dodd; "Charles Lamb"; "Principles of Comedy"; "The Romance of the English Stage"; two editions of "Boswell's Life of Johnson," in 3 vols.; an edition of Charles Lamb's Works, in 6 vols.; "Recreations of a Literary Man," 2 vols.; "The World behind the Scenes," 1 vol.; "A New History of the English Stage," 2 vols., 1882; "Kings and Queens of an Hour: Records of Love, Romance, Oddity, and Adventure," 2 vols., 1883; "Chronicles of Bow Street," "Henry Irving, or Twenty Years at the Lyceum," "Picturesque London," and other works, together with several light pieces performed at the London theatres. He was also the joint author, with Mr. W. G. Wills, of "Vanderdecken," produced by Mr. Irving at the Lyceum.

FITZGIBBON, The Right Hon. Gerald, A.B. Ex-Sch. Trinity College, Dublin, is the elder son of the late Gerald FitzGibbon, Master in Chancery; and was born 28 Aug., 1837; called to the Bar, Ireland, 1860; England (Lincoln's Inn), 1861. Appointed Q.C., 1872, Law Adviser, Dublin Castle, 1876, Solr.-Gen., 1877; Lord Justice of Appeal, Ireland, 1878; Privy Councillor, Ireland, 1879; Commissioner of National Education, 1884; Judicial Commissioner Educational Endowments, 1885. He married in 1864 Margaret Ann, second daughter of the Hon. Baron FitzGerald.

FITZMAURICE, Lord Edmund George Petty, second son of the fourth Marquis of Lansdowne, by his second wife, Emily, eldest daughter of the Comte de Flahault, was born in London in 1846, and educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he gained a scholarship and a prize for an English Essay, and graduated, as a first-class in Classics, in 1868. In December of the last-named year he entered the House of Commons as member for Calne, which he continued to represent in the Liberal interest until 1885. He was Private Secretary to the Right Hon. R. Lowe at the Home Office in 1872-3; appointed 1881 H. M. Commissioner for reorganizing the European Provinces of Turkey under Art. XXIII. of the Treaty of Berlin; and second Plenipotentiary at the London Conference on the Navigation of the Danube in 1883; and was appointed Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Dec. 1882, in succession to Sir Charles Dilke, who had been advanced to the Presidency of the Local Government Board. At the General Election of 1885 Lord Edmund was prevented by ill-health from offering himself as a candidate. In 1886 he was appointed one of the Boundary Commissioners under the Local Government Act (1887); is Vice-Chairman of the Court of Quarter Sessions and the County Council of Wilts; and is a trustee of the National Portrait Gallery, and one of the Commissioners on Historical Manuscripts. He is the author of a "Life of Lord Shelburne," the statesman, and has been a frequent contributor to the press, and to periodical literature on questions of foreign policy and local government.

FITZ-PATRICK, William John, F.S.A., son of the late John Fitz-Patrick, of Dublin and Griffinrath, co. Kildare, was born Aug. 31, 1830, and educated first at a Protestant school, and afterwards at the Roman Catholic College of Clongowes Wood. He is a Magistrate and Grand Juror for the counties of Longford and Dublin, is author of "The Life, Times, and Correspondence of Bishop Doyle," 2 vols., lately reprinted with many additional letters; "The Life, Times, and Contemporaries of Lord Cloncurry" (long out of print); "The Friends, Foes, and Adventures of Lady Morgan"; "Lady Morgan, her Career, Literary and Personal"; "Anecdotal Memoirs of Archbishop Whately" (2 vols. Bentley); "Lord Edward Fitzgerald, or Notes on the Cornwallis Papers"; "The Sham Squire and the Informers of 1798" (of which 16,000 copies are known to have been sold and is now out of print); "Ireland before the Union, with the unpublished Diary of Lord Chief Justice Clonmel, 1774-1798" (6 editions); "Irish Wits and Worthies, with Dr. Lanigan, his Life and Times"; "Life of Charles Lever" (Chapman & Hall), "The Life of Father Tom Burke," 1884 (Kegan Paul); "The Correspondence of Daniel O'Connell, with his Life and Times," 1888 (John Murray). This book has been made the subject of public speeches by Mr. Gladstone; and of a remarkable paper from him in the Nineteenth Century, wherein cordial praise is bestowed alike on author and tribune. In 1892 appeared "Secret Service Under Pitt," which has been described by the reviews as "an important supplement to Froude and Lecky." Mr. Fitz-Patrick has also produced several pamphlets, historical and critical. He is a member of the Royal Irish Academy, one of the executive of the Royal Dublin Society, and an Honorary Member of the Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts, Dublin. In 1876 he was elected by the Royal Hibernian Academy of Arts its Professor of History, an office formerly held by Petrie. In 1883 Mr. Fitz-Patrick was appointed by the Viceroy for the second time High Sheriff of the county of Longford. Leo XIII., when Papal Nuncio, had known Daniel O'Connell; and to mark the satisfaction with which he read Mr. Fitz-Patrick's book, he conferred upon him in 1889 the Knight Grand Cross of St. Gregory the Great.

FLAMMARION, Camille, a French astronomer, born at Montigny-le-Roi (Haute Marne), Feb. 25, 1842, received his education in the ecclesiastical seminary of Langres and in Paris, was a student in the Imperial Observatory from 1858 till 1868, when he became editor of the Cosmos, and was appointed scientific editor of the Siècle in 1865. At that period he obtained, by a series of lectures on astronomy, a certain reputation, which was subsequently increased by his giving in his adhesion to "spiritualism." In 1868 he made several balloon ascents, in order to study the condition of the atmosphere at great altitudes. M. Flammarion is the author of "La Pluralité des Mondes Habités," 1862, 15th edit. 1869; "Les Mondes Imaginaires et les Mondes Réels," 1864; "Les Merveilles Célestes," 1865; "Dieu dans la Nature," 1866; "Histoire du Ciel," 1867; "Contemplations Scientifiques," 1868; "Voyages Aériens," 1868; "L'Atmosphère," 1872; "Lumen," 1872, 40th edit. 1890; "Histoire d'un Planète," 1873; and "Les Terres du Ciel," 1876. In June, 1880, the French Academy awarded the Monthyon prize to M. Flammarion for his work, "L'Astronomie Populaire," and in 1881 he was decorated with the Legion of Honour. Among his most recent publications may be cited "Urania," 1889, and a number of maps, globes, and planispheres. He founded, in 1882, the monthly review, L'Astronomie.

FLEMING, Rev. James, B.D., Vicar of St. Michael's, Chester Square, London, and Canon of York, Chaplain to the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and the Duke of Westminster, was born at Strabane on July 26, 1830. He completed his education at Magdalen College, Cambridge. Whilst rector of All Saints, Bath, he was one of the first to popularise the once-popular entertainments known as "Penny Readings." The collections at his London church in aid of the Hospital Sunday Fund were for many years remarkably large, over 1,000*l.* having been collected on Hospital Sunday. On the second Sunday after the death of the Duke of Clarence in Jan., 1892, he preached at Sandringham, and his sermon, "Recognition in Eternity," had afterwards a very large sale. His publishers divided over 1,000*l.* of the profits therefrom accruing between the Gordon Boys' Home and the British Home for Incurables. He is editor of the Religious Review of Reviews, and has published articles on "The Art of Reading."

FLEMING, John Ambrose, M.A. (Cantab), D.Sc. (London), F.R.S., was born at Lancaster on Nov. 20, 1849, his father being the Rev. James Fleming, D.D. He received his first school education at University College School, London, which he entered at the age of fourteen, during the headmastership of Mr. T. H. Key. He was subsequently entered as a student in University College, with the object of preparing for the engineering profession, for which, during boyhood, he had shown great aptitude. After two years spent under such teachers as Professors De Morgan, Hirst, and Williamson, and a further interval filled up with private study, he graduated in 1870 as Bachelor of Science at the University of London. Circumstances then led him to take up science teaching as a pursuit, and he became a student at the Normal School of Science at South Kensington. Here, under Professors Frankland, Guthrie and others, he spent some time, and was finally appointed a Demonstrator in the Chemical Laboratories and private assistant to Dr. Frankland. During this period the late Professor Guthrie was engaged in founding the Physical Society of London, and the first paper read before this society was one on the "New Contact Theory of the Galvanic Cell," by Mr. Fleming. In 1874 he became Science Master in the Military Department of Cheltenham College, but resigned in order that he might go to Cambridge to work under Professor Clerk Maxwell. Entering St. John's College as an Exhibitioner in Science in 1877, he studied hard under Mr. W. H. Besant in mathematics, and worked in the Cavendish Physical Laboratory under Professor Clerk Maxwell. His scientific training enabled him to obtain a high position in his college, and he was elected successively: Exhibitioner in Natural Science, Hare Exhibitioner, Wright's Prizeman, Foundation Scholar of his College, and Hughes' Prizeman. During this time he carried out several investigations under the guidance of Professor Clerk Maxwell, the most important being an elaborate comparison of the British Association "Standards of Resistance." At the end of his third year at Cambridge he took the Degree of Doctor of Science in the University of London and that of Bachelor of Arts at Cambridge, this last being gained by a First-class with special distinction in the Natural Science Tripos. In 1880 he was appointed University Demonstrator in Applied Mechanics under Professor James Stuart, and assisted him in the construction and design of the Cambridge Engineering Laboratories. When University College, Nottingham, was opened, Dr. Fleming was selected out of a large number of candidates as the first occupant of the Chair of Mathematics and Physics in that institution. In 1881 electric lighting began to attract public attention, and, after a short residence at Nottingham, Dr. Fleming resigned his post there and removed to London. When the Edison Electric Lighting Company was first formed, he was appointed their electrical engineer, and in that capacity he was largely connected with the first introduction of incandescent electric lighting into England. In 1882 he was elected a Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, a Fellow of University College, London, and Member of the Institution of Electrical Engineers. Besides concerning himself with the practical work of electrical engineering, he found time to carry on much original work, and published, amongst others, papers on "Problems of Electric Flow in Networks of Conductors," "Molecular Shadows in Incandescent Lamps," and "The Use of Daniel's Cell as a Standard of Electromotive Force." In 1885 Dr. Fleming was appointed Professor of Electrical Engineering in University College, London, and whilst retaining his position as Electrical Adviser to the Edison and Swan Electric Light Company and to other Corporations, he threw himself once more into the work of teaching. Finding the accommodation at University College for such engineering education entirely inadequate, he began to set on foot a demand for increased facilities, which finally was instrumental in inducing the Council to erect the present engineering and electrical laboratories at University College. The arrangements of the part of those laboratories intended for electrical engineering were suggested and designed by Dr. Fleming, who organised and carried out, during the tenure of the Chair, a complete course of instruction in electrical engineering. In addition to this work his advice was much sought after as an expert in electrical matters; as adviser and consulting engineer he was connected with a large number of electric lighting companies and corporations. His attention was always particularly attracted to the subject of electrical measurements. In 1885 he read a paper before the Institution of Electrical Engineers urging the necessity for a National Standardizing Laboratory for Testing Electrical Instruments. This paper is freely acknowledged to have given the first impulse to a movement which ended in the establishment, at Richmond Terrace, of the Board of Trade Electrical Laboratory. As a lecturer and author Dr. Fleming has been much before the public. He has given numerous courses of lectures before the Society of Arts and Royal Institution, and has been successively Cantor and Gilchrist Lecturer. For his paper on "Electromagnetic Repulsion" he was awarded the silver medal of the Society of Arts. He has published "Short Lectures to Electrical Artizans," and "Lectures on Electrical Illumination," and his treatise on the "Alternate Current Transformer," which is a standard work, appeared in 1889. His minor publications in scientific journals form a long list. Dr. Fleming's interest in popular education has always been very great, and he may be said to have originated the movement which resulted in the establishment of Morley College, Waterloo Bridge Road, London. He was elected a F.R.S. in 1892, and served for many years on the Council of the Institution of Electrical Engineers. He has also been a Member of the Physical Society and of the Royal Institute of Great Britain. He lectured to children at the Royal Institution in the winter of 1894-95 on "The Work of an Electric Current."

FLEMING, Sandford, C.E., LL.D., C.M.G., Canadian engineer, was born at Kirkcaldy, Fifeshire, Scotland, Jan. 7, 1827. He removed to Canada in 1845, and in 1852 was employed on the engineering staff of the Northern Railway, and was afterwards one of the chief promoters of the railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The first link in this chain was formed by the Inter-Colonial Railway, undertaken by Mr. Fleming at the request of the Governments of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, in conjunction with the Imperial authorities. The 1st of July, 1876, saw the completion of this great work, an historical account of which Mr. Fleming published in the same year. While the "Inter-Colonial" was being constructed Mr. Fleming was ordered to survey and locate the line for the Pacific Railway, a task which he partly accomplished in 1872. For the next seven years he actively prosecuted that enterprise, and for his services was rewarded (1877) by being made a Companion of the Order of SS. Michael and George. In 1880, owing to some difficulty with the government of the day, he resigned his office. The same year he was elected Chancellor of Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, a position to which he has thrice been re-elected since, and which he still holds. In 1881 he represented the Canadian Institute at the International Geographical Congress at Venice, and in 1844 the Dominion at the International Prime Meridian Conference at Washington. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by St. Andrew's University in 1884, and by Columbia College and the University of N. Y. in 1887. In addition to engineering reports and contributions to periodicals and to the transactions of learned societies, he has published "England and Canada," 1884.

FLETCHER, Lazarus, F.R.S., &c., born March 3, 1854, in Salford, Lancashire, is the son of Stewart and Elizabeth Fletcher. He was educated at the Manchester Grammar School and Balliol College, Oxford, and is a Master of Arts (Oxon.). In 1871 he was elected Natural Science Scholar, Balliol College, Oxford; First Class in Mathematical Moderations, 1873; "Highly Distinguished" for the University Junior Mathematical Scholarship, 1874; First Class in Mathematical Finals, 1875; elected to the Senior University Mathematical Scholarship, and First Class in Natural Science Finals, 1876; and in the same year was appointed Junior Demonstrator, Clarendon Laboratory, Oxford, and Millard Lecturer, Trinity College, Oxford. In 1877 he was elected Fellow of University College, Oxford, and was First Class Assistant, Mineral Department, British Museum, 1878; appointed Keeper of Minerals, British Museum, and Public Examiner at Oxford, 1880; and in 1883, Public Examiner at Cambridge. In 1888 he was elected to the Fellowship of the Royal Society. He is likewise Fellow of the Geological Society; Fellow of the Chemical Society; Past President of the Mineralogical Society, and Member of the Physical Society, and is the author of various papers relative to crystals and meteorites.

FLETCHER, Alfred Ewen, Editor of the Daily Chronicle, was born at Long Sutton in 1841, and received his education at Owens College, Manchester, and Edinburgh University. He began life as a teacher, but soon began to devote himself to journalism, contributing to Chatterbox and other periodicals. In 1872 he was appointed editor of the Barrow-in-Furness Vulcan. In 1876 he became London correspondent of the Barrow Daily Times, and afterwards joined the staff of the Educational Times, and acted as sub-editor of the Pictorial World. In 1885 he became connected with the Daily Chronicle, and on the death of Mr. Boyle in 1889 succeeded to the editorship. Under his guidance the Daily Chronicle has become the leading independent Radical morning paper, to which Labour and Literature owe their somewhat tardy journalistic recognition. Mr. Fletcher has edited the "Cyclopædia of Education."

FLOQUET, Charles Thomas, a French politician, born at Saint-Jean-de-Luz, Oct. 5, 1828, studied at the Collège St. Louis. Called to the Bar in 1851, he was engaged in a great number of political cases. When Prince Pierre Bonaparte was tried at Tours for the murder of Victor Noir, M. Floquet pleaded successfully for damages on behalf of the family of the victim; and he was also successful in obtaining the acquittal of M. Cournet, who was tried at Blois in 1870 for participation in a plot against the Government. In Feb. 1871, M. Floquet was elected representative of the Seine in the National Assembly, but soon resigned his seat, the reactionary press accusing him of having relations with the Commune, and of being its agent in the provinces during the second siege, a charge which was formally contradicted by him in the Gaulois. The Government, however, arrested him at Biarritz, and he was confined at Pau until the end of June, 1871. In April of the following year he was elected to the Municipal Council, and again in 1874. In the senatorial elections of Jan. 1876, he was an unsuccessful candidate, but obtained a seat in the second chamber in Feb. After the Act of May 16, 1877, he was one of the 363 deputies who refused a vote of confidence in the ministry of M. de Broglie. Re-elected in the Oct. following, M. Floquet, who possessed great talent as an orator, took an important part in the debates of the new session. At a public meeting held in Havre in 1880, M. Floquet made an energetic speech in favour of the separation of Church and State, as also for the suppression of the Senate. In 1881 he was elected Vice-President of the Chamber. On his nomination as Prefect of the Seine in 1872, he was obliged to resign his seat, but shortly re-entered the Chamber as Member for Perpignan, having, on account of grave differences between him and the Government, sent in his resignation as Prefect. He was the principal author of the proposition for the expulsion of all the members belonging to the royal families which had reigned in France, and depriving them of all political rights. In Jan. 1883, urgency for this proposition was carried in the Chamber by a large majority, but the matter went no further at the time. On the fall of M. Ferry from power and the accession of M. Brisson, M. Floquet was chosen to succeed the latter as President of the Chamber, a post which he held for some years. At one time he was one of the editors of the Temps and the Siècle. He being supposed to have cried to the Emperor of Russia, Alexander II., when a guest of the Emperor Napoleon III., "Vive la Pologne, Monsieur;" was in the black books of Russia till 1888, when a formal reconciliation took place. In July of that year he fought a duel with General Boulanger, severely wounding him in the throat with his sword. The same day M. Floquet presided at the unveiling of a statue of Gambetta. On Feb. 11, 1889, he persuaded the Chamber to re-establish the scrutin uninominal. Three days later the Government retired on the question of "revision" of the constitution, brought forward by M. Floquet, and he and his colleagues resigned on the 14th. At the general election of Sept. 1889, he was returned for the first division of the eleventh arrondissement in Paris, beating a Boulangist opponent by a large majority. On Nov. 16, he was again elected President of the Chamber, and retained that position for the three succeeding sessions. In 1892 his name was mentioned in connection with Panama, and he was not re-elected to the Chamber in 1893.

FLOWER, Sir William Henry, K.C.B., LL.D., D.C.L., Sc.D., F.R.S., F.L.S., second son of E. F. Flower, Esq., of Stratford-on-Avon, born at that place Nov. 30, 1831, was educated for the medical profession at University College, London, and the Middlesex Hospital. He entered the army as assistant-surgeon in April, 1854, served in the Crimean war, and settling afterwards in London was appointed Assistant-Surgeon and Demonstrator of Anatomy at the Middlesex Hospital. In 1861 he was elected Conservator of the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, and in 1869 Hunterian Professor of Comparative Anatomy and Physiology, which offices he resigned in 1884 on being appointed Director of the Natural History Departments of the British Museum, now removed to the new building erected for them in the Cromwell Road, South Kensington. He was President of the section of Biology at the meeting of the British Association in Dublin, in Aug. 1878, and President of the section of Anatomy at the International Medical Congress, held in London in 1881. In 1879 he succeeded the late Marquis of Tweeddale as President of the Zoological Society of London, which office he still holds, and from 1883 to 1885 was President of the Anthropological Institute. The Royal Society awarded to him in Nov. 1882, one of its royal medals for his valuable contributions to the morphology and classification of the mammalia, and to anthropology, and he has received the honorary degrees of LL.D. from the Universities of Edinburgh and Dublin, D.C.L. from that of Durham, and Sc.D. from Cambridge. He was made a C.B. in 1887, and K.C.B. in 1892, and in 1889 was President of the British Association at the meeting held at Newcastle-on-Tyne. Sir William Flower is the author of numerous memoirs on subjects connected with anatomy and zoology in the Transactions of the Royal, Zoological, and other learned Societies; also of "An Introduction to the Osteology of the Mammalia," 3rd edit. 1885; "Diagrams of the Nerves of the Human Body," 2nd edit. 1872; "An Introduction to the Study of Mammals, Living or Extinct" (written in collaboration with Mr. Lydekker, 1891), and "The Horse, a Study in Natural History," 1892; and various Catalogues of the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, and articles on scientific subjects in the ninth edit. of the Encyclopædia Britannica. He married, in 1858, the youngest daughter of Admiral W. H. Smyth, D.C.L., F.R.S.

FOERSTER, Professor Dr. Wilhelm, Director of the Royal Observatory, and Professor at the University of Berlin, was born Dec. 16, 1832, at Grünberg, Silesia. He studied at Berlin and Bonn from 1850 to 1854; was promoted as Doctor Philosophiæ at Bonn in August, 1854; appointed as second assistant of the Royal Observatory of Berlin, Oct. 1, 1855; first assistant April 1, 1860; began to give astronomical lectures as "Privat-Docent" at the University of Berlin in the spring of the year 1857. On Oct. 31, 1863, he became Professor Extraordinarius, and April 10, 1875, Professor Ordinarius at the University of Berlin. On March 11, 1865, he was appointed as Director of the Royal Observatory. From 1869 to 1886 he was Director of the Weights and Measures Department of the German Empire, without leaving his position at the Observatory. Dr. Foerster has published his astronomical investigations in the "Berliner Astronomische Yahrbuch," and in the "Astronomische Nachrichten," besides in a separate volume "Studien zur Astronometrie." He has published a considerable number of popular and historical essays and speeches, collected in three volumes under the title of "Sammlung von Vorträgen und Abhandlungen," Berlin, 1876, 1887, and 1890.

FONVIELLE, Wilfrid de, a French aëronaut and popular writer on scientific subjects, born in Paris, July 26, 1826, was educated at Ste. Barbe, and was originally a teacher of mathematics, but first became known to the public as a journalist, and as a popular exponent of scientific knowledge. His family is from Toulouse; his grandfather was Chevalier de Fonvielle, and his great uncle was Barras, the President of the Directoir Executif of the French Republic. He was a student in Paris when the 1848 revolution broke out, and was one of the leaders of the insurrection in the Quartier Latin and of the column which caused the flight of the Duchess of Orleans and her son. M. de Fonvielle was arrested with others on June 13, 1849, but released then for want of proof. However, he was, in 1851, transported to Algiers, and afterwards banished. He subsequently resided for several years in England; but returned to Algiers in 1859, for the purpose of editing Algérie Nouvelle with his brother Arthur and Clement Duvernois, who ultimately seceded from republicanism and turned Cabinet Minister under Napoleon III. The paper was suppressed by imperial decree after a duel fought by Arthur de Fonvielle and Youssef; and Wilfrid became the scientific editor of La Liberté under Girardin. Besides advocating rational republicanism, M. de Fonvielle has devoted much of his time to science, particularly to physics, and has invented several electrical instruments, and discovered "rotary magnetic fields:" the Schallenberger measurer of energy, and others similar, are applications of this principle. During the siege of Paris, he escaped from the city in a balloon, and, proceeding to London, gave a series of lectures, in which he expatiated on the benefits of a republican form of government. Of late years he has made numerous balloon ascents, in order to carry on scientific experiments at great altitudes. His principal scientific works are "L'Homme Fossil," 1865; "Les Merveilles du Monde Invisible," 1866; "Eclairs et Tonnerres," 1867, translated into English by T. L. Phipson, under the title of "Thunder and Lightning;" and "L'Astronomie Moderne," 1868, &c. An account of the balloon ascents made by M. de Fonvielle, Mr. Glaisher, and others, appeared in French in 1870, and an English translation was published in 1871, under the title of "Travels in the Air." His more recent popular scientific books are a description of the Greely Expedition of 1885, a history of the moon, "le Pétrole," 1887; a study of modern fasting-men, 1887; "le Pôle End," 1888, and a work on celebrated ships, 1890. In addition to the above M. de Fonvielle has written several political pamphlets; his latest being "How Republics Perish:" an attack on Radicalism and Boulangism. In 1879 he published "Comment se font les Miracles en dehors de l'Eglise," a work in which he refutes, from a common-sense stand-point, the pretensions of mediums. A more recent work of his deals with hypnotism, &c. He is one of the editors of La Nature, Petit Journal, and Lumière Electrique. His younger brother, Uric, an artist, was fired at by Prince Pierre Bonaparte when the Prince murdered Uric's companion, Victor Noir. Uric de Fonvielle was the only witness for the unwilling prosecution in the celebrated process called "Drame d'Auteuil."

FORBES, Archibald, journalist, born in 1838, is a native of Morayshire, Scotland. After studying at the University of Aberdeen, he served for several years in the Royal Dragoons, and his knowledge of the practical details of military affairs stood him in good stead when, accepting a journalistic career as special correspondent for the Daily News, he accompanied the German Army from the beginning to the end of the Franco-German war. Later, in the same capacity, he witnessed the close of the Commune, visited India during the famine of 1874, saw fighting in Spain, at one time with Carlists, at another with Republicans, at a third with Alfonsists. In the capacity of representative of the Daily News, he accompanied the Prince of Wales in the tour of his Royal Highness through India in 1875–6. In the summer and autumn of 1876, he was in Servia, and was present at all the important fights of that campaign. He followed the Russo-Turkish campaign in the summer and autumn of 1877, attached to the Russian army, and was present at the crossing of the Danube, the capture of Bjela, the advance of the Cesarewitch's army towards Rustchuk, the disastrous battle of Plevna on July 3rd, the severest fighting in the Shipka Pass, and the five days' attack by the Russians on Plevna, in September, remaining continuously in the field until attacked by fever in the middle of September. In 1878 he proceeded to Cyprus as special correspondent of the Daily News. In the autumn of the same year he went to India, and in the winter accompanied the Kyber Pass force to Jellalabad, having been present at the attack on and reduction of Ali Musjid, and in several expeditions against the hill tribes, on one of which expeditions he was mentioned in the General's despatch for attending to the wounded and saving a wounded soldier's life under a close and heavy fire. From Afghanistan he proceeded to Mandalay, the Capital of King Thebau, where he had some interesting interviews with that potentate. When at Mandalay, he was summoned by telegraph to hurry to South Africa, where, after the catastrophe of Isandlwana, a British force was gathering for the invasion of Zululand. He accompanied Lord Chelmsford's army through the interior of that region, and was present at the battle of Ulundi. Starting from the camp on the evening of the battle, he rode through a trackless country 120 miles to the telegraph wire at Landsmanns Drift on the Natal front, whence he wired the tidings of the victory to Sir Garnet Wolseley, who was travelling to Port Durnford, and to Sir Bartle Frere, the Governor of the Cape, from both of whom he received warm thanks and congratulations. The curt telegram to Sir Bartle, transmitted by him to the Government at home, was read amidst acclamations by Her Majesty's Ministers in both Houses of Parliament as being the only intelligence received up to date. Afterwards Mr. Forbes lectured on his experiences to large audiences in Great Britain, America, and Australia. The severe strain of his work as a correspondent had begun to tell upon his health, and he was not able to be present during the Egyptian and Soudan campaigns. Among his works are "Drawn from Life," a military novel; "My Experiences of the War between France and Germany"; "Glimpses through the Cannon Smoke," 1880; "Soldiering and Scribbling: a Series of Sketches," 1882; "Life of Chinese Gordon," 1884; "Souvenirs of Some Continents," 1885; "Life of the Emperor William of Germany," 1889; "Havelock," 1890; "Barracks, Bivouacs, and Battles," 1891; and "The Afghan Wars," 1892.

FORBES-ROBERTSON, John, art critic and journalist, is lineally descended from the Forbeses of Tolquhon, Thanes of Formartin. He is the son of John Robertson, merchant in Aberdeen, and was born there Jan. 30, 1822. He was educated at the Grammar School and at the Marischal College and University of his native city, and became sub-editor of one of the local papers (under the late Joseph Robertson, the eminent historian and antiquary), and contributor to the "Poet's Corner" of another, while still a student, making dramatic and musical criticism his special care. Early in 1844 he came to London, the year afterwards he visited France, and subsequently the United States of America. On his return he aided materially in opening up the Salmon resources of Norway, and carried on a correspondence with the French authorities on the artificial propagation of the fish, long before any practical results of the knowledge obtained became visible in England. Mr. Forbes-Robertson has since then written much art-criticism. He was editor for several years of Art, Pictorial and Industrial, art editor of the Pictorial World, and has been on the staff of those London journals which make art a feature. For ten years he was chief art-critic on the Art Journal, and contributed reviews of Continental exhibitions to the Illustrated London News, the Magazine of Art, &c. He is the author of several brochures of special art-criticism, and in 1877 he published a large quarto volume entitled "The Great Painters of Christendom," which was favourably received both in this country and in America. He is the author also of a "Life of George Jameson, the Scottish Painter," and, in conjunction with Wm. May Phelps, of a "Life of Samuel Phelps, Player." Mr. Forbes-Robertson is well known in London and elsewhere as a successful lecturer on the History of Art. His eldest son, Johnston Forbes-Robertson, has won for himself a recognised position as a painter, and is now one of the leading actors on the London stage. He has appeared at the Lyceum in "Henry VIII.," and at the Shaftesbury as "The Profligate," and has latterly acted at the Garrick Theatre, where he has supported Mr. John Hare in important plays. He is now (Feb., 1895) playing the part of Lancelot in "King Arthur" at the Lyceum. Another son, Mr. Ian Forbes-Robertson, is also an actor of great promise.

FORD, E. Onslow, R.A., sculptor, was born in London, July 27, 1852, and as a boy had a great desire to become an artist. In 1870 he went to Antwerp and entered the School, working his way up to the Antique School, where he studied under M. Buffeau. In 1871 he went to Munich and joined the Academy, still studying painting; but shortly before leaving he gave up painting and took to sculpture. In 1874 he returned to England, where he has since resided. His principal statues are "Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B.," 1882; "The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.," 1883; "Henry Irving, Esq., as Hamlet," 1883; and "Linus," 1884. Besides these he has executed a number of busts, amongst which may be mentioned: "Sir John Brown," 1881; "Sir Charles Reid" and "Rev. John Rodgers," 1882; "The Archbishop of York," 1884; and "Lieut.-General Sir Andrew Clarke," 1886. In 1885 he exhibited a relief, "In Memoriam," and his statuette, "Folly," was purchased by the Royal Academy under the terms of the Chantry Bequest. Among his most recent works are a bronze statue of "Applause," and a statue of the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, and bronze busts of Mr. Arthur Hacker, A.R.A., and Mr. Walter Armstrong.

FORD, The Right Hon. Sir Francis Clare, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., P.C., joined the 4th Light Dragoons in 1846, and retired as Lieutenant in 1851. The following year he entered the diplomatic service, and was appointed Attaché at Naples. In 1862 he became Second Secretary, and was resident Chargé d'Affaires at Carlsruhe from October, 1862, till September, 1863, when he was transferred to Vienna, and promoted to be Secretary of Legation in Japan in June, 1865, but did not proceed thither, going instead to Buenos Ayres, where he was in charge of the Mission until October, 1866. In 1871 he proceeded to St. Petersburg as Secretary of Embassy. In 1875 he was appointed Her Majesty's Agent to attend the Commission at Halifax; was made a C.B. and a C.M.G. in January, 1878, and promoted to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, Feb. 9, 1878. He conducted the negotiations at Monte Video which resulted in a renewal of diplomatic relations with Uruguay, and was appointed Envoy to that Republic, Feb. 24, 1879. In June of the same year he proceeded to Brazil, and to Greece in 1881. In December, 1883, Sir F. Clare Ford was appointed British Commissioner in Paris for the settlement of the Newfoundland Fisheries question. Since 1884 he has been British Minister in Madrid, and in June, 1885, was made a K.C.M.G.; conducted the negotiations in Madrid which resulted in the signature of the Anglo-Spanish Commercial Convention of April 26, 1886; was made a G.C.M.G. May 29, 1886; was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the King of Spain, Dec. 8, 1887; was sworn a Privy Councillor, Aug. 10, 1888; and was made a G.C.B. April 29, 1889. In January, 1892, Sir Clare Ford was transferred as Ambassador to Constantinople, and on Nov. 11, 1893, he was appointed British Ambassador to Rome.

FORMAN, Harry Buxton, born in London, July 11, 1842, was educated at Teignmouth, and was appointed in 1860 to a Junior Clerkship in the Secretary's Department of the General Post Office, where he is now Assistant Secretary and Controller of Packet Services. He has for many years attended the Congress of the Postal Union as British Delegate, and has been frequently sent on special foreign missions connected with this department of the public service. He is the author of "Our Living Poets; an Essay in Criticism," 1871; "The Shelley Library; an Essay in Bibliography," 1886, and several Essays on Shelley, published by the Shelley Society; also editor of the Library Edition of "The Poetical Works of Percy Bysshe Shelley," 4 vols., 1876-1877, reprinted 1882; "The Prose Works of Percy Bysshe Shelley," 4 vols., 1880; an unannotated edition of Shelley's poetry, in 2 vols., 1882, reprinted 1886 and 1892; the Aldine edition, with a Memoir, 5 vols., 1892; separate editions of Shelley's tragedy, "The Cenci," 1886, and his eclogue, "Rosalind and Helen," 1888; Charles Wells's "Joseph and his Brethren," 1876; "Letters of John Keats to Fanny Brawne," 1878, reissued, 1889; the Library Edition of "The Works of John Keats in Verse and Prose," 4 vols., 1882, reissued with additions, 1889; an unannotated edition of Keats's poetry, 1884, reprinted 1885 and 1889; "Poetry and Prose by John Keats," 1890; and "Gold, a Dialogue," by John Ruskin, 1891. Mr. Forman, who has been for some time engaged upon a large edition of Byron's poetry, to be published by Mr. Murray, has been a contributor of critical articles, mainly of a serious kind, to the Fortnightly Review, the Fine Arts Quarterly Review, the Athenæum, the Contemporary Review, Macmillan's Magazine, the Gentleman's Magazine, the Manhattan, and the London Quarterly Review; and is one of the authors who assisted in the production of Mr. Lloyd Sanders's Biographical and Critical Dictionary, "Celebrities of the Century," and of Mr. Miles's ten-volume anthology, "The Poets and Poetry of the Century." His last essay is a brief character-sketch called "A Few Words about the Late Sir Arthur Blackwood, Secretary of the Post Office," 1894.

FORREST, Sir John, Premier and Treasurer of West Australia, C.M.G., F.R.G.S., F.G.S., F.L.S., Honorary Fellow of the Royal Geographical Societies of Italy, Vienna, and St. Petersburg, Knight of the Italian Crown, entered the Survey Department of Western Australia, 1865, and in 1869 commanded an exploring expedition into the interior in search of Dr. Leichhart and party. In 1870 he commanded an exploring expedition from Perth to Adelaide along the South Coast, and proved the practicability of the country for a telegraph line, which was erected in 1876. In 1874 he commanded an exploring expedition from Champion Bay on the West Coast of Australia to the overland telegraph line between Adelaide and Port Darwin without the aid of camels, with horses only, a journey of nearly 2,000 miles. For these services he received the thanks of the Governor and the Legislative Council, and was awarded the gold medal of the Royal Geographical Society of London, May 22, 1876, and was also presented by the Imperial Government with a grant in fee of 5,000 acres of land. In 1876 he was appointed Deputy Surveyor-General of Western Australia. In 1878 and 1882 he conducted the Trigonometrical Surveys of the Nickol Bay District and the Gascoyne and Lyons District in North-Western Australia. From September, 1878, to January, 1879, he acted as Commissioner of Crown Lands and Surveyor-General, with a seat in the Executive Council of the Colony. In 1880-81 he acted as Comptroller of the Imperial Establishments and Expenditure in Western Australia. He is a Justice of the Peace for the Colony. In 1882 he was made a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. In 1883 he was appointed Commissioner of Crown Lands and Surveyor-General, and in the same year, and again in 1886, proceeded to Kimberley District, North-West Australia, to report on it to the Government. He filled this post till 1890. In the December of that year he was sent to form the first Ministry under a responsible Government in Western Australia, and became its Premier and Treasurer. He had previously been a member of the Executive and Legislative Councils of the Colony. He represented Western Australia at the Colonial Conference in London, 1887. He has published "Explorations in Australia," 1876; "Notes on Western Australia," 1883, 1884, and 1885.

FORREST, Very Rev., D.D., Dean of Worcester, graduated at the University of Dublin in 1852, and took his degree of D.D. in 1877. He entered the Irish Church in 1855, and was successively Curate of Holy Trinity and Perpetual Curate of St. Andrew's, in Dublin. He was appointed vicar of St. Jude's, Kensington, in 1870, and in 1877 became a prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral. In June, 1891, he was appointed Dean of Worcester, in succession to Dr. Gott. He is an eloquent and impressive preacher.

FORSYTH, Professor Andrew Russell, M.A., F.R.S., son of John Forsyth, was born in Glasgow on June 18, 1858. He was educated at the Liverpool College under Dr. (now Canon) George Butler, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He graduated in 1881 as Senior Wrangler and First Smith's Prizeman, and was elected a Fellow of his College in the same year. He was appointed Professor of Mathematics at the new University College, Liverpool, in 1882, a post which he resigned in 1884 on his appointment as lecturer in mathematics at Trinity College, Cambridge; and he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1886. He is the author of a "Treatise on Differential Equations," and of mathematical papers (relating chiefly to differential equations, theory of functions and theory of invariantive forms) published in the Transactions of the Royal Society, and of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, and in various mathematical journals.

FORSYTH, William, Q.C., LL.D., son of the late Thomas Forsyth, Esq., of Liverpool, was born at Greenock in 1812, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1834. He was third in the first class of the classical tripos, and second Senior Optime, was Chancellor's Medallist, and Fellow of Trinity, and proceeded M.A. in 1837. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1839, went the Northern Circuit, became a Queen's Counsel in 1857, and a Bencher of the Inner Temple. He was standing counsel to the Secretary of State in Council of India, and is Commissary of the University of Cambridge. He is the author of "On the Law of Composition with Creditors," published in 1841; "Hortensius; or, the Duty and Office of an Advocate," in 1849; "On the Law relating to the Custody of Infants," in 1850; "The History of Trial by Jury," in 1852; "Napoleon at St. Helena and Sir Hudson Lowe," in 1853; "The Life of Cicero," in 1864; "Cases and Opinions in Constitutional Law," in 1869; "The Novels and Novelists of the Eighteenth Century, in illustration of the Manners and Morals of the Age," in 1871; "Hannibal in Italy; an Historical Drama," in 1872; "Essays Critical and Narrative," in 1874; "The Slavonic Provinces South of the Danube," in 1876; and has contributed to the Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviews and Blackwood's Magazine. Having been elected member for the borough of Cambridge in the Conservative interest in July, 1865, he was unseated, on petition, on the ground that the office he held of standing counsel to the Secretary of State for India was one of profit under the Crown, and disqualified him from sitting in Parliament. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the representation of Bath in Oct. 1873, but was returned to the House of Commons by the borough of Marylebone at the general election of Feb. 1874, and he continued to represent that constituency till 1880.

FORTESCUE (Earl), The Right Hon. Hugh Fortescue, the eldest son of the late Earl (who was Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland in 1839-41), was born April 4, 1818, and educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1841, whilst Viscount Ebrington, he entered Parliament as member for Plymouth, which he represented in the Liberal interest until 1852, when he successfully contested Barnstaple. In Dec. 1854, he was elected for Marylebone, for which he resigned his seat, and was called to the Upper House in his father's Barony of Fortescue, Dec. 5, 1859, and succeeded as third Earl, Sept. 14, 1861. His lordship was a Lord of the Treasury from 1846 to 1847, and Secretary of the Poor-Law Board from 1847 to 1851. In May, 1856, while visiting a military hospital with a view to the motion which he carried afterwards in 1858, in favour of sanitary reform in the army, he caught ophthalmia, which deprived him of one eye, permanently impaired the other, and so much injured his health as to compel him after a while to retire from the House of Commons. His lordship is the author of pamphlets upon "The Health of Towns," 1844; "Official Salaries," 1852; "Representative Self-government for the Metropolis," 1854; "Parliamentary Reform," 1859, and 1884; and a work on "Public Schools for the Middle Classes," 1864. He married, March 11, 1847, the eldest daughter of the late Right Hon. Col. G. Dawson Damer. She died in 1866, leaving him a large family.

FORTNUM, Charles Drury Edward, J.P., D.L., D.C.L., born March, 1820, in the then rural neighbourhood of Hornsey, Middlesex, is the only surviving son of Charles Fortnum, gentleman, and his wife, Laetitia (née Stevens). He was educated privately, by reason of his delicate health, and emigrated to Adelaide, South Australia, in 1840, where his then favourite studies of chemistry, mineralogy, and entomology were brought to bear in the discovery of two of the earliest found veins of copper ore, and in forming a considerable collection of insects, birds, and reptiles, some of which he presented to the British Museum, while others are in the Hope Collection at Oxford. He returned to England in 1845, and afterwards travelled on the continent, studying and forming his collection of works of art and antiquity, and was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in 1858. At the request of the Lords of the Council on Education, he wrote the Descriptive Catalogue of Majolica, &c., in the South Kensington Museum (published in 1873), and the Descriptive Catalogue of Bronzes in that Museum (published in 1876); and is the author of papers in Archæologia on the royal collection of gems, the diamond signet of Henrietta Maria, &c., and early Christian gems and rings. In 1887 he presented to the Queen the diamond signet engraved by order of Charles I. for his Queen, Henrietta Maria, and was honoured by a private audience. Early in 1888 he made a free gift of the larger portion of his collection of objects of classical and renaissance art to the University of Oxford. He was elected to the degree of D.C.L. at the Encænia in June, 1889. In that year he was also elected a Trustee of the British Museum. Dr. Fortnum is a Justice of the Peace and Deputy-Lieutenant for the County of Middlesex, and an Alderman of the Council of that county. In 1848 he married Fanny Matilda, daughter of Mr. Thomas Keats, of Surrey, but has no family.

FORWOOD, Arthur Bower, M.P., eldest son of the late Thomas B. Forwood, J.P., of Thornton Manor, Neston, was born June 23, 1836, at Liverpool, was educated at the High School, Liverpool College, the late Dean Howson being Principal, and is a merchant and shipowner of Liverpool, London and New York. He was Mayor of Liverpool in 1877–78, and is an Alderman of that City, the Council having unanimously refused to accept his resignation. For several years he was Chairman of the Health Committee, and the Finance, and Estate Committee, also of the Artisans' Dwellings Committee. He is President of the Liverpool Constitutional Association, and in this capacity he took an active part in the settlement of the differences amongst the Conservative party leaders that occurred in 1884. He has written papers on the Housing of the Poor, Tory Democracy, and One Member Constituencies, which were printed in the magazines of the day. Mr. Forwood was chairman of the committee under which the Bishopric of Liverpool was founded, and of the first committee that instituted the Liverpool University College. He was also the founder and Hon. Treasurer of the Royal Naval Exhibition of 1891. He is a progressive Conservative, and early adopted the phrase "Tory democracy." He contested Liverpool in 1882 against Mr. Samuel Smith, but was defeated by a small majority. At the General Election in 1885 Mr. Forwood was elected by a majority of 2,800 for the Ormskirk Division of the County of Lancaster, was returned, without opposition, after the dissolution of 1886, and re-elected in 1892 by a majority of 2,300. On Lord Salisbury's accession to power in 1886, Mr. Forwood was appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty, and in that position took an active part in promoting the many important changes effected in the Administrative departments, both at the Admiralty, and in H. M. Dockyards. This office he held until 1892.

FOSTER, Birket, born at North Shields, Northumberland, in 1825, educated at Hitchin, Herts; at the age of sixteen was placed with Mr. Landells, the wood-engraver, by whose advice, after he had practised engraving for a short time, he became a draughtsman. At the age of twenty-one he started on his own account, illustrated several children's books, and drew a great deal for the Illustrated London News. He illustrated Longfellow's "Evangeline," Beattie's "Minstrel," "Goldsmith's Poetical Works," and several other works of similar kind; and has since been employed on many of the better class of illustrated books that have issued from the press, especially a handsome volume devoted to English landscape, with descriptions from the pen of Mr. Tom Taylor, published in 1863. He then resolved to follow a different branch of art, and began water-colour painting; and in 1860 he was elected a member of the Water-Colour Society. He is the most widely known, and perhaps the most popular of English landscape artists in water-colour. A collection of "Summer Scenes" by Mr. Foster, consisting of a series of photographs from some of his choicest water-colour drawings, was published in 1867.

FOSTER, Clement Le Neve, B.A., F.R.S., D.Sc., A.R.S.M., F.G.S., was born at Camberwell on March 23, 1841, and is the second son of the late Peter Le Neve Foster, for many years secretary of the Society of Arts. At the age of 12, he was sent to the Collége Communal at Boulogne, where he studied on the Science or Modern side, and whence he proceeded to take his B.ès.Sc. degree at Amiens. In 1857 he entered the Royal School of Mines, and completed the three years course in two years, took the Duke of Cornwall Scholarship, and otherwise distinguished himself. He was next sent, on Prof. Huxley's advice, to the great mining college at Freiburg, and whilst here was appointed by Sir R. Murchison to the Geological Survey of Great Britain (1860). For three years he was engaged mapping the Wealden Beds in Kent and Sussex, and in 1864 he was transferred to Derbyshire and Yorkshire. During these years he spent his leisure in sedulous preparation for the London degrees, which he passed brilliantly, eventually becoming D.Sc. in 1865. In the May of that year he left the Survey and obtained the appointment of lecturer to the Miner's Association of Cornwall and Devon. He now spent much time in the mines, and subsequently, at the request of the Royal Cornish Polytechnic Society, visited the Continent in order to report upon the Bergström and Dœring boring machines. He resigned his Cornish appointment in 1867, and spent some time making mining explorations in the Sinai Peninsula. In 1868 he visited Venezuela, and from 1869–72 held an appointment near Monte Rosa under the Pestarena Gold Mining Co. In 1872 he was appointed an inspector under the new Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act. The field of his operations lay in Cornwall, and for long he had to contend against very great opposition on the part of the miners, who clung to their traditional haphazard methods of work, and in so doing ran great risks from badly-built shaft-walls and similar causes. He had to prosecute mine-owners and miners alike before he could get his notices attended to. "It is worthy of note," says a writer in the Mining Journal for Dec., 1889, "that the average death-rate from mine accidents in Dr. Le Neve Foster's district was reduced from two per thousand during the first three years of his Inspectorship, to 1·3 per thousand the last five." In the spring of 1880, Dr. Le Neve Foster was transferred from the Cornish to the North Wales District, where he still remains. He issues annual reports, from which it appears that he is strongly in favour of a still more stringent Act being passed for the regulation of mines not included in the Coal Mines Act. In 1867, 1878 and 1889, Dr. Le Neve Foster acted as assistant-juror to Sir Warington W. Smyth, at the Paris Exhibition, for which he received the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, and in Dec., 1890, he was appointed Professor of Mining at the Royal School of Mines, London, as successor to that gentleman. In 1892 he was elected F.R.S., and appointed one of the Royal Commissioners of the Chicago Exhibition, where he subsequently served as a judge in mining. He has been a frequent contributor to scientific periodical literature, has translated (with Mr. Galloway) Callon's "Lectures on Mining," and is the author of "Ore and Stone Mining." He married, in 1872, Sophia, second daughter of the late Arthur F. Tompson, of Belton, Suffolk, and has a son and two daughters.

FOSTER, Professor George Carey, F.R.S., born 20th October, 1835, at Sabden, Lancashire; is the only son of George Foster, of Sabden, a Justice of the Peace for the County of Lancaster, and West Riding of Yorkshire. He was educated at private schools, and at University College, London, and graduated as B.A. of the University of London in 1855; afterwards, from 1859-1861, he studied chemistry at Ghent, Paris and Heidelberg, under Kekulé, Wurtz, and Bunsen. He was appointed in 1862 Professor of Natural Philosophy in Anderson's College (then called Anderson's University), Glasgow. In 1865, on the resignation by Professor Potter of the Chair of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy in University College, London, which he had held with two years interval since 1840, Mr. Foster was appointed to succeed him as Professor of Physics, which appointment he still holds. He has contributed to the great "Dictionary of Chemistry and the Allied Branches of other Sciences," edited by the late Henry Watts, many articles on points of general chemical theory as well as on some parts of Physics, those on "Heat" and on "Thermodynamics" being among the most considerable of his writings. Since his appointment at University College, his thought and attention have been chiefly devoted to the teaching of Physics. The Physical Laboratory of University College, opened at his instigation in 1867, was the first in London in which practical instruction in Physics was offered to students. He has devised some useful new methods, or modifications of methods of physical measurement, some of which, especially a method of comparing electrical resistances, has been frequently adopted. He was elected a Fellow of the Chemical Society in 1856, Fellow of University College, London, 1867, Fellow of the Royal Society, 1869, and has three times served on the Council. He was President of the Physical Society of London, 1877–79, President of the Mathematical and Physical Section of the British Association, 1877 (Plymouth Meeting), President of the Society of Telegraph Engineers (now Institute of Electrical Engineers), 1881, and was appointed, on the nomination of the Convocation of the University, a Member of the Senate of the University of London, 1885, and elected (without ballot) a member of the Athenæum Club, 1888.

FOSTER, Joseph, antiquary, was born in Sunderland, co. Durham, March 9, 1844 (son of another of the same names, a woollen-draper of that town, and an elder brother of Birket Foster), and is a cadet of a family belonging to the Quaker-ocracy of the north since the early days of its founder, George Fox, and originally seated at Cold Hesledon and Hawthorne, on the east coast of the Palatinate. Mr. Joseph Foster, who was educated in private schools in North Shields, Sunderland, and Newcastle-upon-Tyne, inherited his genealogical faculty from his grandfather, Myles Birket Foster, and completed, as early as his eighteenth year, his first genealogical brochure, entitled "The Pedigree of the Fosters of Cold Heseldon in the county palatine of Durham" (see also "Virtue's Art Annual," 1890). Henceforth his life was spent among books, and all his leisure was devoted to increasing and arranging his genealogical collections. Having issued a larger edition of his family narrative, he was accidentally led, by the omission of the pedigrees from the 1870 edition of "Baines' History of Lancashire" (Routledge), to commence his series of Pedigrees of county families with those of that county (see "Herald and Genealogist," viii. 55, 169), and this volume was followed by three others for Yorkshire, which Mr. John Gough Nichols described as "marvels of elaborate and of accurate work" ("Herald and Genealogist," viii. 501). Mr. Foster, following Sir William Dugdale, transcribed the admission register of the four Inns of Court, a herculean task extending over several years; that of Lincoln's Inn is probably the oldest perfect register extant; it commences 1 Hen. VI., 1422. He has a list of calls to the Bar culled from these legal registers. Later on a copy of Col. Chester's transcript of the Oxford Matriculation register, together with his collection of "Marriage Licences," appeared in the auction room, when Mr. Foster determined to possess them for publication. This he accomplished, and though he relinquished the "Marriage Licences," he had the satisfaction of editing them for Mr. Quaritch (see "Genealogist," 1887, p. 169). The acquisition of the register of our oldest University, coupled with those of the Inns of Court, with which they dovetail, illustrating and annotating each other, materially strengthened Mr. Foster's already unique position, but still, before he could hope to grapple effectually with so arduous a task as the annotation of the earlier "Alumni Oxonienses," it was necessary that all the bishop's certificates of institutions to livings (since the Reformation), now deposited in the Public Record Office, should be laid under contribution, with the result that we shall some day have these 150,000 institutions, &c., alphabetically arranged as a Clergy List. His best known critical work was undoubtedly "Chaos," under which category he classed, for the first time, all known "soi-disant baronets." "Chaos" formed a minor portion of the "Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage," compiled and edited by Mr. Foster, 1880-84, and elaborately illustrated by Fr. Anselm and Forbes Nixon. This industrious worker has also issued at his own expense the majority of the Herald's Visitations of the North, viz., Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmorland, Durham and Yorkshire, and also of Middlesex in the South, whilst he has also published "Men at the Bar;" "Scottish Members of Parliament," 1357-1882; "Gray's Inn Admission Register," 1521-1889; "Our Noble and Gentle Families of Royal Descent," and several minor family histories, e.g., those of Fox, Harris, Wilson, Pease, and Pennington." His elder son, Mr. Sandys Birket Foster, has edited a second edition of the Wilson family history, 1890. One of his last works is entitled "Oxford Men and their Colleges," 1893.

FOSTER, Professor, Sir (Balthazar) Walter, M.D., D.C.L., J.P., son of the late B. Foster of Drogheda and of Marian Green of Cambridge, was born near Cambridge in 1840. He was educated at the Grammar School, Drogheda, and received his medical education at the Royal College of Surgeons, Dublin, at which school he was made Pro-sector of Anatomy in 1859. He became a Licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons, and of the King and Queen's College of Physicians in 1860, and in the same year was appointed Professor of Practical Anatomy in Queen's College, Birmingham. In 1864, while in Germany, he received the degree of M.D. at Erlangen, and was elected a Fellow of the College of Physicians, London, in 1872, and received the D.C.L. (Hon.) of Durham University in 1893. From 1860 to 1868, he was one of the Physicians to the Queen's Hospital, Birmingham, and in the latter year was elected Physician to the General Hospital. In 1864 he left Queen's College, and became Professor in Materia Medica in Sydenham College, but on the amalgamation of the two Colleges in 1868, he was appointed Professor of Medicine in the Queen's College, and in 1891 was appointed Emeritus Professor on resigning the chair. Sir Walter Foster is the author of many contributions to Medical and Sanitary science, of which the chief are:—"The Use of the Sphygmograph," 1866; "Method and Medicine," 1870; "Clinical Medicine," 1874; "How we Die in large Towns," 1875; "Political Powerlessness of the Medical Profession," 1883; "The Public Aspects of Medicine," 1890. He is also the author of the articles on "Diseases of the Heart" in Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine." For many years Sir Walter Foster took an active part in the politics of his profession in connection with the British Medical Association. He has served on the Council of that body since 1874, and in 1884 he was elected President of the Council, which had previously to a great extent through him been given a representative constitution. As early as 1866, Sir Walter Foster had taken a share of public work in Birmingham, in connection with the late J. S. Wright, M.P., for the purpose of reforming the Grammar School, but did not enter the Town Council until 1883. He became a J.P. for Warwickshire in 1885, and in the same year successfully contested the City of Chester. He stood as an advanced Liberal, advocating Home Rule for Ireland. In Parliament, while sitting for Chester, he had charge of the Allotments and Small Holdings Bill, and took an active part in the passage of the Medical Act Amendment Bill, obtaining increased representation for the profession on the Medical Council, and other modifications. During the Home Rule crisis, Sir Walter Foster took an energetic part in favour of the Irish policy of the Government, and became Chairman of the Committee of the National Liberal Federation. On the dissolution in 1886, Sir Walter Foster again contested Chester, but was beaten by a small majority. When Mr. Gladstone retired from office in 1886, he recommended Sir Walter Foster for the honour of Knighthood, on account of his professional position, his political principles and service, and for his work in the town of Birmingham. At the first election of medical men to represent the profession in the Medical Council of Education, held in November, 1886, Sir Walter Foster was returned by a large majority; and in March, 1877, he was again returned to Parliament to fill a vacancy in the Ilkeston Division of Derbyshire. Since 1885, Sir Walter Foster has been chairman (now President) of the Allotments and Small Holdings Association, and has been a constant advocate, both in the House and in the country, of measures calculated to promote the social elevation of agricultural labourers. He has also, as Chairman of the National Liberal Federation, taken an active part in the organization of the Liberal party throughout the country, and in constructing the Liberal programme. He was the host of Mr. Gladstone when he visited Birmingham for the Federation meeting in 1888. In addition to his public work, Sir Walter Foster continues in active practice as a consulting physician. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's fourth Administration in August, 1892, Sir Walter Foster was selected for the post of Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board. This was the first instance in which a medical man had attained ministerial rank, and the event was celebrated by the medical profession at a great banquet at the Hotel Métropole in November, 1892, when the special advantages of a medical minister in connection with the Department of Public Health were duly emphasized. Sir Walter Foster's special services as a Minister have been in connection with the cholera in 1892 and 1893, and with the Local Government Bill (Parish Councils) of 1893. Sir Walter Foster married, in 1864, the second daughter of the late William Lucas Sargant.

FOSTER, Vere Henry Louis, was born at Copenhagen in 1819, his father, Sir Augustus Foster, Bart., being at that time British Minister in Denmark. He was educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, and was afterwards attached for some years to the diplomatic missions of Sir Henry Ellis at Rio de Janiero, and of Sir William Ouseley at Monte Video. On his return from South America in 1847, he paid a visit to Ireland in the company of his eldest brother, Sir Frederick Foster. The famine consequent upon the failure of the potato crop was raging at the time, and the two brothers set to work at once to relieve the starving poor. Mr. Foster himself made three voyages to America as a steerage passenger in emigrant ships, and was so impressed by the badness of the accommodation, that he attracted the attention of Parliament to the matter, and soon had the satisfaction of seeing the emigration laws in force, which rendered the miseries he had witnessed and endured thenceforth impossible in a British emigrant vessel. The outbreak of the civil war in America (1861) checked for a time the stream of emigration, and Mr. Foster turned his attention to the improvement of education in Ireland—by the substitution of boarded floors for damp earthen floors in upwards of a thousand National schools, and by grants in aid of building several hundred new school-houses. On the recurrence of exceptional distress in Ireland in the year 1879, Mr. Foster resumed his scheme of assisted female emigration to the United States and the British Colonies, with the co-operation of the clergy of every denomination in the West of Ireland. The number of young women thus assisted during the last forty-two years, partly by means of subscriptions, but chiefly at Mr. Foster's own cost, has been nearly 23,000.

FOWLER, The Right Hon. Henry Hartley, M.P., P.C., son of the Rev. Joseph Fowler, Wesleyan minister, Secretary of the Wesleyan Conference, 1848, was born at Sunderland in 1830, educated at Woodhouse Grove School, and St. Saviour's School, Southwark. He was Mayor of Wolverhampton in 1863, and first chairman of the Wolverhampton School Board. From 1880 to 1885 he sat as a Liberal for the undivided Borough of Wolverhampton, and after the Redistribution Act was returned for the East Division. In Dec., 1884, he was appointed Under-Secretary for the Home Department, and in Mr. Gladstone's ministry of 1886, he held the post of Financial Secretary to the Treasury. He was a member of the Royal Commission to inquire into the Civil Service, of the Labour Commission, and of the Tithe Commission. He was created a Privy Councillor in June, 1886, and was appointed President of the Local Government Board, with a seat in the Cabinet, in 1892. He had charge of the Parish Councils Bill in Parliament. When the Cabinet was partially reconstructed in March, 1894, he became Secretary of State for India. He married, in 1857, Ellen, the youngest daughter of the late G. B. Thornycroft, Esq., of Wolverhampton and Hadley Park, Salop.

FOWLER, Sir John, Bart., LL.D., K.C.M.G., civil engineer, is the eldest son of the late Mr. Fowler, of Wadsley Hall, in the parish of Ecclesfield, Sheffield, and was born in 1817. After completing his school course, he became a pupil of Mr. J. Towlerton Leather, the eminent hydraulic engineer, and obtained his first practical knowledge under the guidance of that gentleman in the construction of the Sheffield waterworks. On the completion of his professional education he became an assistant to Mr. Rastrick in the construction of several lines of railway then in progress, and amongst others the London and Brighton Railway. He was then appointed resident engineer of the Stockton and Hartlepool Railway, and of other lines in the same district. At the age of twenty-seven he was selected as engineer for constructing the large group of railways known as the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire line, which includes tunnels, viaducts, and bridges of considerable magnitude, in addition to a dock, a floating pier, large hydraulic works, and a steam ferry, of all which large and multifarious work he had the sole engineering charge. From this time the name of John Fowler was established in the first rank of practical engineers, and he became, after settling in London, continuously employed at home and abroad in the laying out and construction of railways, docks, and other large works requiring a high class of engineering ability; and, in 1866, he was elected President of the Institution of Civil Engineers. Amongst the principal works executed by Sir John Fowler are to be found the original "underground" or Metropolitan Railway, the District Railway, the St. John's Wood Railway, the Victoria Station and Pimlico Railway, on which the first railway bridge was built over the river Thames in London; the Edgware, Highgate, and London Railway; the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railways; the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway; the Severn Valley Railway; the Mid-Kent Railways; the London, Tilbury and Southend Railway; the Great Northern and Western of Ireland system of Railways; the Much Wenlock Railway, and its extension east and west; the Great Eastern Railway Extension in Cambridgeshire and Essex; the Isle of Wight Railway; the Launceston and South Devon Railway; the Moreton Hampstead Railway; the Weymouth and Portland Railway; the Wellington and Cheshire Railway; the Millwall Docks; and works for the improvement of rivers and estuaries, and the reclamation of lands from the sea. Sir John Fowler is consulting engineer to the Great Western, the Great Northern, the Brighton and Highland Railways, and other companies, and until the recent change of government in Egypt, and the suspension of all further present expenditure on works, he acted in a similar capacity with respect to the important Government works in that country. In 1870 he took part in a Commission sent to Norway by the Indian Government to examine the railways there. He has completed the great bridge across the Firth of Forth, the best known of all the works with which Sir John Fowler has been associated, and one which a few years ago greatly engaged the attention both of the general public and of engineering experts in all parts of the world. On its completion, Sir John was created a Baronet of the United Kingdom. In 1885 he was made a Knight Commander of the Order of SS. Michael and George, in recognition of important services rendered in connection with the Soudan campaign. Sir John Fowler married, in 1850, Elizabeth, daughter of the late James Broadbent, Esq., of Manchester.

FOWLER, The Rev. Thomas, D.D., LL.D., F.S.A., was born at Burton-Stather, Lincolnshire, Sept. 1, 1832, and educated at King William's College, Isle of Man, and at Merton College, Oxford, where he graduated as a double-first classman in 1854. He was elected to a fellowship at Lincoln College in 1855, and appointed to a tutorship in the same year. He was Junior Proctor of the University in 1862-3, Select Preacher in 1872-4, Professor of Logic from 1873-9, and has frequently acted as Public Examiner in the Schools of Literæ Humaniores. Dr. Fowler is now a member of the Hebdomadal Council, to which he was first elected in 1869, and of the Visitatorial Board, as also a Delegate of the Press, of the Museum, and of the Common University Fund, and is President of Corpus Christi College, to which he was elected Dec. 23, 1881. He has resided in the University continuously since the age of seventeen, and has taken a prominent part in several University movements, specially those connected with the removal of religious disabilities and the organisation of academical studies. In 1882 he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Edinburgh. He is the author of the "Elements of Deductive Logic," 1867 (9th ed. 1887); the "Elements of Inductive Logic," 1870 (6th ed. 1892); both which works were published by the Clarendon Press, which has also published an elaborate edition of Bacon's "Novum Organum," by Dr. Fowler, with an Introduction and notes, 1878 (2nd ed. 1889), as well as an edition by him of Locke's "Conduct of the Understanding," 1881 (3rd ed. 1890). In addition to these works, Dr. Fowler is the author of "Locke" in the series of "English Men of Letters," and of "Bacon," and "Shaftesbury and Hutcheson," in the series of "English Philosophers." Besides the last-named work, he has written also the following ethical treatises: "Progressive Morality: an Essay in Ethics," 1884; "The Principles of Morals" (introductory chapters), 1886; "The Principles of Morals" (Part II., being the body of the work), 1887. Part I. of the last-mentioned work was written in conjunction with his predecessor in the Presidentship of Corpus, Professor J. M. Wilson; Part II., though it also contains some contributions by Professor Wilson, was mainly written by Dr. Fowler, and has been published under his name only, as he is solely responsible for it in its final form. Dr. Fowler's most recent work is a "History of Corpus Christi College," published by the Oxford Historical Society in 1893, containing many curious illustrations of academical, social, and ecclesiastical history during the 16th, 17th, 18th, and early part of the 19th centuries. He has also contributed articles to the Saturday Review, during its earlier period, the Spectator, the Academy, Mind, Macmillan's Magazine, the Fortnightly Review, the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and the "Dictionary of National Biography." In politics he is a Liberal Unionist, and his theological convictions are those of a Broad Churchman.

FRANÇAIS, François Louis, a French artist, was born at Plombières, in the Vosges, Nov. 17, 1814, and is the grandson of a priest, who, being a conscientious man, and feeling unfitted for the calling, gave up the clerical profession and became a tutor, and, as such, accompanied a young Englishman to India. After four years absence he came back to France, and found his little patrimony squandered by inconsiderate relatives. He entered the service of the Princess de Lamballe as reader, and subsequently a small office was made for him. The battle of life was continued by his son, the father of three children, whom, however, he was able to educate as their grandfather had been educated. A kind-hearted watchmaker, seeing that the elder boy had a talent for drawing, tried to give him some instruction in the art, but in the end it was decided that François Louis should go to Paris, first of all to earn his living, then, if possible, to pursue his studies in art. He obtained a situation with a publisher named Paulin, where he was boarded and lodged, and, in addition, he received a small salary. His master, Paulin, thinking to promote his interests, introduced him to Thibaudau, son of the Conventionnel, who owned and personally managed some glass-works at Choisy-le-Roy. Français went there to paint on glass, and, by force of many privations, he saved in two years five hundred francs. Unfortunately, he put his money into the concern, and the latter failing, he lost it all. Shipwrecked and thrown penniless on the world, he doubtless thought it a piece of good fortune to be engaged as clerk by M. Boloz, who had just founded the Revue des Deux Mondes, and he threw himself with such zeal into his work that M. Boloz promised to give him two thousand francs a year and to promote his interests. But, like many other clever men of business, the publisher of the Revue des Deux Mondes was mistaken in supposing that the energy which Français displayed originated in the hope of making a good position in the world. When, therefore, his new clerk replied that his one desire was to be a painter, M. Boloz determined to discharge so singular a person, and fill his place with a man of the ordinary way of thinking. Français' energetic mind seized another opening which promised support while he rose to higher things. He entered the studio of M. Gigoux to learn the art of drawing on wood and of lithography. Here he worked for the Magasin Pittoresque and the Musée des Familles. Français became an able draughtsman on wood, and with Tony Johannot, Meissonier, Charles Jaque, &c., was associated in the illustration of a magnificent edition of "Paul and Virginia." He also made vignettes for several other works, his illustrations being always distinguished for sincerity and a certain masterly simplicity of effect and drawing. His ability as a book and magazine illustrator brought Français into association with all the eminent painters of the epoch. In 1837, after many hesitations, Français ventured, in association with his friend Baron, to send a picture to the Salon, entitled, "A Song under the Willows." It was a landscape, with figures in Lombard costume of 1550. In 1841 he exhibited a picture called "An Antique Garden," and obtained a medal. Henceforth he regularly exhibited his landscapes. In 1846 he exhibited the "Grand Jet de St. Cloud," painted in association with Meissonier. "If," said Français at this time, "I remain in Paris, I shall perhaps be lost. I shall let myself be drawn into dissipation, and my style will not improve. Let me go to Italy, the source of art, and try to fathom the methods of the old masters, and give myself up to study without distraction." He accordingly divided all he possessed into two portions, sent one half to his family, and reserved the other half for the expenses of his travels. He remained three years in Italy, making endless studies and sketches. In 1848 he sent two pictures to the Salon, and received the Gold Medal. After his return the effect of his sojourn in Italy was apparent, and in 1853 his picture called "The End of the Winter," a view taken at Montoire, was bought for the Luxembourg; and again, in 1855, his picture, "A Path through the Corn," was bought by the State, and he received at the Salon a medal of the first class. In 1857 he painted the picture which in his own opinion is the very best of his works, "A Fine Winter's Day;" and in 1861, "The View taken at Bas Meudon." In 1867, on the occasion of the Exposition Universelle, he exhibited several pictures, and was awarded for the second time the first medal, and made an officer of the Legion of Honour. Since that year he has painted and exhibited constantly. We may cite, among his later works, two views of Plombières, 1887; two views of the neighbourhood of Clisson, 1888; two new views of Plombières, 1889; a misty morning near Paris, 1890; and "Source le Soir," 1891. He was elected a member of the Academy of Fine Arts in July, 1890.

FRANCE, President of the Republic of. See FAURE, F. FELIX.

FRANCIS FERDINAND of AUSTRIA (Archduke), heir to the Austrian throne, is the son of the Archduke Charles Louis by his second wife, the Princess Maria Annonciata, daughter of Ferdinand II., King of the Two Sicilies, and was born at Gratz in 1863. A few years ago he inherited the large fortune of his relative, the Grand Duke of Modena, and in so doing took the name of Este. On the suicide of the Emperor's son, the Crown Prince Rudolph, on Jan. 28, 1889, the Emperor's brother, the Archduke Charles Louis, became heir to the throne; but he renounced his rights of succession in favour of his son, the Archduke Francis Ferdinand; and he, on becoming heir to the throne, renounced his fortune and name of Este to his brother, the Archduke Otho, who was born in 1865, and who married, in 1886, Maria Josepha, daughter of Prince George of Saxony. In December, 1892, he began a journey round the world, and was warmly received in India. He is of retiring habits, and has never been prominent in society.

FRANCIS-JOSEPH I. (Francis-Joseph-Charles), Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary and Bohemia, &c., was born Aug. 18, 1830, and ascended the throne of Austria, Dec. 2, 1849, on the abdication of his uncle, Ferdinand I. He is the eldest son of the late Archduke Francis-Charles (who stood next to the late Emperor in the legal order of succession, and who died March 8, 1878) and of the Princess Sophia. On ascending the throne he found the empire shaken by internal dissensions; and his first step was to promise a free and constitutional government to the country. The course of events compelled him to close the National Assembly, and to assume absolute power. At the same time he abrogated the Constitution of Hungary, the people being in rebellion against him, and only brought to subjection by the armed intervention of Russia, while he owed his hold on Italy to the skill of his veteran General Radetsky. Having at last obtained internal peace and freedom for governmental and legislative action, he promulgated the edict of Schönbrunn, Sept. 26, 1851, in which he declared the Government "responsible to no political authority other than the throne." Assisted by Prince Schwarzenberg, and after his death by Count Buol and Baron Bach, he centralised the government of his heterogeneous nationalities at Vienna, and, aided by Herr von Brück, inaugurated a series of fiscal and commercial reforms favourable to the interests of the middle classes. In 1853-4 the Emperor endeavoured, though in vain, to induce the Czar Nicholas to abandon his ambitious designs against Turkey, and further excited that autocrat's displeasure by refusing to assist Russia against the Western Powers, whose rulers also felt aggrieved because he resolved to remain neutral, and not to throw the weight of his name into their scale. The policy of Austria on this occasion will, however, be more fairly estimated by posterity. Her unwillingness to make common cause with the Western Powers has been severely punished, for had she joined the alliance against Russia in 1854, in all probability Louis Napoleon would not have crossed the Alps and dictated the peace of Villafranca. It is, therefore, more than probable that her reluctance to act against Russia in that war was the cause of her losing Lombardy three years later. The Emperor Francis-Joseph is tall and handsome. At Solferino he gave proof of bravery amounting almost to rashness. The Reichsrath was enlarged by imperial patent March 5, 1860, and the Emperor sanctioned the principle of the responsibility of ministers May 1, 1862. The Convention of Gastein, signed Aug. 14, 1865, which transferred the government of Schleswig to Prussia, and that of Holstein to Austria, was a few days afterwards confirmed by the Emperor and the King of Prussia at Salzburg. The Emperor issued an important manifesto to his people, Sept. 20, in which he expressed very conciliatory intentions towards the people of Hungary and Croatia. In March, 1866, the armaments against Prussia began, and councils of war were established in the circles of Prague, Pisek, Tabor, and Pilsen. An imperial order was issued May 6, placing the whole army on a war footing, and concentrating the Army of the North on the frontiers of Bohemia and Silesia. The Emperor published a manifesto relating to the impending contest, June 17, the Prussian minister having received his passports, June 12. The Emperor showed much devotion in the struggle which ensued, and the fortunes of war having been adverse, at once made peace and applied his energies to the difficult task of reconstructing the empire. In this work he was powerfully aided by Count Beust, the late Prime Minister of Saxony, whom he summoned to his councils in Oct., 1866, and who remained in office as his principal minister until Nov., 1870, when he resigned, and was succeeded by Count Andrassy. One of the principal results of the policy pursued by Count Beust was the coronation of the Emperor in Pesth, as King of Hungary, June 8, 1867. In 1878 the Congress of Berlin sanctioned the occupation by Austria of the provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which had formerly belonged to Turkey. In April, 1854, he married the Princess Elizabeth Amalie Eugénie, daughter of the Duke Maximilian-Joseph, and cousin on her mother's side, to the King of Bavaria, a lady who of recent years has often visited England and Ireland for hunting. In 1857 the Emperor and Empress paid a visit to their Italian and Hungarian dominions, and granted an amnesty to political offenders. In July, 1890, their daughter, the Archduchess Valérie, was married to the Archduke Francis Salvator. The Emperor's only son, the Crown Prince Rudolph, having committed suicide on Jan. 28, 1889, the Emperor's brother, the Archduke Charles Louis, became heir, but he relinquished his rights of succession in favour of his son, the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, who therefore is Heir Apparent.

FRANKLAND, Edward, M.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Ph.D., F.R.S., J.P., born at Churchtown, near Lancaster, Jan. 18, 1825, received his education at the Grammar School, Lancaster, the Museum of Practical Geology, London, and the Universities of Marburg and Giessen. He was appointed Professor of Chemistry in Owens College, Manchester, in 1851; in St. Bartholomew's Hospital in 1857; in the Royal Institution of Great Britain in 1863; in the Royal College of Chemistry (Royal School of Mines), in 1865; and in the Normal School of Science, South Kensington Museum, in 1881. He resigned this Professorship in 1885. Dr. Frankland was elected in 1853 a Fellow of the Royal Society; in 1866 a corresponding Member of the French Academy of Sciences; in 1869 a Foreign Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences in Bavaria, and subsequently of the Academies of Sciences of Berlin, St. Petersburg, Upsala, America, and Bohemia. In 1884 he was made corresponding Member of the Vienna Academy of Sciences. He was nominated one of Her Majesty's Commissioners for inquiring into the pollution of rivers in 1868, elected President of the Chemical Society in 1871, and President of the Institute of Chemistry in 1877. He received the honorary degree of LL.D. of Edinburgh in 1884. He is also Honorary Fellow of the Royal Medico-Chirurgical Society of London. He is the author of "Researches on the Isolation of the Radicals of Organic Compounds, and other Researches in Organic Chemistry," for which he received, in 1857, a gold medal from the Royal Society; also of "Researches on the Manufacture and Purification of Coal-Gas," on the "Influence of Atmospheric Pressure on the Light of Gas, Candle, and other Flames," on "Winter Sanitariums in the Alps and elsewhere," on "The Purification of Town Drainage and other Polluting Liquids," and on the "Composition and Qualities of Water used for Drinking and other Purposes." He is also the joint author, with Mr. J. Norman Lockyer, of "Researches connected with the Atmosphere of the Sun." In Feb., 1882, he delivered a Friday evening discourse "On Climate in Town and Country," at the Royal Institution of Great Britain, in which he suggested means for artificially producing a genial out-door climate in England. In 1883, and again in 1889, he published in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, "The Chemistry of Electrical Storage Batteries;" and in 1885, in the Journal of the Chemical Society, "On Chemical Changes in their relation to Micro-Organisms." For a period of twenty-five years he has made monthly analyses of the water supplied to London by the various water companies, and has reported thereon to the Local Government Board and the Registrar-General. A check has thus been brought to bear upon the operations of the London water companies, beneficial alike to the companies and the public, the result being that the purity of the water has very materially improved. In 1887 he reported to the International Congress of Hygiene at Vienna on the present state, in England, of the purification of sewage, with special reference to the prevention of river pollution. In the same year he was appointed a Justice of the Peace for the county of Surrey, and, in 1889, for the county of London. His various investigations have been collected in one volume, entitled "Researches in Pure, Applied, and Physical Chemistry." He has published also "Lecture Notes for Chemical Students," 2 vols., and "Water Analysis for Sanitary Purposes," 2nd edition, 1890.

FRANKLAND, Professor Percy Faraday, Ph.D., B.Sc. (Lond.), A.R.S.M., F.R.S., F.J.C., F.C.S., is the second son of Dr. Edward Frankland, F.R.S., by his first wife, Sophie Fick, a lady whose three brothers were German professors of note. He was born at South Hampstead, on Oct. 3, 1858, and his second name was given to him with the consent of the late Michael Faraday. In 1869 he entered University College School, whence he proceeded in 1875 to the Royal School of Mines, South Kensington, now known as the Royal College of Science. Here he obtained, on leaving the school in 1878, the Associateship of the Royal School of Mines (A.R.S.M.), gaining in addition the Forbes Medal and Prize. In 1877 he became an undergraduate of the London University, standing fifth in the Honours' Division at the Matriculation Examination. In 1878 he obtained the Brackenbury Entrance Scholarship at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, but on abandoning his intention of joining the medical profession, he subsequently relinquished it, and went to study chemistry at the University of Würzburg, where he took the degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Ph.D.) with the highest honours in 1880, whilst in the following year he graduated as B.Sc. at the London University. In the year 1880 he was appointed Demonstrator of Chemistry at the Royal School of Mines, subsequently becoming Lecturer and Senior Demonstrator of Chemistry in that school. In 1889 he was appointed Professor of Chemistry in University College, Dundee, which has since become an integral part of the University of St. Andrews, and he has on two occasions been elected a member of the University Court of this University. Professor Frankland is the author of more than sixty papers, which have been published chiefly in the "Philosophical Transactions" and in the "Proceedings of the Royal Society," and the "Journal of the Chemical Society," and has principally identified himself with the chemical and hygienic applications of bacteriology. He was the first to demonstrate in this country, in the year 1885, the value of sand filtration in the purification of water, the results of his investigations being embodied in a paper entitled "Water Purification; its Biological and Chemical Basis," which was published by the Institution of Civil Engineers. At the request of the Local Government Board he furnished monthly reports on the microbial condition of the London water supply, before and after treatment by the companies. He has devoted a large amount of attention to the subject of fermentation and the chemical changes effected by micro-organisms. Some of his more important work in this direction has had reference to nitrification and denitrification, as well as to the preparation of optically active substances by means of bacterial life. He is a well known public lecturer. Amongst the discourses which he has given may be mentioned one entitled "Micro-organisms in their relation to Chemical Change," delivered at the Royal Institution. Some of his lectures connected with the subject of micro-organisms are brought together in a small volume, "Our Secret Friends and Foes," published by the S.P.C.K. in their "Romance of Science" Series. "Micro-organisms in Water" is the title of a large work published in 1894, in conjunction with Mrs. Percy Frankland, by Messrs. Longmans. In 1892 he delivered a course of Cantor Lectures at the Society of Arts on "Recent Contributions to the Chemistry and Bacteriology of the Fermentation Industries." He is also the author of the articles "Fermentation and Water," which appeared in Professor Thorpe's Dictionary of Technical Chemistry. He has contributed various articles to the Nineteenth Century, National Review, Nature, and similar papers. In 1891 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and he is also a Fellow and late member of Council of the Chemical Society, a Fellow and late member of Council of the Institute of Chemistry, Honorary Member of the North of England Institute of Brewing, and a member of the Society of Chemical Industry. In 1891 he was requested by a special committee of the Royal Society to conduct, in conjunction with Professor Marshall Ward, an extensive experimental investigation on the behaviour of pathogenic bacteria in potable waters. These researches are still in progress, two reports on the work having already been published by the Royal Society. In Sept. 1894, he was appointed to succeed Professor Tilden in the Chair of Chemistry at Mason College. Professor Percy Frankland married in 1882, Grace Coleridge, youngest daughter of the late Joseph Toynbee, F.R.S., the aurist, and sister of the late Arnold Toynbee, the philanthropist and author of the "Industrial Revolution." Since her marriage, Mrs. Frankland has largely identified herself with her husband's scientific work, and is joint author with him of papers of which several have appeared in the Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society.

FRANKS, Augustus Wollaston, C.B., F.R.S., F.S.A., born in 1826, was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1849, and proceeded to M.A. in 1852. He is the author of a work on "Ornamental Glazing Quarries," of a treatise on "Vitreous Art in the Art Treasures of the Manchester Exhibition," and editor of Kemble's "Horae Ferales." He has contributed to the Transactions of various archæological societies, was elected Director of the Society of Antiquaries in 1858, and is keeper of the department of British and Mediæval Antiquities and Ethnography in the British Museum. Mr. Franks, who is one of the greatest living authorities on many departments of art, especially the arts of the Renaissance, and Oriental Ceramics, has behaved with extraordinary generosity in presenting his magnificent collection of Chinese and Japanese porcelain and pottery, as well as many noble examples of Italian majolica and other wares, to the nation. For some years his Oriental Collection was exhibited at the Bethnal Green Museum. The catalogue of it is, perhaps, the most valuable extant, giving an account of the history of the manufacture. He was, for many years, Vice-President of the Society of Antiquaries, and is now its President.

FRANZOS, Karl Emil, a German author, son of a Jewish doctor, was born Oct. 25, 1848, on the Russo-Austrian frontier. He was brought up in the Polish-Jewish town of Czortkow, and received his early education in the school of the Dominican monastery there. Then he proceeded to the German Gymnasium at Czernowicz, where, from the year 1862, he was wholly dependent on his own exertions for a livelihood. A proof of the ardour and success with which he devoted himself to the study of the classical languages is his translation of the Eclogues of Virgil into the Doric of Theocritus. Being a Jew, and therefore having no hope of obtaining an appointment, he abandoned philology for jurisprudence. In 1868 he represented, as deputy, the students of Vienna at the Berlin "Kartellkongress" of the German "Burschenschaften," and he established, in 1869, the German annual in Bukowina "Buchenblätter," a sort of almanac. In 1871 he was concerned in a trial in consequence of an appeal to the students of Gratz, being indicted as a rebel. After this affair he passed with distinction his examination for the Government Juridical Service, and practised for a time at the Bar with success, but ultimately he resolved to adopt the career of a professional author. At the outset he took to journalism, first at Vienna and afterwards (1872-73) at Pesth; then he performed long journeys, mostly in the east of Europe, until he was enabled, in 1876, to find his means of subsistence by writing books. His chief power as a writer is found in ethnographical description, especially in the form of romance. Among his works are — "Semi-Asiatic Life: Pictures of Civilisation in Galicia, the Bukowina, South Russia, and Roumania," 3rd ed., 2 vols., 1889; "From the Don to the Danube: New Pictures of Semi-Asiatic Life," 2 vols., 2nd ed., 1889; "From the Great Plain, New Scenes from Western Asia," 2 vols., 1888; "Young Love," three stories, 4th ed., 1884; "The Jews of Barnow," tales, 4th ed., 1886; "Moschko of Parma," the story of a Jewish soldier, 2nd ed., 1885; "Quiet Stories," 3rd ed., 1886; "A Fight for the Right," a novel, 2 vols., 3rd ed., 1884; "My Francis," a novel, in verse, 1882; "The Journey after Fate," a story, 2nd ed., 1885; "Tragic Novels," 1886; "The Shadows," a story, 2nd ed., 1889; "Judith Trachtenberg," a novel, 1891; "Der Gott des alten Doctors," and "Die Suggestion und die Dichtung," 1892; and "Der Wahrheitsucher," 1894. His novel, "Der Präsident" was translated in Heinemann's International Library in 1890, under the title of "The Chief Justice." Franzos resided at Vienna until 1883; passed the winter, 1883-84, at Berlin; was recalled to Vienna, and conducted the Neue Illustrierte Zeitung, 1884-86; since 1887 he resides at Berlin, as editor of the periodical Deutsche Dichtung. His works have been translated into almost every European language. The translation of "The Jews of Barnow," "A Fight for the Right," and "The Chief Justice," have attracted special attention in England.

FRASER, Alexander, R.S.A., was born in 1827, at Woodcockdale, near Linlithgow. He got his education in a scrambling manner in Dunoon, Greenock, Glasgow, Hamilton, and Lanark, in the Grammar School of which latter place he got the bulk of it; where, too, he made his first step in art, stippling the background in the works of an itinerant portrait painter in water colours. But early showing a taste for art, he received his first instruction from his father, who was an able amateur. On leaving school he was sent to Edinburgh to draw in the Gallery of Arts. Shortly afterwards he was admitted to the School of Designs, where he learned to draw. At the same time he learned to paint by copying pictures in the National Gallery. His first appearance in the Academy Exhibition was with a figure picture, "A Gipsy Girl in Prison." But he soon abandoned the figure for landscape. He has made many sketches, and painted many pictures. Generally his works are painted in the open air, though to this there are important exceptions. Mr. Fraser was elected R.S.A. in 1862.

FRASER, Alexander Campbell, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S.E., Emeritus Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in the University of Edinburgh, was born Sept. 3, 1819, at Ardchattan Manse, Co. Argyll, of which parish his father, a collateral descendant of the Frasers of Strichen, was minister. His mother was a daughter of Campbell of Barcaldine, a family of old standing in Argyllshire. His first fourteen years were years of home education. A winter at the University of Glasgow, in 1833-4, was followed by the usual course in Arts in Edinburgh, were he graduated in 1838, and soon showed the strong bent of his mind to philosophy. In 1842 he obtained the Edinburgh University Prize, open to all matriculated members, for an essay on "Toleration." After a course of theological study he devoted his life to philosophy. An essay on "Leibnitz," in 1848, led to his appointment soon after as lecturer on logic in the New College, Edinburgh. In 1850 he became editor of the North British Review, which he conducted till 1857. In 1858 he was chosen to fill the chair of logic and metaphysics in the University of Edinburgh, as successor to Sir William Hamilton. From 1859 till 1891 he also held the office of Dean in the Faculty of Arts, and took an active part in measures of academical administration and reform. In 1871 he was made one of the examiners in Moral Science of the University of Cambridge, and was likewise elected a member of the Metaphysical Society of London. In the same year an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred on him by the University of Glasgow. In 1872 and for many years after he was an examiner in Moral Science at the India Civil Service Examinations. In 1877 he was chosen, in succession to Sir Robert Christison, to represent the Senatus Academicus in the Supreme Court of the University, an office which he held till 1891. In 1882 he was made a member of the Athenæum Club, London, for eminence in literature and philosophy. At commemoration in June, 1888, he was created an honorary D.C.L. of the University of Oxford. In 1891 he retired from the chair of logic and metaphysics, after he had occupied it for thirty-five years, and, on his retirement, he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from the University of Edinburgh. Professor Campbell Fraser has contributed many articles, chiefly biographical, historical, educational, and philosophical, to the Encyclopædia Britan- nica, Chambers' Encyclopædia, North British Review, Macmillan's Magazine, Mind, and other periodicals. In 1856 and 1858 he published "Essays in Philosophy," and "Rational Philosophy in History and System." In 1871 he produced the Oxford "Collected Edition of the Works of Bishop Berkeley, with Dissertations and Annotations," in three volumes; and in the same year, as a companion volume, "A Life of Bishop Berkeley, with an account of his Philosophy." These were followed by annotated "Selections from Berkeley;" a monograph on "Berkeley," in 1888, and another on "Locke," in 1890—the two last for Blackwood's "Philosophical Classics"—all of which have passed through several editions. In 1886 he prefixed a preface to Dr. Russell's "Reminiscences of Yarrow." His latest contribution to philosophical literature is an "Annotated Edition of Locke's Essay on Human Understanding, with Prolegomena, biographical, critical, and historical," in two volumes, published in 1894 by the Oxford Clarendon Press. This work contains his matured conclusions in religious thought and philosophy. In 1894 he was elected Gifford Lecturer in Natural Theology for two years, by the University of Edinburgh, in succession to Professor Pfleiderer, of Berlin, and Sir George Stokes, of Cambridge, who had each held that office.

FRASER, Lieut.-Gen. Charles Craufurd, V.C., C.B., born in Dublin, Aug. 31, 1829, is a son of the late Lieut.-Col. Sir J. J. Fraser, Bart. He was educated at Eton, and in 1847 joined the 7th Hussars, becoming Captain, 1854, and Major-General, 1877, after having commanded the 11th (Prince Albert's Own) Hussars for eleven years. He served with great distinction during the Indian Mutiny, and was severely wounded in one action. On Dec. 31, 1858, he rescued an officer and men from drowning in the River Raptee by swimming to them under a sharp fire. For this he was mentioned in despatches as having shown "conspicuous gallantry," and received, in addition to the Victoria Cross, the Royal Humane Society's first-class medal. In 1868 he served throughout the Abyssinian Campaign as Commandant at Head-quarters, and in charge of the outposts, and obtained a C.B. He has since been A.D.C. to H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief, Inspector-General of Cavalry in Ireland and in Great Britain, and for four years Commander of the Curragh. He represented North Lambeth in Parliament in the Conservative interest in the session ending 1892.

FRASER, Professor Thomas Richard, M.D., F.R.S., was born at Calcutta, on February 5, 1841, and was educated at Public Schools in Scotland and in the University of Edinburgh, where he graduated as M.D. in 1862. In the following year he was appointed Assistant to the Professor of Materia Medica in the University of Edinburgh. In 1869, he became Assistant-Physician to the Royal Infirmary, and in 1870, extra-academical Lecturer on Materia Medica in Edinburgh, and Examiner in this subject in the University of London. Four years subsequently, he resigned his Edinburgh appointments on being elected Medical Officer of Health for Mid-Cheshire. While holding this office, he was appointed Examiner in Materia Medica in the University of Edinburgh, and on the invitation of the Senate of the University of London, Examiner in Public Health in that University. In 1877, he returned to Edinburgh to assume the duties of Professor of Materia Medica, to which office he was promoted on the resignation of Sir Robert Christison. In the following year, he became also a Professor of Clinical Medicine, and in 1880 Dean of the Faculty of Medicine. Along with these University appointments, he holds that of Chief Medical Adviser of the Standard Life Assurance Company. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society; a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh; an Honorary member of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain; a Corresponding member of the Therapeutical Society of Paris, and of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia; and a member of many other learned societies. In 1877, he was appointed one of the two Medical members of the Admiralty Committee to report on the causes of Scurvy in Sir George Nares' Arctic Expedition; and he was President of the Section of Materia Medica and Pharmacology at the International Medical Congress held in London in 1881, and President of the Section of Materia Medica and Therapeutics at the meeting of the British Medical Association in 1885. Dr. Fraser is the author of "Characters, Actions, and Therapeutic Uses of Physostigma Venenosum" (awarded a Thesis Gold Medal by the University of Edinburgh, and the Barbier Prize of the Academy of Sciences of Paris), Edinburgh Medical Journal, 1863; "The Physiological Action of Physostigma Venenosum," Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., 1866-67; "On the Connection between Chemical Constitution and Physiological Action" (conjointly with Professor Crum Brown), Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., 1868-69 (awarded the Macdougall-Brisbane prize of the Royal Society of Edinburgh);

"An Investigation into some previously undescribed Tetanic Symptoms produced in Cold-blooded Animals by Atropia," Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., 1868-69; "An Experimental Research on the Antagonism between the Actions of Physostigma and Atropia," Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., 1870-71; "The Dyspnœa of Asthma and Bronchitis; its Causation, and the Influence of Nitrites upon it," American Journ. of the Med. Sciences, 1887; "Strophanthus hispidus; its Natural History, Chemistry, and Pharmacology," Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., 1889; and of many papers on Clinical Medicine, Therapeutics and the physiological action of medicinal substances. His work has been chiefly in the direction of determining the physiological effects of medicinal substances, with the view of establishing an accurate and rational basis for the treatment of disease.

FRECHETTE, Louis, LL.D., a French Canadian littérateur and journalist, was born at Levis, opposite Quebec, Nov. 16, 1839. He received his education at the Quebec Seminary and at the College of Nicolet. He studied law, and was called to the Bar of Lower Canada in 1864. He became a voluminous contributor to the newspaper press of the French province, and edited successfully Le Journal de Quebec and Le Journal de Levis. In 1862 he published a collection of poems, under the title of "Mes Loisirs." In 1866 he settled in Chicago, where he published a French paper called L'Amérique, and was foreign correspondent in the land department of the Illinois Central R. R. Co. He returned to Quebec in 1871, and entered political life, representing his native county of Levis in the Dominion Parliament from 1874 to 1878. Since then he has published five additional collections of poems, entitled respectively "Pêle-Mêle," "Les Fleurs Boréales," "Les Oiseaux de Neige," "La Légende d'un Peuple," and "Les Feuilles Volantes," and also a poem on "J. B. de La Salle." While at Chicago he had also published another poem, called "La Voix d'un Exile." "Les Oiseaux de Neige" and "Les Fleurs Boréales" were crowned by the French Academy at Paris in Aug. 1880. For a few years he was chief editor of La Patrie, Montreal, and in 1890 occupied the clerkship of the Legislative Council, Provinces of Quebec. He has received the degree of LL.D. from three different Universities, and is known as the "national poet" of French Canada.

FREDERICK, The Ex-Empress (Victoria Adelaide Mary Louisa, the Princess Royal of England), was born Nov. 21, 1840, and was married to the late Emperor Frederick III. of Germany on January 25, 1858, and has seven children, of whom the eldest is the present Emperor, William II.

FREDERICK WILLIAM LOUIS, Grand Duke of Baden, born Sept. 9, 1826, succeeded his father, the Grand Duke Leopold, as Regent, April 24, 1852, to the exclusion of his elder brother Louis, who was mentally incapable of governing. Since 1853 he has been continually engaged in struggles with the ecclesiastical power, and at the end of 1855 banished the Jesuits from the Duchy. In Sept. 1856, he had a narrow escape from assassination. He assumed the title of Grand Duke Sept. 5, 1856, and married the daughter of the Emperor William I. of Germany, Sept. 20. An ardent advocate of German unity, he became an ally of Prussia in the Franco-German war (1870-71), and the Badenese soldiers contributed in no small degree to the triumph of the German arms, thereby making themselves intensely unpopular with their former friends and neighbours, the people of Alsace. He was one of the first to accept the Constitution of the new German Empire and to acclaim the new German Emperor at Versailles. In 1881 he was seriously ill, and Baden was under a regency for a year. In 1886 he presided at the great quincentenary festival of the University of Heidelberg.

FREMANTLE, The Hon. Sir Charles William, K.C.B., was born at Swanbourne, Bucks, on Aug. 12, 1834, and is the third son of the late 1st Lord Cottesloe (who was M.P. for Buckingham, 1827–46, and held the offices of Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of War, and Chief Secretary for Ireland, and was subsequently, 1846-74, Chairman of the Board of Customs, and died Dec. 3, 1890) and his wife Louisa Elizabeth, daughter of Field Marshal Sir George Nugent, G.C.B. She died in 1875. Sir Charles William Fremantle was educated at Eton; appointed a Clerk in the Treasury, April, 1853, and was Private Secretary successively to Sir William Hayter, Sir William Hylton Jolliffe, and the Hon. Henry Brand (afterwards Speaker of the House of Commons and Viscount Hampden), Parliamentary Secretaries of the Treasury. He was appointed, in 1866, Private Secretary to Mr. Disraeli, who was then Chancellor of the Exchequer, and subsequently, in 1868, First Lord of the Treasury. In 1867-68 he was Secretary to the Boundary Commission appointed by the Representation of the People Act, 1867, of which Viscount Eversley was the Chairman. In 1868 he was appointed Deputy-Master and Comptroller of the Royal Mint; and in 1870 was constituted principal executive officer of that department, the Mastership of the Mint having by the Coinage Act of that year been vested in the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the time being. He was appointed, in 1876, a Member of the Playfair Commission, to inquire into the constitution and management of Public Departments, and in 1886 a Member of the Royal Commission on Gold and Silver, which reported on the question of bimetallism. Since Sir Charles Fremantle has been in charge of the Mint, annual reports have been issued by that department, giving full information, not only as to the coinage of the United Kingdom, but also as to the coinage and currency of other nations.

FREMANTLE, The Hon. and Rev. William Henry, M.A., is the second son of the late Lord Cottesloe, and was born in 1831. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford; obtained a first-class in classics in 1853, gained the prize for the English essay in the following year, and was Fellow of All Souls' from 1855 to 1863. He was Curate of Middle Claydon, Bucks, from 1855 to 1857, and Vicar of Lewknor, Oxfordshire, from the latter date till 1865, when he was appointed by Earl Russell to the rectory of St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, Marylebone. From 1878 to 1880 he was Select Preacher at Oxford. In 1882 he was chosen Bampton Lecturer at Oxford, and later in the same year he was appointed by Dr. Tait, Archbishop of Canterbury—one of whose Chaplains he had been since 1861—to the canonry residentiary in Canterbury Cathedral. About this time Canon Fremantle accepted the position of Fellow and Theological Tutor of Balliol College, a position which he vacated at the end of the summer of 1894. He has written or edited "Ecclesiastical Judgments of the Privy Council," 1865; articles in the Contemporary Review, 1866-82; and "The Doctrine of Reconciliation to God through Jesus Christ;" "The Gospel of the Secular Life" (University Sermons); "The World as the Subject of Redemption" (Bampton Lectures); "A Pleading against War from the Pulpit of Canterbury Cathedral;" "Church Reform," in the Imperial Parliament Series; Articles on St. Jerome, &c., in the "Dictionary of Ecclesiastical Biography;" and a Translation of the chief works of St. Jerome in the "Library of the Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers," 1893.

FRÈRE-ORBAN, Hubert Joseph Walther, a Belgian statesman, born at Liège, April 24, 1812, was called to the Bar of his native city, and soon acquired a high reputation among the Liberal party there, who returned him to the Belgian Chamber as their representative in 1847. He was Minister of Public Works and then Minister of Finance in that year; and began the reform of the Corn Laws in Belgium, before Sir Robert Peel reformed the Corn Laws in England. He was again Finance Minister from 1848 to 1852, being in the interval between the two administrations Minister of Public Works. He again became Finance Minister in 1861, was soon afterwards appointed President of the Council, and once more received the portfolio of Finance when the new Government was formed in Jan. 1868. The principal event during that administration was the attempt of France to obtain for a French company the management of the Luxemburg lines. The difference was amicably settled in 1869. M. Frère-Orban resigned his portfolio in 1870, when the Catholic Ministry came into office. On the return of the Liberals into power in June, 1878, he was appointed head of the Cabinet, with the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, but was displaced after the General Elections of 1884, when a Catholic majority was returned. Thus M. Frère-Orban had been a Cabinet Minister (with but short intervals) for nearly half-a-century. He was unseated at the October elections of 1894, when the Catholic leader, M. Woeste, also lost his seat. He was the founder of the Banque Nationale, and of the Caisse d'Epargne, and, during his various administrations, much has been done to advance the country; octrois have been abolished; education has been extended; the salt tax repealed; the great camp on the Escaut, which ensures a free landing to Belgium's ally, has been established; and many laws passed for the regulation of labour, and for promoting the welfare both of capitalists and of workmen. The Emperor of Austria conferred on him, in May, 1881, the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Stephen. M. Frère-Orban is a high dignitary of many other foreign orders; he has the Grand Cross of the Red Eagle of Prussia, and is a Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour. He is the author of a large number of memoirs, reports and notes bearing on his work as a lawyer or politician.

FREYTAG, Gustav, German author, born at Kreuzburg, in Prussian Silesia, July 13, 1816, was educated at the College of Oels, and the universities of Breslau and Berlin, obtaining the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in 1838. In 1847 he married, gave up his academical appointment and went to Dresden, and afterwards to Leipzig, where, in conjunction with Julian Schmidt, he established a journal called The Messengers of the Frontier ("Grenzboten"), of which he became the principal editor (1848–70). Previous to this he had made his first essay as an author by publishing a volume of poems entitled "In Breslau," 1845, which was followed by "Die Brautfahrt, oder Kuntz von der Rosen," an historical comedy, 1845; two dramas, "Valentine," 1847; "Count Waldemar," 1848; "The Journalists," a comedy, 1854; "Die Fabier," a tragedy, 1859. His novel, entitled "Soll und Haben," the 35th edition of which was published in 1889, at once obtained for him a prominent position among German writers of fiction. His more recent works are "Bilder aus dem Leben des Deutschen Volkes," 8vo, Leipzig, 5 vols., 1862–69, 15th edit., 1889; "Die Verlorne Handschrift," 8vo, Leipzig, 1864, 19th edit., 1889; "Die Ahnen," a series of stories illustrating German history from the earliest times; "Die Technik des Dramas," the "Life of Karl Mathy," "Doctor Luther," 1883; "A Study of the Emperor Frederick III.," 1889. Some of these works have been translated into English by Mrs. Malcolm. A collected edition of his works began to be published in 1886.

FRIEDLÄNDER, Dr. Michael, was born on April 29, 1833, at Introschin, a small town in Prussia, province of Posen, where he remained during his childhood and youth. He left the place (after the great events of 1848) in 1851, to continue his studies in the capital of Prussia. He first studied under Bellermann, until 1856, when he finished his training, and matriculated a student at the Berlin University. He there attended the lectures of Professors Trendelenburg, Boekh, Hengstenberg, Benary, &c., and also studied Hebrew theology under the Rabbis, I. Oettinger and E. Rosenstein. Dr. Friedländer graduated at Halle in 1862, his dissertation being "De Persarum Regibus veteribus." He subsequently obeyed a summons to Berlin to become the Director of the Institute for the teaching of the Talmud of the Talmud Association of that city. In 1865 he left Berlin to become Principal of the Jews' College, a post which he still holds. Dr. Friedländer is a member of the Committee of the Society of Hebrew Literature. Under its auspices he has published: "The Commentary of Ibn Esra on Jesaiah, edited from MSS. and translated with Notes, Introductions, and Glossary" (1873-77); "The Book of Jesaiah, the Anglican Version, emended according to the Commentary of Ibn Esra," "The Hebrew Text of Ibn Esra's Commentary on Jesaiah, edited according to MSS., and accompanied by a Glossary, with Short Dissertations on Subjects connected with the Commentary" (1874); "Essays on the Writings of Abraham Ibn Esra" (1877); "The Guide of the Perplexed of Maionides, translated from the Original Text, and Annotated" (1881); "The Jewish Family Bible, containing the Pentateuch, the Prophets, and the Hagiographa, Hebrew and English" (1882); "Spinoza, His Life and Philosophy" (two papers read before the Jews' College Literary Society), 1888; "The Design and the Contexts of Ecclesiastes," in the Jewish Quarterly Review, 1888, vol. i., No. 1; "The Age and the Authorship of Ecclesiastes," in the Jewish Quarterly Review, 1888, vol. i., No. 4; "Text Book of Jewish Religion," and "The Jewish Religion," 1890. In 1892 he revised a volume of "Outlines of Jewish History."

FRITH, William Powell, retired R.A., born in 1819, at Studley, near Ripon; lost his father while young. In 1835 he entered the Art Academy, conducted by Mr. Sass, where he continued for three years, studying drawing and composition; in 1839 he exhibited, at the British Institution, a portrait of one of the children of his preceptor. This was followed in 1840 by "Othello and Desdemona," and "Malvolio before the Countess Olivia," exhibited at the Academy the same year; and in 1841 by his "Parting Interview between Leicester and Amy Robsart." In 1842 he exhibited at the British Institution a sketch from Sterne's "Sentimental Journey," and contributed to the Exhibition a scene from the "Vicar of Wakefield," representing Olivia and the Squire trying to ascertain which was the taller. Three years later he contributed the well-known picture of the "Village Pastor," which was the means of placing him on the roll of Associates of the Royal Academy. After becoming A.R.A., Mr. Frith almost entirely discontinued his contributions to the British Institution, except in 1852, when he sent a small female portrait, entitled "Wicked Eyes." In 1847 he produced his large picture of "English Merrymaking a Hundred Years Ago." His picture of 1849, entitled "Coming of Age," was in the same vein, and was a great popular success. Mr. Frith continued to exhibit, and in 1852 he was elected R.A. A number of Shakesperean and other pictures followed, and in 1854 his "Life at the Sea-Side" was bought by the Queen. The famous picture "The Derby Day" (now in the National Gallery) was exhibited at the Academy in 1858. For the next four years Mr. Frith did not exhibit much, being occupied in painting the large picture of the "Railway Station." He exhibited at the Academy in 1865, "The Marriage of their Royal Highnesses The Prince of Wales and the Princess Alexandra of Denmark, in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, March 10, 1863" (painted for the Queen); and in 1868, "Before Dinner at Boswell's Lodgings in Bond Street," 1769. This work was sold in 1875 for £4,567, which, up to that date, was the highest price ever given at auction for any picture during the artist's lifetime. Since that time Mr. Frith has constantly exhibited both illustrations of literature and pictures after the manner of his old successes, "The Railway Station," &c. Of these "The Private View of the Royal Academy" (1881), has been the most ambitious. His Hogarthian series "The Road to Ruin" (1878), is also well known. Mr. Frith published his "Autobiography" in 1887, and "Further Reminiscences" in 1888. He is a member of the Academies of Vienna, Belgium, and Sweden. By his own desire, he was placed on the list of retired Royal Academicians, in 1890.

FROST, Percival, D.Sc., F.R.S., the son of Charles Frost, F.S.A., Solicitor, Hull, was born Sept. 1, 1817, and was educated at Beverley, Oakham, and at Cambridge, where he was Second Wrangler and First Smith's Prizeman, 1839; Fellow of St. John's College, 1839-41; Mathematical Lecturer at Jesus College from 1847 to 1859; Mathematical Lecturer at King's College, Cambridge, from 1859 to 1889; Fellow of King's, 1882; and was elected Fellow of the Royal Society in the same year. He is the author of treatises "On Curve Tracing," "On Solid Geometry," and "On the First Three Sections of 'Newton's Principles,'" also of numerous papers in Cambridge Mathematical Journal, Oxford and Cambridge Journal of Mathematics, and the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics.

FROST, Thomas, born in 1821, at Croydon, was formerly in business there as a printer, but retired in 1848, and adopted the literary profession. He participated actively in the Chartist agitation, and was one of the delegates to the Reform Conference at St. Martin's Hall in 1852. He was a contributor to Chambers's "Papers for the People," and in 1854 editor of the Magazine of Art. He was a leader-writer for the Birmingham Journal for several years from 1855, and subsequently for the Liverpool Albion and the Shrewsbury Chronicle, down to 1872. He was editor of the Gentleman's Journal, in that and the preceding year. Mr. Frost is the author of "Half-Hours with Early Explorers," 1873; "The Old Showmen and the Old London Fairs," 1874; "Circus Life and Circus Celebrities," 1875; "Lives of the Conjurors," "Life of Thomas Lord Lyttelton," and "Secret Societies of the European Revolution," 2 vols. 1876; "Forty Years' Recollection," and "In Kent with Charles Dickens," 1880; "Modern Explorers," 1882; and several stories of adventure for boys. In 1886 appeared his "Reminiscences of a Country Journalist." He became editor in 1881 of the Sheffield Evening Post, in 1882 of the Barnsley Times, and in the following year of the Barnsley Independent.

FROTHINGHAM, Octavius Brooks, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, Nov. 26, 1822, and graduated at Harvard, 1843. He studied theology at the Cambridge Divinity School, and in 1847 was ordained and settled as pastor over a Unitarian church in Salem, Massachusetts. In 1855 he removed to Jersey City in New Jersey. In 1859 he went to New York, where he was the minister of an independent religious society until 1879, when he went to Europe. The society was dissolved on his return, in 1881. He withdrew from any specific church connection, went to Boston, and has since devoted himself exclusively to literary work. He has written largely for journals and reviews, has published more than 150 sermons and discourses, and is the author of "Stories from the Lips of the Teacher," 1863; "Stories from the Old Testament," 1864; "Renan's Critical Essays" (translated), 1864; "The Child's Book of Religion," 1871; "The Religion of Humanity," 1872; "Life of Theodore Parker," 1874; "Transcendentalism in New England, 1876; "The Cradle of the Christ," 1877; "Life of Gerrit Smith," 1878; "George Ripley," 1882; "W. H. Channing," 1886; "Boston Unitarianism from 1820 till 1850," 1890; and "Recollections and Impressions," 1891. He was for a time art critic of the New York Tribune, was a frequent contributor to the Index, the organ of free religion, and wrote a large number of the articles in Johnson's "Universal Cyclopædia," 1874-1877.

FROUDE, Robert Edmund, F.R.S., M.I.C.E., Assoc. Mem. Council, I.N.A., was born on Dec. 23, 1846, at Dartington Parsonage, in South Devon, then occupied by the Ven. Archdeacon Froude, his grandfather. He was third son of the late William Froude, F.R.S., the eminent investigator of scientific problems connected with naval architecture. His grandfather by the mother's side was Governor Holdsworth, of Dartmouth, South Devon. He was at a private school at Heavitree, near Exeter, in 1856-8; in 1858-63 at St. Andrew's College, Bradfield, Berks; and in 1863-64 at the Oratory School, Birmingham, under the superintendence of the late Cardinal (then Dr.) J. H. Newman, once his father's tutor at Oxford. He was preparing for Oxford when a failure of health necessitated his abandoning his studies, and spending two winters abroad. After this he assisted in the experimental work on which his father was then engaged; and when, through the instrumentality of Sir Edward Reed (then Mr. Reed, Chief Constructor of the Navy), the Admiralty Experiment Establishment was instituted at Torquay, under the superintendence of Mr. W. Froude, Edmund Froude received a salaried appointment in the staff of that establishment. He was placed temporarily in sole charge of the establishment when Mr. W. Froude left for the Cape in 1878, and was appointed superintendent on Mr. Froude's death in 1879. He has continued to hold that office to the present date. In 1886 the establishment under his charge was transferred from Torquay to Haslar, Gosport, the experimental plant being at the same time largely remodelled and improved. He became an Associate of the Institution of Naval Architects in 1880, of the Institution of Civil Engineers in 1884, and of the Society of Arts in 1890, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1894. He has contributed papers to the Institution of Naval Architects, the United Service Institution, the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, and the Royal Society of Edinburgh. In January, 1894, he delivered the Watt Anniversary Lecture to the Greenock Philosophical Society.

FRY, The Right Hon. Sir Edward, P.C., F.R.S., second son of the late Mr. Joseph Fry, of Bristol, by Mary Anne, daughter of the late Mr. Edward Swaine, of Reading, was born at Bristol, Nov. 4, 1827, and educated at the College, Bristol, and at University College, London, of which he is a Fellow. He graduated B.A. at the University of London in 1851, taking honours in classics and animal physiology. In 1885 he was appointed by the Crown a Member of the Senate of the University of London. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1854; in 1869 he received a silk gown; and in April, 1877, he was appointed a Judge of the High Court of Justice. On the latter occasion he received the honour of knighthood. In April, 1883, he was appointed by Mr. Gladstone to the vacant Lord Justiceship of Appeal, caused by the elevation of Lord Justice Brett as the Master of the Rolls. He is a Privy Councillor, and a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, and has been an Examiner in Law to the University of London and the Council of Legal Education. He is a F.R.S., F.S.A., and F.L.S. He is the author of "A Treatise on the Specific Performance of Contracts, including those of Public Companies," 1858; and of some theological works, including "The Doctrine of Election," 1864, ed. 3, 1892; "Essays on the Accordance of Christianity with the Nature of Man," Edinburgh, 1867; "Darwinism and Theology," 1872, a reprint of letters in the Spectator; and "British Mosses," 1892. He married, in 1859, Mariabella, daughter of the late Mr. John Hodgkin, barrister-at-law, of Lewes.

FULLER, Melville Weston, LL.D., American jurist, was born at Augusta, Maine, Feb. 11, 1833. He graduated from Bowdoin College in 1853, studied law and began its practice in Augusta in 1853. For a short time he was one of the editors of the Age, and President of the Common Council. He became City Attorney in 1856, but resigned that office on his removal to Chicago in June of the same year. There he rose to the highest rank in his profession, and was connected with many important cases. He was a Member of the Illinois Constitutional Convention in 1862; of the lower branch of the State Legislature from 1863 to 1865; and was a Delegate to the Democratic National Conventions of 1864, 1872, 1876, and 1880. In 1888 President Cleveland nominated him Chief Justice of the United States (the highest judicial position in America), and on Oct. 8 of that year he entered upon the duties of that office. Both the North-western University and Bowdoin College conferred the degree of LL.D. upon him in 1888, and Harvard University in 1891.

FURNISS, Harry, a caricature artist, was born March, 1854, at Wexford, Ireland, of English parents. His father was an engineer, his mother, the daughter of the well-known Newcastle-on-Tyne author, publisher, and politician, Eneas Mac-Kenzie, the founder of the Joseph Cowen political school of that place. He was educated in Dublin, and began drawing for periodicals and magazines at a very early age. Mr. Furniss came to London at the age of 19, and has ever since been constantly engaged in illustrating. For many years he was a regular contributor to the Illustrated London News, mostly depicting the lighter side of every-day life, but occasionally acting as a serious "special" for that paper. In the latter capacity he made a sketching tour of the distressed parts of England in the winter of 1878, and has followed political campaigns through the country, &c. His first drawing in Punch appeared in 1880, and he joined the regular staff four years after; at this time his Punch Parliamentary Views were collected and published in an édition de luxe. His principal works in Punch are Parliamentary Scenes and Sketches of Members, with few exceptions drawn direct in the Houses and finished in the studio. Besides his work in Punch, he has illustrated the following work published from the same office;—F. C. Burnand's "Happy Thoughts;" A'Beckett's "Comic Blackstone" coloured plates, and Burnand's "Incomplete Angler." He has contributed drawings to nearly all the chief magazines in London, Harper's in America, and others, and to numerous papers, the World and Vanity Fair among them. He has also brought out books for children, 1885–6, with coloured pictures, entitled "Romps." In 1890 he was elected a Fellow of the Institute of Journalists. During 1891 he lectured on "The Manners and Men of the House of Commons." Recently Mr. Harry Furniss has severed his connection with Punch, and in the autumn of the present year (1894) has brought out the first number of an illustrated comic paper of his own, entitled Lika Joko.

FURNIVALL, Frederick James, M.A., Ph.D., born Feb. 4, 1825, at Egham, in Surrey, received his education at private schools at Englefield Green, Turnham Green, and Hanwell, at University College, London (1841-2), and Trinity Hall, Cambridge, B.A., 1846, M.A., 1849. He was called to the Bar in 1849, but has devoted his life mainly to the study of Early and Middle English Literature, and has established numerous societies of which he is Director for promoting the study of special works; the Early English Text, 1864; the Chaucer, 1868; the Ballad, 1868; the New Shakspere, 1873; the Wyclif, 1882; the Browning, 1881; and the Shelley, 1885. Through his societies Dr. Furnivall has raised and expended over £40,000 in printing early MSS. and rare books. He was also one of the founders of the Working Men's College, and taught there for many years besides being a Captain in its Volunteer Corps and President of its Boat Club. He was one of the first builders of narrow wager-boats (1845), and introduced sculls instead of oars into fours and eights. Dr. Furnivall has edited a large number of early English and other works, amongst which may be mentioned Walter Map's "Queste del Saint Graal;" "Percy's Folio MS. of Ballads and Romances;" "The Babies Book;" Harrison's "England," 1577–87; "Caxton's Book of Curtesye;" a Six-Text print of Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales"—a very valuable aid to the study of Chaucer — and Parallel-Text editions of the poet's "Minor Poems," and "Troilus and Cressida," &c. To these may be added several of the Shakspere quartos in facsimile, and the Introduction to a one-volume edition of the works, called "The Leopold Shakspere." In 1890 Dr. Furnivall published "Robert Browning's Ancestors," and in 1891 wrote an introduction to "The Royal Shakspere," His most important recent work is his edition, for the Early English Text Society, of Hoccleve's "Minor Poems," 1892.

G.

GADSBY. Prof. Henry, was born near London on Dec. 15, 1842, and educated at St. Paul's Cathedral. His first important work was a choral setting of the 130th Psalm, which was produced by Henry Leslie at St. James's Hall, in 1863. In 1864 he produced his first symphony, which was followed in 1868 by a cantata on the subject of Longfellow's "Golden Legend." His next works were "Alice Brand," a cantata; a Festival service for eight voices for "the Sons of the Clergy Festival," 1873; and an overture ("Andromeda") for the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts. In 1874, at the request of his old friend and schoolfellow, Sir John Stainer, Prof. Gadsby wrote a concerto for organ and orchestra, which was played at the Crystal Palace. At the same time he was commissioned to write an overture for the British Orchestral Society, which was successfully performed at the St. James's Hall. This led to a second commission, and he wrote an "Intermezzo and Scherzo" for the same society. In 1874 he succeeded the late John Hullah as Professor of Harmony at Queen's College, London, and on the death of Sir William Cusins, he was elected Professor of the Pianoforte at the same institution. In 1886 Prof. Gadsby wrote appropriate music for the "Alcestis" of Euripides, which was acted in Greek at the Christmas of that year, by ladies of Queen's College. This music was afterwards produced at the Crystal Palace, and was followed by "The Lord of the Isles," a cantata, sung at the Brighton Festivals, and "Columbus," a cantata for male voices sung at the Crystal Palace, with Mr. Edward Lloyd in the solo part. This was also sung at Oxford, where in 1886 the "Cyclops," a cantata was produced. In 1886 the Philharmonic Society commissioned Prof. Gadsby to write them an orchestral work, and the result was the "Forest of Arden." In 1887 his third symphony was produced in honour of the Queen's Jubilee at the Crystal Palace. It is in the key of D major. One of Prof. Gadsby's latest works is music to the "Andromache" of Euripides written for Queen's College in 1893. Professor Gadsby is now chiefly employed as a teacher of music. Since its commencement he has been Professor of Pianoforte and Harmony at the Guildhall School of Music, and is one of the Examiners of Schools and Colleges appointed by the Associated Board of the Royal Academy and Royal College of Music. Besides the above-mentioned works, Prof. Gadsby has published many anthems and services, a string quartette in C, and a "Treatise on Harmony."

GAIRDNER, James, son of the late John Gairdner, M.D., F.R.C.S.E., was born at Edinburgh, March 22, 1828, and was educated there. In 1846 his father obtained for him an appointment in the Public Record Office, and in 1859 he became Assistant Keeper of the Public Records. Mr. Gairdner has edited "Memorials of Henry VII." (in "Rolls Series"), 1858; "Letters and Papers illustrative of the Reigns of Richard III. and Henry VII." (in the same series), 2 vols., 1861-3; "Historical Collections of a London Citizen" (for the Camden Society), 1876; and "Three Fifteenth-Century Chronicles," 1880. He has also edited eight volumes (vols. v. to xii., 1880-90) of the "Letters and Papers of Henry VIII." (one of the Calendars of State Papers published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls), a work begun by the late Professor Brewer, and still in progress. He edited in Mr. Arber's series a new edition of the Paston Letters (3 vols., 1872-5); and he is the author of "The Houses of Lancaster and York" (1874), in Messrs. Longman's "Epoch" Series; "Life and Reign of Richard III.," 1878; of the volume "England," in the Christian Knowledge Society's series, entitled "Early Chroniclers of Europe," 1879; "and of "Henry VII." in "Twelve English Statesmen," 1889.

GAIRDNER, William Tennant, M.D. Edin., LL.D., F.R.S., Professor of Medicine in the University of Glasgow, and Senior Ordinary Physician to H.M. the Queen in Scotland, was born in Edinburgh on Nov. 8, 1824. He was the eldest son of the late Dr. John Gairdner, who was long officially connected with the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, and occupied the Chair of the College in 1832. Professor Gairdner received his education in Edinburgh, passing from public and private schools there to the University, where he attained the degree of M.D. in 1845, and was awarded one of the four gold medals in that year for a thesis "On Death." Almost immediately after his graduation, Dr. Gairdner accompanied the Earl and Countess of Beverley to Rome, as their travelling physician for the winter. On returning to Edinburgh in May, 1846, he served for two years in the Royal Infirmary, and in 1848 succeeded Dr. Hughes Bennett as Pathologist to that institution. While acting in this capacity, Dr. Gairdner wrote numerous memoirs and conducted voluntary classes in pathological anatomy, especially in microscopic pathology, which was then being vigorously pursued in the Edinburgh School. In 1853 he began to lecture on the Practice of Medicine in the Extra Academical School, and continued to do so until his appointment to the Chair of Medicine in the University of Glasgow in 1862. Some of Dr. Gairdner's personal relations during this period, especially with Drs. Warburton Begbie, Murchison, Sanders, and others, were the subjects of an address to the Royal Medical Society in Oct., 1893, which being a record of reminiscences of the old Edinburgh Royal Infirmary has been included in the 2nd vol. of the "Edinburgh Hospital Reports." In 1862 Dr. Gairdner published a volume on "Public Health in Relation to Air and Water," which was the record of the first course of lectures on sanitation ever delivered in Scotland. As a result of this publication, Dr. Gairdner was appointed Medical Officer to the city of Glasgow. The post was a new one, but Dr. Gairdner accepted it, and held it for nine years, during which period many severe epidemics were dealt with. Glasgow was threatened with cholera in 1866, and the preparations for this epidemic developed new principles of action, of which Dr. Gairdner gave an account in the transactions of the Association of American Physicians (Sept., 1891). In 1866, also, Dr. Gairdner was sent to Paris to report on the Imperial improvements in that city, and one of the results following very directly from this visit, and from the previous experience placed on record as to the impossibility of dealing adequately with epidemics in the tenement-houses and slums of Glasgow, was the Glasgow City Improvement Act (1867), which completely revolutionised the sanitation of the city, and became the basis of much subsequent legislation. Besides the works already mentioned, Dr. Gairdner is the author of many papers and memoirs, and published in 1862 a volume entitled "Clinical Medicine: Observations recorded at the Bedside, with Commentaries." In 1888, "Lectures to Practitioners" was published, jointly with Dr. Joseph Coats, and in 1889, a volume entitled "The Physician as Naturalist," containing inter alia, the papers published originally between 1864 and 1869, tending towards a much reduced scale of alcoholic stimulation in fevers and other acute diseases. From the Edinburgh University, Professor Gairdner has received the degree of LL.D.; from Trinity College, Dublin, the degree of M.D. (honoris causâ); and from the Royal College of Physicians of Ireland, its honorary Fellowship in 1887. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, and also a Vice-President of the Pathological Society of London; besides being an honorary Fellow of the Clinical, the Medical, and the Medico-Psychological Society of London. In 1888 he became the Annual President of the British Medical Association on the occasion of its meeting in Glasgow; and in 1893 he was unanimously elected President of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh; this being the first occasion on which the Chair of the College has been occupied by one not residing in Edinburgh or the neighbourhood. Dr. Gairdner is the representative of the University of Glasgow in the General Medical Council of Education, &c., as well as in the University Court.

GALE, James, Ph. D., F.G.S., an inventor, born at Crabtree, near Plymouth, Devonshire, in July, 1833, was educated at Tavistock. While still a youth he was afflicted with the total loss of sight, but was able to become for a time a partner in a manufacturing business, and subsequently practised as a medical electrician at Plymouth. In 1865 he announced that he had discovered "a means of rendering gunpowder non-explosive and explosive at will, the process for effecting the same being simple, effectual, and cheap, the quality and bulk of the gunpowder remaining uninjured." Arrangements were made for a trial of the process at the Government House, Mount Wise, Plymouth, June 27, 1865, and the experiments, carried on in the presence of a number of military and naval officers, were attended at the time with satisfactory results. The invention consists of mixing powdered glass with the gunpowder, which is thereby rendered unexplosive. The glass can, by a simple process, be again separated from the gunpowder, which, of course, then resumes its explosive character. Mr. Gale is likewise the inventor of the ammunition slide-gun, the fog-shell, the balloon-shell, &c. He was elected a Fellow of the Chemical Society in 1866; a Fellow of the Geological Society the same year; and received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the University of Rostock in 1867.

GALLENGA, Professor Antonio Carlo Napoleon, Italian publicist, was born at Parma, but of an old Piedmontese family, Nov. 4, 1810, and educated at the University of Parma. He left Parma and Italy in consequence of the political events of 1831; lived a few years in France, Corsica, Malta, Tangiers, Gibraltar; crossed over to the United States in 1836; lived for two years in Boston; came to England in 1839; and became a naturalized British subject in 1846. He was Chargé d'Affaires for Piedmont at Frankfort in 1848-9, and a member of the Piedmontese and Italian Parliament from 1854 to 1864. Signor Gallenga was connected with the Times from 1859 to 1883, and was for long correspondent to that paper in Italy. He is the author of "Italy, Past and Present," 2 vols., 1841-9 (second edit., with an additional volume, 1848); "Italy in 1848," 1851; "The Blackgown Papers," 2 vols., 1845; "Scenes from Italian Life," 1850; "Fra Dolcino and his Times," 1853; "Castellamonte, an Autobiography," 2 vols., 1854; "Mariotti's Italian Grammar, edited by A. Gallenga, Professor of Italian in University College," which passed through twelve editions between 1858 and 1881. All the above-mentioned works, with the exception of "Castellamonte," which was anonymous, were published under the assumed name of L. Mariotti. Signor Gallenga has published under his own name—"History of Piedmont," 3 vols., 1855-6; "Country Life in Piedmont," 1858; "The Invasion of Denmark," 2 vols., 1864; "The Pearl of the Antilles," 1873: "Italy Revisited," 2 vols., 1875; "Two Years of the Eastern Question," 2 vols., 1877; "The Pope and the King," 2 vols., 1879; "South America," 1881; "A Summer Tour in Russia," 1882; "Iberian Reminiscences," 2 vols., 1883; and "My Second Life," 1884. "Italy, Present and Future," 2 vols., 1887. Signor Gallenga is also the author of "Oltremonte ed Oltremare;" "La nostra Prima Caravona;" "Manuale dell' Elettore;" "A che ne siamo;" and other Italian publications.

GALLIFET, Gaston Alexandre Auguste, Marquis de, a French General, born at Paris, Jan. 23, 1831, joined the army in April, 1848, and became colonel in Dec., 1867. He commanded the 3rd Regiment of Chasseurs d'Afrique, took part with the Army of the Rhine during the Franco-German War, and was promoted to the rank of General of Brigade, Aug. 30, 1870. During the second siege of Paris, he commanded a brigade of the Army of Versailles, and was unenviably distinguished for his frightful severity to the Communard prisoners. In 1871, he was sent into Africa, and placed at the head of the subdivision of Batna, and had a considerable share in the pacification of the unsubdued tribes. He took charge of the expedition on El-Goliah, which presented numerous difficulties for the transport of troops; but he overcame all obstacles, and executed a rapid march through a desert country and severely punished the revolted tribes (Dec., 1872—March, 1873). On the general reorganisation of the army, the Marquis de Gallifet (who had become very intimate with M. Gambetta) was named to the command of the 3rd Brigade of Infantry of the 8th Army Corps, and of the subdivision of the Department of the Cher. Promoted to the rank of General of Division, May 3, 1875, he obtained the command of the 5th Division of Infantry, and in February, 1879, that of the 9th corps d'armée. In 1882 he was promoted to the command of the 12th Corps at Limoges, and at the end of three years was appointed a member of the Conseil Supérieur of War. In 1891 he conducted his part of the French autumn manœuvres so brilliantly that the military medal was conferred on him (Sept., 1891). After again conducting the autumn manœuvres in 1894 he retired from active service. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in June, 1855; made officer, April, 1863; commander, April, 1873; Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour, July, 1880; and Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour, July, 1887. He has been a member of the Superior Council of War; Inspector General of many corps d'armée, and, in case of war, Commander-in-Chief. He is an authority of European reputation on cavalry and cavalry manœuvres.

GALTON, Francis, F.R.S., third and youngest son of S. T. Galton, of Duddeston, near Birmingham, grandson of Dr. Erasmus Darwin, author of "Zoonomia," and cousin of Charles Darwin, the naturalist, was born in 1822, and educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, which he left to study medicine, first at the Birmingham Hospital, and subsequently at King's College, London. He graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1844; travelled, in 1846, to the White Nile, then rarely visited; and in 1850, accompanied by Mr. Anderson, made an exploration of the then unknown Damara and Ovampo lands in South Africa, starting from Walfisch Bay. For this journey, of which he published an account, he received a gold medal from the Royal Geographical Society, in whose proceedings he has ever since taken an active share. Mr. Galton is author of the "Art of Travel, or Shifts and Contrivances in Wild Countries," a work which went through five editions between 1855 and 1872; also of "Meteorographica," 1863, which was the first attempt to chart the progress of the elements of the weather on a large scale, and through which the existence and theory of anti-cyclones was first established by him. In later years he has published the following works, bearing more or less directly on Heredity and on the measurement of the various faculties: — "Hereditary Genius, its Laws and Consequences," 1869; "English Men of Science: their Nature and Nurture," 1874; "Inquiries into Human Faculty and its Development," 1883; "Natural Inheritance," 1889; "Finger Prints," 1893; also several memoirs on anthropometric subjects and on new statistical processes applicable to anthropometry, including that of composite portraiture. He received one of the gold medals of the Royal Society in 1886. He was general Secretary of the British Association from 1863 to 1868, President of its geographical section in 1862 and in 1872, and of the anthropological sections in 1877 and 1885, President of the Anthropological Institute 1885-88, and has been Vice-President of the Royal and the Royal Geographical Societies. He has been a member of the Meteorological Council of the Royal Society ever since its first institution, and is Chairman of the Committee to whom the management of the Kew Observatory is entrusted.

GARDINER, Samuel Rawson, LL.D., was born March 4, 1829, at Ropley, Hants, and educated at Winchester and at Christchurch, Oxford. He became an honorary student of Christchurch, in 1884 Fellow of All Souls', and in 1892 Fellow of Merton; and for some time held the Professorship of Modern History at King's College, London. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the University of Edinburgh. Dr Gardiner has written "The History of England from the Accession of James I. to the Disgrace of Chief-Justice Coke," 1863; "Prince Charles and the Spanish Marriage," 1869; "England under the Duke of Buckingham and Charles I.," 1875; "The Personal Government of Charles I.," 1877; "The Fall of the Monarchy of Charles I.," vols. i. and ii., all which were republished in 1883-4 as a collected history of England, 1603-1642; "Introduction to the Study of English History," conjointly with Mr. J. Bass Mullinger, 1881; "The First Two Stuarts and the Puritan Revolution," 1875; and "The Thirty Years' War," 1874. On Aug. 16, 1882, a Civil List pension of £150 was granted to him "in recognition of his valuable contributions to the history of England." His latest work is "History of the Great Civil War," vol. i., 1886, vol. ii., 1889, vol. iii., 1891; the whole being republished in 1893 in 4 vols. crown 8vo. In 1894 he published vol. 1 of a "History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate," and on the death of Professor Froude was offered the Regius Professorship of Modern History at Oxford.

GARDNER, Professor Percy, M.A. Oxford, Litt. D. Cambridge, was born in London, Nov. 24, 1846, and educated at the City of London School and Christ's College, Cambridge. In 1871 he was appointed Assistant in the Department of Antiquities, British Museum; was elected Fellow of Christ's College, 1872; was appointed Disney Professor of Archæology, Cambridge, 1880; and Lincoln and Merton Professor of Classical Archæology, Oxford, 1887. He has been editor of the Journal of Hellenic Studies since its first issue in 1880; and is the author of "The Types of Greek Coins," 1883; several volumes of the British Museum Catalogue of Greek Coins; and numerous papers in learned journals. Professor Gardner is Vice-President of the Society of Hellenic Studies, and of the Numismatic Society; Ordinary Member of the Imperial German Archæological Institute; F.S.A., &c. Professor Gardner is at present Principal of the English Hellenic School at Athens.

GARLAND, The Hon. Augustus H., American statesman, was born at Covington, Tennessee, June 11, 1832. His parents removed to Arkansas when he was a year old, and that State has since been his home. He began the practice of law in 1853, and had attained considerable prominence by the time the civil war began. He was an elector on the Bell and Everett ticket in the Presidential contest of 1860, and was a delegate to the State convention that voted (May, 1861) to secede from the Union. Though he was personally opposed to secession he followed what seemed to be the sentiment of the South and of his State, and became a member both of the provisional and of the permanent Confederate Congress, serving in the Lower House from 1861 to 1864, and was a member of the Confederate Senate when the war closed. On the dissolution of that body he resumed his profession at Little Rock. In 1867 he was elected to the United States Senate, but was not allowed to take his seat, as Congress had not then restored their full privileges to the Southern States. He was elected Governor of Arkansas in 1874, and in 1877 entered the United States Senate, where he remained until he became a member of President Cleveland's Cabinet as Attorney-General in March, 1885. Since the change of administration in March, 1889, Mr. Garland has been engaged in the practice of law in Washington.

GARNETT, Richard, C.B., LL.D., Keeper of Printed Books in the British Museum, is the eldest son of the late Rev. Richard Garnett, Assistant-Keeper, and was born at Lichfield, Feb. 27, 1835. He was appointed Assistant in the Printed Book Department of the British Museum in 1851, and Assistant-Keeper of Printed Books in 1875; was Superintendant of the Reading Room from 1875 to 1884, and became Keeper of Printed Books in 1890. In April 1883, the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Edinburgh. Dr. Garnett is the author of "Io in Egypt, and other Poems," 1859; "Poems from the German," 1862; "Idylls and Epigrams, chiefly from the Greek Anthology," 1869, republished in 1891 under the title of "A Chapter from the Greek Anthology;" "The Twilight of the Gods, and other tales," 1889; "Iphigenia in Delphi, a dramatic poem," 1890; and of biographies of Carlyle, Emerson, and Milton, in the "Great Writers" series. He has edited his father's "Philological Essays," 1859; "Relics of Shelley," a collection of poetical fragments discovered by himself among the poet's MSS., 1862; selections from Shelley's poems and his letters, in 1880 and 1882; De Quincey's "English Opium Eater," in 1885; and the works of Thomas Love Peacock in 1891. In 1892 he edited and translated, from a unique copy in the British Museum, the narrative of Antonio de Guaras, a Spanish merchant resident in England at the accession of Queen Mary; and in 1893 he edited Drayton's "Battle of Agincourt" and Beckford's "Vathek," the latter with an introduction in which the literary history of the book was fully told for the first time. In the same year a selection from the "Poems" of 1859 was republished, with extensive additions. He has contributed extensively to periodical literature, and written numerous articles in the Encyclopædia Britannica and Dictionary of National Biography. Dr. Garnett has taken an active part in the improvements effected of late years in the library of the British Museum, and from the first superintended the publication of the general catalogue of printed books commenced in 1881. He is a Vice-President of the Library Association of the United Kingdom, and was President in 1892–93. He was made a C.B. at the beginning of 1895.

GARNIER, Jean Louis Charles, architect, born at Paris, Nov. 6, 1825, studied sculpture and high-relief at the École Spéciale de Dessin, obtaining several prizes. In 1842 he entered the École des Beaux-Arts, and remained there six years, studying under MM. Léveil and Hippolyte Lebas, and gaining the great prize in architecture in 1848, for his design for a "Conservatoire pour les arts et métiers." Afterwards he travelled in Greece, measured the temple of Jupiter, in the island of Egina, a polychromatic design for the restoration of which he exhibited at the Salon des Beaux-Arts in 1853, and at the Exposition Universelle of 1855. Returning to France in 1854, after a short visit to Constantinople, M. Garnier was attached as a sub-inspector to the works at the Tour de Saint-Jacques la Boucherie, under M. Ballu. In 1856 he published in the "Revue Archéologique" an explanatory paper relative to the Temple of Egina. He exhibited various works in water-colours, &c., at the salons of 1857, 1859, and 1863, obtained a third-class medal in 1857, a first-class medal in 1863, and was decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honour, Aug. 9, 1864. In 1861 he took part in the open competition for the new Opera-House at Paris; his plans were unanimously adopted by the jury, over which Count Walewski presided, and he was intrusted with the execution of this important work. The Grand Opera-House, which had been nearly completed under Imperial auspices, was opened Jan. 5, 1875. There was a large concourse of foreign visitors present, and many of the highest rank; the ex-King of Hanover, the ex-Queen of Spain, her son, the young King Alfonso, and the Lord Mayor of London. On this occasion M. Garnier was decorated as an Officer of the Legion of Honour. He was appointed Inspector-General of Civil Constructions, Paris, in October 1877. The new theatre at Monaco, designed by him, was opened in Jan. 1879. He has also built the gambling-house there, as well as the observatory at Nice, and the various constructions which illustrated the "History of the Human Habitation" at the Paris Exhibition of 1889. In 1886 M. Garnier visited London, and was presented with the gold medal of the Institute of British Architects.

GARRETT, Edward, nom-de-plume of Mayo, Isabella Fyvie (q.v.)

GARROD, Sir Alfred Baring, M.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.P., Physician Extraordinary to her Majesty the Queen, was born at Ipswich, May 13, 1819, educated at the Ipswich Grammar School and at University College and Hospital; graduated at the University of London, and was placed first in medicine, both at the M.B. examination, 1842, and at the M.D. examination, 1843. He was Assistant-Physician to University College Hospital, 1847, and Physician and Professor of Therapeutics and Clinical Medicine in 1851. In 1863 he became Physician to King's College Hospital and Professor at the College, and in 1874 was made Consulting Physician to King's College Hospital. He was made a Member of the Royal College of Physicians of London in 1851, Fellow in 1856, Senior Censor in 1887, and Vice-President in 1888. He delivered the Gulstonian Lectures at the College, on Diabetes, in 1858; lectures on the New Remedies of the British Pharmacopœia in 1864, and the Lumleian Lectures on the Physiology and Pathology of Uric Acid, especially in relation to Renal Calculi, in 1883. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1858. The following is a list of Sir Alfred Garrod's contributions to medical science:—"On the Conversion of Benzoic into Hippuric Acid in the Animal Economy," 1843, Chemical Society's Transactions. In June, 1847, Sir Alfred Garrod discovered the presence of uric acid in the blood of gouty subjects. A communication upon this was read before the Medical and Chirurgical Society in Feb., 1848, and published in the Transactions for that year. In 1849 he published in the London Journal of Medicine, "Researches on the Pathological Condition of the Blood in Cholera." During the next seven years various papers were published in the Medico-Chirurgical Transactions, "On the Condition of the Blood and Urine in Gout, Rheumatics, and Bright's Disease," and "On the Treatment of Acute Rheumatism by Alkalies;" also "On the Effects of Caustic Alkalies in decomposing the active principles of Belladonna, Stramonium, and Hyoscyamus, and destroying their Physiological and Medicinal Effects." In 1855 he published "The Essentials of Materia Medica and Therapeutics," a work which has gone through a large number of editions, and has been very extensively used as a text-book on the subject. In 1860 Sir Alfred Garrod published his work "On the Nature and Treatment of Gout and Rheumatic Gout," for which latter he proposed to substitute the name of Rheumatoid Arthritis, a name which is now almost universally received by the Profession. This work contained all his researches on the pathology of those diseases. It also contained an account of the action of the Lithia salts and their value as remedial agents. Sir Alfred Garrod first introduced Lithia as an internal remedy. Lithia was, at the time he published his work, almost unknown, but is now used in every country in the treatment of gout and renal calculi. The work has been translated and published in German and French. In 1889 Sir Alfred Garrod published in the pages of the Lancet the results of his inquiries, over many years, of the value of very small but long continued doses of sulphur in the treatment of liver, skin, and joint affections; also on the value of the treatment at Aix-les-Bains.

GARTH, The Rt. Hon. Sir Richard, P.C., is the son of the late Rev. Richard Garth, of Farnham, Surrey, and was born in 1820, was educated at Eton and at Christchurch, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degree of M.A. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1847, and went on the Home Circuit. He sat in Parliament for a short time (1866-68) in the Conservative interest, as one of the members for Guildford. In March, 1875, he was nominated Chief-Justice of Bengal, and received the honour of knighthood. He resigned the Chief Justiceship in 1886.

GASKELL, Walter Holbrook, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., son of John Dakin Gaskell, of Highgate, Barrister-at-Law, was born at Naples on Nov. 1, 1847, educated at Sir Roger Cholmondeley's School, Highgate, and entered at Trinity College, Cambridge, in Oct., 1865. He was elected to a foundation scholarship in 1868, and obtained a degree in the Mathematical Tripos (26th Wrangler) in 1869. After taking his degree, he determined to read for a medical career. At that time Dr. M. Foster came to Cambridge, and under his influence he determined to devote himself to physiological research. He went to University Hospital in 1872, finished his medical studies, and took his M.D. degree in 1878. In 1874 he went over to Leipzig and worked with Professor C. Ludwig for a year, mainly at the circulation of blood through muscle. In 1875 he came back to England, and settled down at Grantchester, near Cambridge, working in the physiological laboratory and assisting in the teaching of the physiological department in Cambridge. At the end of 1888 he left Grantchester and went into Cambridge to reside. In 1881, his paper "On the Rhythm of the Heart of the Frog, and the Action of the Vagus Nerve" was chosen for the Croonian lecture, and in the following year he was elected to the Fellowship of the Royal Society. In 1883 he was made a University Lecturer in Physiology; in 1889 was elected to a Fellowship at Trinity Hall; in 1888 was awarded the Marshall Hall Prize of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society for his investigations on the "Sympathetic Nervous System," and elected to the fellowship of that Society. In 1889 he was awarded the Gold Medal of the Royal Society for his researches into the innervation of the heart and the nature of the sympathetic nervous system. Since 1876 he has published—chiefly in the Journal of Physiology—a series of papers relating, in the first place, to the innervation of the heart, which led to the investigation of the structure of the heart, nerves, and so to that of the whole sympathetic system. The main paper, giving the results of these investigations, was published in the Journal of Physiology, 1886, vol. vii., under the title "On the Relation between the Structure, Function, and Distribution of the Nerves, which Innervate the Vascular and Visceral Systems." The continuance of the same line of thought has led to a new conception of the meaning of the cranial nerves, and to the theory that the central nervous system of the vertebrates is in reality derived from the coalesced central nervous system and alimentary canal of a crustaceous-like ancestor. The three chief papers, in which the evidence for this theory is given, are "On the Relation between the Structure, Function, Distribution, and Origin of the Cranial Nerves; together with a Theory of the Origin of the Nervous System of Vertebrata," Journal of Physiology, vol. x., 1889; "On the Origin of the Central Nervous System of Vertebrates," Brain, vol. xii., 1889; "On the Origin of Vertebrates from a Crustacean-like Ancestor," Quarterly Journal of Microscopic Science, 1890. The last paper is the beginning of a series, which deals with the whole question of the origin of the Vertebrata. In 1875 he married Catherine Sharpe, daughter of R. A. Parker, of Highgate, of the firm of Messrs. Sharpe, Parker & Co., solicitors.

GATLING, Richard Jordan, M.D., was born in North Carolina, Sept. 12, 1818. While a boy he assisted his father in perfecting a machine for sowing cotton-seed, and another for thinning out cotton plants. Subsequently he invented a machine for sowing rice. Removing to St. Louis, in 1844, he adapted this invention to sowing wheat in drills. For several winters he attended medical lectures at Laporte (Ind.,) and at Cincinnati, and in 1849 removed to Indianapolis, where he engaged in railroad enterprises and real estate speculations. In 1850 he invented a double-acting hemp-brake, and in 1857 a steam-plough, which, however, he did not bring to any practical result. In 1861 he conceived the idea of the revolving battery gun which bears his name. Of these he constructed six at Cincinnati, which were destroyed by the burning of his factory. Afterwards he had twelve manufactured elsewhere, which were used by General Butler on the James River. In 1865 he improved his invention, and in the year following, after satisfactory trial, it was adopted into the United States service. It has also been adopted by several European governments. More recently he has invented an improved method of casting large cannon of steel, and also a torpedo and gunboat, and a pneumatic gun for discharging high explosives. He has visited Europe several times, and he exhibited his guns at the Paris Exposition in 1867. In 1888 Mr. Gatling established himself at Hartford, where his gun foundry is now situate.

GATTY, The Rev. Alfred, D.D., is a member of a Cornish family, but was born in the City of London, April 18, 1813. He was educated at the Charterhouse and Eton. For a short time he prepared for the legal profession, but in April, 1831, he entered at Exeter College, Oxford, and whilst an undergraduate printed a small volume of poems. At the beginning of 1836 he took the degree of B.A., and in 1837 was ordained by the Bishop of Ripon to the curacy of Bellerby, in the parish of Spennithorne, Yorkshire. In 1838 he graduated M.A., and in the following year married Margaret, the younger daughter of the Rev. Dr. Scott, best known as having been the friend and chaplain of Lord Nelson. In the year of his marriage he was presented to the vicarage of Ecclesfield, near Sheffield, where he has ever since resided. The 50th year of Dr. Gatty's incumbency was celebrated on September 26, 1889, with great cordiality by his parishioners, who presented him with an admirable portrait of himself, painted in oils by Mrs. S. E. Waller. Mrs. Gatty, being highly accomplished, and with fine literary taste, joined her husband in writing a Life of Dr. Scott in 1842, which was quickly out of print. They also subsequently edited a Life of Dr. Wolff, the missionary, which passed through two editions; and they described their Tour in Ireland in 1861, under the title of "The Old Folks from Home," which had a like success. Mrs. Gatty was also assisted by her husband, during her long fatal illness, in the compilation of her last work, "A Book of Sundials." On Oct. 4, 1873, Dr. Gatty lost his gifted wife, after ten years of suffering, during which time her intellect never lost its strength or clearness. The late Mrs. Ewing was their daughter, who wrote tales for the young, including "Jackanapes," "The Story of a Short Life," &c. Dr. Gatti's own literary works are a volume of Sermons, 1846; a second volume of Sermons, 1848; "The Bell: its Origin, History, and Uses," second edition, 1848; "The Vicar and his Duties," 1853; "Twenty Plain Sermons," 1858; "The Testimony of David," 1870; a folio edition of Hunter's "History of Hallamshire," to which he added about one-third new matter, 1869; also "Sheffield: Past and Present," 1873;-"A Life at one Living," 1884; and in 1885 a third edition of "A Key to In Memoriam," annotated by Lord Tennyson. In 1861 he was appointed a rural dean by

GAULTIER, Bon. See MARTIN, SIR THEODORE.

GAYÁNGOS Y ARCE, Pascual de, was born at Seville, the 21st of June, 1809, being the son of Brigadier-general D. José de Gayángos y Nebot. He made his first studies at Madrid, and was, at the age of 13, sent to France, where at Fontlevoy, in the department of Loire and Cher, first, and afterwards in Paris, he completed his education, having attended for two years the lectures of Baron Silvestre de Sacy, the celebrated Orientalist. After a few years passed in France he came to England, married, and returned to Madrid, where he obtained a post in the Treasury, and in 1833 was appointed interpreter to the Foreign Office till 1836, when the political events and the Carlist war made him resign his post, and come to England. In London, where he resided till 1843, he devoted his attention to Oriental and Spanish literature; and besides numerous contributions to reviews, magazines, and other periodical issues, he made, at the request of the Royal Asiatic Society of England, a translation into English of the History of the Mohammedan dynasties by Almakkarí (2 vols., 4to., 1841-3). In March of the same year (1843), he was invited to return to Spain, and take charge of the Professorship of Oriental languages recently created at the University of Madrid, which post he accepted and filled until 1872. Thence he was promoted, in 1881, to the office of Director of Public Instruction; but having in the same year been elected Senator by the town of Huelva, he was obliged to resign, that office being incompatible with a seat in the Spanish Senate. Since then he has mostly resided in London, engaged in various publications, such as a detailed and classified catalogue of the Spanish MSS. in the British Museum, of which three volumes have already been published, as well as the "Calendar of Letters and Papers illustrative of the History of England in connection with that of Spain, during the reign of Henry VIII." (7 vols., royal 8vo.). The above works are in English. In Spain Señor Gayángos has contributed largely to illustrate the history of his native country. Besides several learned papers on the history of Mohammedan Spain, such as "Memoria del Moro Raris," Madrid, 1845, 4to., and "Memorial Historico Español," 19 vols., small 4to., his contributions to various societies, and chiefly to that of Los Bibliofilos, have been very numerous.

GEDDES, William Duguid, LL.D., Principal and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Aberdeen, was born in Glass, near Huntly, Aberdeenshire, on Nov. 21, 1828, and educated chiefly at Elgin Academy and University, and King's College, Aberdeen. He obtained his first important appointment by competitive trial in 1853 as Rector of the Grammar School of Aberdeen, in succession to Dr. James Melvin; in 1855 he was elected Professor of Greek in his own University; thereafter became, in 1860, Professor of Greek in the United University at the union of King's and Marischal Colleges in Aberdeen, in which office he continued until Dec. 1885, when he became Principal of the University. In 1876 he received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Edinburgh. He is also D. Litt. of the University of Dublin, and has been Vice-President of the "Society for Hellenic Studies." Among his numerous published works have been:—"A Greek Grammar," first issued in 1855; this has gone through many editions; an edition of the "Phædo of Plato," first published in 1863, second edition in 1885; "Problem of the Homeric Poems," 1878; "Flosculi Græci Boreales," 1882. He is also a Vice-President of the New Spalding Club in Aberdeen; and he issued in 1888, along with Mr. Peter Duguid, a volume on the Heraldic Ceiling of the Cathedral Church of St. Machar in Aberdeen. His latest work has been the "Musa Latina Aberdoniensis," of which the first volume was issued in 1892. It is as a classical scholar and teacher and a literary archæologist that he has attained distinction.

GEIKIE, Sir Archibald, F.R.S., F.R.S.E, D.Sc., LL.D., Director-General of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom, born in Edinburgh in 1835, and educated at the High School and the University; was appointed to the Geological Survey in 1855. He is a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, of the Geological Society of London, &c., and a Correspondent of the Institute of France, of the Berlin Academy, and of many other foreign academies; is the author of numerous geological memoirs in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, in the "Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh," in "Memoirs of the Geological Survey," in the Quarterly and North British Review, in Nature, &c.; of "The Story of a Boulder," 1858; "The Life of Professor Edward Forbes" (conjointly with the late Dr. George Wilson), 1861; "The Phenomena of the Glacial Drift of Scotland," 1863; "The Scenery of Scotland viewed in connection with its Physical Geology," 1865 (new edition, largely re-written, 1887); "A Student's Manual of Geology" (in conjunction with the late J. B. Jukes), 1871; "Physical Geography," and "Geology," in the "Science Primers," 1873; "Memoir of Sir Roderick I. Murchison: with notices of his Scientific Contemporaries, and of the Rise and Progress of Palæozoic Geology in Britain," 2 vols., 1874; "Geological Map of Scotland," 1876; "Class-Book of Physical Geography," 1877; "Outlines of Field-Geology," 1879; "Geological Sketches at Home and Abroad," 1882; "A Text-Book of Geology," 1882 (3rd edition 1893); "A Memoir of Sir A. C. Ramsay," 1894; "A Class-Book of Geology," 1886. On the extension of the Geological Survey, in 1867, Sir Archibald was appointed Director of the Survey of Scotland; and in Dec., 1870, he was nominated by Sir Roderick Murchison as first occupant of the new chair of Geology and Mineralogy founded in the University of Edinburgh by Sir Roderick and the Crown. He resigned the chair in 1882, and was succeeded by his brother. The University of St. Andrews conferred on him the degree of LL.D. in Feb., 1872; and the same degree was given to him by the University of Edinburgh at its tercentenary celebration in April, 1885. He has also received the degree of D.Sc. from the Universities of Cambridge and Dublin. On the resignation of Sir Andrew Ramsay he was, at the close of 1881, appointed Director-General of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom, and Director of the Museum of Practical Geology, London. He was Foreign Secretary of the Royal Society from 1889 to 1893; President of the Geological Society, 1890—1892; and President of the British Association, 1892. He has received the Murchison Medal of the Geological Society, and has been twice awarded the McDougal Brisbane Medal of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He was knighted in 1891 for his public services.

GEIKIE, Professor James, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., the younger brother of the above Sir Archibald Geikie, was born in 1839 at Edinburgh; and is the son of Mr. J. S. Geikie, author of "My Heather Hills" and other well-known Scottish Songs; and was educated at the High School and University of Edinburgh. In 1861 he joined the Geological Survey, in which service he rose to be District Surveyor or local director of the Survey in Scotland. He resigned this position on his appointment, in 1882, to the Murchison Chair of Geology and Mineralogy in Edinburgh University, which he now occupies, in succession to his brother. On the institution, by the Royal Commission, of a Faculty of Science in that University, he was elected Dean of the Faculty. Professor Geikie holds several honorary degrees, is member of many scientific societies in this country, and honorary member of the Geologiska Föreningens i Stockholm, the Société Belge de Géologie, the American Philosophical Society, &c. He is the author of many papers dealing with Palæozoic and Pleistocene Geology and Physical Geography. His principal works are: "The Great Ice Age, and its Relation to the Antiquity of Man," 1874 (3rd edit., 1894); "Prehistoric Europe; a Geological Sketch," 1881; "Outlines of Geology," 1886 (2nd edit., 1888); "Songs and Lyrics by H. Heine and other German Poets," 1887; "Fragments of Earth-Lore," 1893. In 1876, at the request of the Colonial Office, he accompanied the late Sir Andrew Ramsay to inspect and report on the water-supply for the town and garrison of Gibraltar. Professor Geikie is an original member and one of the founders of the Royal Scottish Geographical Society, of whose organ—the Scottish Geographical Magazine—he is honorary editor. He has received the Macdougall-Brisbane Medal of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and the Murchison Medal of the Geological Society.

GELL, The Right Rev. Frederick, D.D., Bishop of Madras, son of the late Rev. Philip Gell, of Derby, born in 1821, took his B.A. degree at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1843, and soon afterwards became Fellow and Tutor of Christ's College. He proceeded to the degree of M.A. in 1846. Having been Chaplain to the Bishop of London, and one of her Majesty's preachers at Whitehall, he, in 1861, was consecrated to the see of Madras.

GENOA (Duke of), Thomas Albert Victor de Savoy, only son of the late Prince Ferdinand, Duke of Genoa, the brother of King Victor Emmanuel, was born Feb. 6, 1854. After receiving an English education at Harrow School, he went through a regular course of study in the Marine College at Genoa, and came out an officer of the Royal Italian

Navy, in which capacity he was intrusted with the command of the Vettor Pisani, a corvette of the first rank, bound on a voyage round the world. The vessel completed her cruise in 1880, and the Duke's journal of the voyage was published at the close of that year.

GEORGE I. (Christian William Ferdinand Adolphus George), King of the Hellenes, second son of the King of Denmark, and brother of the Czarina and of the Princess of Wales, was born Dec. 24, 1845, and served for some time in the Danish Navy. After the abdication of Otho I., the late King of Greece, in 1863, the vacant throne was first tendered by a majority of the Greek people to Prince Alfred of England, whose nomination the English Government refused to accept. It was then offered to Duke Ernest of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, who declined it; and eventually to Prince Christian, who, with the concurrence of his own family and the consent of the Great Powers, accepted it, and began to reign, as King George I., on June 6, 1863. Since the year 1876, when active trouble broke out in the Balkan Peninsula, King George's position has been very difficult; but as yet he has maintained it without going to war. His country gained a considerable addition of territory by the decision of the Conference which followed the Congress of Berlin. In 1886, after the revolution at Philippopolis and the Servo-Bulgarian war, Greece (under a rash minister, M. Delyannis) was for declaring war against Turkey, and was only stopped by the firm attitude of England. The King of the Hellenes pays a yearly visit to the Court of Denmark, with which he keeps up warm relations, as also with that of Russia. The twenty-fifth anniversary of his accession to the throne was the occasion of many popular manifestations of personal regard for the King (Oct. 21, 1888). He was married at St. Petersburg to the Princess Olga, daughter of the Grand Duke Constantine, Oct. 27, 1867. The Princess Olga was born Sept. 3, 1851. His son Constantine, Duke of Sparta, the Crown Prince of Greece, was married at Athens on Oct. 20, 1889, to the Princess Sophie of Prussia, the aunt of the Emperor of Germany. The Princess Alexandra of Greece was married in June of the same year to the Grand Duke Paul of Russia.

GEORGE, Henry, was born in Philadelphia, Sept. 2, 1839. He attended the public schools until 1853, when he went into a counting-room, and then to sea, learning something of printing in the meanwhile. In 1858 he reached California, where he worked at the case again until 1866, when he became a reporter and afterwards editor of various papers, among them the San Francisco Times and Post. In Aug. 1880, he removed to New York, where he has since resided. He spent a year in England and Ireland, in 1881 and 1882, where he was twice under arrest as a "suspect," but was released upon his identity being established. Mr. George is chiefly known through his addresses and books upon economic questions, in which he attributes the evils of society to the treatment of land as subject to full individual ownership, and contends that, while the possession of land should be left to the individual, it should be subject to the payment to the community of land values proper, or economic rent. This doctrine, now known as "The Single Tax," aims at abolishing all taxes for raising revenues except a tax levied on the value of land irrespective of improvements. He has published "Our Land and Land Policy," 1871; "Progress and Poverty," 1879; "Irish Land Question," 1881; "Social Problems," 1883; "Property in Land," a controversy with the Duke of Argyll, 1884; "Protection or Free Trade," 1886; "The Condition of Labour, an Open Letter to Pope Leo XIII," 1891; and "A Perplexed Philosopher" (Herbert Spencer), 1892. Mr. George visited Great Britain again in 1883-4, 1884-5, and 1889, lecturing on economic questions, particularly that of land ownership, and in 1890 made a similar tour through Australia. In 1886 he was nominated by the United Labour Party as candidate for the Mayoralty of New York, and polled 68,000 votes against 90,000 for his Democratic opponent, and 60,000 for the Republican. The next year he received over 70,000 votes as the same party's candidate for Secretary of State of New York (State). On the adoption by the Democratic party in 1888 of a low tariff as a national issue, Mr. George announced that he should, as a free trader, support Mr. Cleveland, and this ended the United Labour Organization, though the propagation of the "Single Tax" has gone on in quieter ways more actively then ever. In the Presidential campaign of 1892 over a million copies of a very cheap edition of "Protection or Free Trade" were circulated in the United States, with a marked result upon the election. Between 1887 and 1890 Mr. George published the Standard, a weekly paper, in New York.

GERMAIN, Antoine-Henri-Marie, a French politician and financier, was born at Lyons, Feb. 19, 1824. He was one of the founders, and is now the Chairman, of the great financial company, the Crédit Lyonnais. In 1869, he was elected as Liberal member for the 3rd circumscription of the Ain, and was chosen again at the general election for the National Assembly in 1871. He has several times been returned since as a moderate Republican. As the embodiment of "Left Centre" principles, and as one of the highest French authorities on finance, M. Germain has always held a very distinguished position, and his rare speeches on the different budgets have made an impression not only in Paris, but throughout Europe. He is opposed to much of the financial policy of the Republic. He has published several economic treatises, of which "La Situation Financière de la France en 1886" may be mentioned.

GERMANY, Emperor of. See WILLIAM.

GÉRÔME, Jean Léon, Hon. R.A., was born at Vesoul, Haute-Saône, May 11, 1824, studied in his native place, went to Paris in 1841, and entered the studio of Paul Delaroche, under whose direction he pursued, for a time, his studies at the École des Beaux-Arts. He remained under that celebrated artist until 1844, and accompanied him in his journey to Italy. Returning to France in 1845, he exhibited, for the first time, at the Salon of 1847; went on an excursion to Turkey and the eastern banks of the Danube in 1853, and to Upper and Lower Egypt in 1856. These travels furnished him with numerous subjects for his paintings. In Dec., 1863, he was appointed Professor of Painting in the École des Beaux-Arts. Since 1847, M. Gérôme has exhibited "The Virgin, the Infant Jesus and Saint John;" "Bacchus and Cupid;" "A Greek Interior;" the "Frieze" of the vase commemorative of the Great Exhibition held in London in 1851; "The Age of Augustus and the Birth of Jesus Christ;" "Rembrandt;" a "Portrait of Rachel;" "The Plague at Marseilles;" "The Death of St. Jerome;" "Lioness meeting a Jaguar;" "Rex Tibicen," 1874; and "L'Eminence Grise," 1874. To these may be added several classical and Eastern subjects, especially "Cæsar and Cleopatra," a very famous picture; "The Slave Market of Cairo;" "Promenade of the Harem;" "Le Poète, la Soif," 1888; "Un Coin du Caire," 1890; and numerous pictures of Arab and Egyptian life. He has in recent years devoted much attention to sculpture, one of his latest works being a group entitled, "Pygmalion and Galatea," 1892. M. Gérôme obtained a third-class medal in 1847, two second-class medals in 1848 and 1855, and higher medals at more recent dates, and the decoration of the Legion of Honour in Nov., 1855. He was decorated with the order of the Red Eagle in 1869, and appointed a Commander of the Legion of Honour, in Feb., 1878, and is a Member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts.

GERSPACH, Edouard, was born at Thann (Alsace), in 1833, and is now Director of the National manufactory of the Gobelins, and of that of Mosaics. His publications have chiefly been upon mosaics, the manufacture of glass, and the decorative arts. He has in preparation two works, one, "La Manufacture des Gobelins," and the other, "Les Anciennes Faïenceries Françaises." He has published "La Mosaique," 1881; "L'Art de la Verrerie," 1885; and "Les Tapisseries Coptes," 1890.

GERSTER, Madame Etelka, was born at Kaschau, in Hungary, June 16, 1857. At a very early age she evinced musical abilities of no ordinary kind. By the advice of the director of the Conservatoire at Vienna, who chanced to hear her sing at the head of one of the Catholic processions of her native town, she was placed under the tuition of the far-famed Madame Marchesi, with whom she studied most diligently for three years (1873-76). In the meantime, rumours of her wonderful voice had got abroad, and offers were made to her from several German towns. Etelka, however, declined these, as she was determined to begin her career in an Italian school; and in Jan., 1876, she made her début at Venice, under the management of Signor Gardini, in the character of Gilda, in Verdi's "Rigoletto," and with wonderful success. Almost at once followed the parts of Ophelia, Lucia, Amina in "La Sonnambula," and "Marguerite," which last character she at first sang, as it was originally written, in French. Her next triumph was at Berlin, where she created such a furore as had never been known previously in the German capital. The demand for places was so great that the administration of the theatre was compelled to ask the public to apply by writing, and it is said that more than 21,000 applications were refused. She then made a short sojourn at Buda-Pesth, where she appeared in the operas of "La Sonnambula," and "Hamlet." The "Hungarian Nightingale," as she has been called, next went to St. Petersburg and Moscow, where she carried everything before her, and was, at the Emperor's express desire, appointed "Kammersängerin." For her cooperation in the Court concerts, his Majesty presented her with 4,000 marks and a handsome bracelet, while the Empress gave her a magnificent chain ornamented with pearls and diamonds. After she had sung at Pesth and Breslau, Mr. Mapleson had the good fortune to secure her, and she came to London. Here she first sang before an English audience on June 23, 1877, in "La Sonnambula." She at once became a great favourite with the English public, and her performances at Her Majesty's Theatre during the season of 1878 were a continued series of successes.

GEVAERT, François Auguste, born July 31, 1828, at Huysse, near Oudenarde, is the son of a baker, and was originally destined by his parents to follow that trade. His great musical talent, however, becoming apparent, he was sent in 1841 to the Conservatoire at Ghent, where he studied under Sommère and Mengal. He was then appointed organist of the Jesuits' Church, and in 1846 a Christmas cantata of his composition was performed in Ghent. In May, 1847, he gained the first prize for composition at the national competition at Brussels, but was allowed to postpone his foreign tour for two years, during which his first two operas, "Hughes de Somerghem," and "La Comédie à la Ville," were produced in Ghent. In 1849 he proceeded on his tour, and went to Spain. His reports on Spanish music were printed in the bulletin of the Académie of Brussels for 1851. On Nov. 27, 1852, he produced "Georgette" at the Théâtre Lyrique in Paris, and in Oct., 1854, "Le Billet de Marguérite," both with extraordinary success. For his cantata, "De Nationale Verjaerdag," composed in honour of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the reign of King Leopold, he received the Order of Leopold. In 1867 he was appointed Inspecteur de la Musique at the Académie de Musique, Paris, a post which he retained until Sept., 1870, since which time he has devoted his attention more especially to the history of music, and in 1875 brought out the first part of his "Histoire et Théorie de la Musique dans l'Antiquité." His other works comprise "Quentin Durward," 1858; "Château Trompette," 1860; and "Le Capitaine Henriot," 1864; all produced at the Opéra Comique, Paris, with great success; as was also "Les Deux Amours," at the theatre of Baden-Baden, 1861. In connection with the history of music he has written "Leerboek van den Gregoriaenschen zang," 1856; "Traité d'Instrumentation," 1863; and "Les Gloires d'Italie" 1868; and in the five last years, "Nouveau Traité d'Instrumentation," 1885; "Traité d'Orchestration;" and "Les Origines du Chant Liturgique de l'Église Latine," 1890. In 1871 he succeeded Fétis as Director of the Conservatoire at Brussels, and was elected a Member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts in 1873.

GIARD, Professor Alfred, Ancien Député du Nord, was born at Valenciennes, Aug. 8, 1846, and educated in his native city, and also at Douai until 1867, when he entered l'École Normale Supérieure. He took his degree in 1875; and, after holding some minor appointments, became Professor of Zoology à la Faculté des Sciences de Paris, in 1880. He is the author of numerous papers on zoological subjects, respecting which he is a strong supporter of Darwinianism. He is a member of the Comité Consultatif des Pêches Maritimes; and founder and director of the Laboratoire de Zoologie Maritime de Wimereux. In 1887 he was appointed Maître des Conférences at the l'École Normale Supérieure, and was subsequently appointed first occupant of the chair of Zoology founded at the Faculty of Sciences by the town of Paris. After his election to the Chamber, in 1882, he took an active part in politics, holding the views of the extreme Left, but retired when the Scrutin de liste was re-established.

GIBBONS, Cardinal James, Archbishop of Baltimore, was born in Baltimore, U.S.A., on July 23, 1834, entered St. Charles' College, transferred in 1857 to St, Mary's Seminary, and on June 30, 1861, was ordained priest there. He was made assistant priest at St. Patrick's, Baltimore; made pastor of St. Bridget's, Canton; was promoted to the Cathedral, and made secretary to Archbishop Spalding. He became Assistant Chancellor of the Second Plenary Council of Baltimore in 1866; was made Vicar-Apostolic of North Carolina in 1868, and opened schools, built asylums, erected churches, and increased the number of priests from 5 to 15. He was translated to Richmond in 1872, and made its bishop and the coadjutor of Archbishop Boyle of Baltimore in 1877, and succeeded him the same year. At the age of 43, he was Archbishop of the greatest See in N. America. Working with the same activity in establishing asylums, schools, homes, etc., he was appointed by Leo. XIII. to preside over the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, and was rewarded for his services by a Cardinal's hat, June 30, 1886. The silver jubilee of his episcopal consecration, which occurred on August 16, 1893, was celebrated with great pomp by a concourse of Archbishops and Bishops on Oct. 18, of the same year. He has written many pastorals and two books; "The Faith of Our Fathers," 1876, said to be the most popular book of the kind of our day; and "Our Christian Heritage," 1889. Both books have been translated into many languages, and have served to increase his popularity with all classes.

GIBSON, The Right Hon. John George, youngest son of Mr. William Gibson, of Roehforest, co. Tipperary (who was Taxing Master in Chancery), and brother of Lord Ashbourne, was born in 1846, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he had a brilliant career, taking the first two gold medals in Classics and History and Political Science. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1870, and joined the Leinster Circuit. He was created a Queen's Council in 1880, and in 1885 was elected Conservative member for the Walton Division of Liverpool, which he represented also in the next Parliament. In 1885 he was appointed her Majesty's Third Serjeant-at Law, and in Lord Salisbury's second administration (1886) held the posts of Attorney-General and Solicitor-General for Ireland.

GIFFEN, Robert, LL.D., was born at Strathaven, Lanarkshire, in 1837, and educated chiefly at the parish school in that town. He was employed as clerk in a solicitor's office, partly in Strathaven and partly in Glasgow, from 1850 to 1857, attending for two sessions at Glasgow College in 1856-7 and 1857-8; and was afterwards employed in a commercial house in Glasgow from 1858 to 1860, becoming connected with the press in the latter year as sub-editor and reporter on the staff of the Stirling Journal. In 1862 he left Stirling for London, to occupy a position on the staff of the Globe newspaper, with which he was connected, as sub-editor and contributor, until 1866; for a short time after that he assisted Mr. Morley in the Fortnightly Review; from 1868 to 1876 he was assistant editor and principal contributor to the Economist, under Mr. Bagehot, being also from 1873 to 1876 City editor of and writer of the Trade and Finance article in the Daily News. In 1876 he was appointed chief of the Statistical Department of the Board of Trade, the office being merged in 1882 in that of Assistant-Secretary, Commercial Department. During his connection with the press he was a contributor to the Fortnightly Review, Saturday Review, Spectator, and other journals, and in his official capacity has written numerous reports on commercial matters, besides giving evidence on similar subjects, e.g., sugar bounties, gold and silver, Channel tunnel, &c., before nine Committees of the House of Commons and Royal Commissions. In 1881 Mr. Giffen resigned his post at the Board of Trade, and was understood to be for some time on the staff of the Times, but the post was not actually vacated, only leave of absence was given for a considerable time to enable him to fulfil the engagements which he had made in view of his resignation. He is the author of "Stock Exchange Securities: an Essay on the general causes of Fluctuation in their Price," published 1878; "Essays in Finance," 1st series, 1879 (4th ed. 1886), 2nd series, 1886, &c. Several of the papers published in the two volumes of "Essays in Finance" above noticed consisted of papers read before the Statistical Society, or addresses as President; among the principal being a paper on Recent Accumulations of Capital in the United Kingdom, read 1878; the Use of Import and Export Statistics, read 1882, and the Progress of the Working Classes, read 1883. Among other subjects treated are the Depreciation of Gold, 1848-72 (1887); Trade Depression and Low Prices, 1885, and Gold Supply, the Rate of Discount and Prices, 1886.

GIGLIUCCI, Countess, née Clara Anastasia Novello, fourth daughter of Mr. Vincent Novello, musical composer, born in London, June 10, 1818, at an early age displayed so much musical talent as to induce her father to give her a thoroughly professional education. Her progress repaid the care bestowed upon her, for at the early age of eleven years she won, by competition, her admission as a pupil into the Conservatoire de Musique Sacrèe at Paris, where for two years she studied assiduously, and at one of the public examinations of the pupils was complimented by Charles X. and his Court. On the closing of the institution, in the Revolution of 1830, she returned home, fitted to take a prominent part among the singers of the day, at the concerts of the Philharmonic Society, and other leading musical entertainments. When only seventeen years of age she was elected an Associate of that Society, and soon afterwards accepted an invitation from Mendelssohn to take part in the Leipsic Gewandhaus Concerts. In Berlin and Vienna she was equally well received; and so great was her success at the first-mentioned place, that the late King presented her with introductions to his sister, the Empress of Russia, and to the Court of Vienna. Before this time Malibran and Rubini advised her to go to Italy, and study for the stage. Her success at Vienna induced her to take part in the musical festivals in Lombardy, and she felt disposed to follow their advice; but, owing to engagements at St. Petersburg and in Germany, could not carry out this plan until 1839-40. She appeared at Padua, in 1841, in the character of Semiramide with such success that engagements at Bologna, Modena, and Genoa followed, and in 1842 both Rome and Genoa endeavoured to secure her for the fêtes of the Carnival. In 1843 she returned to England, and sang in London and Manchester; and having married Count Gigliucci, she withdrew from the stage in 1844. Circumstances, however, induced her to return in 1850; and she constantly appeared in concerts, oratorios, and operas, on the Continent and in London, until 1860, when she finally retired.

GILBERT, Alfred, R.A., sculptor, was born in Berners Street, London, in 1854, and first studied his art under Boehm, in 1874, after which he went to Paris, where he studied at the École Des Beaux-Arts under M. Cavelier. At the end of three years he went to Rome, where he executed the "Kiss of Victory" in marble. He first attracted attention by his "Perseus Arming," and some time later he exhibited a small bronze head, which made a great impression on all the artists who saw it. In Rome he also executed "Icarus" amongst many other works. In 1886 he exhibited at the Royal Academy the plaster model of the "Enchanted Chair," and at the Grosvenor Gallery a small statuette. He has executed the tomb of the late Duke of Clarence in the Memorial Chapel, Windsor. He was elected a Royal Academician in Dec., 1892.

GILBERT, Sir John, R.A., President of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours, was born in 1817. In 1836 his first exhibited picture, a water-colour drawing, "The Arrest of Lord Hastings by the Protector, Richard, Duke of Gloucester," was in the Suffolk Street Gallery, and an oil painting was in the Royal Academy, then at Somerset House, in the same year. In 1839 he first exhibited at the British Institution, and from that time has been almost constantly represented at that Gallery, and occasionally at the Royal Academy. His best-known oil pictures are—"Don Quixote giving advice to Sancho Panza," followed by many other subjects from Cervantes; "The Education of Gil Blas;" a scene from "Tristram Shandy;" "Othello before the Senate;" "The Murder of Thomas Becket;" "The Plays of Shakspere," a kind of tableau, in which the principal characters in each play are introduced; "Charge of Cavaliers at Naseby;" "A Drawing-Room at St. James's;" "A Regiment of Royalist Cavalry;" "Rubens and Teniers;" "The Studio of Rembrandt;" "Wolsey and Buckingham;" "A Convocation of Clergy;" and "The Entry of Joan of Arc into Orleans." More recently he has exhibited at the Royal Academy "The Field of the Cloth of Gold," in 1874; "Tewkesbury Abbey: Queen Margaret carried prisoner to Edward after the Battle of Tewkesbury;" "Mrs. Gilbert," and "Don Quixote and Sancho at the Castle of the Duke and Duchess," in 1875; "Crusaders," and "Richard II. Resigning the Crown to Bolingbroke," in 1876; "Cardinal Wolsey at Leicester Abbey," and "Doge and Senators of Venice," in 1887; "Ready!" and "Maydew," in 1878; "Ego et Rex Meus," in 1889; and "Onward," in 1890. As an illustrator of books, pictorial newspapers, and other weekly publications, his name has for a long period been familiar to the public. He contributed in this way to the Illustrated London News for many years, from the first number of that journal, but has for some time ceased to do so. Most of the best editions of the British classics have been illustrated by him, concluding with an edition of Shakspere, a work upon which he was occupied for many years. In 1852 he was elected an Associate, in 1853 a member, and in 1871 the President, of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours, in whose gallery he has been a constant exhibitor. He shortly afterwards received the honour of knighthood. He is an honorary member of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours of Belgium, of the Society of Artists of Belgium, honorary President of the Liverpool Society of Water-Colour Painters, and honorary member of the Royal Society of British Artists. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy Jan. 29, 1872, and an Academician June 29, 1876. He is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. Having for some years declined to part with any picture, with the idea of some day presenting his works to the nation, he, in 1893, determined to give them to the Public Art Galleries of the City of London, Manchester, Birmingham and Liverpool. As some acknowledgment of this noble gift, he was presented with the honorary freedom of the City of London, he being the first and only artist who had at any time been so honoured.

GILBERT, John Thos., F.S.A., M.R.I.A., was born in 1829, in Dublin, in which city his father was Consul for Portugal and Algarve. He was educated at Dublin and in England; was appointed Secretary of the Public Record Office of Ireland in 1867, and held that post till its abolition in 1875. He edited "Facsimiles of National Manuscripts of Ireland," by command of her Majesty Queen Victoria. He is a Governor of the National Gallery of Ireland, and a Trustee, on behalf of the Crown, of the National Library of Ireland, Dublin; Inspector of MSS. in Ireland for the Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts; Member of the Council and Librarian of the Royal Irish Academy, Dublin; Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, London; Hon. Professor of Archæology in the Royal Academy of Arts, Dublin; editor of a series of important publications entitled "Historic Literature of Ireland;" and also editor of the collection of "Chronicles and Memorials of Great Britain and Ireland." Mr. Gilbert has received the Gold Medal of the R. I. Academy. He has been thanked by the Municipal Corporation of Dublin for his archivistic work, and appointed to edit the ancient records of that city. As member of the Council of the Royal Irish Academy, and its honorary Librarian, he gave a vast impetus to Celtic studies by effecting the publication of some of the most important manuscripts in the ancient Irish language. Mr. Gilbert's principal published works are—"History of the City of Dublin," 3 vols., 8vo, 1854–59; "History of the Viceroys of Ireland, 1172–1509," 1865; "Historical and Municipal Documents of Ireland, A.D. 1172–1320," 8vo, 1870; "National Manuscripts of Ireland," 5 vols., large folio, with coloured plates, 1874–84; "History of Affairs in Ireland, 1641–52," 6 parts, 1879–81; "History of the Irish Confederation and the War in Ireland, 1641–49," 7 vols., quarto, 1882–90; various Treatises on History and the Literature of Great Britain and Ireland, published by the Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts, London, 1870; the chartularies of St. Mary's Abbey at Dublin and Dunbrody, 1884; Register of the Abbey of St. Thomas, Dublin, 1889; Calendar of ancient records of Dublin, 1890; "Documents relating to Ireland, 1795–1804," 1893.

GILBERT, Professor Joseph Henry, Ph.D., LL.D., F.R.S., son of the late Rev. Joseph Gilbert, was born at Hull, Aug. 1, 1817. After his school education, he met with a gun-shot accident, which much impaired his health for some time, and also deprived him of the sight of one eye. He commenced his College courses at the University of Glasgow, where as elsewhere he devoted special attention to Chemistry, working in the Laboratory of the late Professor Thomas Thomson. He next studied at University College, London; attending the classes of Professor Graham and others, and working in the Laboratory of the late Dr. Anthony Todd Thomson, then the Professor of Materia Medica, Therapeutics, and Toxicology. A short time was then spent in the Laboratory of Professor Liebig, at Giessen, where he took the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Returning to University College, London, Dr. Gilbert acted as class and Laboratory Assistant to Professor A. T. Thomson, in the winter and summer sessions of 1840–41; attending other courses at the College at the same time. He next devoted some time to the chemistry of calico-printing, dyeing, etc., in the neighbourhood of Manchester. In 1843, Dr. Gilbert became associated with Mr. (now Sir) J. B. Lawes, of Rothamsted, Hertfordshire; and from that time has continued to be engaged with him in a systematic series of researches on Agricultural Chemistry and Physiology. The results of their investigations have been published in a series of papers, now numbering more than 100, in various journals, among which may be mentioned: The Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society, the Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, the Journal of the Chemical Society, the Reports of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, the Journal of the Society of Arts, etc.; also in some official reports, and elsewhere. Dr. Gilbert was elected a member of the Chemical Society in 1841, the year of its formation; and he contributed to the first volume of its "Memoirs" a translation from the original German of a paper on the Atomic weight of Carbon, by Professors Redtenbacher and Liebig. He was President of the Society in 1882–3. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1860, and in 1867 the Council of the Society awarded to him, in conjunction with Mr. Lawes, one of the Royal Medals. He is also Fellow of the Linnean Society, and of the Royal Meteorological Society. In 1880, he was President of the Chemical Section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. In 1882 and 1884, he visited Canada and the United States, travelling over wide areas, to study the conditions of the agriculture of those countries. In 1884, he was appointed Sibthorpian Professor of Rural Economy in the University of Oxford, and he was reappointed for a second period of three years in 1887. He has retained the Directorship of the Rothamsted Laboratory ever since 1843, and in Feb., 1894, the Society of Arts awarded him the Albert Medal in recognition of the work he has there achieved. Dr. Gilbert received the Honorary Degree of M.A., at Oxford, in 1884, and that of LL.D., at Glasgow in 1883, and in Edinburgh in 1890. He is Honorary Member of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, of the Chemico-Agricultural Society of Ulster, of the Academy of Agriculture and Forestry of Petrovskoie, and of the Royal Agricultural Society of Hanover; Foreign Member of the Royal Agricultural Academy of Sweden; and Corresponding Member of the Institute of France (Academy of Sciences), of the Society of Agriculturists of France, of the Society for the Encouragement of National Industry in Paris, and of the Institut Agronomique of Gorigoretsk. He is also Chevalier du Mérite Agricole (France); and (in conjunction with Sir J. B. Lawes), Gold Medallist of Merit for Agriculture (Germany).

GILBERT, Josiah, born at the Independent College, Rotherham, Yorkshire, Oct. 7, 1814, son of the Rev. Joseph Gilbert, grandson of the Rev. Isaac Taylor, of Ongar, was educated chiefly at home, became afterwards a student in the Royal Academy, practised as a portrait-painter for some years in London, but has lived since 1843 at Marden Ash, Ongar, engaged in literary and artistic pursuits. He is the author of "Art, its Scope and Purpose," 1858; "Cadore, or Titian's Country," 1869; "Art and Religion," 1871; was joint author of "The Dolomite Mountains," 1864; edited "Autobiography and other Memorials of Mrs. Gilbert (formerly Ann Taylor)," 1875, which has gone through four editions; and he published "Landscape in Art before Claude and Salvator," in 1885. Mr. Gilbert is a member of the Alpine Club.

GILBERT, William Schwenck, B.A., J.P., was born Nov. 18, 1836, at 17, Southampton Street, Strand, London, and educated at Great Ealing School. He took the degree of B.A. at the University of London, was called to the Bar of the Inner Temple in November, 1864; was Clerk in the Privy Council Office from 1857 to 1862; and was appointed Captain of the Royal Aberdeenshire Highlanders (Militia) in 1868. Mr. Gilbert is well known as a dramatic author and contributor to periodical literature. His first piece, "Dulcamara," was produced at the St. James's Theatre in January, 1866. He is also author of "An Old Score;" "The Princess;" "Ages Ago;" "Randall's Thumb;" "Creatures of Impulse;" "A Sensation Novel;" "Happy Arcadia" (Gallery of Illustration); "The Palace of Truth," a fairy comedy, November, 1870; "Pygmalion and Galatea," a fairy comedy, December, 1871; "The Wicked World," a fairy comedy, January, 1873; "Charity," a play, January, 1874, at the Haymarket Theatre, where the three preceding pieces had also first appeared; "Sweethearts," a dramatic contrast, Prince of Wales's Theatre, November, 1874; "Broken Hearts," a fairy comedy, Court Theatre, 1876; "Tom Cobb," a farcical comedy, St. James's, in the same year; and "Trial by Jury" (written in conjunction with Sir Arthur Sullivan), at the Royalty; "Dan'l Druce," a drama, at the Haymarket; and "Engaged," a farcical comedy, at the same theatre; the "Ne'er-do-Weel," Olympic, 1878; "Gretchen," Olympic, 1879; "Foggerty's Fairy," Criterion; "Comedy and Tragedy," Lyceum; and "The Sorcerer," an opera, Opera Comique, September, 1877; "H.M.S. Pinafore," which ran two years at that theatre; the "Pirates of Penzance," which ran more than a year; and "Patience, or Bunthorne's Bride," Opera Comique and the new Savoy Theatre in 1881, which ran twenty months. This was followed by "Iolanthe, or the Peer and the Peri," which ran thirteen months; "Princess Ida, or Castle Adamant," which ran nearly as long; "The Mikado, or the Town of Titipu," which ran nearly two years; "Ruddigore, or the Witch's Curse," which ran ten months; "The Yeomen of the Guard," which ran fifteen months; "The Gondoliers," which was produced in 1889, and ran eighteen months; "The Mountebanks," which was written in collaboration with the late Alfred Cellier, was produced in January, 1892, and ran eight months; and "Utopia, Limited," which was written in collaboration with Sir Arthur Sullivan, was produced in October, 1893, and had a long run. "The Mikado" has been performed in Berlin, Vienna, Amsterdam, and other Continental towns. These operas were, with one exception, all written in conjunction with Sir Arthur Sullivan. "The Palace of Truth" is based on a story of Madame de Genlis; "Gretchen" on the "Faust" legend; and "Princess Ida" on Tennyson's poem; but the other pieces are original. Mr. Gilbert's "Bab Ballads," originally published in Fun, have since been printed in a separate form, so likewise have many of the lyrical pieces from his operatic libretti, under the title of "Songs of a Savoyard." In June, 1891, Mr. Gilbert was appointed a Magistrate for Middlesex.

GILBERTSON, Edward, was born in London in 1813. The early years of his life were passed in various parts of Russia, the language of which country he speaks fluently. He left Russia in 1840, and for several years after his return to London was a frequent contributor of leading articles to the Daily News and other papers. In 1857 he became Secretary to the Ottoman Bank in London, and during the following four years paid several visits of inspection to the branches at Beyrout, Smyrna, and Constantinople. In 1861 he undertook the management of the bank in the latter city, and in 1862, as member of the Financial Commission, had the chief direction, under Edhem Pacha, of the operations for withdrawing the Caimé; for which service he received the third class of the Medjidieh. In 1863 he was one of the signatories of the concession of the Imperial Ottoman Bank; and from that date until May, 1871, was Assistant Director-General of the Bank at Constantinople. He has taken an active part in negotiating all the Turkish public loans in which the bank was interested since 1858, and has been a member of various financial commissions formed by the Ottoman Government; such as that for the improvement of the system of public accounts, for the Budget of 1867, &c. The Sultan, in recognition of his services to the imperial treasury, has conferred on him the Order of the Osmanieh of the third class. Upon his arrival in England in May, 1871, he was unanimously elected a member of the committee of the bank in London.

GILBEY, Sir Walter, Bart., fifth son of the late Henry Gilbey, of Bishop Stortford, was born in that town in the year 1831. His active life commenced when, as a boy, he was articled to his cousin, an estate agent at Tring. He afterwards held a clerkship in one of the offices located at that time in the House of Lords, which he held until the Crimean War broke out. He had obtained an introduction to Sir Benjamin Hawes, whose permission he solicited to go out to the Crimea as a civil servant of the Crown. Sir Benjamin allowed him and his brother, the late Mr. Alfred Gilbey, to go out in connection with the Pay Department. His duties carried him to the Convalescent Hospital on the Asiatic shore of the Dardanelles, where he passed nearly two years. On arriving in England the two brothers founded the firm of W. and A. Gilbey, wine merchants, of which he was until 1893 the head. In 1893 the firm was registered under the Limited Liability Act as a private company, of which Sir Walter is the chairman. It is not, however, in the regions of commerce that Sir Walter is best known. Agriculture and horse-breeding have found in him one of their most liberal patrons. He is a Governor and Vice-President of the Royal Agricultural Society, and is on the Councils of the Smithfield Club, the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution, and the English Jersey Society, of which he was President in the year 1886. He also occupies the position of Chairman of the Royal Agricultural Hall Company; and the Horse Shows held there for a number of years past have been largely under his management. Sir Walter Gilbey is also one of the Governors, and a member of the General Purposes Committee of the Royal Veterinary College. He has in addition taken an active part in the formation of the Shire Horse Society, of which he was President in 1883, succeeding the Earl of Powis. He is the first Commoner who has held that position, his Vice-President in that year being the Duke of Westminster, K.G. The Hunters' Improvement Society, the Hackney Horse Society, and the London Cart Horse Parade Society may be said to have been created by him. Sir Walter Gilbey, when residing, some fifteen years ago, at Hargrave Park, Stanstead, Essex, was a successful breeder of Jersey cattle, and he has been also a very successful breeder of horses at the Elsenham Paddocks. He twice won the Champion Prize for the best horse in all classes at the Shire Horse Society's London shows, viz., in 1883 and 1886. He was also a successful exhibitor at the Hamburg International show in 1883, the International Exhibition at Amsterdam in 1884, and the International Exhibition at Brussels in 1888. He is the author of various articles and pamphlets having for their object the encouragement and improvement of horse-breeding, notably the "Old English War Horse and the Shire Horse," identifying the present breed of Shire Horses with the old English War Horse, a pamphlet which was very favourably reviewed by the press. He was created a Baronet in 1893.

GILDER, Richard Watson, LL.D., American poet, was born at Bordentown, N.J., Feb. 8, 1844. He was educated mainly by his father, the late Rev. W. H. Gilder, a Methodist minister and writer, who established a seminary at Bordentown, and afterwards at Flushing, L.I. For a brief time, when the Confederates invaded Pennsylvania in 1863, he served in the Union army, and took part in the defence of Carlisle. He began the study of law, but the death of his father (1864) compelled him to abandon it in order to earn his own living. For a year he was a paymaster on the Camden and Amboy railway, and then became journalist. From 1865-68 he was on the staff of the Newark (N.J.) Advertiser. In 1868 he, with Newton Crane, established the Newark Register, to the editorship of which in the following year he added that of Hours at Home, a New York monthly. The Register not proving profitable, Mr. Gilder in 1870 accepted the associate editorship of Scribner's Monthly (now the Century Magazine), then recently started, into which Hours at Home was incorporated. On the death of Dr. Holland in 1881, Mr. Gilder was made editor-in-chief of the Century, a position which he still holds. In addition to his editorial and literary labours, Mr. Gilder takes an active interest in all public matters. He is a member of many clubs in New York, and was the first President of the Fellowcraft. He was the first President of the Kindergarten Association, and is one of the founders of the Society of American Artists, the American Copyright League, the Authors' Club, the Free Art League, the City Club, and the Sculpture Society. He received the degree of LL.D. from Dickinson College in 1883, and of A.M. from Harvard University in 1890. His published works (all poems) are: "The New Day," 1875; "Lyrics," 1885; "The Celestial Passion," 1887; "Two Worlds, and other Poems," 1891; and "The Great Remembrance, and other Poems," 1893.

GILKES, Arthur Herman, Head Master of Dulwich College, who was born Nov. 2, 1849, is the son of William Gilkes, of Leominster, Herefordshire, and was educated at Shrewsbury School, 1859-1868; Christ Church, Oxford, 1868-1872; was first class in Moderations 1870, and first class in Literis Humanoribus, 1872. He was Assistant Master at Shrewsbury School, 1873-1885, and Head Master of Dulwich College, 1885. He is the author of "School Lectures on Electra and Macbeth," and "Boys and Masters."

GILL, David, F.R.S., LL.D., Hon. F.R.S Edin., Astronomer Royal at the Cape, born June 12, 1843, is the eldest son of the late David Gill, Esq., J.P., of Blairythan and Savock, Aberdeenshire, by Margaret, daughter of Gilbert Mitchell, Esq., of Savock, in the same county. He was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen. He obtained his first experience in practical astronomy in the Observatory at Aberdeen, and in a private observatory which he erected in the same city. Mr. Gill was associated with Lord Lindsay in the designs and details of the large observatory founded by that nobleman at Dunecht in 1870, taking the position as chief of the staff. He thus became engaged in the organization of the expedition to the Mauritius, fitted out by Lord Lindsay, for the observation of the transit of Venus, on which occasion advantage was taken of the circumstance of a heliometer forming part of the equipment, to determine the sun's distance by measures of the planet Juno. The details of this work were published by Lord Lindsay as the joint work of himself and Mr. Gill. In connection with the same expedition, Mr. Gill arranged and personally conducted the whole of the chronometric and telegraphic longitude determinations connecting Berlin, Malta, Alexandria, Suez, Aden, Bombay, Seychelles, Réunion, Mauritius, and Rodriguez. It was while engaged upon these operations that he undertook, at the request of the Khedive, the measurement of the first base line of the geodetic survey of Egypt. In 1877 he went to Ascension to observe the apposition of Mars. In 1881 he published, in the Memoirs of the Royal Astronomical Society, an account of a determination of the Solar Parallax from observations of Mars, at Ascension, in 1877. In the same year a difficult task, the organization of elaborate longitude operations connecting Aden, Zanzibar, Mozambique, Delagoa Bay, Durban, Port Elizabeth, and the Cape, was performed with equal care; 1882 saw him organizing observations of the minor planets Victoria and Sappho, which were carried out at the principal observatories of the world; and the same year he made the arrangements for the observation of the transit of Venus, in South Africa. In 1883 he set on foot the geodetic survey of South Africa, a scheme which he had urged upon the Government without ceasing since 1879. From 1881-83 he was likewise engaged in researches on the Parallax of the fixed stars, an elaborate memoir on which subject he has published in the Memoirs of the Royal Astronomical Society. More recently (1893) this has been re-published as "Heliometer Observations for Determination of Stellar Parallax made at the Royal Observatory, Cape of Good Hope." In 1875 be received the Medjidieh (3rd class) from the Khedive for his scientific labours in Egypt. In 1881 he was made LL.D. of Aberdeen University; in the same year he received the Valz Medal of the Paris Academy of Sciences for researches on the Solar Parallax; and in 1882 the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society of London for his Heliometric observations of Mars and the discussion of his results. In 1883 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1884 made LL.D. of Edinburgh University. Dr. Gill is a Magistrate for County Aberdeen, one of the trustees of the South African Museum, and was also some time a Member of the South African University Council.

GILL, Edmund, landscape painter, was born Nov. 29, 1820, in the parish of Clerkenwell. His father was by trade a japanner, but Edmund soon turned his attention to painting, and succeeded in occasionally exhibiting pictures in the Academy. After passing some years in Shropshire, Edmund Gill came, in 1841, to London, and became a student at the Academy. He has since been a regular exhibitor of landscapes, stormy coast scenes, and waterfalls, with few exceptions from Welsh and Scottish scenery, painted in the minute style that recalls the manner of the early Dutch artists.

GILLIES, the Hon. Duncan, Ex-Premier of Victoria, was born in Scotland, in 1830, and went out to Victoria in 1854. He was elected a Member of the Victorian Parliament in 1859, and was Minister for Lands in 1868, and again from 1875 to 1877. He held the office of Minister for Railways from 1872 to 1875, and from 1880 to 1883; and became Premier in 1886. He was Chairman of the Federal Conference held at Melbourne in 1890; on Nov. 5 of which year, his Ministry being defeated, he resigned, and Mr. Munro became Premier. He, on taking office, gave, in a few plain figures, the sort of damnosa hæreditas to which he had succeeded. He said:—"The late Treasurer took office early in 1886. He had a large income from revenue during the specially-favoured Exhibition and land-boom years. He supplemented his actual income by mortgaging our future income from the sale of valuable city and suburban lands. He borrowed £1,500,000 in February, 1886; £3,000,000 in January, 1887; £1,500,000 in January, 1888; and £3,000,000 in January, 1889. From the Victorian stock he got £130,000 in December, 1888. He borrowed £4,000,000 in April, 1890, and got from the Victorian stock £26,411 in June, 1890. In all he received £13,156,411 of borrowed money in a little over four years. He went out of office on Nov. 5, 1890, leaving to his successor a debit balance in the revenue account of £502,282, and the ear-marked farmers' bonuses to be provided for, contracts in hand between one and a-half and two millions, the trust funds reduced to £337,271, the loan funds to £394,404, and matured debentures amounting to £850,000 to meet immediately!" In 1894 he was appointed Agent-General for Victoria.

GILMAN, Daniel Coit, LL.D., President of the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, was born in Norwich, Conn., July 6, 1831. After graduating as Bachelor of Arts at Yale College, in 1852, he devoted two years to travel and study in Europe, and subsequently became Librarian and Professor of Physical Geography in Yale College, where he remained from 1856 to 1872. He took an active part in the organization of the Sheffield Scientific School, the Yale School of Fine Arts, and the Winchester Observatory of Yale College. His interest in public instruction led to his appointment, in 1856, as Superintendent of the Public Schools of New Haven, and afterwards, in 1865-66, as Superintendent of the Public Schools of Connecticut. In 1872 he became President of the University of California; and, in 1875, he was called as President to take part in the organization of a university in Baltimore, to which Johns Hopkins had given a large endowment. This institution is devoted to the advancement of the higher education of young men, the encouragement of research, and the publication of learned works. Mr. Gilman was one of the judges in the Centennial Exhibition of 1876, one of the original trustees of the Slater Fund for the education of Freedmen, an official visitor of the United States Military Academy in 1875, and of the United States Naval Academy in 1876 and 1888. He has been President of the American Social Science Association, an active promoter of Civil Service reform, and of charity organisation, and of training handicrafts. He became, in 1893, President of the American Oriental Society, President of the Slater trustees (above-mentioned), and a Trustee of the Peabody Educational Fund. During the period of organising the Johns Hopkins Hospital he was for several months its Director. He has travelled widely in the United States and Europe, and on the Mediterranean. His addresses, reports, and reviews, chiefly but not wholly pertaining to educational subjects, would make, if collected, several octavo volumes. His views upon higher education may be gathered from eighteen reports to the Johns Hopkins University, from many addresses delivered in Baltimore, from an address before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Harvard University (1887), and from three articles in the North American Review, "On American Education, 1776-1876;" "On the Idea of the University," 1881; "On the Idea of the College," 1882. He delivered opening addresses at Sibley College (Cornell University), Adelbert College (Cleveland), Bryn Mawr College (near Philadelphia), the Women's College (Baltimore), the Slater Museum of the Fine Arts (Norwich), the Dearborn Astronomical Observatory (near Chicago), the College for Promoting Manual Instruction (New York), and the Sage Library of Cornell University. The honorary degree of Doctor of Laws has been conferred on him by Harvard, Yale, and Columbia.

GINSBURG, Christian, LL.D., an eminent Rabbinical scholar, born in Warsaw in 1830, and educated there in the Rabbinic College. He was one of the original members appointed by Convocation for the revision of the English version of the Old Testament Scriptures, and is the author of "An Historical and Critical Commentary on the Song of Songs," and on "Ecclesiastes,' 1857; "The Kariates, their History and Literature," 1862; "The Essenes," 1864; "The Kabbalah, its Doctrines, Development, and Literature," 1865; "The Massoreth-ha-Massoreth of Elias Levita," in Hebrew, with Translation and Commentary, 1867; "Jacob ben Chajin's Introduction to the Rabbinic Bible," Hebrew and English, with notices, 1867; "The Moabite Stone," 1871; "A Commentary on Leviticus," 1882; "The Massorah," four imperial folio volumes, 1880-86, a work of vast erudition. Dr. Ginsburg has been a contributor also to Kitto's "Encyclopædia of Biblical Literature;" Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible;" and the "Encyclopædia Britannica."

GIRAUD, Herbert, M.D., Deputy Inspector-General of Her Majesty's Bombay army, was born at Faversham, Kent, in 1817, of a Waldensian family. He graduated with honours in 1840 in the University of Edinburgh, where he was a member of the so-called "Oineromathic Brotherhood," of which the naturalist, Edward Forbes, the two Goodsirs, George Wilson, J. Hughes Bennett, and others since eminent in science, were members. In 1842 he entered the H.E.I. Co.'s Bombay Medical Service, and in that year the Linnæan Society published in their Transactions his "Observations on Vegetable Embryology," which were subsequently embodied in several of the British and Foreign systematic works on Botany. In 1845 he was appointed Professor of Chemistry and Botany in the Grant Medical College, Bombay, of which institution he became Principal, and also Chief Medical Officer of Sir Jamsetjee Jeejebhoy's Hospital, and Chemical Analyst to the Bombay Government. He was the first to introduce the study of chemistry and botany into Western India. In 1863 Dr. Giraud was Syndic and Dean of the Faculty of Medicine in the University of Bombay. He was also on the Staff of Lord Elphinstone, of Sir George Clerk, and of Sir Bartle Frere, as surgeon to those Governors of Bombay. Dr. Giraud has contributed papers on chemical and botanical subjects to the Transactions of the Botanical Society of Edinburgh, the Annals of Natural History, the London and Edinburgh Philosophical Magazine, the Edinburgh Philosophical Journal, the Transactions of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, and the Transactions of the Medical and Physical Society of Bombay. Several of his chemical lectures have been published.

GLADSTONE, Professor John Hall, Ph.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., was born March 7, 1827, and educated at home. He studied chemistry at University College, London, under Professor Graham; and at Giessen under Professor Liebig. He took the degree of Ph.D. in 1848; lectured on Chemistry at St. Thomas's Hospital from 1850 to 1852; was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1853; was a Member of the Royal Commission on Lighthouses, Buoys, and Beacons, from 1859 to 1862; a Member of the Gun Cotton Committee (appointed by the War Office) from 1864 to 1868; Fullerian Professor of Chemistry at the Royal Institution from 1874 to 1877; President of the Physical Society from its formation in 1874 to 1876; and President of the Chemica Society from 1877 to 1879. He was made Honorary Doctor of Science at the Centenary of Trinity College, Dublin, in 1892. Since 1846 Dr. Gladstone has been constantly engaged in scientific research, principally in chemistry, electricity, and optics, and the points of contact between these sciences. The results have been published by the Royal Chemical and other Societies, and by the British Association. For many years he has been engaged also in various philanthropic and religious movements; and since 1873 he has been one of the representatives of the Chelsea Division on the School Board for London. He was for three years Vice-Chairman of the Board, and has been for many years Chairman of the Books and Apparatus Sub-Committee. He is the author of "The Biography of Michael Faraday," 1872; "Points of Supposed Collision between the Scriptures and Natural Science; a lecture delivered in connection with the Christian Evidence Society," 1872; "Miracles as Credentials of a Revelation; a lecture delivered in the new Hall of Science, Old Street, City Road, under the auspices of the Christian Evidence Society," 1873; "Spelling Reform, from an Educational Point of View," 1878; "The Chemistry of Secondary Batteries," 1883; and upwards of fifty memoirs in the Philosophical Transactions and other Proceedings of the learned societies.

GLADSTONE, The Right Hon. William Ewart, P.C., is the fourth son of the late Sir John Gladstone, Bart., of Fasque, county Kincardine, N.B., a well-known merchant of Liverpool, and was born there, Dec. 29, 1809. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, of which he was nominated a student in 1829, and graduated, taking a double first class, in Michaelmas term, 1831. Having spent some time in a continental tour, he was returned at the general election in Dec. 1832, in the Conservative interest, for Newark, and entered Parliament just as the struggle of parties was at its height. On Jan. 25, 1833, he entered Lincoln's Inn, and when he had been a member for six years and three months, petitioned to have his name removed from the books of the Society, on the ground of his having given up his intention of being called to the Bar. In the House of Commons, his mercantile origin, the success of his university career, his habits of business, and his high character, recommended him to the notice of Sir Robert Peel, who, in Dec., 1834, appointed him a junior Lord of the Treasury, and in Feb., 1835, Under-Secretary for Colonial affairs. Mr. Gladstone retired from office, with his ministerial leader, in April, and remained in Opposition until Sir Robert Peel's return to power in Sept., 1841. On accepting office under Sir Robert Peel, in 1841, as Vice-President of the Board of Trade and Master of the Mint, Mr. Gladstone was sworn a member of the Privy Council. In his new position he had to explain and defend in the Lower House of Parliament the commercial policy of the Government; and in the discharge of this duty he had whatever advantage his mercantile origin and connection could give him. The revision of the tariff in 1842 was almost entirely the result of his energy and industry. When this laborious work was brought before the House of Commons, it was found to be as admirably executed in its details as it was complete in its mastery of general principles, and it received the sanction of both Houses with scarcely an alteration. In 1843 Mr. Gladstone succeeded the Earl of Ripon as President of the Board of Trade, but resigned that office early in 1845. In Jan., 1846, Sir Robert Peel announced his intention of proposing a modification of the Corn Laws. Mr. Gladstone, who had succeeded Lord Stanley (the late Earl of Derby) in the post of Secretary of State for the Colonies, adhered to the leader under whom he had entered upon ministerial life; but, possibly, unwilling to remain under obligations to the late Duke of Newcastle, who sympathised strongly with the Opposition party, resigned his seat for Newark, and remained for some time out of Parliament. At the general election in Aug., 1847, he was, with the late Sir Robert Harry Inglis, elected for the University of Oxford. In the Parliament of 1847-52 the questions of University Reform and the removal of Jewish disabilities were frequently and earnestly agitated in the Lower House. Though Mr. Gladstone's early sympathies no doubt bound him strongly to the High Church and Tory party, yet he felt that on both these points the exigencies of the times required that some concessions should be made. He consequently found himself frequently opposed to his former friends, and eventually separated himself from the great body of the Conservative party in Feb., 1851. At the general election in July following, Mr. Gladstone was re-elected for the University of Oxford, but not without a severe contest. On the formation of what is generally known as the "Coalition" ministry, under the Earl of Aberdeen, in Dec., 1852, Mr. Gladstone was appointed to the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, in which office the thorough knowledge of finance which he had acquired, and had tested by practical experience at the Board of Trade, proved of the greatest assistance to the ministry. After the breaking up of the Aberdeen administration, or rather, on its reconstruction under Lord Palmerston at the beginning of 1855, Mr. Gladstone at first continued to occupy the same post, but he resigned in the course of a few weeks, on finding that it was not the intention of the ministry collectively to oppose the vote of censure implied in the resolution of Mr. Roebuck, in favour of the appointment of a committee of inquiry into the state of the British army before Sebastopol, and the causes of its sufferings. For some time Mr. Gladstone, who held no public office, gave Lord Palmerston's ministry an independent support. In the winter of 1858-9 he accepted, under Lord Derby's second cabinet, a special mission to the Ionian Islands, to arrange certain difficulties which had arisen in the administration of that dependency; and in June, 1859, resumed office under Lord Palmerston as Chancellor of the Exchequer. In this capacity he was mainly instrumental in repealing the paper duty, and in promoting the negotiations conducted by Mr. Cobden, which resulted in the commercial treaty between this country and France. Mr. Gladstone, though originally very jealous of an intervention on the part of the State in the matter of University Reform, lent the Government from time to time very valuable assistance, by supporting the suggestions of the Oxford University Commissioners, through his extensive personal and official influence with the authorities at Oxford as one of the representatives of that university in Parliament. Besides being eminent as a statesman, Mr. Gladstone had acquired celebrity as an author. His first work, a treatise entitled "The State in its Relations with the Church," published in 1838 (4th edit. enlarged, 2 vol., 1841), and followed, in 1841, by his "Church Principles considered in their Results," stamped him, while still a young man, as a deep and original thinker. His views on these subjects, as they are unfolded in these treatises, had, we need scarcely say, been formed and moulded by the education and associations of Oxford, to which university they are dedicated as the first-fruits of her teaching and training. Soon after their appearance, they were thought worthy of a long and elaborate criticism by the late Lord Macaulay in the pages of the Edinburgh Review. Mr. Gladstone's "Remarks on Recent Commercial Legislation," published in 1845, while the country was on the eve of an important change in her commercial system, were intended to pave the way for the extensive modification in the restrictions on commerce imposed by the corn laws, and contain an able and comprehensive summary of the beneficial results of the tariff of 1842. In 1851 he published a work of a different kind, which created considerable interest both at home and abroad. During a visit to Naples in the previous year, he learned that a large number of citizens of that place, who had formed the "Opposition" in the Neapolitan Chamber of Deputies, were exiled or imprisoned by King Ferdinand, and that above 20,000 of his subjects had been thrown into prison on a charge of political disaffection. Having ascertained the truth of these statements, Mr. Gladstone wrote the Earl of Aberdeen, urging his interposition on their behalf; and that noble lord's remonstrances proving ineffectual, he published an indignant letter on the subject of the State prosecutions at Naples, which was translated into several foreign languages, and was sent by Lord Palmerston to our ambassadors and ministers on the Continent, with orders to forward copies of it to their respective Courts. In 1858 he published an elaborate work on Homer ("Studies on Homer and the Homeric Age," 3 vols.), and in July, 1861, he was solicited to become a candidate, in the Liberal interest, for South Lancashire, but refused to forsake his former constituents. Having been rejected by the University of Oxford at the general election in July, 1865, Mr. Gladstone was returned, being third on the poll, for South Lancashire. After the death of Lord Palmerston, he became leader of the House of Commons, retaining the Chancellorship of the Exchequer in Lord Russell's second administration. Early in the session of 1866 he brought in a Reform Bill, and a motion in committee having been carried, June 18, against the Government by eleven votes, Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues resigned. The divisions in the Liberal ranks prevented him from defeating Mr. Disraeli's Reform Bill, which he strenuously opposed. In the early part of the session of 1868 Mr. Gladstone brought forward and passed through the House of Commons a series of resolutions, having for their object the disestablishment and disendowment of the Irish Church. These resolutions were the basis of the Irish Church Suspensory Bill, which, on May 22, passed a second reading in the Lower House by 312 votes to 258, but was soon afterwards rejected in the House of Peers by a majority of 95. At the general election of 1868 Mr. Gladstone stood as one of the candidates for South-west Lancashire. After a fierce contest, the result of which excited the most intense interest throughout the country, he was defeated; but this defeat did not exclude him from the House of Commons, as in anticipation of such an event the electors of Greenwich had, a few days previously, returned him by a large majority as one of the members for that borough. On the resignation of Mr. Disraeli's Ministry, in Dec., 1868, Mr. Gladstone succeeded that statesman as First Lord of the Treasury. The principal events of his administration were the passing of the Irish Church Disestablishment Act (1869), of the Irish Land Act (1870), and of the Elementary Education Act (1870); the abolition of Purchase in the Army by the Exercise of the Royal Prerogative, in consequence of an adverse vote by the House of Lords on the Army Regulation Bill (1871); the negotiations of the Treaty of Washington respecting the Alabama Claims (1871); the passing of the Ballot Act (1872); and the Judicature Act (1873). The principal measure proposed by the Government in the session in 1873 was the University Education (Ireland) Bill, which was opposed by the Roman Catholic members, who, voting on this occasion with the Conservatives, caused the rejection of the Bill by 287 votes against 284 (March 11). Upon this Mr. Gladstone tendered his resignation to Her Majesty, and Mr. Disraeli was sent for, but as he declined to take office, Mr. Gladstone, though with reluctance, undertook (March 16) to reconstruct the cabinet. In August, 1873, immediately after the close of the session, the cabinet was considerably remodelled, Mr. Gladstone assuming the Chancellorship of the Exchequer in addition to his office of First Lord of the Treasury. On Jan. 24, 1874, a fortnight before both Houses were to have met for the dispatch of public business, Mr. Gladstone took everybody by surprise by announcing the immediate dissolution of Parliament, and issuing his address to his constituents at Greenwich, in which he promised to abolish the Income Tax. At the general election which ensued the votes were, for the first time, taken by secret ballot. The result proved most disastrous to the Liberal party. The returns, completed on Feb. 27, showed that 351 Conservatives had been elected and 302 Liberals, inclusive of the Home Rulers, who, in point of fact, declined to identify themselves with either of the old political parties. Mr. Gladstone at once resigned, and Mr. Disraeli became Prime Minister. In the session of 1874, Mr. Gladstone, who had been re-elected for Greenwich, was rarely to be seen in his place in the House of Commons; but at its close he offered a persistent opposition to the Public Worship Regulation Bill. Even amid the turmoil of political life Mr. Gladstone had devoted a portion of his time to literature. His "Ecce Homo," reprinted from Good Words, appeared in 1868; a pamphlet on the Irish Church question, entitled, "A Chapter of Autobiography," was published Nov. 23, 1868; and "Juventus Mundi: the Gods and Men of the Heroic Age," in 1869. After his unsuccessful attempt to prevent the passing of the Public Worship Regulation Act, he contributed to the Contemporary Review for Oct., 1874, an article on "Ritualism," which gave rise to an animated controversy. In it he asserted that "Rome had substituted for the proud boast of semper eadem a policy of violence and change in faith," that she "had refurbished and paraded anew every trusty tool which she was fondly thought to have disused," that, "no one could become her convert without renouncing his moral and mental freedom, and placing his civil loyalty and duty at the mercy of another," and that "she had equally repudiated modern thought and ancient history." Challenged by his Roman Catholic friends to substantiate these grave charges, Mr. Gladstone published (Nov. 7, 1874) a bulky pamphlet entitled "The Vatican Decrees in their bearing on Civil Allegiance: a Political expostulation," which elicited numerous elaborate replies from Mgr. Capel, Dr. Newman, Archbishop Manning, and other distinguished members of the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Gladstone's reply to his opponents, published Feb. 24, 1875, is entitled "Vaticanism; an Answer to Replies and Reproofs." Mr. Gladstone followed up his attacks on the Roman Catholic Church in an article on "The Speeches of Pius IX." in the Quarterly Review for Jan., 1875. On Jan. 13, 1875, three weeks before the assembling of Parliament, Mr. Gladstone announced, in a letter to Earl Granville, his determination to retire from the leadership of the Liberal party. "At the age of sixty-five," he remarked, "and after forty-two years of a laborious public life, I think myself entitled to retire on the present opportunity. This retirement is dictated to me by my personal views as to the best method of spending the closing years of my life." Soon afterwards the Marquis of Hartington was chosen by the Liberal party to be their leader in the House of Commons. Subsequently, however, Mr. Gladstone constantly took part in the discussions of that assembly. In 1876 he published "Homeric Synchronism: an Inquiry into the Time and Place of Homer," and on Sept. 6 in the same year appeared his famous pamphlet on "Bulgarian Horrors and the Question of the East." It was followed (March 13, 1877) by another pamphlet, entitled "Lessons in Massacre: an Exposition of the conduct of the Porte in and about Bulgaria since May, 1876." Mr. Gladstone took an active part in the agitation respecting the massacres in Bulgaria, and strenuously opposed, both in and out of Parliament, the policy of the Conservative Government, which resulted in the Treaty of Berlin and the signing of the Anglo-Turkish Convention. In the autumn of 1877 (Oct. 17—Nov. 12) he paid a visit to Ireland, and was presented with the freedom of the city of Dublin. On Nov. 15 in that year he was elected Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow, succeeding Lord Beaconsfield. Mr. Gladstone sent a letter to the president of the Greenwich Liberal "Five Hundred," on March 9, 1878, stating that he should represent the borough only until the next general election. In the course of the year 1879 he contributed to the British Quarterly Review an article on "The Evangelical Movement; its Parentage, Progress, and Issue;" and published a collection of his fugitive writings under the title of "Gleanings of Past Years." Early in the same year (1879) he had been invited to become the Liberal candidate for Midlothian, and the crowning incident of the electoral campaign in the ensuing Parliamentary recess was his visit to Scotland in connection with his purpose of contesting that county at the general election. He set out from Liverpool for Edinburgh on Nov. 24, and from that date, with the exception of two days' rest at Taymouth Castle, his life, till his return to Hawarden on Dec. 9, was a long succession of enthusiastic receptions and unwearied speech-making in condemnation of the policy of the Conservative Government. In the course of this tour he delivered the Rectorial Address before the University of Glasgow (Dec. 5). On the dissolution of Parliament at Easter, 1880, Mr. Gladstone renewed in Midlothian the oratorical tours de force of the preceding winter, and he was successful in his candidature, polling 1597 votes against 1368 recorded in favour of the Earl of Dalkeith, his Conservative opponent. When the composition of the new House of Commons was made known, it appeared that it consisted of 349 Liberals, 243 Conservatives, and 60. Home Rulers. The Earl of Beaconsfield tendered his resignation to the Queen as soon as it was manifest that the Liberal party had obtained an unquestionable majority. The Marquis of Hartington, who had been leader of the Opposition in the Lower House, and Earl Granville, the Opposition leader in the House of Peers, were sent for by Her Majesty in the first instance, but, in accordance with consultations among the chiefs of the party, they recommended the Queen to entrust the task of forming a Cabinet to Mr. Gladstone. He consented to accept the duty (April 23), and his Cabinet was constructed with a view to conciliate and to represent the different sections of the Liberal majority. Mr. Gladstone himself superadded to his duties as First Lord of the Treasury the functions of Chancellor of the Exchequer, but he resigned the latter office in 1883 into the hands of Mr. Childers. The history of Mr. Gladstone's second Ministry may be summed up in three words—Ireland, Egypt, Franchise—though of course a large number of other matters (such as Mr. Chamberlain's Bankruptcy Bill and Merchant Shipping Bill) were long under consideration. Ireland was the great question during the sessions of 1880 (May—August), 1881, 1882, and the debates on the Compensation for Disturbance Bill, on Mr. Forster's Coercion Bill, and (after the murder of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Burke, May 6, 1882) on the Crimes Bill, occupied the greater part of the time and attention of the country. What prolonged and exasperated the discussions was the method of obstruction invented and practised not only by the followers of Mr. Parnell, but also by some members of the Tory party. After the passing of the Crimes Act, which closed a period of almost unexampled Parliamentary and administrative difficulty, Egypt began to occupy the mind of Parliament. The struggle with Arabi [q.v.] came to a head in July, when Sir B. Seymour (now Baron Alcester) bombarded the forts of Alexandria; and was ended on Sept. 13, when Sir Garnet Wolseley won the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. But Mr. Gladstone's difficulties were only just beginning. The revolt of the Arab tribes of the Soudan, the destruction of Hicks Pasha's Egyptian army, the two Suakim expeditions, the despatch of General Gordon to Khartoum, and long afterwards of Lord Wolseley's relieving force, the advance of this latter, its difficulties and its hard-won victories, its failure to reach Khartoum in time to save Gordon—these things are too fresh in the public memory to need a detailed repetition. The session of 1884 was occupied, as far as home politics are concerned, with the Franchise Bill—a Bill for extending household suffrage to the counties, and thus completing the democratising of our constitution. Passed in the Commons, it was thrown out by the Lords, who, under the guidance of Lord Salisbury, declined to pass it until the Redistribution scheme was before them. But after an autumn of popular "demonstrations" a series of conferences between the Liberal and Tory leaders were held, in which the lines of a Redistribution Bill were settled. After this both bills passed in due course (1885); but soon afterwards, on June 9, Mr. Gladstone was overthrown by a vote on the Budget, and Lord Salisbury came into power. At the general election of Nov., 1885, the Liberals were returned with numbers almost exactly equal to those of Tories and Parnellites combined. Soon afterwards Mr. Gladstone returned to office, and at the same time caused it to be known that he was prepared to introduce a Home Rule measure for Ireland. This broke up the Liberal party. Lord Hartington and others refused office, and Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Trevelyan only accepted on grounds which were soon afterwards shown to be untenable. Mr. Gladstone introduced his Home Rule Bill in a long and powerful speech on April 8 (the scene in the House before, during, and after the speech being one that will not be forgotten), and on June 9 the second reading was rejected by a majority of 30. He appealed to the country, and as a result an overwhelming majority of Conservatives and Unionist Liberals was returned. He resigned without meeting Parliament, and Lord Salisbury became for the second time Prime Minister, Aug. 3, 1886. On Dec. 29, 1889, Mr. Gladstone celebrated his eightieth birthday, and received congratulations from all parts of the world, the Prince and Princess of Wales being of those who offered their congratulations to the venerable statesman. On March 3, 1890, Mr. Gladstone delivered what was considered one of his finest orations in Parliament, the subject being "The Parnell Commission." In the autumn of that year, Mr. Parnell having been found guilty of committing adultery with the wife of Captain O'Shea, Mr. Gladstone demanded of Mr. Parnell, in the interests of Ireland, that he should retire from the leadership of the Irish party. This occasioned a split among the Irish Members, the majority of whom sided with the demands of Mr. Gladstone. On Feb. 4, 1891, Mr. Gladstone moved the second reading of the Religious Disabilities Removal Bill, in a speech noted as one of his finest efforts. During 1892 Mr. Gladstone carried out yet another campaign in Midlothian. He was returned at the General Election of that year though by a much reduced majority, and in August, on the fall of the Conservative Government, became Premier for the fourth time. He delivered the first of the Romanes Lectures at Oxford on Oct. 24, his subject being "Mediæval Universities," and his welcome at his old University was enthusiastic. On Dec. 3 he was presented with the freedom of the city of Liverpool, and shortly afterwards paid a visit to Biarritz, where his eighty-third year was spent. On April 6 he moved the second reading of the Home Rule Bill in the House of Commons, and subsequently he superintended the progress of the Bill with unparalleled vigour and patience. In April a lunatic made a strange attempt on his life, though the assault was not personal. At the opening of the new Hawarden Institute on May 23, he delivered a speech on Labour Representation. In September he was in Scotland, and spoke at Edinburgh on the relations between Lords and Commons. On the reassembling of Parliament Mr. Gladstone returned to his place as usual, but in the winter recess he spent many weeks at Biarritz with his family and a small circle of friends, and the House met in his absence. Early in 1894 the Pall Mall Gazette created a sensation by publishing a report that Mr. Gladstone intended retiring from public life. The truth of the report was officially contradicted, and Mr. Gladstone returned to England and to his seat in the House of Commons. At the end of February, however, the Premier, speaking to the order of the day, which was unimportant, quietly announced his intention of retiring from ministerial life. He resigned his position very shortly afterwards, and was succeeded by Lord Rosebery. Failure of hearing and eyesight were alleged as the proximate cause of Mr. Gladstone's retirement. Indeed, soon after passing into private life the ex-Premier began to prepare for an operation for cataract in the right eye, which, on May 24, 1894, was successfully performed at Lord Rendel's house by Mr. E. Nettleship, Dr. Habershon, and J. B. Lawford. Mr. Gladstone has recently retired from his seat in Parliament as member for Midlothian, and announces that he will not seek re-election. He is in excellent health, and his eyesight is again strong. He is at present engaged in forming a library (the Demiol) which he will bequeath to the public, and in important literary work, and his remarkable poetical translation of the "Odes of Horace" has been lately published by Mr. John Murray. In 1890 he published "Landmarks of Homeric Study" and "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." The latter work was a reprint of articles in Good Words, and attained a second and much amplified addition in 1892. In 1839 Mr. Gladstone married Catharine, sister of the late Sir Stephen Glynne, M.P., and of the late Lady Lyttelton, and on July 25, 1889, Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone celebrated their golden wedding. Of his sons, the eldest sat in Parliament for some time as member for East Worcestershire; the second, the Rev. Stephen Gladstone, is Rector of Hawarden; and the fourth, the Right Hon. Herbert J. Gladstone, has represented Leeds or West Leeds in Parliament since 1880. He was private secretary to his father in 1880-81; a Junior Lord of the Treasury, 1881-85; Deputy Commissioner, Board of Works, 1885; Financial Secretary to the War Office, 1886; and Under Home Secretary since August, 1892. Miss Helen Gladstone, well-known as an advocate of the higher education of women, is one of the Vice-Principals of Newnham College.

GLAISHER, James, F.R.S., was born in London on April 7, 1809. In 1829 he was appointed Assistant on the Principal Triangulation of the Ordnance Survey of Ireland, and in that capacity was charged with the meteorological observations on the mountains Bencorr in Galway, and the Keeper mountains near Limerick. These observations were published by Sir Henry James in 1856. From 1833 to 1836 Mr. Glaisher was Assistant at the Cambridge Observatory. In 1836 he was appointed Assistant in the Astronomical Department of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, and in 1840, on the establishment of the Magnetical and Meteorological Department, he was appointed its Superintendent, and continued to hold that office until his retirement from the public service at the end of 1874. In 1841 he began the series of quarterly and annual meteorological reports which have been published by the Registrar-General in his Quarterly and Annual Reports, without any interruption from that time to the present. These meteorological reports are the result of the reduction and discussion of the observations of about sixty voluntary observers scattered over England. Mr. Glaisher was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1849, and was the founder of the Royal Meteorological Society, of which he was Secretary for nearly twenty years, and President in 1867-8. He is also a past President of the Royal Microscopical Society. On the death of the late Lord Chief Baron Sir F. Pollock, he succeeded him as third President of the Photographic Society of Great Britain, an office which he still holds. He has also since 1880 been the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund. He was a Juror in the Class of Scientific and Philosophical Instruments at the Exhibitions of 1851 and 1863, and was the Reporter of this Class in 1851. He is the author of a "Report on the Meteorology of London in relation to the Cholera Epidemic of 1853-4," published by the Board of Health in 1855, and of a "Report on the Meteorology of India in relation to the Health of the Troops," 1863, which formed an Appendix to a Report of a Royal Commission on the Army in India. He was a member of the Royal Commission on the Warming and Ventilation of Dwellings (1857), for which he conducted most of the experiments, and wrote the report. He is the author of more than a hundred books and papers relating to astronomy, meteorology, and the theory of numbers. In 1845 he published his "Hygrometrical Tables," which has passed through seven editions, and is regarded as a fundamental work in connection with meteorology. "A Memoir on the Radiation of Heat from various Substances," published in the "Philosophical Transactions" for 1848, and certain papers on the forms of snow crystals, published in 1855, are also noticeable. Between 1863 and 1866 he made twenty-nine balloon ascents for scientific purposes, in one of which (Sept. 5, 1863), he attained the greatest height yet reached (nearly seven miles). He was insensible for more than ten minutes, and Mr. Coxwell, the aëronaut, only just succeeded in opening the valve by pulling it with his teeth. The results are printed in the Reports of the British Association. The observations made were very numerous and varied, and still form a unique series. Some of the results have been published in a popular form in "Travels in the Air." Mr. Glaisher is also President of the Aëronautical Society.

He translated and edited "The Atmosphere" (by Flammarion), and "The World of Comets" (by Guillemin). After his retirement from the Royal Observatory he devoted himself to the completion of the Factor Tables begun by Burckhardt in 1814, and continued by Dase in 1862-5. Burckhardt published the first three millions, and Dase the seventh, eighth, and ninth. The three intervening millions have been calculated by Mr. Glaisher, and published, with a full enumeration relating to the whole nine millions, in 3 vols., 4to., 1879-83. In 1885 he published "Hygrometric Tables," which in 1893 attained an eighth edition.

GLAISHER, James Whitbread Lee, Sc.D., F.R.S., is the eldest and only surviving son of James Glaisher, F.R.S., and was born at Lewisham, Kent, on Nov. 5. 1848. He was educated at St. Paul's School, 1858-67, and was senior Campden Exhibitioner in 1867. He proceeded to Trinity College, Cambridge; was elected scholar in 1868, and graduated as second wrangler in the Mathematical Tripos of 1871. In that year he was elected Fellow of Trinity, and was appointed assistant tutor at the same time; tutor in 1883; and senior tutor in 1886. In 1887 he received the degree of Sc.D. from his own university. He was elected Fellow of the Royal Society in 1875; was President of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, 1882-84, of the London Mathematical Society, 1884-86, and of the Royal Astronomical Society, 1886-88. He was Moderator in 1877, and examiner for the Mathematical Tripos in 1878, and (second post only) in 1886, 1887, and 1888. Dr. Glaisher's writings, all of which are mathematical, relate principally to the subjects of "Elliptic Functions," "Definite Integrals," "Theory of Numbers," mathematical tables, and mathematical bibliography. In 1894 he edited the "Collected Mathematical Papers" of H. J. S. Smith.

GLASGOW and GALLOWAY, Bishop of. See HARRISON, THE RT. REV. WM. T., D.D.

GLAZEBROOK, R. T., M.A., F.R.S., son of N. S. Glazebrook, Surgeon of West Derby, near Liverpool, was born in 1854, educated at Liverpool College, and entered at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1872; became scholar and prizeman of the College, and took his degree of B.A. 1876 as fifth wrangler; and was elected Fellow in 1877. He became Demonstrator of Physics at the Cavendish Laboratory in 1880, and has held that post up to the present date. He is also Lecturer and assistant tutor of Trinity College; and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1882; and Treasurer of the Cambridge Philosophical Society. He was Hopkins Prizeman, 1888; Secretary of the Electrical Standards Committee of the British Association; Examiner in the University of London. He is the author of various papers on Mathematical and Experimental Physics published in the Transactions of the Royal Society and elsewhere; and of a Text-book of Physical Optics; and (jointly with Mr. W. N. Shaw) a Text-book of Practical Physics. His writings treat chiefly of Optical and Electrical questions. One of the most important contains a verification of Fresnel's theory of double refraction for a bi-axial crystal; while others deal with the absolute resistance of the B.A. Unit, and the specific resistance of mercury. In some papers, published in the Philosophical Magazine, the theory of double refraction is treated from a dynamical standpoint, suggested by some work of Sir Wm. Thomson's.

GLENN, Robert George, LL.B., J.P., Recorder of Croydon, was born June 5, 1844, in London, and is the son of the late R. Glenn, by his wife Rosalind, grand-daughter of the Rev. Charles Wesley. He was educated at Christ's Hospital, where he became a "Grecian," and obtained an open exhibition at the University. He proceeded to Magdalene College, Cambridge, where he gained an open scholarship in classics and mathematics, and was classical prizeman in his first year; and was head of the second class in the Law Tripos, 1864, and took the degree of LL.B. He was called to the Bar by the Inner Temple in 1867, and has continued to practise since. He supported the petitions for incorporation presented by Croydon, Tunbridge Wells, Bournemouth, and Lowestoft; was appointed by the Charter to revise the first Burgess's Roll at Croydon, and sat there for some years as Revising Assessor. He established the Norwood Post, which was contributed to by the late Professor Palmer and other writers of eminence; was appointed first Recorder of Croydon in 1889, and is, by virtue of his office, a J.P. for the borough; is the author of "A Manual of the Laws affecting Medical Men," and is Standing Counsel to the Hospital Saturday Fund. He married in 1871 Eleanor, daughter of Harry Hayward, Esq., of Wilsford, Wilts, and has issue two sons, Cecil Hayward and Hugh Wesley, and one daughter, Elsie Glenn.

GLOUCESTER and BRISTOL, Bishop of.

See ELLICOTT, THE RT. REV. CHARLES JOHN.

GLOVER, James Grey, M.D. Edin. (1854), is the sixth son of the late Alderman Glover, J.P., of South Shields, and was born in that town on May 11, 1832. He studied in the University of Edinburgh; has been on the active staff of the Lancet for many years, first under the late Dr. James G. Wakley, and now under the joint editorship of Mr. Thomas H. Wakley and Mr. Thomas Wakley. Dr. Glover is a member of the General Medical Council of Education and Registration of the United Kingdom. He was elected to that body in Nov., 1886, under the provisions of the Medical Act of that year, as Direct Representative of the Medical Profession in England and Wales, together with Mr. Wheelhouse, of Leeds, and Sir Walter B. Foster, M.D., M.P., of Birmingham. Dr. Glover married in 1869, Mary, daughter of the late William Muller, Esq., of Clapton.

GNEIST, Rudolph, Doctor of Laws and Philosophy, Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Berlin, was born in that city Aug. 13, 1816. After the usual course of study, he adopted the legal profession, and in 1836 became "Auscultator." In 1841 he was Assessor at the Superior Court, or "Chamber;" and in 1846 Assistant-Judge in the Supreme Tribunal. This post, and with it the judicial career, he abandoned in 1850. Already, in 1839, he was a privat-docent in law; in 1844, professor; in 1872-3, rector and pro-rector. His political career began in 1848, with a seat in the Municipal Council. From 1858 to the present time he has been a member of the Prussian Lower House; in the Imperial Parliament he has sat from the first. In his earlier days he belonged to the so-called "Faction Vincke;" later he was leader of the Left Centre; and now he ranks among the National Liberals. In 1875 he was again called to the Bench as a Senior Judge of the Supreme Court of Prussia and a member of the Privy Council. By an order of the Emperor William I. he was nominated instructor to Prince William (the present Emperor William II.) in matters of political science. He is the author of numerous works on historical, constitutional, and social subjects, the most important being: "The Constitution of Trial by Jury in Germany," 1849; "Nobility and Knighthood in England," 1853; "The English Constitutional and Administrative Law of the Present Day," 1857-63; "The Self-Government in England," 1863; "The Administrative Law in England," 3rd edit., 1883-84, two vols.; "Der Rechtsstaat," 1872; "Die Preussische Finanzreform," 1881; "Englische Verfassungsgeschichte," 1882; "Geschichte des Englisches Parliament," 1886. The last-named have been recently translated into English.

GOBLET, René, French statesman, was born at Aire-sur-la-Lys, Sept. 26, 1828. He was called to the Bar at Amiens, and under the Empire took an active part in the establishment of a Liberal newspaper. He resigned his legal appointments, in 1871, in order to enter political life, and was elected to the National Assembly. He identified himself with the Republican Left, and in the important debates in which he took part soon made his mark as an orator. At the general election of 1876 he failed in his candidature for the representation of Amiens, but in the following year was successful, and in 1879 was appointed Under-Secretary of State for Justice. At the same time he took a prominent part in the affairs of his own town, and was Mayor of Amiens, and representative for its north-east division at the Council of the Somme. In Aug., 1881, he was re-elected for Amiens, and in M. de Freycinet's Cabinet of 1882 was appointed Minister of the Interior. He resigned with his colleagues on the Egyptian Question on July 29 of the same year. After the fall of M. Ferry, M. Goblet was appointed Minister of Education and Public Worship in the Cabinet of M. Brisson, in which capacity he introduced many important reforms. He resigned office with the Brisson Ministry in 1885, but was appointed to the same post under the new Prime Minister, M. de Freycinet (Jan., 1886). In the long and important debate before the Senate on the subject of lay organization and primary education, M. Goblet made several striking speeches, that of Feb. 4 in particular being pronounced so admirable that it was ordered by the Senate to be published throughout the whole of France. On the fall of the Freycinet Cabinet in Dec., 1886, M. Goblet became Prime Minister, taking upon himself the additional offices of Minister of the Interior and ad interim Minister of Foreign Affairs. In Feb., 1889, the Ministry fell, and at the general elections in the September of the same year he was beaten by M. Millevoye, the Boulangist candidate. He then came to Paris, and inscribed his name as a member of the Bar. In May, 1891, he was elected to the Senate by the Department of the Seine, and joined the Extreme Left in that body. As Senator he has warmly supported several severely anti-Clerical measures, and, in conjunction with MM. Lockroy, Sarrien, and Peytral, he has drawn up a political programme of action, of which the Petite Republique Française is the organ.

GODDARD, Arabella. See DAVISON, MRS.

GODLEY, Sir Arthur, K.C.B., son of the late J. R. Godley, of Killegar, co. Leitrim, and of Charlotte, daughter of the late C. G. Wynne, Esq., of Voelas, Denbighshire, was born in Portman Square, London, June 17, 1847, and educated at Rugby and at Balliol College, Oxford. He obtained the Hertford, Ireland, and Eldon Law Scholarships, and other distinctions, and took his M.A. degree in 1873. He was a Fellow of Hertford College from 1874 to 1881, was called to the Bar (Lincoln's Inn) in 1876; was private secretary to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, 1872–74; to Earl Granville, 1875-80; and again to Mr. Gladstone, 1880-82; was a Commissioner of Inland Revenue, 1882-83, and in 1883 was appointed permanent Under-Secretary of State for India, which post he now holds. He is a member of the Governing Bodies of Rugby School and Dulwich College. He was made a C.B. in 1882 and K.C.B. in 1893. In 1871 Sir A. Godley married Miss Sarah James, only daughter of the first Lord Northbourne.

GODWIN, Parke, American author, was born at Paterson, New Jersey, Feb. 25, 1816. He graduated from Princeton College in 1834, studied law and was admitted to practice, but preferred literary pursuits; and from 1837 until within the last few years was connected with the New York Evening Post. He edited in 1843–4 The Pathfinder, a literary journal, and was for some years a contributor to the Democratic Review. Of Putnam's Magazine he was for a considerable time one of the principal editors, and always a contributor. Two volumes of critical and miscellaneous essays in that magazine have been collected under the titles, "Political Essays" and "Out of the Past," 1870. Besides his almost continuous journalistic labour, he has translated and edited Goethe's "Autobiography" and Zschokke's "Tales;" and compiled a "Handbook of Universal Biography," 1851; a new edit. entitled "Cyclopædia of Biography," 1878; and has written, among other works, "A Popular View of the Doctrines of Fourier," 1844; "Constructive Democracy;" and "Vala, a Mythological Tale," 1851. Many years ago he began an elaborate "History of France," of which only the first volume has been published. During the administration of President Polk he was Deputy Collector of New York, and subsequently took an active part in the formation of the Republican Party. In 1883 he published a "Biography of Wm. Cullen Bryant," in 2 vols., and superintended a new edition of his poems and prose writings in 4 vols. He married a daughter of William Cullen Bryant.

GOE, The Rt. Rev. Field Flowers, D.D., Bishop of Melbourne, son of the late Mr. Field Flowers Goe, solicitor, was born at Louth, Lincolnshire, in 1832. He was educated at King Edward's Grammar School, Louth; and, after studying law for a time, went to Oxford in 1854, graduating at Magdalen Hall (now Hertford College) in 1857. He was ordained in 1858 by the Archbishop of York to the Curacy of Christ Church, Hull, and in the same year was ordained priest, and succeeded the Rev. John King as Incumbent of that church. He held this post until 1873, when he was appointed to the Rectory of Sunderland. Four years later he was appointed by the Lord Chancellor to the Rectory of St. George's, Bloomsbury. In 1884 he was Select Preacher to the University of Cambridge. Mr. Goe took an active part in the meetings of the Church Congress and in parochial missions, and was one of the representatives of the Rural Deanery of St. George's, Bloomsbury, in the London Diocesan Conference. In Oct., 1886, he was selected by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, the Bishops of Durham and Manchester, and Bishop Perry, by delegation from the Melbourne Board of Electors, to fill the Bishopric of Melbourne, vacant by the translation of Dr. Moorhouse to the See of Manchester. He was consecrated in Westminster Abbey on St. Matthias' Day, 1887, by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Benson).

GOLDSMID, Major-General Sir Frederic John, C.B., K.C.S.I., born at Milan, Aug. 19, 1818, was educated at the private English School of the Rev. Mr. Maturin in Paris, at King's College School, and at King's College, London. He was appointed ensign in the Madras Army in 1839; lieutenant in 1840; captain in 1851; brevet major in 1856; major in 1861; brevet lieut.-colonel in 1863; lieut.-colonel in 1865, brevet colonel in 1870; and retired with rank of major-general from Jan. 1, 1875. From 1839 to 1856 he held several military staff appointments, general and regimental; but from 1852 to 1873 he was chiefly in civil and political employ. From 1865 to 1870 he was chief director of the Government Indo-European Telegraph; from 1870 to 1873, Boundary Commissioner and Arbitrator for the Eastern Frontiers of Persia, with the rank of major-general. He served in the Chinese campaign of 1840-42; and with the Turkish troops in the Eastern Crimea in 1855-56; was afterwards employed on several official missions, to Makran in 1856, 1863, and 1869; through Turkish Arabia and Asia Minor to Constantinople in 1864; to Eastern Persia and Baluchistan in 1866-70-71; and Western Afghanistan in 1872. He laid down the Perso-Baluch frontier in 1871; and arbitrated on the Perso-Afghan frontier in 1872. In 1877 he was appointed British Commissioner on the International Commission for Immigration of Indian Coolies in the French island of Bourbon, and was employed on a later commission assembled in Paris on the same question in 1880. He was English Controller of the Daira Sanieh, in Egypt, from 1880 to 1883; and in 1882 he organized a Local Intelligence Department at Alexandria, which had existence throughout the war. For this last-named service, at the close of operations, he, and those employed under him, received the thanks of the General commanding the expeditionary force, and of the War Office. In 1883 he proceeded to the Congo for H.M. the King of the Belgians; but returned at the close of the year to Europe on account of ill-health. Besides pamphlets or miscellaneous writings of a minor character, he brought out, in 1874, a volume entitled "Telegraph and Travel;" edited "Eastern Persia" in 1876; and published the "Life of Sir James Outram," 2 vols., in 1880. He was created a C.B. in 1866; K.C.S.I. in 1870; has the 2nd class Order of the Osmanieh, 4th class order of the Medjidieh, the China Medal, Turkish War Medal, Egyptian War Medal, and Khedive's Bronze Star. He is a Vice-President of the Royal Asiatic, and on the Council of the Royal Geographical Society. He is Lecturer in Colloquial Persian to the School of Modern Oriental Studies established by the Imperial Institute in 1888.

GOLDSMID, Sir Julian, M.P., eldest son of the late Frederick Goldsmid, was born in Oct., 1838. He was educated at University College, London, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Jan., 1864, when he chose the Oxford Circuit. He is one of the Deputy-Chairmen of the Committee of the House of Commons, and has frequently taken the chair in Committee. He is a magistrate for Kent, Middlesex, and London, and a deputy-lieutenant for Kent, Sussex, and Berks. He is a Fellow of University College, London, and a member of the Senate of the University of London. He sat as a Liberal for Honiton from March, 1866, till its disfranchisement in 1868, when he was an unsuccessful candidate for Mid-Surrey. He was returned for Rochester in July, 1870, and sat for that constituency until 1880. He was returned for South St. Pancras in 1885; again, as a Unionist Liberal, in 1886, and again in 1892. He is a Peer of Portugal, and succeeded his uncle Sir F. Goldsmid as third baronet.

GONCOURT, Edmond Louis Antoine Huot de, a French writer, born at Nancy, May 26, 1822, is a grandson of Jean Antoine Huot de Goncourt, a deputy in the National Assembly of 1789. As an author he became known by a long series of works written in conjunction with his brother, Jules Alfred Huot de Goncourt, who was born at Paris in 1830, and who died at Auteuil in June, 1870. Some were novels; others, and the more important, were a series of studies on the society and art of the 18th century in France. The two brothers published in their joint names. "En 18 . . ," a novel, 1851; "Salon de 1852;" "Les Mystères des Théatres," and "La Lorette," 1853; "Histoire de la Société Française pendant la Révolution, et sous le Directoire," 2 vols., 1854-5; "La Révolution dans les Mœurs," 1854; "La Peinture à l'Exposition Universelle de 1855; "Les Actrices," and "Une Voiture de Masques," 1856, republished under the title of "Quelques Créatures de ce Temps," 1876; "Portraits intimes du XVIII^e Siècle," two series, 1856-8; "Sophie Arnould, d'après sa correspondance et ses mémoires inédits," 1857; "Histoire de Marie-Antoinette," 1858; "Les Maîtresses de Louis XV.," 2 vols., and "Les Hommes des Lettres," 1860, a novel republished under the title of "Charles Demailly," 1869; "Sœur Philomène," a novel, 1861; "La Femme au XVIII^e Siècle," 1862, reprinted in 1877, with the addition of a chapter entitled "L'Amour au XVIII^e Siècle;" "Renée Mauperm," a novel, 1864; "Germinie Lacerteux," 1865; "Idées et Sensations," 1866; "Manette Salomon," 2 vols., 1867; "Madame Gervaisais," 1869; "Gavarni, l'Homme et l'Artiste," 1873; "L'Art au XVIII^e Siècle," 3 vols., 1874; and three dramas, "Henriette Maréchall," 1865; "La Patrie en danger," 1873; and "Germinie Lacerteux," a piece based upon the novel issued in 1865. Since the death of his brother, M. Edmond de Goncourt has published under his own name, "L'Œuvre de Watteau," a classified catalogue in 1876; "L'Œuvre de Prudhon," 1877; "La Fille Elisa," a novel, 1878; "Les Frères Zemganno," a novel, 1879; "La Maison d'un Artist," 2 vols., 1881; "La Faustine," roman, 1882; "Chérie," roman, 1884; "Madame Saint-Huberty, biographie de la Chanteuse," 1885; "Mademoiselle Clairon, biographie de la Tragédienne," 1890. M. Edmond de Goncourt has recently published "Journal des Goncourt, Mémoires de la Vie Littéraire, 1851-70." 3 vols., and in March, 1890, commenced the publication of a second series extending from 1870 to 1890. M. Edmond de Goncourt's dramatised version of "Germinie Lacerteux," a joint romance by the two brothers, was acted at the Odéon in 1887 and revived in 1892.

GOODALE, George Lincoln, M.D., LL.D., American botanist, was born at Saco, Maine, Aug. 3, 1839. He graduated at Amherst College in 1860, and received his degree of M.D. at Bowdoin College and at Harvard in 1863. He began the practice of his profession at Portland (Maine), and was soon appointed Instructor in Anatomy at the medical school located there. In 1867 he became Professor of Natural Science and Applied Chemistry in Bowdoin; and in 1868 was given the chair of Materia Medica in the Maine Medical School, and was also made a Member of the Board of Agriculture. These positions he resigned in 1872, to accept the Instructorship in Botany, and the University Lectureship on Vegetable Physiology at Harvard. In 1873 he was made Assistant Professor of Vegetable Physiology; in 1878 Professor of Botany; in 1879 Director of the Botanic Garden; and in 1888, Fisher Professor of Natural History. He was elected a Member of the Council of Harvard College Library in 1875; and a Member of the Faculty of the Museum of Comparative Anatomy in 1881. Professor Goodale was President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in 1890. He is a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, of the National Academy of Sciences at Washington, and of many other scientific bodies. He has published numerous works on Physiological and Economic Botany, and critical reviews in the American Journal of Science, of which he is an associate editor.

GOODALL, Frederick, R.A., son of the late Mr. Edward Goodall, the eminent engraver (who died April 11, 1870), was born in London, Sept. 17, 1822. Before he was fifteen he had won the "Isis," and the large silver medal of the Society of Arts. In 1838 he went on a sketching tour through Normandy. In 1839, when but seventeen, he exhibited his first picture at the Academy—"Card Players." Subsequent visits to Normandy, Brittany, and Ireland supplied him with materials for a long series of popular pictures. One of these early pictures, "The Return from Christening," received a prize of £50 from the British Institution. Two others, "The Tired Soldier," 1842, and "The Village Holiday," 1847, are now in the National Gallery. Other important pictures drawn from old English life were "Hunt the Slipper" and "Raising the Maypole," 1851. A charming scene from Milton's "L'Allegro" was in a walk he had seldom trod. In 1853 he was elected an Associate of the Academy. Two years later he exhibited "An Episode of the Happier Days of Charles I.," representing a water party in the Royal barge at Hampton Court: and after this came "The Swing," 1855, and "Cranmer at the Traitor's Gate," 1856, engraved in line by his father. In 1857 Mr. Goodall visited Venice and Chioggia, where he made studies for "Felice Ballarin reciting Tasso," which was not completed for the following exhibition, but exhibited in 1859. The winter of 1858 and the spring of 1859 he spent in Egypt, and several pictures have been the result of that journey. In 1863 he was elected a Royal Academician. Since then he has exhibited "The Song of the Nubian Slave," his diploma work, and "The Messenger from Sinai at the Wells of Moses," in 1864; "Rising of the Nile," in 1865; "Hagar and Ishmael," in 1866; "Mater Purissima" and "Mater Dolorosa," in 1868; "Jochabed," in 1870; "The Head of the House at Prayer," in 1872; "An Arab Improvisatore," and "Subsiding of the Nile," in 1873; "Rachel and her Flock," "Agriculture in the Valley of the Nile," "A Fruit Woman of Cairo," "A Seller of Doves," and "The Day of Palm Offering," in 1875; "An Intruder on the Bedouin's Pasture," "The Holy Mother," and "Sheep-washing near the Pyramids of Ghizeh," in 1876; "Glencoe," "The Time of Roses," and "The Water-carriers: Egypt," in 1877; "Oxhey Place, Herts," "The Daughters of Laban," and "Palm Sunday," in 1868; "Water for the Camp," "Sarah and Isaac," and "Hagar and Ishmael," in 1879; "Moving to Fresh Pastures," "Time of the Overflow, Egypt," "Hannah's Vow," "An Egyptian Pastoral," and "Holy Childhood," in 1880; "The Road to Mecca," "The Return from Mecca," "Artist and Model," and "Rebecca," in 1881; "Memphis," and "The Arrival at the Well," in 1882; "Crossing the Desert," "Returning from the Pasture, Ghizeh," "A Coffee Shop, Cairo," "Outside the Tent," and "Water for the Camp," 1883; "A New Light in the Harem," "The Flight into Egypt," "Sword of the Faithful," 1884; "Finding of Moses," "The Holy Child," "Gordon's last Messenger," 1885; "Misery," 1887; "Leading the Flock," 1889; and "The Thames from Windsor Castle," 1890; "Isles of Loch Lomond," 1891; Spinners and Weavers," 1892; "Sheep Shearers in Egypt," 1892; "The Waters of the Nile," 1893; "The Palm Grove," 1894." Mr. Goodall has painted many portraits, of which the following is a list:—"Alice," "Thomas Tarry, Esq.," "Sir John MacNeil," "Sir Henry Havelock," "Lady Grantley," "Sir Moses Montefiore," "The late Thos. Blackwell, Esq.," "The late Robt. Blackrock, Esq.," "Mrs. Phipps Eyre," "Mrs. Gandall," "Charles Randell, Esq.," "J. Barrow, Esq.," "Mrs. J. Barrow," "Mrs. Oates," "Miss Beatrice Shaw," "The Hon. Mrs. R. Devereux," "Beatty Kingston, Esq.," "W.K. D'Arcy, Esq.," "Miss Lena D'Arcy," "Lady Dorothy Nevill," and "Miss Rica Goodall" (1871-1894).

GOODE, George Brown, Ph.D., LL.D., American ichthyologist and museum administrator, was born at New Albany, Indiana, Feb. 13, 1851. He was graduated from Wesleyan University (Connecticut) in 1870, and in 1871 took charge of the College Museum. He joined the staff of the Smithsonian Institution (Washington) in 1873, and on the organization of the National Museum in 1881, he became its Assistant-Director, and in 1887 succeeded Professor Baird as Assistant-Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution in charge of the National Museum, a position which he still occupies. He supervised the natural history exhibition of the United States Government at the Philadelphia Exhibition in 1876; was the United States Commissioner to the Fisheries Exhibition at Berlin in 1880 and at London in 1883; was a member of the United States Government Executive Board for the New Orleans, Cincinnati and Louisville Expositions in 1884; from 1874 to 1887 was a volunteer assistant on the United States Fish Commission; was in charge of the Fisheries Division of the tenth (1890) census; was Commissioner to the Historico-American Exposition at Madrid in 1892; and was in charge of the exhibit of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum at the Chicago Exposition in 1893. In 1887 he succeeded the late Professor Baird as United States Fish Commissioner, but resigned in 1888. He is a member of the National Academy of Sciences, and a corresponding member of the Zoological Society of London, the Société Zoologique de France and the Society of Naturalists of Moscow, and numerous other scientific bodies. He received the degree of Ph.D. from Indiana University, and that of LL.D. from Wesleyan University, and from the Spanish Government the decoration of Commander in the Order of Isabella la Catolica. His published papers on ichthyology, the fisheries, museum administration and the history of American institutions, number over two hundred. Among his most important publications are "The Game Fishes of the United States," 1879; "The Fisheries and Fishing Industries of the United States" (7 vols.), 1884; "The Beginnings of Natural History in America," 1886; "American Fishes," 1887; "Virginia Cousins," 1888; "The Origin of the National Scientific and Educational Institutions of the United States," 1890; "Plan of Classification for the World's Columbian Exposition, 1890; "Museums of the Future," 1890; and with T. H. Bean, "Oceanic Ichthyology," 1893.

GORDON, John B., born in Upson county, Georgia, Feb. 6, 1832, was educated at the University of Georgia, and admitted to the Bar. At the beginning of the civil war he entered the Confederate army as Captain, and rose to the rank of Lieut.-General. He became prominent towards the end of the war, especially during the protracted siege of Petersburg by General Grant. He commanded at the close of the war one wing of Lee's army, and led the last assault at Appomattox Court House. The State of Georgia having been "reconstructed," as a member of the Union, he was in 1868, the Democratic candidate for Governor, but his Republican opponent was declared to be elected. In 1873 he was chosen Senator from Georgia, and re-elected in 1879, but resigned his seat in 1880. He took a leading part in the Senate, and although a Democrat, gave a moderate support to the policy of President Hayes. On his retirement from the Senate he became interested in various railroad enterprises, but in 1886 was elected Governor of Georgia, an office to which he was re-elected in 1888. He has been succeeded therein by Governor Northen.

GORDON-CUMMING, Miss Constance Frederica, sixth daughter of Sir William Gordon-Cumming, of Altyre and Gordonstoun, Morayshire, was born at Altyre, May 26, 1837. Homes so beautiful early inspired in her a deep love of nature, but for the first thirty years of her life, her wanderings were entirely confined to Great Britain. Then an invitation to join a married sister in the Himalayas resulted in her penetrating to the boundaries of Chinese Tartary, and, the taste for travel being now fairly awakened, the next twelve years were spent in various Oriental countries, and Pacific Isles. Miss Gordon-Cumming has published accounts of her travels in the following volumes: "In the Hebrides;" "Viâ Cornwall to Egypt;" ', In the Himalayas;" "At Home in Fiji;" "A Lady's Cruise in a French Man-of-War;" "Fire Fountains of Hawaii;" "Granite Grags of California;" "Wanderings in China;" "Two Happy Years in Ceylon;" and lastly, "Work for the Blind in China." In the last-mentioned book she describes a new system by which the sounds of the Chinese language are represented by the use of numerals, instead of as heretofore, by our own alphabet. By this means, the blind are taught to read and write easily within two months. The inventor of this system, which promises to prove an invaluable handmaid of Christian Missions in China, is the Rev. William H. Murray of Pekin.

GORE, The Rev. Charles, M.A., is the son of the Hon. Charles Alexander Gore, and the nephew of the fourth Earl of Arran, and was born in 1853. He is a Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford, and is now vicar of Radley, close to Oxford. He was the first Principal of the Pusey Memorial Library in Oxford, and was named as one of the literary executors by the will of the late Canon Liddon. He resigned his post at the Pusey House in May, 1893. He is probably best known to the world as the editor of "Lux Mundi," and author of the essay on "The Holy Spirit and Inspiration" contained in that volume. Among his other works may be mentioned "The Church and the Ministry," the Bampton Lectures for 1891 on "The Incarnation of the Son of God," and "Roman Catholic Claims," all of which have run through several editions.

GORE, George, LL.D., F.R.S., was born Jan., 1826, at Bristol, and attended a private school until of the age of twelve years; but has otherwise been entirely self-educated and self-trained, without the aid of scientific teachers, lectures, or lessons, or the advantage of working with scientific persons. Yet so well did he educate himself, and so important were his scientific discoveries that he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, 1865, and received the honorary degree of LL.D. of Edinburgh University, 1877. He was Lecturer on Physics and Chemistry during many years at the Grammar School of King Edward VI., Birmingham; and is the author of "Theory and Practice of Electro-deposition," 1856; "The Art of Electro-metallurgy," 1877; "The Art of Scientific Discovery," 1878; "The Scientific Basis of National Progress and Morality," 1882; "Electro-chemistry," 1885; and "The Art of Electrolytic Separation and Refining of Metals," 1890. He has made numerous scientific discoveries in physics and chemistry, which have been published in a series of papers in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, the Proceedings of that Society, the Proceedings of the Birmingham Philosophical Society, the Philosophical Magazine, &c. A list of most of his original electrical researches is given in "The Electrician's Directory," 1892, p. 37. He is chiefly distinguished by his discoveries in, and writings upon, the subjects of Electro-chemistry, Electro-metallurgy, and Chemistry; his experimental investigations of the highly dangerous substance anhydrous hydrofluoric acid and the fluorides; his discovery of "explosive antimony," and his recent invention of the "voltaic balance," by means of which he has been enabled to discover and investigate invisible molecular changes (and measure their rates) in a number of liquids, to measure the effect of light upon chlorine-water, to discover a number of isomeric liquids, to prove the existence of several hundreds of new chemical substances termed "solution compounds," and to detect the influence of one part by weight of chlorine in 500,000 million parts of water. He was the first to observe the remarkable molecular change which occurs in iron at a dull red heat, his original observation of the decolorising effect of chlorine-water on crude phosphorus gave rise to the present mode of bleaching that substance, and his solution for electro-depositing nickel, made known in the year 1856, was the first to be commercially employed in electro-plating articles with nickel. Of his writings on the subject of original scientific research an article entitled "The National Importance of Scientific Research," published in The Westminster Review, April 1873, excited public attention. In the year 1891 a Civil List Pension of £150 a year was granted to him in recognition of the national value of his numerous scientific discoveries, &c.

GORGEI, General Arthur, was born at Toporcz in Upper Hungary, on Jan. 30, 1818; and having received a military education at Tuln, entered the Hungarian Body-Guard; but subsequently relinquished the profession of arms, and studied chemistry in the University of Prague. However, on the outbreak of the Hungarian revolution in 1848, his military ardour revived, and he went to the aid of Kossuth, and by his genius for war soon rose to the rank of General. His retreat through the defiles of the Carpathians was one of the most brilliant feats of the war. In 1849 he won a succession of victories, and was made Minister of War, refusing at the same time the rank of Field Marshal. Subsequently, through refusing to co-operate with his colleagues, he caused them to be defeated in detail; and, on Aug. 13, he was completely surrounded at Valagos, and surrendered to the Russian General, Rudiger. "His treason," wrote Kossuth, "has inflicted on me, and through me on the Republic, a death-blow." Ultimately he was pardoned; and he published in 1851 a narrative of his connection with the insurrection, under the title of "My Life and Acts in Hungary." From that time he has lived in retirement, keeping completely aloof from politics. In 1885 a proposal was made formally to reinstate him in public favour, but it was not well received in Hungary.

GORST, The Right Hon. Sir John Eldon, P.C., Q.C., M.P., late Under-Secretary of State for India, and Financial Secretary to the Treasury, is a son of the late Mr. Edward Chaddock Lowndes (the last name assumed instead of Gorst), of Preston, Lancashire, and was born in May, 1835. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was sometime a Fellow, and was third Wrangler in 1857. From 1861-63 he was Civil Commissioner of Waikato, New Zealand, and in 1865 was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, becoming a Q.C. in 1875. In 1866 he entered Parliament as Conservative member for Cambridge, but was defeated in 1868. In 1875 he was returned for Chatham, which he continued to represent till 1892, when he was elected member for the University of Cambridge. Mr. Gorst was from 1880 to 1885 one of the small group of members known as the Fourth Party, who all have since received such remarkable political advancement. In Lord Salisbury's first administration (1885) he was Solicitor-General; and in his second Government he held the post of Under-Secretary for India, and was created a Privy Councillor in 1890. He was one of the English delegates at the Berlin Labour Conference (1890), and in 1891 he was conspicuous for his advanced attitude with regard to the Labour Question. After a visit to Ireland, he was appointed Financial Secretary to the Treasury in November, 1891, and held that office until the following July.

GOSCHEN, The Right Hon. George Joachim, M.P., P.C., son of the late William Henry Goschen, a London merchant, of German extraction, was born Aug. 10, 1831. He received his education at Rugby, under Drs. Tait and Goulburn, and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A., taking a first-class in classics, in 1853. Soon after, he became a merchant in partnership with Messrs. Frühling and Goschen, of Austinfriars, and a Director of the Bank of England; but he retired from the partnership on taking office in the Russell-Gladstone ministry. He was returned in the Liberal interest for the City of London, in May, 1863, on the death of Mr. W. Wood; and he took an active part in the movement for throwing open the universities to dissenters, and the abolition of religious tests. Mr. Goschen, who was re-elected for the City of London, at the head of the poll, at the general election in July, 1865, was made Vice-President of the Board of Trade, Nov. 20, 1865, when he was sworn of the Privy Council, and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and a Cabinet Minister, Jan. 26, 1866, retiring with the Russell ministry in June of that year. On the accession of Mr. Gladstone to power, in Dec., 1868, he was appointed President of the Poor-Law Board, which office he held to March, 1871, when he succeeded Mr. Childers as First Lord of the Admiralty. He went out of office with his party in Feb., 1874. At the general election which was held in that year he was the only Liberal candidate returned for the City. In 1876 Mr. Goschen and M. Joubert were chosen as delegates of the British and French holders of the Egyptian debts to concert measures for the conversion of the debts. They proceeded to Egypt, where they were received by the Khedive (Aug. 14), and eventually an agreement was signed at Cairo (Nov. 18) for a reorganization of the finances and public debt of Egypt. On July 17, 1878, Mr. Goschen issued an address to the Liberal electors of the City of London, declining to come forward again at the next general election, on the ground that his votes on the County Franchise question had not been in accord with the views generally entertained by the party. Mr. Goschen attended the International Monetary Conference held at the Foreign Office, Paris, in Aug., 1878. In May, 1880, immediately after Mr. Gladstone's accession to power, Mr. Goschen consented to undertake the special duties of Ambassador Extraordinary at Constantinople, in the place of Sir Henry Layard, who retired, nominally on leave of absence, but in fact finally. Before proceeding to Constantinople Mr. Goschen visited the most important political centres in Europe, and this was the first step towards the formation of a European concert for the execution of the unperformed parts of the Treaty of Berlin. In 1881 the ambassadors of the Great Powers in the Conference of Constantinople, after long and patient negotiations, joined in a note to the Greek Government recommending the acceptance of the utmost that Turkey could be brought to yield. The new frontier line left the greater part of Epirus, with Janina and Metzovo, to Turkey, giving Greece possession of almost all Thessaly, and the command of the Gulf of Arta. The Cabinet of Athens was forced, under pressure, to agree to this frontier line, which deprived Greece of nearly one-third of the territory promised to her at Berlin. It was admitted by all the Powers that the assent of Turkey to these terms was obtained chiefly through the persistence and firmness of Mr. Goschen. His mission came to an end in April, 1881. Mr. Goschen was appointed an Ecclesiastical Commissioner for England in Nov., 1882. He has written largely on financial questions, and his treatise on "The Theory of the Foreign Exchanges," 5th edit., 1864, has been translated into French by M. Léon Say. He has published various speeches in pamphlet form, amongst them his "Speech on Oxford University Tests Abolition Bill," 1865, and his "Speech on Bankruptcy Legislation and other Commercial Subjects," 1868, and "Addresses on Education and Economic Subjects," 1885. At the general election of 1885, Mr. Goschen, who had sat for Ripon since his retirement from the representation of the City of London in 1880, was elected, after a severe contest (in which he was opposed by a Radical, but obtained a great majority), to represent the Eastern Division of Edinburgh. In 1886, however, he was defeated by a large Gladstone-Liberal majority. From 1887 to the present time he has represented the St. George's, Hanover Square Division. Mr. Goschen had taken a foremost place in the campaign against the Home Rule Bill. On the resignation of Lord Randolph Churchhill in Dec., 1886, and when Lord Salisbury had failed to induce Lord Hartington to join his Government, Mr. Goschen was prevailed upon to accept the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, though he declined the leadership of the House. Mr. Goschen's scheme for the reduction of the interest on the National Debt was cordially accepted by all parties, and successfully brought to a conclusion in July, 1889. Mr. Gladstone, however, vigorously attacked his proposals with reference to the Death Duties. He was elected Lord Rector of the University of Aberdeen in 1874 and 1888, and of the University of Edinburgh in 1890.

GOSSE, Edmund William, M.A., only son of the late Mr. Philip Henry Gosse, F.R.S., was born in London, Sept. 21, 1849, and educated in Devonshire. He was appointed assistant-librarian at the British Museum in 1867; but has held since 1875 the post of Translator to the Board of Trade. In 1872 and 1874 he visited Norway, Denmark, and Sweden, for the purpose of studying the literature of those countries; and in 1877 he visited Holland with a similar purpose. His poetical writings consist of "Madrigals, Songs, and Sonnets" (in conjunction with a friend), 1870; "On Viol and Flute," lyrical poems, 1873; "King Erik," a tragedy, 1876; "The Unknown Lover," a drama, 1878; "New Poems," 1879; and "Firdausi in Exile, and other Poems," 1886. Mr. Gosse wrote "The Masque of Painters," which was performed by the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours, on May 19, 1885, and on subsequent evenings, with great success. A collected edition of Mr. Gosse's early poems, called "On Viol and Flute," appeared in 1890. His chief prose writings are a volume of "Northern Studies," 1879, consisting of critical essays in Scandinavian, Dutch, and German literature; a "Life of Gray, 1882 (English Men of Letters Series); about thirty essays contributed to Ward's "English Poets," in 1880-81; "Seventeenth Century Studies, a contribution to the history of English Poetry," 1883; "From Shakespeare to Pope; an inquiry into the causes of the rise of classical poetry in England," 1885; a "Life of Philip Henry Gosse, the naturalist, 1890; "Gossip in a Library," 1891; "The Secret of Narcisse," a romance, 1892; "Questions at Issue," a volume of essays, 1893; and "The Jacobean Poets," and "In Russet and Silver," poems, 1894. He has also edited a volume of "English Odes," 1881; a complete edition of the works of Gray, in 4 vols., 1884; the writings of Beddoes, in verse (1890) and prose (1891); and a series of translated foreign novels, "The International Library." He has lectured on Ibsen, and, jointly with Mr. William Archer, translated the "Master Builder," which in the spring of 1893 had a long theatrical run. In the spring of 1884, Mr. Gosse was elected Clark Lecturer in English Literature at Trinity College, Cambridge, in the place of Mr. Leslie Stephen, who retired; and in 1885 he received the honorary degree of M.A. from the University of Cambridge. He was re-elected Clark Lecturer in 1886, and retired in 1889. In the winter of 1884-85, Mr. Gosse, who had been invited to deliver the Lowell Lectures that season, visited America, and lectured not only in Boston, but before Harvard and Yale Colleges, before the Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, and in New York. In 1875 Mr. Gosse married a lady who is well known as an artist, and as a contributor to the principal exhibitions.

GOT, François Jules Edmond, an eminent French comedian, born at Lignerolles (Orne), Oct. 1, 1822, received his education at the Collége Charlemagne, and after being employed for a short time at the Prefecture of the Seine, entered M. Provost's class at the Conservatoire, where, in 1842, he carried off the second, and in 1843 the first, prize for comedy. After a year's compulsory service in the army, he made his first bow to a Parisian audience in 1844 at the Comédie Française, of which Society he became a member in 1850. M. Got's reputation steadily increased, and he is now most deservedly regarded as one of the greatest actors on the French stage. He excels in the representation of the leading comic parts in the old classical dramas, and has created scores of original characters in modern pieces. M. Got's name has been frequently before the public, in connection with the internal dissensions of the Comédie Française. When M. Got and his colleagues of the Théâtre Français visited London in 1871, they were entertained at a public dinner at the Crystal Palace. On Aug. 4, 1881, M. Turquet, the Under-Secretary of State for Fine Arts, publicly conferred the Cross of the Legion of Honour on M. Got at the Conservatoire. It was, however, as Professor of the Conservatoire and Maître de Conférences à l'Ecole Normale Supérieure, that M. Got received this high recompense for his services to art. M. Got again visited London with his colleagues of the French Theatre in the summer of 1893, and appeared in "Les Plaideurs" and other parts. He is now about to retire from the stage. On Jan. 12, 1895, he married Mdlle. Tréville.

GOTCH, Francis, Hon., M.A. Oxon, B.A. and B.Sc., Lond., M.R.C.S. and F.R.S., born at Bristol in 1853, is the son of the late Rev. F. W. Gotch, LL.D., one of the Old Testament Revision Committee. Receiving his early education at Amersham Hall School, he proceeded to University College, London, being appointed Gilchrist Scholar at University Hall in 1871. In 1873 he became a Graduate in Arts of the University of London, and was appointed University Scholar in Logic and Moral Philosophy. Having turned to the study of science, he graduated in that subject in 1875, and subsequently became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1881. From this time he devoted himself to Physiology, becoming Sharpey Physiological Scholar, and two years were spent teaching in the Laboratory of University College, London, under Professor Burdon-Sanderson. In 1883 he proceeded to Oxford as Demonstrator in the Physiological Laboratory of the University, receiving the honorary degree of Master of Arts in 1885. He was appointed Holt Professor of Physiology in University College, Liverpool, in 1891, and was elected Fellow of the Royal Society in the following year. Professor Gotch's researches have been chiefly directed to the elucidation of fundamental questions as to the functions of various excitable structures, muscles, nerves, electrical organs, spinal cord, and brain. In conjunction with Professor Victor Horsley he carried out a prolonged experimental investigation into the functions of the central nervous system by the use of a new method, that of observing and contrasting the electrical changes in nerve-fibres and nerve-centres when these are in a state of activity and repose respectively. These researches were made the subject of the Croonian Lecture at the Royal Society in 1891. Besides several communications to various physiological and medical journals, Professor Gotch has recently published the following papers:—"Changes in the Mammalian Spinal Cord following Excitation of the Cortex Cerebri," Proceedings of the R. S., 1888. (in conjunction with Prof. Horsley); "The Electrical Organ of the Skate," Part II. Journal of Physiol., 1889, (in conjunction with Prof. Sanderson); "Communication and Demonstration to the Physiological Congress at Bâle," Centralblatt für Physiologie, 1889; "The Electrical Relations of the Brain and Spinal Cord," Proceedings of the Royal Institution of Great Britain, 1890; "The Mammalian Nervous System," Croonian Lecture, Proceedings of the Royal Society, 1891, Phil. Trans., 1891, (in conjunction with Prof. Horsley); and "Temperature and Excitability," communicated to the Physiological Congress at Liège, 1892.

GOTT, the Very Rev. John, D.D., Bishop of Truro, was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1853, and in 1873, when he became Vicar of Leeds, was made D.D. Ordained in 1857, he was for four years Curate at St. Nicholas, Great Yarmouth, and afterwards held the incumbency of the church of St. Andrew in the same town. He was appointed perpetual curate of Bramley, Leeds, in 1866, and became Vicar of Leeds in 1873 in succession to Dr. Woodford, who was raised to the See of Ely. He was Vicar and Rural Dean of Leeds until 1886, when, on Lord Alwyne Compton becoming Bishop of Ely, he succeeded his lordship as Dean of Worcester. The vicarage of Leeds has long been a stepping-stone to high preferment in the church, having been held at different times by Dean Hook and Drs. Atlay and Jayne, in addition to the foregoing. Dr. Gott is a High Churchman, and is the author of "The Parish Priest of the Town," 1877. He became Bishop of Truro in June, 1891.

GOUGH, General Sir Charles John Stanley, K.C.B., V.C., entered the army on March 20, 1848; Lieutenant, Sept. 1, 1849; Captain, June 9, 1857; Major, July 20, 1858; Lieut.-Colonel, Jan. 24, 1867; Colonel, Nov. 28, 1875; Major-General, July 2, 1885; Lieut.-General, June 5, 1889. Sir Charles Gough served throughout the Punjaub campaign of 1848-9, including the action of Ramnuggur, passage of the Chenab, and battles of Sadoolapore, Chillianwalla, and Goojerat (Medal with two clasps); served in the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1857-8; was with the Guide Corps at the siege and capture of Delhi; was Commander of the Guide Cavalry in the affairs at Kurkonda on the 15th, and Rhotuck on the 17th and 18th of August, 1857, engaged in the cavalry affair in rear of the camp on Sept. 11. He served with Brigadier Showers' column in the Delhi and Jhujjur districts; was engaged in the action of Narnole on Nov. 16th; served with Hodson's Horse in the actions of Gungeeree, Putteallee, Mynpoorie, and Shumshabad (wounded); commanded a squadron of Hodson's Horse in the action of Meangunge; was present throughout the siege and capture of Lucknow (Medal with two clasps, Victoria Cross, and Brevet of Major). He was awarded the V.C., 1st: For gallantry in an affair of Khurkowdah, near Rhotuck, on Aug. 15, 1857, in which he saved his brother, who was wounded, and killed two of the enemy. 2nd, For gallantry on Aug. 18, when he led a troop of the Guide Cavalry in a charge, and cut down two of the enemy's sowars, with one of whom he had a desperate hand-to-hand combat. 3rd, For gallantry, on Jan. 27, 1858, at Shumshebad, where, in a charge, he attacked one of the enemy's leaders, and pierced him with his sword, which was carried out of his hand in the mêlée. He defended himself with his revolver, and shot two of the enemy. 4th, For gallantry, on Feb. 23, 1858, at Meangunge, where he came to the assistance of Brevet-Major O. H. St. George Anson, and killed his opponent, immediately afterwards cutting down another of the enemy in the same gallant manner. Sir Charles Gough served with the Bhootan Expedition in 1864-65 (Medal with clasp); served in the Afghan War of 1878-80, and was present at the attack and capture of Ali Musjid, and in the engagement at Futtehabad (mentioned in despatches); commanded a force of all arms which proceeded from Gundamuck to the relief of Cabul in Dec. 1879 (mentioned in despatches); and commanded a brigade in the engagement at Saidabad (mentioned in despatches), K.C.B., and Medal with two clasps). From 1885 to 1890 he was on Staff service, part of the time being spent with the Bengal Army.

GOUGH, General Sir Hugh Henry, K.C.B., V.C., entered the army on Sept. 4, 1853; Lieutenant, Aug. 9, 1855; Captain, Jan. 4, 1861; Brevet Major, Jan. 5, 1861; Major, Sept. 4, 1873; Brevet Lieut.-Col., March 30, 1869; Lieut.-Col., Sept. 4, 1879; Brevet Col., Oct. 1, 1877; Major-General, Feb. 6, 1887. Sir Hugh Gough served as Adjutant of Hodson's Horse throughout the siege of Delhi (wounded); commanding a wing of the regiment in the actions of Bolundshur, Allyghur, and Agra, relief of Lucknow by Lord Clyde, battle of Cawnpore, affairs at Seraighat and Khodagunge, siege and capture of Lucknow (severely wounded and two horses killed), and action of Ranodé (mentioned in despatches on several occasions for "distinguished bravery," and thanked by the Governor-General of India, Brevet Major, Victoria Cross, and Medal with three clasps). He received the V.C. for the following circumstances:—"Lieutenant Gough, when in command of a party of Hodson's Horse near Alumbagh on Nov. 12, 1857, particularly distinguished himself by his forward bearing in charging across a swamp, and capturing two guns, although they were defended by a vastly superior body of the enemy. On this occasion he had his horse wounded in two places, and his turban cut through by a sword, whilst engaged in combat with three sepoys. Lieutenant Gough particularly distinguished himself also near Jellalabad, Lucknow, on Feb. 25, 1858, by showing a brilliant example to his regiment, when ordered to charge the enemy's guns; and, by his gallant and forward conduct he enabled his men to effect their object. On this occasion he engaged himself in a series of single combats, until at last he was disabled by a musket-ball through the leg, while charging two sepoys with fixed bayonets. Lieutenant Gough, on this day had two horses killed under him, a shot through his helmet, and another through his scabbard, besides being severely wounded." He commanded the 12th Bengal Cavalry in the Abyssinian campaign in 1868, and was present at the capture of Magdala (mentioned in despatches C.B., and Medal); served throughout the Afghan War of 1878-80; commanded the cavalry of the Koorum Force in 1878-79, and was present at the capture of the Peiwar Kotal, in the pursuit of the Afghans over the Shutargardan, in the affair of the Maugior Pass, and during the operations in Khost. He served with the Cabul Field Force in 1879-80 as Brigadier-General of Communications, and was present in the engagement at Charasiab, and in the various operations around Cabul in Dec. 1879 (wounded); accompanied Sir Frederick Roberts in the march to Candahar in command of the Cavalry Brigade, and was present at the reconnaisance of Aug. 31 in command of the troops engaged and in the cavalry pursuit of the following day (frequently mentioned in despatches, K.C.B., Medal with four clasps, and bronze decoration). He became a Lieutenant-General in 1891, and was on the staff of the Bengal Army from 1887 to March, 1892.

GOULBURN, The Very Rev. Edward Meyrick, D.D., late Dean of Norwich, son of Edward Goulburn, Esq., Serjeant-at-Law, born about 1818, was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was elected a scholar in 1835, and where he graduated B.A. in 1839, taking first-class honours in the School of Literæ Humaniores, and was elected Fellow of Merton College in 1841. Having held for some years a College tutorship conjointly with the incumbency of Holywell, in Oxford, he was elected in 1850 successor to Dr. Tait, Dean of Carlisle, in the Head Mastership of Rugby School, from which post he retired in 1858. He preached the Bampton Lectures at Oxford in 1850; was appointed minister of Quebec Chapel and Prebendary of St. Paul's in 1858; one of the Queen's chaplains in ordinary, and incumbent of St. John's Paddington, in 1859; and Dean of Norwich in 1866. He resigned the Deanery of Norwich, June 17, 1889. In addition to a large number of single sermons and lectures, Dean Goulburn has published "The Doctrine of the Resurrection of the Body, as taught in Holy Scripture," eight sermons, 1851; "Rudimentary Treatise on the Philosophy of Grammar, with especial reference to the Doctrine of the Cases," 1852; "Introduction to the Devotional Study of the Holy Scriptures," 1854, 3rd edit., 1860; "The Idle Word: short religious essays upon the gift of speech and its employment in conversation," 1855, second edit., 1864; "Manual of Confirmation," 1855, ninth edit., 1872; "The Book of Rugby School," 1856; a collection of "Family Prayers," 1857, new edit., 1868; "The Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures," 1857; Sermons preached on different occasions during the last twenty years," 2 vols., 1862; "Thoughts on Personal Religion," 2 vols., 1862; "The Office of the Holy Communion in the Book of Common Prayer: a series of lectures," 2 vols., 1863; "The Functions of our Cathedrals," 1869; "The Pursuit of Holiness," 1869, fifth edit., 1873; "The Ancient Sculptures in the Roof of Norwich Cathedral described and illustrated; with a History of the See and Cathedral of Norwich from its Foundation to Modern Times," London, 1872, &c.; "The Great Commission: Meditations on Home and Foreign Missions," 1872; "Is it true? Is it widely received and believed by God's Church? Reasons for neither mutilating nor muffling the Athanasian Creed," 1872; "The Holy Catholic Church; its divine ideal, ministry, and institution," 1873; "The Collects of the Day;" "Thoughts upon the Liturgical Gospels for the Sundays; one for each day in the week;" "Holy Week in Norwich Cathedral;" "Life, Letters, and Sermons of Bishop Hubert de Losenga;"

"The Prayer-Book Doctrine of Absolution: an Ordination Sermon;" "Three Counsels of the Divine Master," 2 vols., 8vo., 1889; an introduction to "Ten Years' Church Work in Natal," 1890; "Farewell to Norwich Cathedral," 1891; and a biography of the late Dean Burgon, 1892.

GOULD, Benjamin Apthorp, was born at Boston, Mass., Sept. 27, 1824. He graduated at Harvard College, 1844; and afterwards pursued his scientific studies for several years in Paris and Berlin, and at Göttingen, and other European observatories. Returning to America in 1849 he was soon appointed to the charge of the longitude-determinations of the Coast Survey, in which he did much to develop the telegraphic methods, determining many longitudes telegraphically, and with unsurpassed accuracy, before the method was adopted anywhere in Europe. In 1856 he was made Director of the Dudley Observatory at Albany, N.Y., and retained that position until the beginning of 1859. During the Civil War he served as Actuary of the U. S. Sanitary Commission. In 1866, immediately after the successful laying of the Transatlantic cable, he determined by telegraph the longitude between the two continents, going himself to Valentia in Ireland, and establishing there a temporary observatory. In 1868 he organised a private expedition for cataloguing the stars of the southern hemisphere, at Cordoba, in the Argentine Republic; but, before starting, accepted an invitation from the Government there to carry out the plans as a national undertaking. He left the U.S. in May, 1870, intending to be absent three years, but remained at Cordoba until 1885, building a national observatory, completing three extensive catalogues of stars, establishing an Argentine meteorological office, investigating the climatology and determining the geographical positions of a large number of points, as well as the magnetic constants for various places. He also made, between 1872 and 1884, photographs of precision for all important southern clusters of stars. In 1849 he founded the Astronomical Journal, which he edited and published until 1861, the expenses being borne by himself and a few friends. The outbreak of the war caused its discontinuance; but immediately after returning from South America, he resumed the publication, which is an important aid to astronomical progress in the U.S., and has now (1893) reached its thirteenth volume. Among his principal works are:—"Report on the Discovery of the Planet Neptune" (Smithsonian Miscellaneous Collection, 1850); "Discussion of the Observations made by the United States Astronomical Expedition to Chili, for determining the Solar Parallax," 1856; "Reply to the 'Statement of the Trustees' of the Dudley Observatory," 1859; "Reduction of Observations of Fixed Stars by d'Agelet at Paris in 1783-85," 1865; "On the Transatlantic Longitude," 1868; "Military and Anthropological Statistics of American Soldiers," 1869, and a series of about twenty quarto volumes of the Argentine National Observatory, and Argentine Meteorological Office. One volume of the Results of the Observatory is formed by the "Uranometria Argentina," which gives the brightness and position of every fixed star, to the 7th magnitude inclusive, within 100° of the South Pole; two by the "Zone-Catalogue," which contains more than 105,000 observations of 73,160 stars; and one by the "General Catalogue," which contains the positions of about 34,000 stars, each on the average observed four times. The "Uranometria" is accompanied by an elaborate series of maps.

GOURAUD, Colonel George Edward, was born in 1841, at Niagara Falls, U.S.A. At the outbreak of the great war of secession, he entered the cavalry arm of the army of the United States, and served with distinction until peace was proclaimed. His military career was both active and brilliant, and he was several times mentioned in general orders "for gallant conduct on the field of battle." It is related by General Stewart L. Woodford that "Gouraud, then a subaltern and but 19 years of age, at his first engagement, when making the first reconnaissance with a handful of men from Edward's Ferry towards Leesburg, was surprised by a body of rebels 1,000 strong, which delivered a volley at less than fifty yards. Gouraud, when all the survivors of his small band were at full gallop in retreat, stopped his horse and, under a withering fire, rescued a wounded comrade, whose horse had been killed. While incumbered with the weight of this man, he charged a fully-armed rebel cavalryman and carried him a prisoner into the Union lines." For this he was immediately promoted to the staff of the Commanding-General as Aide-de-Camp. Again, at the battle of Honey Hill, when in Hartwell's assault on the enemy's works every other mounted officer of his brigade was either unhorsed or killed, finding himself alone mounted, with nearly 1,000 men stampeded by a terrific discharge of artillery at a distance of less than a hundred yards, he galloped to the centre of what had been "the line," and succeeded in rallying the retreating troops in time to receive and successfully repulse a charge of the enemy's infantry. For this Captain Gouraud was promoted to the rank of Brevet-Major. At Pocotaligo, when aide-de-camp on the staff of General John G. Foster, and while reconnoitring in advance of the column accompanied by only two troopers, he accidentally came upon an entrenched outpost of about twenty of the enemy. With singular presence of mind, having recognized the glitter of two 12-pound brass Napoleon guns, Gouraud shouted commands to imaginary infantry and cavalry as, with his two men, he charged and occupied the redoubt which the enemy left by the rear. He sent one of his men to report the situation to his commanding officer, while he remained with the other until the column came up and carried off the two guns. He served as Assistant Inspector-General of the Dept. of the South, and in Virginia and East Tennessee as Special Inspector of Cavalry. Colonel Gouraud resigned from the army shortly after the conclusion of hostilities, and in 1870 first visited Europe on a special mission from the United States Treasury. Since leaving the army Colonel Gouraud has been prominently identified with the foremost inventions of his time, having brought to Europe three of the most remarkable, namely: the Telephone, the Electric Light, and the Phonograph. His association with Mr. Edison has extended over twenty years; and the acquaintance was formed at a period when Mr. Edison's name was unknown. He has been Mr. Edison's equal partner in Europe in several of his principal inventions, and is commonly credited with having enlisted more capital in successful enterprises based upon patents than any of his contemporaries. He is a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic, being a comrade of Fort Lafayette, New York, and is addicted to athletics.

GOURKO (Count), Joseph Vassilyévich, one of the most distinguished generals of the Russo-Turkish war, is of Lithuanian origin, and was born in 1828, and educated in the imperial "Corps de Pages." He was created ensign of the regiment of Hussars of the Imperial Body Guard in 1846. In 1857 he was already captain, and commanded a squadron in the same regiment, and was made in 1860 adjutant to the Emperor. In 1861 he received his colonel's commission. In 1866 Gourko was appointed commander of the 4th Hussar regiment of Marinpol. In 1867 the Emperor named him major-general, and ordered him to be of his suite. Then he commanded the Grenadier regiment of the Imperial Guards, and in 1873 the 1st brigade of the 2nd division of the Cavallerie de la Garde. We may add that Count Gourko took part, although in inferior rank, in the Crimean war, being stationed at Belbeck. His heroic deeds are almost too well known to be minutely recorded; we will mention only some of the principal feats of this valiant general, who commanded the vanguard of the Imperial army. On June 25, 1877, with a detachment of cavalry and a single battery, he attacked and took by assault the strong and powerfully occupied town of Tyrnovo (Tirnowo). On July 5 he occupied Kazanlyk and the village of Shipka, and after occupying and defending the passes of Shipka, Hanko, and others, he, together with General Radetzky, traversed the Balkans in the middle of the winter snowstorms and frosts, with but few losses, and led the victorious Russian troops into the fertile valleys beyond, thus occupying Sofia, Philippopolis, and Adrianople. The hazardous and almost impossible feat of traversing the Balkans in the middle of winter will for ever remain one of the greatest deeds performed by the soldiers of Russia. Count Gourko has been elevated to the rank of Adjutant-General, is a Knight of St. George of the second class, and of several other high orders. He was made a Count in April, 1878, and was appointed Governor-General of St. Petersburg (1879) after the attempts on Alexander's life, and then, after a period of enforced retirement, Governor-General of Poland. His rule in Poland has been strongly Muscovite in tendency. In 1884 the Czar visited Poland, and General Gourko took extraordinary precautions for his safety. In 1891, during the Russian famine, he made an optimistic report on the food supply in Poland. Events proved him to have been mistaken, and his position was in danger, but he exculpated himself, and in April, 1892, returned to Warsaw as Commander-in-Chief of all troops in Poland and Lithuania. Count Gourko is married to a French lady.

GOW, Andrew Carrick, A.R.A., was born in London, June 15, 1848, and educated at St. John's School, Warwick, and in London. He was trained as a lithographic artist by the late Andrew Maclure, of Walbrook, and became a student of Heatherley's School of Art, Newman Street. In 1868 he was elected a Member of the Institute (now Royal Institute), and since 1869 has been a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy. Amongst his chief works may be mentioned "A Suspicious Guest," 1870; "Introduction of Lady Mary Wortley to the Kit Kat Club," 1873; "Sophy Baddeley at the Pantheon," 1875; "The Relief of Leyden," 1876, now in the National Gallery of Sydney; "The Tumult in the House of Commons in 1640," 1877; "No Surrender," 1878, now in the National Gallery at Melbourne; "The Last Days of Edward VI.," 1880; "Bothwell," 1884; "Absolution for the Lost at Sea," 1885; "Cromwell at Dunbar," 1886. Mr. Gow was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1881.

GOWER, Mrs., née Mdlle. Nordica, the prima donna, is an American by birth, and received her early musical education at the Boston Conservatoire of Music, where she greatly distinguished herself. She afterwards proceeded to Italy to complete her training. Her chief triumph on the operatic stage has been her impersonation of the part of Marguerite in Gounod's "Faust," Gounod was said to regard her Marguerite as second only to that of Mdme. Patti. Mdlle. Nordica married Mr. Gower, who is now deceased.

GOWERS, William Richard, M.D., F.R.S., was born in London in 1845, and educated chiefly at Christchurch College School, Oxford. He commenced the study of medicine in 1861 as pupil to a surgeon at Coggeshall, Essex, and continued it at University College and Hospital, graduating at the University of London in 1869 and 1870. In 1873 he was appointed Assistant Physician to University College Hospital, and to the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, and subsequently became Physician to each institution, and a Professor of Clinical Medicine in University College. He was elected F.R.C.P. in 1879, and F.R.S. in 1887. His contributions to medical science have embraced many subjects, but he is chiefly known to the profession on account of his work on the structure and diseases of the nervous system. A special tract of fibres in the spinal cord, which he first described, is often called after him. The extent to which his work upon this subject has been based on original observation and research, and the manner in which facts thus ascertained have been applied to the elucidation of the practical problems of disease, their diagnosis and treatment, have secured for his works a wide circulation, not only in this country but also in America, and in most European countries, and have made them popular alike with students and practitioners. He was one of the early investigators of the changes that occur within the eye in diseases of the brain, kidneys, &c., and his "Manual and Atlas of Medical Ophthalmoscopy" (of which a third edition was published in 1890) is the chief authority on the subject. It is also of interest as containing the first systematic use of the Autotype process for illustrating the processes of disease, most of the plates having been thus reproduced from the author's own drawings. A course of lectures delivered before the College of Physicians in 1880 formed the basis of a work on "Epilepsy and the Convulsive Diseases." A small book on the "Diagnosis of Diseases of the Spinal Cord" has been described as marking a turning-point in professional knowledge of the subject, and was followed by a similar work dealing with the Diseases of the Brain. Dr. Gowers' chief work, however, is a general "Manual of Diseases of the Nervous System," in 2 vols., of which a second edition appeared in 1892. Besides these subjects he is known in connection with diseases of the blood, and has improved or invented apparatus for counting the number of the blood corpuscles, and ascertaining their quality. Like many members of the medical profession, he has found a recreative occupation in etching, and his work has been seen at the Royal Academy and other exhibitions. He is, indeed, apparently the first F.R.S. whose etching has been seen at the Academy, although many Fellows have exhibited work in oil and water-colour.

GRACE, Dr. William Gilbert, the famous cricketer, was born at Downend, near Bristol, July 18, 1848. He early evinced a great aptitude for cricket, and in 1864 played with the South Wales team at Brighton against the Gentlemen of Sussex, scoring 170 and 56 not out. The next year he was eagerly sought for, and his reputation established. Between 1864 and 1890 Mr. Grace completed 814 innings in first-class matches, and obtained in all 35,466 runs, being an average of 43½ per innings, the most extraordinary record of batting performances ever chronicled. He captured 2,230 wickets in first-class matches, between the same years, at a cost of 36,170 runs; average per wicket, 16. In July, 1879, he was presented with a costly testimonial, subscribed for by all classes of players, in recognition of his merits as an all-round cricketer. He is said to be the best bat in England, a good bowler, an excellent field, and a first-rate captain. In 1884 he played three innings of over 100 against the Australians, and repeated the feat in 1886. Like his father and brother (Dr. E. M. Grace) he is a member of the medical profession, and took his degree in 1879. He published a book upon Cricket in 1891.

GRAHAM, Lieutenant-General Sir Gerald, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., V.C., son of the late Robert Hay Graham, M.D., of Eden Brows, Cumberland, was born in 1831, and educated at private schools, three years being spent at a school in Dresden, Saxony. He entered the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, in 1847, and received his commission, as Second Lieutenant in the Corps of Royal Engineers in 1850. He became Captain in 1858, Major in 1859, Lieutenant-Colonel in 1861, Colonel in 1869, Major-General in 1881, and Lieutenant-General in 1884. He served throughout the Crimean campaign, landing with the first troops at Old Fort on Sept. 14, 1854, and leaving when the Russian guard took over Balaklava in May, 1856. He was present at the battles of Alma and Inkerman, did nearly 100 turns of duty in the trenches, and led a ladder-party at the assault of the Redan on June 18, 1855. He took part in the demolition of the docks and "White Buildings" during the winter of 1855-56, and was twice wounded. For the Crimean campaign he received the medal with three clasps, 5th class Medjidieh, Turkish medal, Victoria Cross, and was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour. He was twice mentioned in despatches, and obtained the brevet rank of Major. He took part in the China war of 1860, and was severely wounded at the assault of the Taku Forts; was present at the capture of Pekin, mentioned in despatches, obtained brevet rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, C.B., and medal, with two clasps. In the Egyptian campaign of 1882 Major-General Graham commanded the 2nd brigade of the 1st division throughout the campaign. He took part in the action of El Magfar, commanded at Kassassin on Aug. 28, took part in the subsequent action of Sept. 9, and in the battle of Tel-el-Kebir; he was mentioned in despatches, thanked by both Houses of Parliament, received K.C.B., 2nd Class Medjidieh medal with clasp and Bronze Star. Major-General Sir Gerald Graham was put in command of the expedition for the relief of Tokar in Feb., 1884, after the destruction of an Egyptian force under Baker Pacha. The British force fought a severely-contested action with the rebel Hadendowas at El Teb, on Feb. 29, 1884, and relieved Tokar on the following day. On March 13 Sir Gerald Graham again defeated a large force of Arabs, with great slaughter, at Tamai. The road to Berber was then open, but the British troops were withdrawn. For these services Major-General Sir Gerald Graham was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant-General. In 1885, after receiving news of the fall of Khartoum, another expedition was sent under the command of Lieutenant-General Sir Gerald Graham to Suakim to open the road to Berber and to lay down a railway. This expedition arrived at Suakim about March 13, and on the 20th fought the battle of Hasheen. Sir Gerald received the V.C. for "determined gallantry at the head of a ladder-party at the assault of the Redan (Sebastopol), on June 18, 1855; and for devoted heroism in sallying out of the trenches on numerous occasions, and bringing in wounded officers and men." For his services Lieutenant-General Sir Gerald Graham was thanked by both Houses of Parliament, and was decorated with the Grand Cross of SS. Michael and George by her Majesty. He has contributed some articles to the Royal Engineers' Professional Corps papers, and translated Von Goetze's "Account of the German Engineers' operations during the campaign, 1870-71." In Jan., 1886, he contributed a paper to the Fortnightly called "Last Words with General Gordon."

GRANIER DE CASSAGNAC, Paul de. See DE CASSAGNAC.

GRAND, Sarah (née Frances Elizabeth Clarke), was born at Donaghadee, in the North of Ireland, where her father, a naval lieutenant, held a coastguard appointment at the time. Though born in Ireland, Sarah Grand is of English parentage, and has no Irish blood. Her father's family belonged to Hertfordshire; her mother was of North-country stock. Her father died when she was a child, and her mother then settled down among her own people in Yorkshire, where Sarah Grand's girlhood was passed. She was the youngest but one of five children, two boys and three girls. At fourteen she was sent to the Royal Naval School, Twickenham, but the discipline of this large establishment did not suit her, and she was accordingly removed to a school in Holland Road, Kensington. This part of her education, however, terminated at sixteen, when she married. She accompanied her husband, an officer in the army, to the East—Ceylon, Singapore, China, and Japan. She also saw something of Egypt. She wrote much poetry in those days, and several novels, which she burnt, her whole life, from her marriage, being devoted steadily to literary expression. Sarah Grand first appeared in print in the columns of Aunt Judy, a girls' magazine, for which she wrote a few small pieces. In July, 1888, she published her first book "Ideala." Written five or six years before it eventually appeared, it went from publisher to publisher, until at last it was printed at her own cost, and published by Mr. Allen, of Ave Maria Lane, from whom it was eventually taken over by Mr. Bentley. Two years after the appearance of "Ideala" Sarah Grand completed her novel of "The Heavenly Twins;" but again her work travelled from publisher to publisher, and was rejected by one after another. In the meantime she looked up some of her early work for publication. "Singularly Deluded," one of the novels written on more commonplace lines when she was little more than a girl—long before she began "Ideala"—was accepted and published by Mr. Blackwood in December, 1892. And whilst "The Heavenly Twins" were being written and were still on their travels, she wrote several short stories for Temple Bar and other magazines. At last, in the spring of 1892, she determined to publish "The Heavenly Twins" also at her own expense. When it was printed, however, it was shown to Mr. William Heinemann, who took over the whole risks of the work and published it in January, 1893, when it became an immediate literary success. Since the publication of this work she has collected her short stories into a book which was published in March, 1894, under the title of "Our Manifold Nature."

GRANT, The Very Rev. George Monro, D.D., LL,D., Principal of Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, who is of Scottish parentage, was born at Stellarton, Pictou county, Nova Scotia, Dec. 22, 1835. He received his education at Pictou Academy and at the West River Seminary of the Presbyterian Church in his native province. At the latter, at the age of eighteen, he won a bursary which entitled him to a collegiate course in the University of Glasgow, the bursary being awarded by the Synod of the Old Kirk in Nova Scotia. During his university course at Glasgow he won academic distinction, taking the highest honours in philosophy at his examination for M.A., the Lord Rector's Prize for the best Essay on Hindoo Literature and Philosophy, and other prizes and scholarships. On his return to Nova Scotia, he spent some time as a missionary in the Maritime Provinces, and became pastor of St. Matthew's Church, Halifax, a position which he held until his acceptance, in 1877, of the Principalship of Queen's University. In 1872 he published "Ocean to Ocean," an interesting diary of a tour across the American Continent, in connection with Sandford Fleming's surveying expedition, to locate the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and, in 1884, "Picturesque Canada," an elaborate work illustrative of the scenery, the industries, and the social life of the Canadian Dominion. He is a frequent contributor to British, American, and Canadian periodicals, and writes, not only on theological, but on educational, social and political subjects.

GRANT, Field-Marshal Sir Patrick, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., Governor of Chelsea Hospital, son of the late Major John Grant, of Auchterblair, co. Inverness, born at Auchterblair, Strathspey, in that county, in 1804, entered the military service of the East India company in 1820. During the Gwalior campaign of 1843–4, Captain Grant served on Sir Hugh Gough's Staff as deputy Adjutant-General, and obtained his brevet majority and Bronze Star for Maharajpur. As Adjutant-General in the Sutlej campaign of 1845-6, he fought under the same chief at Mudki and Sobraon, was twice severely and dangerously wounded by grape-shot in the arm, and musket-ball in the left breast, and had three horses shot under him. He was frequently mentioned in despatches, and was made Brevet Colonel and C.B., receiving a Medal and three Clasps. In the same capacity he again followed Lord Gough through the Punjaub campaign, sharing in the hard-won fight of Chillianwalla and the crowning victory of Gujarát. At the end of the campaign he was made an A.D.C. to the Queen with the rank of Colonel (Medal with two Clasps). In 1849-50 Colonel Grant again served as Adjutant-General in Sir C. Napier's campaign against the hill-tribes of Kohat (Medal with Clasp). In 1856, as Major-General and K.C.B., he was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Madras army, and on the death of General Anson, in the first days of the Mutiny in 1857, Sir Patrick went over to Calcutta as acting Commander-in-Chief of Bengal, pending the arrival of Anson's successor, Sir Colin Campbell. After the Mutiny, he was rewarded with the Grand Cross of the Bath; and in March, 1867 was preferred to the Governorship of Malta, and appointed G.C.M.G. in 1858. The latter post he resigned in April, 1872, and in 1874 he was appointed Governor of Chelsea Hospital, left vacant by the death of Sir Sydney Cotton. In Oct., 1885, he was appointed Colonel of the Royal Horse Guards (the Blues) and Gold Stick in Waiting. The following are the dates of his appointments :—Ensign, July 16, 1820; Lieut., July 11, 1823; Captain, May 14, 1832; Bt. Major, April 30, 1844; Major, June 15, 1845; Bt. Lieut.-Colonel, April 3, 1846; Lieut.-Colonel, Aug. 2, 1850; Colonel, Aug. 29, 1851; Major-General, Nov. 28, 1854; Lieut.-General, Oct. 24, 1862; General, Nov. 19, 1870; Field-Marshal, June 24, 1883.

GRANT, Robert, American writer, was born at Boston, Mass., Jan. 24, 1852. He was graduated from Harvard University in 1873, and from its Law School in 1879. In 1888 he was appointed a member of the Board of Water Commissioners of Boston, of which in the following year he became Chairman. This position he resigned in July, 1893, to accept his present office, that of Judge of Probate and Insolvency for the county of Suffolk, Mass. Besides his contributions to magazines he has published "The Little Tin Gods on Wheels," 1879; "The Confessions of a Frivolous Girl," 1880; "The Lambs," 1882; "An Average Man," 1883; "The King's Men," with others, 1884; "The Knave of Hearts," 1885; "A Romantic Young Lady," 1886; "Face to Face," 1886; "Jack Hall," 1887; "Jack in the Bush," 1888; "The Reflections of a Married Man," 1892; and "The Opinions of a Philosopher," 1893.

GRANTHAM, The Hon. Sir William, son of George Grantham, of Barcombe Place, Sussex, was born at Lewes, Oct. 23, 1835, and educated at King's College School. He was called to the Bar in 1863, after obtaining the studentship given by the four Inns of Court to the most distinguished student of the term; was made Q.C. 1877, and became a Bencher of the Inner Temple in 1878; J.P. and Deputy-Chairman of Sussex; and Judge of the High Court of Justice, 1886. In 1871 he was largely instrumental in securing the return of Mr. Watney for East Surrey, this being the first Conservative victory in the constituency for 27 years. At the General Election of 1874 he himself contested the county against the Hon. Locke King, whom he defeated by the large majority of 1,107; and in 1880 he was again returned with a majority of 2,006. On the passing of the Redistribution Bill of 1885, he was asked to give up his seat for the county, to contest the new borough of Croydon, as no Conservative candidate could be found to contest it owing to the then popularity of the Liberal candidate, Mr. J. S. Balfour, who had been instrumental in getting Croydon made a corporation a few years before, and who had been twice mayor. Mr. Grantham, however, defeated him by a majority of 1,157. In Jan., 1886, Mr. Grantham was made a Judge of the Queen's Bench Division and consequently retired from Parliament.

GRAVES, The Right Rev. Charles, D.D., D.C.L. (Oxon.), F.R.S., Bishop of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe, was born Nov. 6, 1812, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took high honours, and became a Fellow and Professor of Mathematics. He was President of the Royal Irish Academy from 1860 to 1865; and was for some time Dean of the Chapel Royal in Ireland, and Chaplain to the Lord Lieutenant. He was consecrated Bishop of Limerick, June 29, 1866.

GRAY, Miss Frances Helena, LL.D., was educated at the Methodist College, Belfast, and took first place in Ireland at the Intermediate Examinations, gaining at the same time two gold medals. In 1881 she matriculated with Honours in the Royal University, Dublin, gaining third place in the ensuing scholarship examination in Modern Literature. She took the degree of B.A. in 1888, with Honours in Geology and Biology. In the following year she turned her attention to Law, and succeeded in taking the degree of LL.B.; while in 1890, she gained the high distinction of LL.D.

GREECE, KING of. See GEORGE, KING OF THE HELLENES.

GREELY, Brigadier-General Adolphus W., was born at Newburyport, Mass., March 27, 1844. Entering the volunteer service as a private soldier, he was thrice wounded and attained the rank of Captain during the Civil War, and at its close was transferred to the regular army with the rank of Lieutenant. In 1868 he was placed in the Signal Service; and in 1881 was assigned to the command of the International Polar Expedition to Lady Franklin Bay. In addition to completing his scientific work, his expedition made extensive geographical discoveries and attained 83° 24′ N. latitude,—the farthest north of all time. Visiting ships having failed to reach Greely in 1882 or 1883, he retreated to Cape Sabine, where hardships and starvation spared but seven, who were rescued in 1884 by a squadron under Captain Schley. He wrote the "Report of the Expedition to Lady Franklin Bay" (2 vols.), 1886, and published a private account of the expedition in 1885, under the title of "Three Years of Arctic Service," which has been translated into French and German. He was awarded the Founder's Medal by the Royal Geographical Society, the Roquette Medal by the Société de Geographie, Paris, and given the formal thanks of Massachusetts. In 1887 he was raised to the rank of Brigadier-General and Chief Signal Officer, being appointed head of the corps in which he had served for twenty years. Other works of General Greely are "American Weather," N.Y., 1888, and "American Explorers and Travellers," N.Y., 1893.

GREEN, Professor Alexander Henry, M.A. (Cambridge and Oxford), F.G.S., F.R.S., the son of the Rev. Thomas Sheldon Green, sometime Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, was born Oct. 10, 1832, at Maidstone, and was educated at the Grammar School, Ashby de la Zouche, Leicestershire, and at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. He was Sixth Wrangler in 1855, and was elected Fellow of his College the same year. In 1861 he was appointed to a post on the Government Geological Survey of England and Wales; and became Professor of Geology, and afterwards Professor of Geology and Mathematics in the Yorkshire College at Leeds in 1875; and Professor of Geology in the University of Oxford in 1888. He is the author of "Physical Geology," 3rd edit., 1882; "The Geology of the Yorkshire Coalfield" (Memoirs of the Geological Survey), 1878, and other Memoirs of the Geological Survey; and various papers on geological subjects.

GREEN, Anna Katharine. See ROHLFS, MRS. CHARLES.

GREEN, Mrs. Mary Anne Everett, whose maiden name was Wood, was born at Sheffield in 1818, and, in early life, resided in several parts of Lancashire and Yorkshire. She received an excellent education. Her intellectual tastes were fostered by the late James Montgomery, the "bard of Sheffield," an intimate friend of her father's. In 1841 her parents removed to London, and having now freer access to libraries and MS. collections, she conceived the idea of compiling the "Lives of the Princesses of England," the first volume of which appeared in 1849, and the sixth and last in 1855. Mrs. Green edited "Letters of Royal and Illustrious Ladies," published in 1846; "The Diary of John Rous," printed for the Camden Society, in 1856; "The Letters of Queen Henrietta Maria" in 1857; and has contributed occasionally to periodical literature, chiefly on antiquarian subjects. She has been intrusted by the Master of the Rolls with the duty of calendaring the State Papers in the Record Office. The papers of the reign of James I., four volumes, were published in 1857–9, and of those of Charles II. seven volumes appeared 1860–68. Mrs. Green was then requested to complete the calendar of the State Papers of Queen Elizabeth, left unfinished by the late Mr. Lemon, which, with addenda from Edward VI. to James I., forms six vols., published 1869-1874. She is now occupied upon the papers of the Interregnum, of which thirteen volumes were published, 1875-1886. These complete the general historical portion of the work from 1649 to 1660. She has since calendared the proceedings of the Committee for Advance of Money from 1642 to 1656, in three vols., published in 1888. She is now at work upon the papers of the Committee for Compositions with Royalists, 1643-1660, of which one volume of general proceedings appeared in 1889, and one volume of the cases of the compounders from 1643 to 1646, in 1890. In 1845 she was married to Mr. G. P. Green, artist, of Cottingham, near Hull, and of London.

GREENWELL, The Rev. William, M.A., D.C.L., F.R.S., F.S.A., is the eldest son of the late William Thomas Greenwell, Esq., J.P., D.L., of Greenwell Ford, co. Durham. He was born there March 23, 1820, and educated at Durham School and the University of Durham, where he graduated in 1839, and ultimately became Fellow of University College, and afterwards Principal of Neville Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne. In 1847 he was preferred to the vicarage of Ovingham, Northumberland, and is now Minor Canon and Librarian of Durham Cathedral, and Rector of St. Mary, in the South Bailey, in the city of Durham. Dr. Greenwell is well known as an archæologist, principally in connection with the sepulchral remains of the early inhabitants of Britain. His investigations with regard to the territorial possessions of the bishopric of Durham, as well as those of the Prior and Convent of the same place, are familiar to all interested in these and cognate subjects. He has written also on Greek numismatics and other branches of Greek archæology. His large series of skulls, many of which were derived from the barrows of England, was given by him some years ago to the University of Oxford. In 1879 he presented to the nation a collection, second to none in Britain, of urns and other sepulchral pottery, weapons and implements of stone and bronze and ornaments, the result of above twenty years' researches in the burial mounds of many counties of England. These are now lodged in the British Museum. His principal works are "Boldon Buke, a Survey of the Possessions of the See of Durham in 1183" (1852); "Bishop Hatfield's Survey," a record of the possessions of the See of Durham (1857); "Wills and Inventories from the Registry at Durham" (1860); "Feodarium Prioratus Dunelmensis," a survey of the possessions of the Prior and Convent of Durham in the fifteenth century (1872), being publications of the Surtees Society; "British Barrows," a record of the examination of sepulchral mounds in various parts of England (1877); "Durham Cathedral," an address illustrative of the building and its history (1881); "Electrum Coinage of Cyzicus" (1887), etc. Dr. Greenwell is a Justice of the Peace for the county of Durham.

GREGORY, Edward John, A.R.A., son of an engineer in the Peninsular and Oriental Company's service, was born at Southampton in 1850. He was educated in the Middle Class School there under Mr. David Cruickshank, who did much to encourage his artistic proclivities. He was then placed in the Engineers' drawing office of the Peninsular and Oriental Company at Southampton, where he remained till 1869. During this time he attended the Southampton School of Art. He also became acquainted with Mr. Herkomer, and took part in the formation of a Life Class, chiefly under his direction. He then came to London, studied at South Kensington for a few months; took up some other mechanical decorative work for the "department;" and finally succeeded Herkomer. He exhibited his first picture (in water colour) at the Dudley Gallery, and was then for a number of years a regular member of the Graphic artistic staff. In 1873 he was elected a member of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours, and has since that time exhibited many admirable drawings in the rooms of that body. His first considerable success dates from 1876, when he exhibited, at Mr. Deschamps' Gallery in New Bond Street, a powerful picture of morning light streaming in on the host and hostess of an otherwise deserted ball-room. Among the pictures exhibited by him at the Institute are "Norwegian Pirates;" "Pet of the Crew;" "Sir Galahad" (which gained the Watts Prize at Manchester); "St. George;" and "Last Touches." At the Grosvenor Gallery he has exhibited portraits of the Chairman of Lloyd's Register, Mr. W. T. Eley, and Miss Galloway; and "The Rehearsal" and other pictures; and at the Royal Academy, his own portrait, and portraits of Mr. H. R. Robertson, and the Rev. Thos. Stevens, Warden of Bradford College. Mr. Gregory was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, Jan. 30, 1883.

GREGORY, The Very Rev. Robert, M.A., Dean of St. Paul's, son of Robert Gregory, Esq., of Nottingham, born in 1819, was educated at private schools and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford (B.A., 1843; M.A., 1846). In 1850 he gained the Denyer Theological Prize at Oxford. He was ordained deacon at Christmas, 1843, and priest in 1844; and became curate of Panton and Wragby, in Lincolnshire, in 1847; curate of the parish church of Lambeth in 1851; and, in 1853, perpetual curate of St. Mary-the-Less, Lambeth, which living he resigned in 1873. In 1868 he was appointed Canon of St. Paul's; and in 1882 he was appointed by the Bishop of London, Treasurer of the Cathedral. He became Treasurer of the National Society for the Education of the Children of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church in 1868, and has taken a decided line of action on the question of religious education. He was a member of the Ritual Commission and also of the Royal Commission upon the Administration and Operation of the Contagious Diseases Act. Canon Gregory was elected in 1868 Proctor for the Clergy of the Archdeaconry of Surrey, which post he held till he was elected for the Chapter of St. Paul's in 1874. He was re-elected for the Chapter in 1880 and 1885. Canon Gregory has taken an energetic share in the action of the Chapter since his appointment to the Canonry, and, in conjunction with Dean Church, did much to popularize the services of the Cathedral. In 1870 he was appointed Rural Dean of Camberwell, which post he resigned in 1873; in which year he was elected a member of the London School Board for the City Division, and he sat on the Board till 1876, when he did not seek re-election. On Aug. 9, 1878, he was appointed a Royal Commissioner to inquire into the Parochial Charities of the City of London; and in January, 1886, a commissioner to inquire into the working of the Education Acts. Dean Gregory is the author of "Plea for Small Parishes," 1849; "The Difficulties and Organization of a Small Metropolitan Parish," 1866; "Sermons," 1869; "Lectures at St. Paul's," 1871-2; "The Cost of Voluntary Schools and of Board Schools," 1875; "Is the Canadian System of Education Rates possible in England?" 1875; "Position of the Celebrant Aspect in Convocation," 1875; "The Position of the Priest ordered by the Rubric in the Communion Service," 1876. In Dec., 1890, the Rev. Canon Gregory was appointed Dean of St. Paul's in succession to the late Dean Church. He married first, in 1844, Mary Frances, younger daughter of William Stewart, Esq., of Frescati, near Dublin (she died in 1851); secondly, in 1861, Charlotte Anne, youngest daughter of Admiral the Hon. Sir Robert Stopford, G.C.B.

GREIN, J. T., was born in Amsterdam on the 11th October, 1862, and is on the mother's side of English extraction. He was educated in Holland, Germany, and Belgium, and has been occupied in the East India and banking trades since 1879. He came to London in 1885, and is at present attorney in an important City firm. Since the early age of sixteen he has been connected with the press. He was in 1883 dramatic critic of one of the leading dailies in Amsterdam, and is the London editor of three of the most important daily papers of Holland, besides being dramatic critic of Life and of the Westminster Review. He is also correspondent of several German and French papers, and is accustomed to write four languages. The following works have been published by Mr. Grein: (in Dutch) "Dramatic Essays," 1884; "Silhouettes" (short novels), (1885); "London: Wealth and Poverty" (1890); (in English) "Twixt Light and Dark" (short stories); a play, "A Man's Love," in collaboration with C. W. Jarvis, in 1889, besides several small dramas which have been produced at various London theatres, and a collection of dramatic studies (1894). In 1891 Mr. Grein founded the Independent Theatre Society, with a view to producing plays which have an artistic and literary, rather than a commercial value. During three seasons this society produced works by Ibsen, Zola, de Banville, Coppée, and ten original plays, notably "Widowers' Houses," by G. B. Shaw; "The Strike at Arlingford," by George Moore; "Alan's Wife" (anonymous); "A Question of Memory," by Michael Field; and "The Black Cat," by John Todhunter. In 1893 Mr. J. T. Grein founded the Sunday Popular Debates Club.

GRENFELL, Colonel Henry Riversdale, born April 5, 1824, is second son of Charles Pascoe Grenfell, at one time M.P. for Preston, and of Lady Georgina, eldest daughter of Wm. Philip, second Earl of Sefton. He was educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford; was private secretary to Lord Panmure at the close of the Crimean War, and to Sir Charles Wood during the period of the reconstruction of the Indian administration from 1859 to 1861; was elected M.P. for Stoke-upon-Trent on the death of John Lewis Ricardo in 1862, and sat for that place till 1868, when he stood with Mr. Gladstone for South-West Lancashire, since which date he has not succeeded in obtaining a seat. He was elected a director of the Bank of England in 1865, Deputy-Governor in 1879, and Governor in 1881. He was Captain of 2nd Middlesex Militia in 1851, and was made Lieut.-Colonel of that regiment in 1870. He is also a Commissioner of Lieutenancy for the city of London, and sat as commissioner on the Metropolitan Board of Works in 1888. Colonel Grenfell is the author of several political pamphlets and magazine articles, principally on economical subjects, banking legislation, and the standard of value. He is a Liberal in politics, and has supported Mr. Gladstone in all questions except those connected with Ireland.

GRENFELL, Major-General Sir Francis Wallace, K.C.B., G.C.M.G., late Sirdar of the Egyptian Armies, was born in London on April 29, 1841; entered the army Aug. 5, 1859; became Lieut. July 16, 1863; Captain, Oct. 28, 1871; Major, Nov. 11, 1878; Lieut.-Colonel, Nov. 29, 1879; Colonel, Nov. 18, 1882; Major-General, Aug. 3, 1889; served as Aide-de-Camp to Sir Arthur Cunynghame, also as Staff Officer to Colonel Glyn, commanding a field force in the Transkei in 1887-8, and was present in the engagement with the Galekas and Gaikas at Quintana Mountain on Feb. 7, 1878 (mentioned in despatches, brevet of Major); was Deputy Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at head-quarters in the Kaffir war of 1878; and was Deputy Assistant-Adjutant-General at Head-quarters in the Zulu war of 1879, where he was present in the engagement at Ulundi (mentioned in despatches, brevet of Lieut.-Colonel, Medal with Clasp); was Assistant-Quarter-Master-General, under Sir Evelyn Wood, in the Boer war of 1881; was Assistant-Adjutant and Quarter-Master-General on the Head Quarters Staff, in the Egyptian war of 1882; and was present at the engagements of Tel-el-Mahuta, and Kassassin, and in the battle of Tel-el-Kebir (mentioned in despatches, Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, Medal with Clasp, 3rd class of Medjidieh, and Khedive's Star); was with the Nile Expedition in 1884-5 on the lines of communication (mentioned in despatches, C.B. and Clasp); was with the Egyptian Field Force in 1885-6, and was present in the engagement at Giniss in command of a Division (mentioned in despatches, K.C.B., and promoted to 1st class of the Medjidieh, and 3rd class of the Osmanieh). Sir Francis Grenfell also commanded the troops during the operations near Suakim in Dec. 1888, including the engagement at Gemaizah, and headed the combined English and Egyptian forces at the battle of Toski (Aug. 3, 1889). On the day previous to General Grenfell's departure from Egypt on leave of absence his Highness the Khedive presented him with a sword of honour "In souvenir of the victories of Giniss, Gamaiza, and Toski." Major-General Grenfell returned from Egypt in April, 1892, and in May was appointed Deputy Adjutant-General for Militia, Yeomanry and Volunteers.

GRESHAM, Hon. Walter Quinton, American jurist and statesman, was born near Lanesville, Ind., March 17, 1832; was educated at the State University (Bloomington, Ind.); studied law at Corydon, Ind., and was admitted to the Bar in 1853. He was elected to the State Legislature in 1860, but resigned his seat to enter the Federal Army when the Civil War began, when he rose to the rank of Brigadier-General with the brevet of Major-General, having been severely wounded in the operations before Atlanta. At the close of the war he resumed the practice of law at New Albany, Ind. From 1867 to 1868 he was Financial Agent for Indiana at New York City; from 1869 to 1882 was U.S. Judge for the District of Indiana; from 1882 to 1884 was Postmaster-General under President Arthur; and from July to Oct., 1884, was Secretary of the Treasury. In Oct., 1884, he was appointed U.S. Judge for the 7th Judicial Circuit, which position he retained until March, 1893, when he became Secretary of State under President Cleveland.

GRÉVILLE, Henry. See DURAND, ALICE MARIE CELESTE.

GREY, Sir George, K.C.B., Ex-Premier of New Zealand, was born at Lisbon in 1812; educated at Sandhurst, entered the Army in 1829, and became Captain in 1835. In 1839 he retired from the profession and was engaged in an exploration of Western Australia; and in 1841 was appointed Governor of South Australia; and, in 1845, Governor of New Zealand. In 1854 he was Governor of Cape Colony; and from 1861 to 1867, again Governor of New Zealand. In 1872 he retired on a governor's pension. In 1875 he became Superintendent of the Province of West Auckland; and, in 1877, Premier of New Zealand, from which office he retired in 1884. He was a delegate at the Federal Convention in 1891. The biography of Sir George Grey was published in 1892. He came to England in 1893, where he has been very cordially received. He is much interested in the political movements of the day, especially in the question of Home Rule, in which he is a firm believer. He was made a Privy Councillor in April, 1894.

GREY-WILSON, William, born at Tunbridge Wells on April 7, 1852, is the son of Andrew Wilson, Inspector-General of hospitals, H.E.I.C.S., and great-grandson of the first Earl Grey. He was educated at Cheltenham College, and became Private Secretary to Sir William Grey, K.C.S.I., Governor of Jamaica 1874, also to Lieut.-Governor Edward E. Rushworth, General J. R. Mann, R.E., Sir Frederick Barber, and the Earl of Northesk, and clerk of the Executive and Legislative Councils of British Honduras, 1878; Magistrate on the Mexican Frontier and in command of the Frontier scouts, 1879; assistant Colonial Secretary and Treasurer, Sierra Leone, 1883; special commissioner to take over the Sulymah country, West Africa; and subsequently sent on several special missions to native states in West Africa; fourth assistant Colonial Secretary to the Gold Coast Colony, 1884; Colonial Secretary, Saint Helena, 1886; administered Government, 1887 to 1890. Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Saint Helena, May, 1890.

GRIEG, Edvard Hagerup, musician, was born at Bergen, in Norway, June 15, 1843. At an early age he received his first musical instruction from his mother, who was a highly gifted musician and an accomplished pianist. In 1858 he went to continue his musical training at the Conservatorium of Leipzig, where he became a pupil of Moscheles, Hauptmann, Richter, Reinecke, and Wenzel. In 1863 he went to prosecute his studies at Copenhagen under the late Niels Wilhelm Gade, who, with E. Hartmann, greatly contributed to develop his talent for composition. The turning point in his career, however, was his coming in contact, for a short period, with Richard Nordraak, a young Norwegian composer of brilliant genius, who shortly afterwards died. With regard to this meeting Grieg himself relates that "The scales fell from my eyes. It was from him that I first learned to appreciate the popular melodies of the North, and to be conscious of my own nature. We became determined adversaries of the effeminate Scandinavianism which was an admixture of Gade and Mendelssohn, and with enthusiasm we struck out the new path now trodden by the Northern school." In 1867 he founded at Christiania a musical society, which he still continues to direct. In 1865 and 1870 he paid visits to Italy, and became intimate in Rome with Liszt. He also repeatedly visited Germany, especially Leipzig, for lengthened periods. There he brought out his compositions in public, and he himself performed in 1879, at a concert in the Gewandhaus, his concerto for the piano. Among his best-known works may be mentioned: "Tableaux Poétiques," "Humoresques Pièces Lyriques," "Morceaux Symphoniques," besides choruses for female voices, sonatas, songs, and two operas, "Sigur Jorsalfar" and "Peer Eynt." M. Grieg is regarded by his fellow-countrymen as chief, with Svendsen, of the Scandinavian school. In June, 1891, he was elected correspondent of the Institut de France.

GRIFFITH, Sir Samuel Walker, K.C.M.G., Chief Justice of Queensland, was born June 21, 1845, at Merthyr Tydfil, Wales, and is of Welsh descent. He is the second son of Rev. Edward Griffith. He arrived in Australia in 1854; and was educated at Mr. Robert Horniman's School (Sydney); at the High School (Presbyterian), West Maitland, N.S.W.; and at the University of Sydney, where he took the degree of B.A., 1863 (first-class in classics and mathematics); M.A., 1870; Mort Travelling Fellow, 1865. He was called to the Queensland Bar in Oct. 1867; was made Q.C. in 1876, and was also member of the Bars of New South Wales and Victoria. He was elected to the Legislative Assembly of Queensland in March, 1872, and continued a member until his appointment to the Bench. He was Attorney-General of Queensland from Aug., 1874, to Dec., 1878; Secretary for Public Instruction, Jan., 1876, to Jan., 1879; Secretary for Public Works, Sept., 1878, to Jan., 1879; Leader of the Opposition 1879 to 1883; and refused a seat on the Bench of the Supreme Court of Queensland, 1879. He was Premier of Queensland, Nov., 1883, to June, 1888, holding from time to time the offices of Colonial Secretary and Secretary of Public Instruction; Colonial Secretary only; Chief Secretary; and Chief Secretary and Treasurer. He was the Leader of the Opposition, 1888-90. He attended the Sydney Convention of Nov.—Dec., 1883, at which the Constitution of the Federal Council of Australasia was framed, and he took considerable part in framing it. He was a member of the Federal Council from its inception in 1885; re-appointed in 1888 and 1891; Chairman of Standing Committee of F.C., 1887-88; President, 1888, 1891, and 1893. He attended the Colonial Conference of 1887 in London, as a representative of Queensland; attended the Federation Conference in Melbourne, Feb., 1890, as a delegate from Queensland; was a delegate to represent Queensland at the Federation Convention to frame a Federal Constitution for Australasia, and was appointed Vice-President of the Convention. He was also Chairman of the Constitutional Committee, and a principal framer of the Constitution adopted by the Convention. He was for many years the leader of the anti-servile labour party in Queensland, and of the Liberal party in Parliament. In 1890 he formed, with Sir Thomas McIlwraith, a coalition Government, accepting the offices of Chief Secretary, Attorney-General, and Premier. He remained in office till March, 1893, when he was appointed Chief Justice, the Legislature having, with a view to his appointment, raised the salary of that office to £3,500 at the instance of the leader of the Opposition. In 1892, at his instance, the Legislature removed the prohibition then existing against the introduction of Polynesian labour, the sugar industry in Queensland then being in a very critical condition, and white labour not being available to carry on the work. The result was an immediate revival of the industry, which has since been in a prosperous condition. He has written articles in the Centennial Magazine (Sydney), and other papers on social questions relating to the unequal distribution of the products of labour. Throughout his career he was engaged in active practice at the Queensland Bar, of which he was for many years the recognised leader. He was created K.C.M.G. in 1886-7. Sir Samuel W. Griffith married, in 1870, Julia Janet, daughter of James Thomson, Esq. (formerly Commissioner of Crown Lands, Maitland, N.S.W.), and has issue.

GRILLO, Marquise del, née Adelaide Ristori, tragic actress, born at Cividale, in Friuli, in 1821, being the child of a poor actor, was trained at a very early age for the stage. She appears to have risen through a long series of struggles to the eminence she ultimately attained. Having accepted in 1855 an engagement in Paris, she sought the favour of a French audience as an interpreter of the tragic muse at the very time that Rachel was in the zenith of her fame. Her appearance at such a period was regarded by the French as an open challenge to contest the supremacy of their tragic queen, and they assembled much more disposed to criticise than to applaud. The genius of Ristori, however, triumphed, and from that moment her position has been unassailed. Her reception in England was equally enthusiastic, and she appeared in Spain in 1857, in Holland in 1860, in Russia in 1861, at Constantinople in 1864, in the United States, and other parts of the world, with success. William I. of Prussia gave her the medal in sciences and in arts in 1862. Amongst her most famous characters are those of Medea, Lady Macbeth, Fazio, Phædra, Deborah, Judith, Francesca da Riviera, and Camilla. After an absence of fifteen years, Madame Ristori again appeared in London, June 11, 1873, and on Nov. 8 in that year she took her farewell of the English stage at the Queen's Theatre, Manchester. She appeared again, however, on a few occasions in the year 1882, and acted Lady Macbeth with all her old distinction if with some lack of fire. In 1887 she published "Etudes et Souvenirs." She is married to the Marquis Capranica del Grillo.

GRIMSTON, Mrs. William Hunter, née Margaret Brunton Robertson, but known to the public, first as "Madge" Robertson; and, after her marriage, as Mrs. Kendal, the name assumed by her husband, Mr. William Hunter Grimston, the actor. She was born at Great Grimsby, Lincolnshire, March 15, 1849. Her grandfather, her father, and her uncle, were all actors. Her brother was the dramatist T. W. Robertson. Miss Robertson's début in London was made on July 29, 1865, when she appeared at the Haymarket as Ophelia to the Hamlet of Walter Montgomery. On March 14, 1868, she made her first decided success in the metropolis, as Blanche Dumont, in Dr. Westland Marston's "Hero of Romance," which was performed for the first time on that occasion, at the Haymarket Theatre. On Aug. 7, 1869, Miss Robertson was married to Mr. William Hunter Grimston, who on the stage is known by his assumed name of Kendal. In the ensuing five years she appeared at the Haymarket in various characters. The creation of the character of Lilian gave Mrs. Kendal a position among the leading comédiennes of the day. In Jan., 1875, she began a short engagement at the Opéra Comique; and, in the same year, joined the company organized by Mr. Hare for the Court Theatre. Afterwards she joined the Prince of Wales's Theatre, then under the management of Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft. In Jan., 1879, Mrs. Kendal returned to the Court Theatre. In 1881 she joined the company at the St. James's Theatre, under the joint management of Mr. Kendal and Mr. Hare. In July, 1889, Mr. and Mrs. Kendal went to America, where they have made several tours. Mrs. Kendal has contributed to Murray's Magazine a series of gossipy articles, chiefly autobiographical, entitled "Dramatic Opinions."

GRIMTHORPE (Lord), Edmund Beckett Denison (afterwards Sir Edmund Beckett, Bart.), LL.D., was born at Carlton Hall, near Newark, May 12, 1816, and was educated at Doncaster, Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was scholar. He graduated B.A. and 28th Wrangler in 1838; was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, 1841, and became Q.C. 1854. In 1863 he received the degree of LL.D., and in 1877 was appointed Chancellor and Vicar-General of York. He was for many years a leader of the Parliamentary Bar, and retired in 1881. In 1886 he was created a peer. He has always interested himself greatly in architecture, and has designed no small number of churches and houses, as well as all the new works at St. Alban's Cathedral since 1878; and those at Lincoln's Inn, of which he is a Bencher, and the great Westminster Clock and bells. He is President of the British Horological Institute, and of the Protestant Churchmen's Alliance, and is the author of the following works: "Lectures on Church Building," 1856; "Life of Bishop Lonsdale" (his father-in-law), 2nd edit., 1869; "A Book on Building," 2nd edit., 1880; "Should the Revised New Testament be authorized?" 1882; "Astronomy without Mathematics," 7th ed., 1883; "Treatise on Clocks, Watches and Bells," 7th edit., 1883; "St. Alban's Cathedral and its Restoration," 2nd edit., 1890; "Origin of the Laws of Nature," and a "Review of Hume and Huxley on Miracles," S.P.C.K.; besides numerous pamphlets and reviews chiefly on questions of ecclesiastical law and a multitude of caustic letters in the Times.

GROVE, The Right Hon. Sir William Robert, D.C.L., LL.D., P.C., F.R.S., son of John Grove, Esq., Swansea, who was a Justice of the Peace and a Deputy-Lieutenant of Glamorganshire, was born July 11, 1811. He was educated by the Rev. E. Griffiths, of Swansea, the Rev. J. Kilvert, of Bath, and at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degree of M.A. in 1833. Two years later he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn. Being temporarily prevented from ill-health from following the legal profession, he turned his attention to the study of electricity, and succeeded in 1839 in contriving the powerful voltaic battery which bears his name and the gas battery. He was Professor of Experimental Philosophy at the London Institution from 1840 to 1847, and he took an active part, as member of the Council, in the business of the Royal Society, particularly in the reform of its constitution, effected, after a severe struggle, in 1847. Mr. Grove, who became a Q.C. in 1853, was for some years the leader of the South Wales and Chester circuits, a member of the Metropolitan Commission of Sewers, and one of the Royal Commissioners on Patent Law, and on Oxford University. He was President of the British Association at Nottingham in 1866, when he selected for the subject of his address the Continuity of Natural Phenomena, as evinced by the recent progress of science, his object being to show that the changes in the inorganic world, in the succession of organised beings, and in the progress of human knowledge, result from gradual variations. The honour of knighthood was bestowed upon him (Feb. 21, 1872) a few months after his elevation to the judicial bench (November, 1871) as a Justice of the Common Pleas. That office he held until November, 1875, when, through the operation of the Judicature Act, he became a Judge of the High Court of Justice. He retired in 1887, and was made a member of the Privy Council. Sir William has made several important discoveries in electricity and optics, and he is the author of a remarkable lecture, delivered in January, 1842, and printed by the managers, on "The Progress of Physical Science since the opening of the London Institution." In this lecture he first advanced the doctrine of the mutual convertibility of the various natural forces—heat, electricity, &c.—and of their being all modes of motion, or forms of persistent force. This doctrine is further developed in his famous essay "On the Correlation of Physical Forces," on which he gave a course of Lectures in 1843, and which reached a sixth edition, "with other contributions to science," in 1874, and has been translated into French and German, reprinted in America, &c. In 1847 he received the medal of the Royal Society for his Bakerian lecture on "Voltaic Ignition, and on the Decomposition of Water into its constituent Gases by Heat." Sir William has contributed many papers to the "Transactions of the Royal Society" and the Philosophical Magazine; he is a Fellow of the Royal Society, and a member of the Academies of Rome and Turin, Knight of the Order of the Rose, Brazil, &c.

GROVE, Sir George, D.C.L., born at Clapham, Surrey, in 1820, was educated as a civil engineer. In 1841 he erected the first cast-iron lighthouse constructed, on Morant Point, Jamaica; and in 1844 a similar tower on Gibbs' Hill, Bermuda. On his return to England, he joined the staff of the late Mr. Robert Stephenson, by whom he was employed on the works of the Chester and Holyhead Railway and the Britannia Bridge. In 1850 he succeeded Mr. Scott Russell as Secretary to the Society of Arts, and on the formation of the Crystal Palace Company in 1852 was appointed its secretary, a position he occupied till the end of 1873. After this he became a member of the Board of Direction of the Company, and retained his seat until 1878. He was at one time associated with the house of Macmillan and Co., Publishers, and edited Macmillan's Magazine for several years. He was one of the principal contributors to the "Dictionary of the Bible," edited by Dr. William Smith, and took an active part in the formation of the Palestine Exploration Fund, under the patronage of Her Majesty. He is also editor of a "Dictionary of Music and Musicians (A.D. 1450-1886)." Some of the principal biographies—amongst them Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Schubert—are from his pen. The University of Durham conferred on Mr. Grove (June 26, 1875) the honorary degree of D.C.L., in recognition of his services to literature. His analyses of classical orchestral music for the Saturday Concerts at the Crystal Palace, and his zeal as a propagandist of good music, are well known. Early in 1882 he was appointed by the Prince of Wales to be Director of the Royal College of Music at Kensington, but resigned this post in Nov., 1894, and was succeeded by Dr. Hubert Parry. Sir George Grove is one of the literary executors of the late Dean of Westminster, with whom he visited the United States in 1878. He was knighted by the Queen at Windsor, May 24, 1883. He is married to Harriet, daughter of the late Rev. Charles Bradley.

GROVES, Charles Edward, F.R.S., the son of Charles Groves, of Highgate, was born there on March 4, 1841, and was educated at The College, Brixton Hill, under the late Dr. Wilson, and at the Royal College of Chemistry (Royal School of Mines) under Dr. A. W. Hofmann, to whom he was afterwards private assistant, and then assistant in the Laboratory of the College. In 1862 he went as assistant to Dr. Stenhouse, with whom he remained until his death in 1880. In 1882 he was appointed Lecturer in Practical Chemistry at Guy's Hospital, where he is also Lecturer in Dental Metallurgy; and in 1885 consulting chemist to the Hon. the Conservators of the River Thames. In 1878 he became sub-editor of the Journal of the Chemical Society, and on the decease of Mr. H. Watts, in 1884, succeeded him as editor of the journal. He was elected a Fellow of the Chemical Society in 1871, and of the Royal Society in 1883, and is one of the founders of the Institute of Chemistry, of which he is Registrar and Secretary. He is the editor of several important works:—Dr. F. Crace-Calvert's "Dyeing and Calico Printing," 1876; "Miller's Chemistry; Part II., Inorganic Chemistry," 1878; (and in conjunction with Dr. Armstrong) of Part III., "Organic Chemistry," 1880; and "Fuel," 1889, in the first volume of Groves' and Thorp's "Chemical Technology." He is also the sole author, or joint author with his friend, the late Dr. Stenhouse, of numerous papers on "Organic Chemistry," being the discoverer of tetrabromide of carbon, of Betanaphtha quinone, and of the corresponding diquinone, the last two belonging to classes of compounds hitherto unknown.

GUBERNATIS, Count Angelo de, an Italian author, born at Turin, April 7, 1840, was educated in the University of Turin, where he received the degree of Doctor of Philology. He was appointed in 1860 Professor of Rhetoric in the Gymnasium of Chieri, near Turin; was sent in 1862, at the expense of the Government, to Berlin, where he studied under Professors Bopp and Weber; became Extraordinary Professor of Sanscrit in the University of Florence (Instituto di Studii Superiori) in 1863, and Ordinary Professor in 1869. Signor De Gubernatis has obtained celebrity as a dramatist, a lyric poet, a journalist, a critic, an Orientalist, and a mythologist. He made his début with his tragedy entitled "Pere delle Vigne." The principal character was sustained by the celebrated actor Ernesto Rossi, and the piece proved a great success. Afterwards he published the following dramas in verse:—"La Morte di Catone," "Romolo," 1874; "Il Rè Nala," "Il Rè Dasarata," "Mâyâ," "Romolo Augustolo" and "Savitri: Idillio Drammatico Indiano," 1878. He has founded five journals—L'Italia Letteraria, 1862, La Civiltà Italiana, 1869, La Rivista Orientale, 1867, La Rivista Europea, 1869, and the Bollettino Italiano degli studii Orientali, 1876. He is the Italian correspondent of the Athenæum and of the Contemporary Review of London, of the International Review of New York, of the Deutsche Rundschau of Berlin, and of the Wiestnik Europy of St. Petersburg. Among his scientific works the following deserve special mention:—"Piccolo Enciclopedia Indiana," Florence, 1867; "Fonti vediche dell' epopea," Florence, 1867; "Memoria sui viaggiatori Italiani nelle Indie Orientali," Florence, 1867; "Storia comparata degli usi nuziali Indo-Europei," Milan, 1869; "Storia comparati degli usi funebri e natalizii," Milan, 1877; "Zoological Mythology: or, The Legends of Animals," 2 vols., London, 1872, translated into German, Leipsic, 1873, and into French, Paris, 1874; "Letture sopra la Mitologia Vedica," Florence, 1874; "Ricordi biografici," Florence, 1873; "Storia dei viaggiatori Italiani nelle Indie," Leghorn, 1875; "Matériaux pour servir à l'Histoire des Etudes Orientales en Italie," Paris and Florence, 1876; and "Mythologie des Plantes," 2 vols. Paris, 1878. He is General Secretary of the Italian Oriental Academy. In May, 1878, he delivered in the Taylor Institute at Oxford a series of three lectures on the life and works of Manzoni. They were published at Florence in 1879, under the title of "Alessandro Manzoni: Studio Biografico." He acted as General Secretary to the Congress of Orientalists held at Florence in September, 1878. In the same year he began publishing a biographical dictionary of contemporary litterateurs, of which a revised edition was published in French between 1888 and 1891.

GUILDFORD, Bishop of. See SUMNER, THE RIGHT REV. GEORGE HENRY.

GUILLAUME, Jean Baptiste Claude Eugène, Hon. R.A., a distinguished French sculptor, was born at Montbard (Côte d'Or), Feb. 3, 1822, and after passing through the usual course of studies in the College of Dijon, went to Paris to become a pupil of Pradier at the École des Beaux-Arts, where he obtained the prize of Rome in 1845. On the reorganization of the École des Beaux-Arts at the close of 1873, M. Guillaume was appointed to a Professorship; and a twelvemonth later was nominated Director of that Institution. He was elected a member of the Institute in 1862; promoted to the rank of Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1867; and elected an honorary member of the Royal Academy of London, Dec. 15, 1869. This artist's name is familiar to those visitors at the London International Exhibition of 1862 who noticed "The Tomb of the Gracchi," which was suggested by the double busts of the great brethren placed as on a tomb, side by side. His statue of Napoleon I., which was at the French Universal Exhibition of 1867, attracted great attention. Among the other productions of his chisel are: "Theseus Finding his Father's Sword on a Rock;" "Anacreon's Guests," a bas-relief; bust of M. Hittorff in the Universal Exposition of 1855; "The Lives of SS. Clotilde and Valérie," bas-reliefs, in the new church of St. Clotilde; the statue of L'Hôpital, in the new Louvre; the "Monument of Colbert," at Rheims; and a bust of Monseigneur Darboy. He was sent to Rome in 1891 as head of the French Art School, having in 1887 been appointed Professor of Drawing at the École Polytechnique.

GUINNESS, The Rev. H. Grattan, D.D., born August, 1835, near Dublin, is the son of Captain John Guinness, H.E.I.C.S., and grandson of Arthur Guinness, of Beaumont, co. Dublin. He was educated at private schools and at New College, London; ordained, in 1856, as an undenominational Evangelist, a preacher of the Gospel both in Great Britain and Ireland, in America, and on the Continent. He is the Founder and Director of the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions, Harley House, Bow, London, E., which has sent out over 500 missionaries into all parts of the world. Dr. Grattan Guinness is the author of "The Approaching End of the Age, viewed in the Light of History, Prophecy, and Science," a work which has passed through ten editions; "Light for the Last Days;" "Romanism and the Reformation;" "The Divine Programme of the World's History," and other works.

GUINNESS, Mrs. H. Grattan, wife of the above, daughter of Ed. Marlborough FitzGerald, and granddaughter of Maurice FitzGerald, of Upper Merrion St., Dublin, born in April, 1831, and married in 1860, is one of the earliest woman preachers of the gospel (members of the Society of Friends excepted); Secretary of the above Missionary Institute; and Secretary of the first Christian Mission on the Congo, the Livingstone Inland Mission; and joint authoress of the above works, and authoress of "The Life of Mrs. Henry Dening," "The New World of Central Africa;" and Editor of "The Regions Beyond," &c.

GUINON, Georges, M.D., was born in Paris, August 6, 1859; commenced his medical studies in 1877; and has worked chiefly under the direction of Professors Charcot and Bouchard. He obtained his degree of M.D. in 1889; and soon after was appointed Chef de clinique des maladies du système nerveux, at the Salpetrière. He has written many articles, chiefly on hysteria, has assisted the late Prof. Charcot in his "leçons sur les maladies du système nerveux;" is secretary to the Editor of the Archives de Neurologie, and Editor of the "Nouvelle Iconographie de la Salpetrière.

GUNTER, Archibald Clavering, Ph.B., was born in Liverpool, Oct. 25, 1847. When about five years of age he was taken to California by his parents, arriving there in Feb., 1853. He was educated partly in England and partly in California, taking the degree of Ph.B. in the University College, San Francisco. From 1867 to 1874, he followed his profession of Mining and Civil Engineer, in Nevada, Utah, and other western parts of the United States. He early showed a taste for literature; and, during his collegiate course, and while following his profession of engineer, wrote several plays, one of them being produced at the California Theatre under the name of "Cuba," and another at the Grand Opera House, San Francisco, under the title of "Our Reporter." In 1874 he became a stockbroker in San Francisco, operating until 1877, when he went to New York, intending to make literature his occupation. His first play, which was produced in New York at the Union Square Theatre, Aug., 1889, was "Two Nights in Rome." In Feb., 1890, "Fresh, the American," was played at the Park Theatre. Since then he has had a number of plays performed, among them "Courage," "After the Opera," "The Wall Street Bandit," "Prince Karl," "The Deacon's Daughter," and his own dramatization of his first story, "Mr. Barnes of New York," published in 1887. This proved a great success as a novel, and has since been published in several different languages, and by four or five English publishing houses. His second novel, "Mr. Potter of Texas," was published in 1888, and has been as successful as its predecessor. Since then he has issued "That Frenchman," 1889; "Miss Nobody of Nowhere," 1890; "Small Boys in Big Boots," 1890; "Miss Dividends," 1892; and "Baron Montez of Panama and Paris," 1893. His dramatization of his novel, "Mr. Potter of Texas," met with marked success in the United States. Mr. Gunter is, perhaps, the only author who has successfully carried on the business of publishing his own works.

GÜNTHER, Albert Charles Lewis Gotthilf, M.A., Ph.D., M.D., F.R.S., born at Esslingen (Würtemberg), Oct. 3, 1830, and educated at the Universities of Tübingen, Berlin, and Bonn, entered the service of the Trustees of the British Museum in 1857, and was appointed Keeper of the Department of Zoology in 1875; since that time he has devoted himself exclusively to the administration of the extensive collections under his charge. Dr. Günther, who is a member of many academies and learned societies at home and abroad, has published:—"Die Fische des Neckars," Stuttgart, 1853; "Medicinische Zoologie," Stuttgart, 1858; "Catalogue of Colubrine Snakes in the Collection of the British Museum," London, 1858; "Catalogue of the Batrachia Salientia in the Collection of the British Museum," 1859; "The Reptiles of British India," 1864; "Catalogue of Fishes," vols. 1-8, London, 1859-70; "The Fishes of the South Seas," Hamburg, 1873-78; "The Gigantic Land Tortoises, Living and Extinct," London, 1877;" "An Introduction to the Study of Fishes," Edinb., 1880; the Reports on the "Shore Fishes," "Deep Sea Fishes," and "Pelagic Fishes" in the "Voyage of H.M.S. Challenger," 1887-88; and numerous papers in the Philosophical Transactions, the Proceedings of the Zoological and Linnean Societies, and other periodicals. He is the founder of the "Record of Zoological Literature," of which he has edited the first six volumes (1864-70); and co-editor of the "Annals and Magazine of Natural History." The Royal Society awarded to him, in 1878, one of its Royal Medals for his merits in advancing zoological science, and especially for his herpetological and ichthyological researches.

GUTHRIE, James Cargill, was born Aug. 27, 1814, at Airnefoul farm, in the parish of Glamis, Forfarshire. He was appointed in 1868 Principal Librarian to the Dundee Free Library, the first institution of the kind in Scotland established under the Free Libraries Act. He is the author of numerous poems and popular Scotch songs, and some anthems and hymns which have been set to music by Dr. Spark and other composers.

GUTHRIE, Thomas Anstey (who publishes under the name of F. Anstey), was born in 1856 at Kensington, and educated at a private school, and at King's College School, Strand. He matriculated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, in 1875, took his degree in the Law Tripos, 1879, and was called to the Bar by the Benchers of the Middle Temple, 1880. He read in Chambers with a Conveyancer and Equity Daughtsman, but never practised as a barrister. He published short stories in various magazines between 1878-81. His first book, "Vice Versâ," appeared in 1882, and achieved an immense success, running through many editions within the year of publication. It was also dramatised and performed on the London and provincial stage for many nights. It was followed in 1883 by "The Giant's Robe;" "The Black Poodle," and other stories, 1884; "The Tinted Venus," 1885; "The Fallen Idol," 1886; "The Pariah," 1889; and "Voces Populi," reprinted from Punch.

GUTHRIE, William, was born at Culhorn, Stranraer, N.B., 1835, being the son of the late George Guthrie, Esq., of Appleby and Ernambrie. He was educated at Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities, and was admitted an advocate at the Scotch Bar in 1861. Mr. Guthrie was appointed one of the Commissioners under the Truck Commission Act, in Dec., 1871; Registrar of Friendly Societies in Scotland, from Oct., 1869, to Feb., 1874; and Sheriff-substitute of Lanarkshire at Glasgow, Jan., 1874. He edited the Journal of Jurisprudence (Edinburgh) from 1866 to 1874; and was one of the Reporters of Court of Session Cases, Scotland, from 1871 to 1874. He has published a translation of Savigny on "Private International Law" (System of Modern Roman Law, vol. viii.), 1869; and edition of Erskine's "Principles of Scots Law," 1870, 2nd edit. 1874; two editions of Bell's "Principles of the Law of Scotland," 1871 and 1876; "The Law of Trade Unions in England and Scotland," 1873; "Select Cases decided in the Sheriff Courts of Scotland," 1879.

GYE, Madame, née Marie Emma Lajeunesse, but popularly known as Madame

Albani, American singer, was born of French-Canadian parentage, at Chambly, near Montreal, in 1851. She was educated in the Convent of the Sacred Heart at Montreal, but her first musical training came from her father, who was himself a skilful musician. In 1864 he removed to Albany, N.Y., where her singing in the cathedral attracted much attention. A little later she was sent to Europe for the more thorough instruction which she could not obtain in America, and under the care of Baroness Lafitte, was two years in Paris, where she studied with the famous Duprez. She then became a pupil of the old maestro Lamperti at Milan. Several years of hard study followed, till at last, in 1870, she made her début at Messina under the name of Albani, adopted out of compliment to the city where her musical promise was first recognized. Immediately afterwards she sang at Malta, and then, in the winter of 1871-72, at the theatre of La Pergola at Florence. Her crowning effort was in the "Mignon" of Ambroise Thomas, already condemned in four theatres in Italy, but which, in Madame Albani's hands, obtained the complete success which all the parts identified with her have met with. When her fame was established in Italy she appeared at the Royal Italian Opera, London, in 1872, and since then has been a great favourite both in this country and the United States. In St. Petersburg, Paris, Berlin, and most of the European capitals she has been received with equal enthusiasm, and she is to-day certainly one of the most popular singers in the world. In 1883 she made a tour of the United States, and in May, 1886, sang the ode written by Tennyson for the opening of the Colonial Exhibition in London. Madame Albani, before leaving Scotland in Oct., 1890, sang at Balmoral before the Queen and the Royal Family, on which occasion Her Majesty was pleased to give Madame Albani a valuable picture containing portraits of the whole of the Royal Family at the time of her Jubilee. In May, 1893, she sang at the opening of the Imperial Institute, and in the autumn of 1894 again sang at Balmoral. Besides singing in opera, Madame Albani has studied specially oratorio singing, and she is now acknowledged to be the first oratorio singer in England, and is engaged at all our principal festivals. In 1878 she was married to Mr. Ernest Gye, the theatrical manager.

GZOWSKI, Lieut.-Col. Casimir Stanislaus, one of Her Majesty's Aides-de-Camp in Canada, was born in St. Petersburg, in March, 1813, and is the son of Count Gzowski, a Polish noble and officer of the Imperial Guard. In 1830, Col. Gzowski graduated as an engineer from the military college of Kremenetz, in the province of Volhynia, and entered the Russian Army. He was concerned in the Polish insurrections of 1830-32, and exiled to the United States in the latter year. There his linguistic accomplishments for a time served him in good stead; but he resumed his profession, and soon went to Upper Canada, where he connected himself with the Department of Public Works for the Province, and has been interested in many public enterprises of a professional character for the past fifty years. With all the important engineering products of Canada, in railway construction, in river and railway-bridge building, Col. Gzowski has been identified; and many public and private enterprises have had the benefit of his experience and skill. He has for many years taken an active part in furthering the aims of the Dominion Rifle Association; and was well known at Wimbledon, on the occasion of the visit of the Canadian team. In May, 1879, he was appointed Aide-de-Camp to the Queen.

H.

HAAG, Carl, R.W.S., a painter, born at Erlangen, in Bavaria, in 1820, began his artistic education at the Academy of Nuremberg in 1837, afterwards continuing it at Munich and Rome. In 1847 he settled in this country, and his admiration for the perfection of English water-colour painting induced him to abandon oil, and adopt water-colour in preference. In 1850 he was elected member of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours. He has been a constant contributor to the Exhibitions of that Society, the subjects of his earlier pictures being chiefly from the Tyrol, Dalmatia, and Montenegro. In 1858 the reigning Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha conferred upon him the honorary title of Hofmaler; he was introduced at the Court of Queen Victoria by the late Prince of Leiningen, and Her Majesty gave him many commissions for sketches of life in the Highlands of Scotland, and also for important pictures, such as "The Royal Family Ascending Loch-na-Gar;" "Evening at Balmoral—the Stags brought Home;" "The Queen and Prince Consort fording Pool Tarff;" and others, which were exhibited, and have since been engraved. He then travelled in Greece, Egypt, Syria, and Palestine, painting important views of Athens, Ba'albek, Palmyra, and many of the Holy Places in Jerusalem, among them "The Ancient Vestibule beneath the Temple Area;" "The Golden Gateway;" and "The Holy Rock in the so-called Mosque of Omar;" most of which were finished on the spot. His chief aim, however, was to study the life of the Bedaween tribes, and the scenes of different deserts, for which purpose he made long stays among these nomadic hordes, learning their mode of life, their manners and customs, and has since painted a series of pictures illustrative of Arab life, the best known of which are "Aghile Agha receiving the visit of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales and suite in his Encampment near Mount Tabor;" "The tribe of the Anazeh Bedaween departing from Palmyra;" "A Bivouac in the Desert;" "The Arrival at a Well in the Desert;" "Preparing the Evening Meal;" "Desert Hospitality;" "Happiness in the Desert;" "A Bedaween's Devotion;" "Danger in the Desert;" "On the Alert;" "Ready for Defence;" "A Caravan of Bedaween Encamping near the Sphinx of Ghizeh against an approaching Sandstorm;" and "La Illah il Allah," 1889. A special exhibition of Mr. C. Haag's works was held at the Goupil Galleries in Bond Street, 1885. He is an honorary member of the Royal Society of British Artists in London, and a membre honoraire de la Société Royale Belge des Aquarellistes of Brussels. He received the Royal Bavarian Cross of Merit in 1872. In 1874 he became an Officer of the Order of the Medjidieh; in 1878 a Knight of the Legion of Honour of France; and in 1887 a Knight-Commander of the Saxe-Coburg-Gotha Family Order.

HABBERTON, John, was born in Brooklyn, New York, in 1842. At the age of eight years he was taken to the West, where he was educated chiefly in the common schools of Southern Illinois. From 1859 until he entered the army in 1862, he was connected with the publishing house of Harper Brothers, New York. He was literary editor of the Christian Union from 1873 to 1876, and since then has been an editorial writer on the New York Herald. His first literary work was a series of sketches of Western life. This was followed, in 1877, by "Helen's Babies," of which nearly a quarter of a million copies have been sold in the United States, besides large editions in England and the colonies, and translations into French, German, Spanish, Italian, Danish, Swedish, and Bohemian. He has since written "The Barton Experiment," 1876; "The Jericho Road," "Other People's Children," "The Scripture Club of Valley Rest," and "Some Folks," 1877; "The Crew of the Sam Weller," "The Worst Boy in Town," 1879; "Just One Day," 1880; "Who was Paul Grayson?" 1883; "Bowsham Puzzle," and "George Washington," 1884; "Brueton's Bayou," 1887; "Country Luck," 1888; "All He Knew," "Well Out of It," and "Couldn't Say No," 1889; "Out at Twinnett's," 1890; "The Chautauquans," 1891; and "A Lucky Lover," 1892. He also published in 1875 a series of selections from the "Spectator," comprising "The Roger de Coverley Papers;" and in 1878 "Selections from the Tatler, Guardian, and Freeholder;" and wrote, in conjunction with Charles L. Norton, "Canoeing in Kanuckia," 1878. His only dramatic work, "Dracon Crankett," has been played more than 500 times.

HACKER, Arthur, A.R.A., is the son of Mr. Edward Hacker, formerly a line engraver. He was born in London and educated at St. John's College, and afterwards in Paris. On his return to London, he commenced the study of art, went at once to the British Museum to do the necessary probation drawing, and gained admission to the Academy Schools with his first drawing from the Antique. Here he won the Silver Medal for a cartoon of a draped figure. In 1878 he exhibited his first picture at the Royal Academy, and has since been a constant exhibitor. When he was twenty-one he went to Paris and entered the studio of M. Bonnat. In France he painted "Her Daughter's Legacy," which was exhibited in 1881, and a year later "The Relics of the Brave." This was the first of a series of cottage interiors, the most notable of which are "The Mother," "The Wonder Story," "The Fisherman's Wife," "The Cradle Song," and "The Children's Prayer." In 1881 he travelled through Spain, and spent some time in Morocco. His subject now changed, and he painted "Pelagia and Philammon," "The Waters of Babylon," "Persephone," "Væ Victis," "Christ and the Magdalen," "The Annunciation" (bought by the Chantry Fund), "Syrinx," "Circe," and the "Sleep of the Gods." In Feb., 1894, Mr. Hacker was elected an A.R.A.

HADEN, Sir Francis Seymour, F.R.C.S., P.R.E., was born Sept. 16, 1818, at 62, Sloane Street, London, and educated at University College and at the Sorbonne, Paris. He became in 1842 a member, and in 1857 a Fellow, of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. The International Jury Report on Surgical Instruments, drawn up by Mr. Haden, was the first public document in which the operation of Ovariotomy (till then universally condemned) was recommended. Three remarkable letters, contributed by him to the Times, under the title of "Earth to Earth," in Jan., May, and June, 1875, brought about considerable amelioration in the practices pursued by undertakers and cemetery companies, and, while condemning cremation, advocated a system of interment founded on reason and sanitary considerations, which has ever since been successfully carried out at Woking. Sir F. Haden is also the author of certain art publications, having for their object to restore the art of the painter-engraver and to protest against the usurpation of his place in the Royal Academy by the copper-engraver; and failing in that object, to bring about the creation of a society, now become a Royal Society, for the independent cultivation of that art. Of this Society Sir F. Haden is naturally the President, while his own contributions in illustration of the art it represents have been considerable and consist:—(1.) Of a large folio work (in French), entitled, "Études à l'Eau Forte," published in Paris and in London in 1865 and 1866; (2.) Of a large number of engraved plates (200 in all), which have been catalogued and described by Sir William R. Drake, F.S.A., under the title of "The Etched Work of Francis Seymour Haden," though some fifteen of them are by M. Beraldi, of Paris. Sir F. S. Haden is also the possessor of one of the finest collections ever formed of the etched works of the old masters, particularly of Rembrandt, and on which during more than thirty years he has expended a fortune, giving at auctions often as much as £300 or £400 for a single print. On the other hand, one of his own plates—that of the "Agamemnon"—has realised, chiefly for the benefit of the publishers, upwards of £4,000. He is a member of the Athenæum and of the Burlington Fine Arts Clubs, in the formation of which latter he had a large share. The most influential of his literary works, perhaps, after the three letters to the Times referred to, have been a paper entitled "Cremation an Incentive to Crime," read at the Church Congress at Birmingham in 1893, and a paper on "The relative Claims of Etching and Engraving to rank as Fine Arts and to be represented as such in the Royal Academy of Arts," read at the Society of Arts in May, 1883. Sir F. Haden is a Vice-President of the Obstetrical Society of London, and has recently received the honour of Knighthood (1894).

HADING, Madame Jane, née Jeanette Hadingue, was born at Marseilles. At the age of three she played Blanche de Caylus, in "Le Bossu," her father at the same time playing the leading character. Some years later she was sent to the Marseilles Conservatoire, where she won considerable distinction. On leaving she entered upon an engagement at the Algiers Theatre, and when but fourteen played Zanella, in "Le Passant;" Stefano in "Chef d'œuvre inconnu;" the blind-girl in "Les Deux Orphélines;" and Pedro, in "Giroflé Girofla." From Algiers she went to Cairo, to perform at the Khedival Theatre. She returned to Marseilles in 1876, and for a time devoted herself to drama and comedy, but the lyric stage again attracted her, and she went to Paris. At the Palais Royal she played "La Chaste Suzanna," and at the Renaissance, in 1879, she was the original Jolie Persane and Belle Lurette, and the heroine in "Héloïse and Abelard." At the Gymnase in 1883, she again appeared in comedy as Paulette in "Autour de Mariage." The piece was a failure, but Mdme. Hading made a great personal success. In Dec., 1883, she was the original Claire de Beaulieu, in "Le Maître de Forges," and her impersonation of this part confirmed her success. In Jan., 1885, she appeared in this character in London, at the Royalty Theatre. In 1889, in company with M. Coquelin, Madame Hading made an American tour. On her return to Paris she appeared at the Vaudeville in the "Comtesse Romani," by Dumas fils, and in Lemaitre's "Député Leveau." She then fulfilled a short engagement at the Port-Saint-Martin, where she appeared as Faustine in the play of that name by Count Tzewuski. Returning to the Vaudeville she played in a brilliant revival of M. Sardou's "Nos Intimes" (1891), and contributed to the success of M. Lavedan's "Prince d'Aurec," in June, 1892. She afterwards joined the Français, and in Nov., 1894, announced her intention of leaving it.

HAECKEL, Ernst, a celebrated German naturalist and writer, was born at Potsdam, Feb. 16, 1834, and studied medicine and Science at Würzburg, Berlin, and Vienna. In 1859 he went to Italy, and studied zoology at Naples and Messina, returning in 1861 to Jena, where, after further studies, he was appointed Professor of Zoology. Between 1866 and 1875, he travelled over the greater part of Europe, besides visiting Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt. In 1881 he visited India and Ceylon, and published an account of his travels. He is regarded in Germany as the foremost supporter of Darwin's theories. Amongst his works may be mentioned "Natural History of Creation," translated into twelve languages, 8th edit., 1889; "Generelle Morphologie," 1866; "Gastraea-Theorie," 1873; "The Origin of the Human Race," 4th edit., 1878; "Life in the Deep Seas," 1870; "The History of Man's Development," 1874; "Anthropogenie," 3rd edit., 1877; "Popular Lectures on Evolution," 1878; "Origin and Development of the Tissues of Animals," 1884; "Souvenirs of Algeria," 1890. His Monographs on the "Radiolaria," 1862; "Caloispongiæ," 1872; "Medusæ," 1881, and "Siphonophoræ," 1888, illustrated by 200 original plates, should also be mentioned. His contributions to the Zoology of the "Voyage of H.M.S. Challenger" comprehend four volumes of that work, with 230 plates. Notwithstanding splendid offers from the Universities of Würzburg, Vienna, Strasburg and Bonn, Haeckel has decided to remain at the small University of Jena, the peaceful solitude of which gives him the best opportunity for continuous scientific work.

HAGARTY, The Hon. John Hawkins, D.C.L., Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario, was born in Dublin on Sept. 17, 1816. He entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1832; but, two years afterwards, emigrated to Canada, where he studied law, and in 1840 was admitted to the Bar of the Upper Province. His educated tastes and love of letters for a time drew him to literature; but, continuing the practice of his profession, he was made a Queen's Counsel in 1850, and elevated to the Bench in 1856. In 1868 he was appointed Chief Justice of the Common Pleas; was subsequently transferred to the Queen's Bench; and in 1878 received the appointment of Chief Justice of Ontario, which he still holds.

HAGGARD, Henry Rider, of Ditchingham House, Norfolk, son of the late William Meybohm Rider Haggard, J.P., D.L., of Bradenham Hall, Norfolk, was born June 22, 1856. He accompanied Sir Henry Bulwer, G.C.M.G., as secretary, to Natal in 1875, and served on the staff of Sir Theophilus Shepstone, K.C.M.G., the Special Commissioner to the Transvaal 1876-7, and together with Colonel Brooke, R.E., formally hoisted the British flag over the Transvaal territory, on May 24, 1877. He was subsequently appointed to the post of Master of the High Court of the Transvaal. During the Zulu War he was elected adjutant and lieutenant of the Pretoria Horse, a gentleman volunteer corps, raised for service in Zululand, but which was prevented from proceeding there by the threatening action of the Boers. He retired from the Colonial service in 1879, and returned to England. Mr. Rider Haggard's first book, of a political character, published in 1882, is named "Cetywayo and his White Neighbours, or Remarks on Recent Events in South Africa." This work was favourably received here and in South Africa, but, owing to its author being unknown, it did not then attain a large circulation. Subsequently, he published "Dawn," a novel, 1884, and "The Witch's Head," a novel, 1885. Both these books were well received, especially the latter, but in 1886 he brought out "King Solomon's Mines," the work by which he established his reputation. Among other well-known works by the same writer we may mention "She," "Jess," "Allan Quatermain," "Colonel Quaritch, V.C.," "Cleopatra," "Beatrice," "Eric," and "Montezuma's Daughter." Mr. Rider Haggard is also a barrister of Lincoln's Inn and a Justice of the Peace for Norfolk and Suffolk. He married, in 1880, Marianna Louisa, only child and heiress of the late Major Margitson, of Ditchingham House, Norfolk.

HAINES, Field-Marshal Sir Frederick Paul, G.C.B., C.I.E., G.C.S.I., son of the late Mr. Gregory Haines, C.B., of Dublin, Commissary-General of the Forces, by Harriet, daughter of Mr. John Eldridge, of Kirdford, Sussex, was born in 1819. He entered the army as ensign in 1839, became lieutenant, 1840; captain, 1846; colonel, 1854; lieut.-colonel, 1855; major-general, 1864; lieut.-general, 1873; general, 1877; and field-marshal, 1890. At the beginning of the war on the Sutlej in 1845, he was appointed to act as military secretary to Sir Hugh Gough, then Commander-in-chief in India. He was present at the battles of Moodkee and Ferozeshah, and upon the latter occasion was severely wounded by grape-shot, his horse being at the same moment killed under him. For his conduct in this campaign he was promoted on the recommendation of Lord Gough, and received a Medal and one Clasp. He served also in the same capacity throughout the Punjaub campaign of 1848 and 1849, taking part in the affair of outposts at Ramnuggur, the passage of the Chenab, and the battles of Chillianwallah and Goojerat. He served with the 21st

Fusiliers through the campaign of the Crimea in 1854-55, up to the siege of Sebastopol. K.C.B., 1871; G.C.B., 1877. He was Commander-in-chief of the Madras army from May, 1871, to 1874, when he was appointed colonel of the 104th Regiment (Bengal Fusiliers). In 1876 he received the local rank of general in India, and some time later was appointed Commander-in-chief in India. He held this post the customary period of five years. General Haines received the thanks of Parliament "for the ability and judgment with which he directed operations" in Afghanistan in 1878-80, and was appointed Field-Marshal 20th May, 1890. In October of the same year, he was appointed Colonel of the Royal Scots Fusiliers.

HALDANE, The Right Rev. J. R. A. See CHINNERY-HALDANE.

HALDANE, R. B., Q.C., M.P., son of the late Robert Haldane, of Cloanden, was born on Nov. 30, 1856, and educated at Edinburgh Academy and at the University of that city, where he obtained the Ferguson Scholarship of the four Scottish Universities, the Bruce of Grangehill Medal, and was finally placed in the First class in Philosophy. He subsequently proceeded to the University of Göttingen, where he studied metaphysics under Professor Lotze. Returning to England, he took up the study of law, and in 1879 was called to the Chancery Bar, where his rise has been rapid. In 1890 he was made a Q.C., and in 1893 Bencher of Lincoln's Inn. In 1885 Mr. Haldane entered Parliament as M.P. for Haddingtonshire, which he continues to represent. He was a member of the Featherstone Commission in 1893. He edited, together with Professor Seth, "Essays in Philosophical Criticism" in 1882, and afterwards translated Schopenhauer's "World as Will and Idea," in conjunction with Mr. Kemp. In 1887 he published a "Life of Adam Smith."

HALE, Edward Everett, D.D., was born at Boston, Massachusetts, April 3, 1822. He graduated at Harvard College in 1839, studied theology, and was pastor of the (Unitarian) Church of the Unity, Worcester, Massachusetts, from 1846 to 1856. Since that time he has been pastor of the South Congregational Church, Boston. He has published a large number of books, amongst which are—"The Rosary," 1848; "Margaret Percival in America;" "Sketches of Christian History," 1850; "Letters on Irish Immigration," 1852; "Kansas and Nebraska," 1854; "The Man without a Country," 1861; "The President's Words," 1865; "Sybaris and other Homes," 1871; "Puritan Politics in England and New England," 1869; "Ingham Papers," 1869; "Christmas Eve and Christmas Day," 1874; and "His Level Best, and other Stories," 1870; "Ups and Downs," 1871; "Working-men's Homes," and "In His Name," 1874; "Our New Crusade," and "One Hundred Years Ago," 1875; "Philip Nolan's Friends," 1876; "Back to Back," 1877; "The Bible and its Revision," several volumes of Sermons, and "Crusoe in New York," 1880; "Our Christmas in a Palace," 1884; "Seven Spanish Cities," 1883; "Fortunes of Rachel," 1884; "Boy's Heroes," and "What is the American People?" 1885; "Easter," a volume of sermons, 1886; "Life of George Washington Studied Anew," 1887; "How They Lived in Hampton," "My Friend the Boss," "Mr. Tangier's Vacations," "Tom Torrey's Tariff Talks," "Red and White," and "Naval History of the American Revolution" (in the Narrative and Critical History of America), 1888; "Four and Five," 1891; "Popular Life of Christopher Columbus," 1891; "Biography of James Freeman Clarke," 1891; "Story of Massachusetts," 1891; "Sybil Knox," 1892; "East and West," 1892; "A New England Boyhood," 1893; "For Fifty Years" (poems), 1893; and (with E. E. Hale, jun.) "Franklin in France," 1887-88. He has edited a series of "Stories" of the War, Sea, Adventure, Discovery and Invention, 1880-85; "Lights of Two Centuries," 1887; "The Arabian Nights," 1888; and "Sunday School Stories on the Golden Texts," 1889; and, in conjunction with his sister, has written several volumes describing "A family flight" through France, Germany, &c., 1881-85, and one telling "The Story of Spain," 1886. Mr. Hale has been a frequent contributor to periodicals, was editor of the Christian Examiner, the founder and editor of Old and New, and is now the editor of Lend a Hand.

HALES, John Wesley, was born at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Leicestershire, Oct. 5, 1836, the son of a Nonconformist minister. He was educated at Glasgow High School and University, Durham Grammar School, and Cambridge University. He was elected Fellow of Christ's College in 1860, called to the Bar in 1867, appointed Professor of English Language and Literature at King's College, London, Dec. 1877, succeeding to the chair vacated by Dr. Brewer. Mr. Hales co-edited "The Percy Folio Manuscript," 3 vols., in 1867-88; wrote on "The Teaching of English" in Farrar's "Essays on a Liberal Education," 1867; edited "Longer English Poems," 1872, and Milton's "Areopagitica," 1874; was one of the two general editors of the "London Series of English Classics;" and has contributed various papers on English Literature to the Cornhill Magazine, the Quarterly Review, Macmillan's Magazine, the Fortnightly Review, the Academy, the Athenæum, Fraser's Magazine, the Contemporary, the Nineteenth Century; some of which have been collected into 2 volumes, viz., "Shakespeare Essays and Notes," published in 1892, and "Folia Litteraria," published in 1893. In 1880 Professor Hales was appointed an Examiner in English at the University of London, and again in 1889. The Rev. Professor Skeat and he were the first Examiners for the English part of the Medical and Modern Tripos, established at Cambridge in 1886. In 1889 he was appointed Clark Lecturer in English Literature at Trinity College, Cambridge, and again in 1892.

HALÉVY, Ludovic, a novelist and dramatic author, the son of Léon Halévy, was born at Paris in 1834, and received his education at the Lycée Louis le Grand. He entered the service of the Government, and from 1852 to 1858 was employed in the Secretary's office of the Minister of State. He was chief of the department for Algiers and the Colonies, and in 1861 he was appointed to edit the proceedings of the Corps Législatif. This position he resigned to devote himself to the drama. M. Halévy has, since 1855, written the librettos of a large number of the most popular operettas, many of them in collaboration with M. Henri Meilhac. It is to these brilliant sketches, as well as to his dramas, that he owes his election to the French Academy, his reception at which (M. Pailleron pronouncing the speech of welcome) was one of the most memorable of recent times. As a novelist, M. Halévy is also eminent. We may mention "l'Abbé Constantin" (1882), which was dramatised after running through more than 150 editions; "Deux Mariages," 1883; "Princesse," 1886; and a collection of stories, "Karikari," 1892. He was made an officer of the Legion of Honour in July 1890.

HALL, Granville Stanley, Ph.D., was born at Ashfield, Mass., May 6, 1846. He was graduated at Williams College in 1867, and subsequently studied at Berlin, Bonn, Heidelberg, and Leipzig. From 1872 to 1876 he was Professor of Psychology in Antioch College (Ohio); in 1876 and again in 1881-82 he became Lecturer on Psychology at Harvard; and in 1882 he became Professor of that subject in the Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore. On the establishment of Clark University at Worcester, Mass., in 1888, Professor Hall was made its President. The degree of Ph.D. was conferred upon him by Harvard in 1876. In addition to extensive contributions to periodicals on psychological and educational topics, he edits the American Journal of Psychology, The Pedagogical Seminary, and is the author of "Aspects of German Culture," 1881; and (with John M. Mansfield) of "Hints towards a Select and Descriptive Bibliography of Education," 1886.

HALL, James, LL.D., American scientist, was born at Hingham, Massachusetts, Sept. 12, 1811. He studied at the Rensselaer School (now the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute) from 1831 till 1836, when he was appointed Assistant Geologist on the New York Geological Survey. The following year (1837) he was appointed State Geologist in charge of the Fourth District of the State, of which his final report, in a quarto volume, was issued in 1843. He then (1843) was placed in charge of the Palæontology of the State; and he published, between 1847 and 1888, 7 vols. (bound in 11) illustrating the fossils of the New York series of geological formations. He was State Geologist of Iowa, 1855-57, and of Wisconsin, 1858, of both which he published geological reports. In 1865 appeared a monograph by him on the Grapholites of Canada. Besides these publications he has issued reports on the fossils collected by several of the United States exploring expeditions, and of the Mexican Boundary Survey, and has contributed largely to scientific periodicals, and to the Transactions of learned Societies. In 1848 he was elected by the Geological Society of London one of its fifty foreign members; in 1858 that society bestowed upon him the Wollaston Medal; in 1882 the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazare was conferred upon him by the King of Italy; in 1884 he was awarded the Walker quinquennial grand prize of $1,000 from the Boston Society of Natural History; and in 1890 received the first award of the Hayden Memorial Medal from the Academy of Natural Science of Philadelphia. He was one of the founders of the Association of American Geologists, out of which grew the American Association for the Advancement of Science; was one of the Charter Members of the National Academy of Sciences; and one of the Incorporators of the International Congress of Geologists; and in 1889 was elected the first President of the Geological Society of America. He is also a "Correspondant de l'Institut de France," and a member of a number of other foreign as well as American learned societies. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Hamilton College in 1863, by the McGill University of Montreal in 1884, and by Harvard University in 1886. Since 1866 he has been Geologist of New York, and Director of the State Museum of Natural History at Albany, New York.

HALL, John, D.D., was born in the county of Armagh, Ireland, July 31, 1829. He was educated at Belfast College, which he entered at the age of thirteen; and after completing his studies, received his licence to preach in 1849, going as a missionary to the West of Ireland. He became pastor of a Presbyterian Church in Armagh in 1852, and in 1858 pastor of St. Mary's Abbey, in Dublin. The Presbyterian Church of Ireland sent him as a delegate to the Presbyterian Churches of the United States in 1867; and shortly after his return to Ireland he was called to the Fifth Avenue Church in New York, over which he was installed in Nov., 1867. In addition to his pastoral duties, he has, since 1881, filled the (unsalaried) position of Chancellor of the University of the City of New York. He has published "Family Prayers for Four Weeks," 1868; "Papers for Home Reading," 1871; "Questions of the Day," 1873; "God's Word through Preaching," 1875; "Foundation Stones for Young Builders," 1879; and, in conjunction with G. H. Stuart, "American Evangelists," 1875: besides a number of discourses and sermons.

HALL, The Rev. Newman, LL.B., is son of the late Mr. John Vine Hall, and brother of Captain J. V. Hall, who commanded the Great Eastern steamship on her first voyage across the Atlantic. Born at Maidstone, May 22, 1816, he was educated at Totteridge and at Highbury College, and graduated B.A. at the London University. In 1855 he took the degree of LL.B., and won the law scholarship. He was appointed minister of the Albion Congregational Church, Hull, in 1842, and remained at that post till 1854, when he succeeded the Rev. James Sherman as minister of Surrey Chapel, known as Rowland Hill's Chapel, in the Blackfriars Road, London. When the civil war in the United States broke out, he advocated the Northern cause in the interests of Union and Freedom. He afterwards made two extensive tours in the United States for the purpose of allaying the bitter feeling towards Great Britain, and of promoting international good-will. "Lincoln Tower," 220 feet high, adjoining "Christ Church" in Westminster Bridge Road, was built in commemoration of Abraham Lincoln, from funds subscribed by Americans and English. The church itself, erected chiefly by his congregation when the lease of the old chapel in the Blackfriars Road expired, is one of the chief ecclesiastical modern structures in London, in thirteenth Century Gothic; it is seated for 2,000 persons. The total cost, including freehold site, was £63,000, mostly obtained by Mr. Newman Hall's efforts; in token of which the congregation have erected in the church an alabaster pulpit of great beauty. Mr. Newman Hall has written numerous devotional treatises, one of which, entitled "Come to Jesus," has reached a circulation of nearly three millions, in upwards of twenty languages. He has written also "It is I;" "Follow Jesus;" "Antidote to Fear;" "Short Memoir of Rev. Rowland Hill;" "Homeward Bound;" "The Land of the Forum and the Vatican, or Thoughts and Sketches during an Easter Pilgrimage to Rome" (1854, new edit. 1859); a small volume of devotional poetry, entitled "Pilgrim Songs in Cloud and Sunshine," 1871; also "Mountain Musings;" a tractate on "Prayer: its Reasonableness and Efficacy," 1875; and several small works on teetotalism, of which he has been an earnest advocate during forty years. He has also compiled from Scripture a volume of devotion, entitled "Prayer and Praise in Bible Words," and has edited an autobiography of his father, entitled "Conflict and Victory." A recent work is an 8vo. volume on the Lord's Prayer; the last is "Gethsemane, or Leaves of Healing from the Garden of Grief."

HALLÉ, Sir Charles, pianist, a native of Germany, was born in 1819. At an early age he established himself in Paris, and acquired a great reputation for his elegant and elevated method of interpreting the classical compositions of the best masters. His future indeed seemed secure, for his services as a Professor were eagerly sought, when the revolution of Feb. 1848 proved calamitous to him, as it did to many other musicians in the French capital. M. Hallé repaired to England, and made his first appearance at a concert in Covent Garden Theatre with Beethoven's E flat concerto. He also played at the matinées of Mr. John Ella, the director of the Musical Union. He soon afterwards established himself at Manchester as Director of the Musical Institution there, and has materially contributed towards improving the musical taste of the inhabitants, as well as promoting in that centre of commercial activity a knowledge of the best orchestral works of the great masters. Sir C. Hallé is, however, as much a resident in London as in Manchester. He instituted in 1857 an annual series of twenty orchestral and choral concerts, which have taken place uninterruptedly since then, and have become one of the most important series in Europe. He is undoubtedly at the head of classical pianists in England, and since 1857 has acquired celebrity as a conductor. He has published a few compositions of a very high order, and has edited the best classical composers. Mr. Hallé was knighted in 1888, and in July of that year he married Madame Norman-Néruda, the celebrated violinist. His son, Mr. C. E. Hallé, is a well-known painter, and was one of the assistant directors of the Grosvenor Gallery; and Miss Hallé is a rising sculptor.

HALLÉ, Lady, née Wilhelmine Néruda, violinist, was born March 21, 1840, at Brünn, in Moravia, where her father was organist of the Cathedral. She was a pupil of Jansa, and made her first appearance at Vienna in 1846. She came to London in 1848 to play, at the Philharmonic, a concerto of De Bériot's. After this she returned to the Continent, and passed several years in travelling, chiefly in Russia. In 1864 she visited Paris, and played at the Pasdeloup concerts, the Conservatoire, and elsewhere. In the same year she married Ludwig Norman, a Swedish musician. On May 17, 1869, Madame Norman-Néruda again played at the Philharmonic in London, and in the winter took the first violin at the series of Monday Popular Concerts. From that time she has been in England for each winter and spring, playing at the Popular Concerts, the Philharmonic, Crystal Palace, and especially at the recitals of Sir Charles Hallé, to whom she was married in 1888.

HALLETT, Holt Samuel, M. Inst. C.E., F.R.G.S., is a son of the late Mr. Thomas Perham Luxmoore Hallett, Fellow of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, an eminent member of the Chancery Bar, and representative of an ancient west-country family. Mr. Holt Hallett was born on July 16, 1841, and educated at the Charter House and at Kensington Grammar School, where he was a private pupil of the Rev. George Frost. He qualified for his profession under the late Mr. William Baker, the Engineer-in-Chief of the London and North-Western Railway. Having gained great experience, and carried out, as engineer, extensive works in Lancashire and Cheshire, in 1868 he was offered the appointment of Resident Engineer on the Garston Docks on the Mersey, then about to be constructed, but accepted in preference an appointment under the Government of India. During the eleven years that Mr. Hallett was in Government service he had charge of various large divisions in British Burmah, one of which, the Tenasserim Division, included the whole portion of the British frontier neighbouring Siam and the Shan States. For some time during his service in this Division he had as one of his assistants Mr. Archibald Colquhoun. The acquaintance and friendship of these gentlemen gave rise to the vast project, now before the public, for the connection of India and China by railway, and to the valuable explorations and surveys carried out by these intrepid travellers in China, Siam, and the Shan States, to prove the practicability of their scheme. They succeeded in tracing out the route for the railway; and one of the sections of their line, that between Toungoo and Mandalay, has been completed by the Government of India; and another section, that between Sagain and Mogoung, is now in hand. The construction of the whole system advocated by them, 1,790 miles in length, is now generally allowed by the Governments concerned and the mercantile community to be merely a matter of time. The Siamese Government is having the portions of the line lying in its territory surveyed by Sir Andrew Clarke's syndicate, and the survey is approaching completion. The thanks of the Home and Eastern Chambers of Commerce have been accorded to Mr. Holt Hallett and his colleague. Hr. Hallett's work "A Thousand Miles on an Elephant in the Shan States," gives an account of his travels through Indo-China in search of the best route for the railway. In 1887 he received the silver medal of the Society of Arts for his paper on "New Markets and the Extension of Railways in India and Burmah."

HALLIBURTON, W. D., M.D., B.Sc., F.R.S., son of Thomas Halliburton, Esq., of Upper Norwood, was born in London on June 21, 1860. He received his education first privately and subsequently at University College School, under the head mastership, first of T. Hewitt Key and then of H. W. Eve. He left school in July, 1877, carrying with him the principal senior prizes, and in the following

October entered University College, first as a science student and subsequently as a student of medicine. Here he obtained many class distinctions, and academical honours at London University examinations. He graduated as B.Sc. in 1879, as M.B. in 1883, and M.D. in 1884. At University College Hospital he filled several posts, including that of House Physician. He did not, however, ever become a practitioner of medicine, but devoted his attention to physiology, a subject to which he was originally attracted by the teachings of Professors Burdon Sanderson and Schäfer. In 1883 he was appointed Sharpey Physiological Scholar at University College, and two years later received from the Council of University College the Science Research Medal, and the title of Fellow of University College. In 1887 he became Assistant Professor of Physiology in the same institution, a post which he resigned when, in 1890, he was appointed to the chair of Physiology at King's College, London, in succession to Professor Gerald Yeo. This appointment he now holds. He is also Lecturer on Physiology at the London School of Medicine for Women, and either is, or has recently been an examiner in Physiology for the Universities of London, Oxford, Glasgow, and Aberdeen, and at the Royal College of Surgeons, England, and the Royal Veterinary College. Among other honours received by him may be mentioned the Fellowship of the Royal Society, to which he was elected, at the early age of thirty, in 1891, the Fellowship of the Royal College of Physicians (1892), and the post of Goulstonian lecturer at the same college (1893). He has published, in the "Proceedings of the Royal Society," and in the "Journal of Physiology," a large number of researches, especially in the realm of Chemical Physiology, where he is best known by his work on the proteids of blood, milk, and various organs of the body, on the coagulation of the blood, and on the chemistry of muscle. He has also written two books; one, a "Textbook of Chemical Physiology," was published by Messrs. Longmans in 1891, and the other, a student's handbook, entitled "Essentials of Chemical Physiology," was issued by the same firm in 1893.

HALLIDAY, Sir Frederick James, K.C.B., son of Thomas Halliday, Esq., of Ewell, Surrey, was born in 1806, and having been educated at St. Paul's School and at Haileybury College, entered the civil service of the East India Company in 1825. He held several civil, political, and legislative posts; and in Dec., 1853, was appointed one of the Supreme Council of India. In 1854 he was made, by Lord Dalhousie, Lieut.-Governor of Bengal, which post he held through the trying period of the Indian Mutiny, when he was reported by Lord Canning to have been "the right hand of the Government." For the energy, resolution, and administrative ability which he displayed in that office he received the thanks of the Houses of Parliament, and was created in 1860 a K.C.B. (Civil division). In 1868 he was elected a member of the Council of India, and retired at the close of 1886.

HALSBURY (The Right Hon. Lord), Hardinge Stanley Giffard, P.C., D.C.L., Lord High Chancellor of England, born in London, Sept. 3, 1825, is the third son of the late Stanley Lees Giffard, Esq., LL.D., barrister-at-law. He was educated at Merton College, Oxford, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1852, and M.A. in 1855. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1850, and joined the North Wales and Chester Circuit. He also had a very large junior practice at the Central Criminal Court and the Middlesex Sessions, and he was for several years a junior prosecuting Counsel to the Treasury. He became Queen's Counsel in 1865, and a Bencher of the Inner Temple. In 1873 he was appointed Chairman of the Carmarthenshire Quarter Sessions. In Mr. Disraeli's administration in 1875 he was made Solicitor-General. He twice contested Cardiff in the Conservative interest, but did not succeed in getting a seat until 1877, when he was returned for Launceston, and sat in the House of Commons for that borough until his elevation to the peerage in 1885, when he was created Baron Halsbury, and appointed Lord High Chancellor. He was Lord Chancellor with a short interval (Jan.–July, 1886) from 1885 to Aug. 1892, when he was succeeded by Lord Herschell. He was one of the leading counsel in the Tichborne case, and before his elevation he was engaged in most of the important cases of his time. He is constable of Launceston Castle, and in 1881 was treasurer of his Inn. His attainment to high judicial office is a remarkable exception to the axiom of the English Bar, that no criminal practitioner ever reaches the Woolsack. In July, 1891, Oxford University bestowed upon Lord Halsbury the hon. degree of D.C.L.

HALSWELLE, Keeley, R.I., A.R.S.A., was born at Richmond, Surrey, April 23, 1832. He very early showed talent and liking for art, but his desire to adopt art as his profession met with no encouragement from his family. Eventually, however, after being sketcher for the Illustrated London News, he went to Edinburgh, and there found a friend in Mr. William Nelson, the publisher, who encouraged him by giving him illustration work, also offering to send the young artist to Spain or Italy to study painting. In 1857 he exhibited his first picture in the Royal Scottish Academy, and in 1866 was elected an Associate of that body. In 1869 he went to Italy, and in the following year his picture "Roba di Roma" made its mark at Burlington House, afterwards gaining the £50 prize at Manchester. This was followed by, in 1870, "Roman Street Life;" in 1871, "Contadini in St. Peter's, Rome;" in 1872, "The Elevation of the Host;" in 1873, "Il Madonnajo;" in 1874, "A Roman Fruit Girl" and "Under the Lion of St. Mark;" in 1875, "Lo Sposalizio bringing Home the Bride;" in 1877, "Non Angli sed Angeli;" in 1878, "The Play Scene in Hamlet;" in 1879, "Waiting for the Blessing." Up to that date his reputation had been made by works coming within the sphere of the figure and historical painter, but in recent years, and to a large class of the public, his name is associated with the landscapes which have been exhibited at the Royal Academy and Grosvenor Gallery. In 1884 a series of his views of Thames Scenery was exhibited in London, entitled "Six Years in a House-boat." Subsequently among others the following works have been produced:—"Gathering Clouds," and "Flood on the Thames," 1879; "Tug and Timber Barge," 1880; "The Silvery Thames," and "Fenland," 1881; "Pangbourne Reach," and "Three Counties," 1882; "Royal Windsor," and "Willows Whiten, Aspens Quiver," 1883; "A Gleam of the Setting Sun," 1884; "Welcome Shade," 1885; "The Heart of the Coolins," 1886; "October Woodlands," and "Loch Awe," 1887; "The Rainbow," 1888; "Macbeth," 1889; and "Highlands and Islands," 1890.

HAMED BEN THWAIN, Sultan of Zanzibar, succeeded to the throne on the death of his great-uncle, Seyyid Ali, in March, 1893. He was placed in power by the British Agent, in spite of some opposition from one of his uncles, Kalid Barghash, who endeavoured to assert his claim to the throne.

HAMILTON, Gail. See DODGE, MARY ABIGAIL.

HAMILTON, The Right Hon. Lord George Francis, M.P., P.C., is the third son of the Duke of Abercorn, by Lady Louisa, second daughter of John, sixth Duke of Bedford. He was born at Brighton in Dec., 1845, and received his education at Harrow. In 1864 he was appointed an ensign in the Rifle Brigade, and in 1868 was transferred to the Coldstream Guards. At the general election of Dec. 1868, he contested the county of Middlesex in the Conservative interest, and was returned at the head of the poll. This decisive Conservative victory occasioned great surprise in political circles, as Middlesex had previously been regarded as one of the most impregnable strongholds of the Liberal party. At the general election of Feb. 1874, Lord George Hamilton again came in at the head of the poll. On the formation of Mr. Disraeli's administration in Feb. 1874, his lordship was nominated to the post of Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for India; and he was appointed Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education, April 4, 1878, in succession to Viscount Sandon. On the latter occasion he was sworn of the Privy Council. He went out of office with his party in April, 1880. On the defeat of the Gladstone Government he was made First Lord of the Admiralty from June, 1885, to Feb. 1886, under Lord Salisbury's first administration, and filled the same post in the second Salisbury Cabinet, 1886 till Aug. 1892. He was elected chairman of the new London School Board at the close of 1894. His lordship married, in 1871, Lady Maud Caroline, youngest daughter of the third Earl of Harewood.

HAMILTON, Sir Robert George Crookshank, K.C.B., born in 1836, is a son of the late Rev. Z. Macaulay Hamilton, Minister of Bressay, Shetland. He was educated at the University of Aberdeen, and in 1855 entered the Civil Service as a temporary clerk in the War Office. In that year he went to the Crimea in the Commissariat Department. On his return, in 1857, he was employed in the Office of Works, and subsequently in the Education Department. From 1869 to 1872 he served as Accountant to the Board of Trade. In 1872 he became Assistant Secretary, and in 1874 Secretary to the Civil Service Inquiry Commission. In May, 1882, Lord Northbrook appointed him Under-Secretary to the Admiralty; but he had scarcely entered upon that office before he was called to take the place of the murdered Mr. Burke as Under-Secretary for Ireland, which position he retained until Nov. 1886, when he was appointed Governor of Tasmania, a post which he held till Dec. 1893. He was succeeded in Dublin by Sir Redvers Buller. In 1884 he was made K.C.B. It is understood that Sir Robert Hamilton's advice had much to do with the adoption of a Home Rule policy by Mr. Gladstone and Earl Spencer. He was a member of the Royal Commission on Colonial Defences in 1881-82, and Commissioner to inquire into the affairs of Dominica in 1893.

HAMMOND, William Alexander, M.D., born at Annapolis, Maryland, Aug. 28, 1828, graduated M.D. in the University of New York in 1848, and in June, 1849, entered the Medical Service of the United States army as assistant-surgeon, in which he remained till 1860, having attained the Staff rank of Captain. In 1860 he was appointed Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in the University of Maryland. At the commencement of the civil war he resigned his professorship, and re-entered the army almost at the bottom of the list of assistant-surgeons, having, of course, lost his previous rank by his resignation. But on the reorganization of the Medical Bureau in April, 1862, he was, at the earnest solicitation of the Sanitary Commission and the General-in-Chief of the army, appointed Surgeon-General of the army, with the rank of Brigadier-General. He retained this position until 1864, when he was dismissed from the service on the ground of irregularities in the award of contracts. This sentence was reversed by the President and Congress in 1878, after full investigation, and he was restored to his full rank and, at his own request, placed on the retired list. On his dismissal from the army in 1864 he was appointed Professor in the College of Physicians and Surgeons; shortly afterwards in the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York, and Physician-in-Chief to the New York State Hospital for Diseases of the Nervous System; and subsequently was connected with the medical department of the University of New York. In 1882 he became Professor of Mental and Nervous Diseases in the New York Post Graduate Medical School. He was also the editor of The Journal of Psychological Medicine, and has published "Military Hygiene," 1863; "Physiological Memoirs," 1863; "Venereal Diseases," 1864; "Wakefulness," 1865; "Insanity in its Medico-Legal Relations," 1866; "Sleep, and its Nervous Derangements," 1869; "The Physics and Physiology of Spiritualism," 1870; "Medico-Legal Study of the Case of Daniel McFarland," 1870; "A Treatise on Diseases of the Nervous System," 1871; "Insanity in its Relations to Crime," 1873; "Spinal Irritation," 1877; "Over Mental Work, and Emotional Disturbances," and "Cerebral Hyperæmia," 1878; "Fasting Girls," 1879; "Certain Forms of Nervous Derangement," 1881; "Insanity in its Medical Relations," 1883; and "Sexual Impotence in the Male," 1886. He has also published the following novels: "Lal," and "Doctor Grattan," 1884; "Mr. Oldmixon," and "A Strong-Minded Woman," 1885; and "On the Susquehanna," 1886. In 1889 he removed to Washington, where he now resides.

HAMPTON, Hon. Wade, was born at Charleston, S.C., Mar. 28, 1818. He was graduated from the University of South Carolina, and subsequently became a member of the State Legislature. Though opposed to Secession, he entered the Confederate Army at the outbreak of the Civil War as a private, and before its close had risen to the rank of Lieutenant-General. From 1877 to 1879 he was Governor of South Carolina, and from 1879 to 1891 he was U.S. Senator from that State. Since March, 1893, he has held the office, to which he was appointed by President Cleveland, of U.S. Commissioner of Railroads.

HANBURY, Sir James Arthur, K.C.B., son of the late Mr. Samuel Hanbury, was born in 1832, and received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the degree of Bachelor of Medicine in 1853. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1859. Immediately after graduating at Dublin, he entered the medical department of the Army. He became surgeon in 1863, surgeon-major in 1873, brigadier-surgeon in 1879, and deputy-surgeon-general in 1881. He served with distinction in China, India, and America; was principal medical officer of a division during the Afghan campaigns of 1878-9 and 1879-80; and served as principal medical officer under Lieut.-Gen. Sir Frederick Roberts on the occasion of his celebrated march from Cabul to Candahar. For these services he was created a Companion of the Bath, and received the war Medal and bronze Star. In Aug. 1882, he was specially selected to accompany Sir Garnet Wolseley as principal medical officer of the Egyptian Expedition, with the local rank of surgeon-general. At the close of the campaign he was created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath, and Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland (honoris causâ), in 1883.

HANSLICK, Dr. Eduard, musical critic, born at Prague, Sept. 11, 1825, is the son of a well-known bibliographer. He studied law and philosophy in Prague and in Vienna, where he took the degree of Doctor. In 1856 he was appointed tutor of æsthetics and musical history; in 1861, Professor extraordinary; and in 1870, regular Professor. He was juror for the musical department of the Exhibition of Paris, 1867; Vienna, 1873; and Paris, 1878, and used every effort to further the interests of the musical instrument makers of Austria. In 1876 he was appointed a member of the Imperial Council, having some time before received the Order of the Iron Crown. During the years 1859-63 he gave public lectures in Vienna, and occasionally in Prague and at Cologne, on the history of music. He has been musical critic successively to the Wiener Zeitung, the Presse, and the Neue Freie Presse. His resistance to the Liszt-Wagner movement is well-known. Dr. Hanslick has published "Vom musikalisch-Schönen," 1854; "Geschichte des Concertwesens in Wien," 1869; "Aus dem Concertsaal," 1870; "Die moderne Oper," 1875; "Aus dem Opernleben der Gegenwart," 1854.

HANSON, Sir Reginald, Bart., LL.D., who was born in 1840, is the son of the late Mr. Samuel Hanson, and head of the firm of Messrs. Samuel Hanson, Son, and Barter, wholesale grocers, in Botolph-lane, City. His family have been connected with the Ward of Billingsgate for 144 years, and he himself was born in the same house in Botolph-lane as his grandfather and father were. He was educated at Rugby, during Dean Goulburn's and Bishop Temple's head masterships, and proceeded thence to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the usual degrees of B.A. and M.A. In 1887 the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the University. After a visit to Australia he entered his father's business, and with twenty-five of his clerks joined the London Rifle Brigade at the beginning of the Volunteer movement. In 1873 he was elected a member of the Common Council for Billingsgate Ward, and he was successively the Chairman of the Library and of the Local Government and Taxation Committees. In 1880, on the retirement of Mr. Alderman Sidney, he was elected Alderman of the Ward, and in 1881-2 he served the office of Sheriff in conjunction with Sir W. A. Ogg in the Mayoralty of Sir J. Whittaker Ellis, M.P. He was knighted with his colleague, on the occasion of the visit of the Queen to Epping Forest. Subsequently he was a member of the London School Board for three years; and in 1889 was elected a member of the London County Council. He is a Past Master of the Shipwrights' Company; Master of the Merchant Taylors' Company; a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries; and was sometime chairman of the council of the London Chamber of Commerce. He is the honorary colonel of the 4th Battalion Royal Fusiliers (City of London Militia), and is also a Commander of the Crown of Oak of the Netherlands. He is in politics a Conservative. In Sept., 1886, Sir Reginald was elected Lord Mayor of London for the civic year 1886-7, the Jubilee year, and was created a Baronet on the occasion of the Queen's visit to the Mansion House in May, 1887. The last old Rugby scholar who was Lord Mayor was Sir W. Plomer, who filled the office in 1781. Sir Reginald married, in 1866, a daughter of the late Mr. C. B. Bingley, of Stanhope-park, Middlesex.

HARCOURT, The Right Hon. Sir William George Granville Venables Vernon, M.P., P.C., LL.D., second son of the Rev. William Vernon Harcourt, and grandson of a former Archbishop of York, born Oct. 14, 1827, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was a scholar, and graduated in high honours in 1851. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1854, and went the Home circuit. He unsuccessfully contested the Kirkcaldy Burghs in 1858. Mr. Harcourt was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1866; and was returned to the House of Commons for the city of Oxford in the Liberal interest in 1868. He was elected Professor of International Law in the University of Cambridge, March 2, 1869; and he was a member of the Royal Commission for amending the Neutrality Laws; and of the Royal Commission for amending the Naturalization Laws. He was appointed Solicitor-General in Nov., 1873, on which occasion he was knighted, and he held that office until the resignation of Mr. Gladstone's administration in the following February. When Mr. Gladstone returned to power in May, 1880, Sir W. Harcourt was nominated Secretary of State for the Home Department. On his going down to Oxford for re-election on that occasion he was defeated, polling only 2681 votes against 2735 recorded in favour of his Conservative antagonist, Mr. A. W. Hall. At this juncture Mr. Plimsoll, M.P. for Derby, very generously accepted the Chiltern Hundreds, whereupon Sir W. Harcourt was elected one of the representatives of that borough in his stead. Sir W. Harcourt was presented with the freedom of the city of Glasgow, Oct. 25, 1881. He went out of office with his party in June, 1885; but on the return of the Liberals to power in Jan., 1886, he was made Chancellor of the Exchequer, and reappointed to this post in 1892. He was re-elected for Derby at both the General Elections (1885 and 1886) and again in 1892. He is one of the cleverest Parliamentary debaters, and was much spoken of as the future leader of his party when Mr. Gladstone retired. He is now Leader of the House of Commons. His Budget, brought forward in 1894, created a sensation, since it equalises the death duties on real and personal property and exempts large sections of the poorer business and professional classes from payment of Income Tax. He was one of the original contributors to the Saturday Review, and has written various political pamphlets and letters on international law in the Times, published under the pseudonym of "Historicus." The latter were reprinted in a volume, with considerable additions (1863). Sir William Harcourt married, first, in 1859, Thérèse, daughter of Lady Theresa Lewis—aunt to the Earl of Clarendon, and widow of the late Sir George Cornewall Lewis, Bart.—by her first husband, T. Lister, Esq.; and secondly, in 1876, Mrs. Ives, daughter of the late John Lothrop Motley, the historian, and sometime United States Minister in London.

HARDIE, J. Keir, M.P., was born in 1856, and was for many years a miner at Lochnorris, Cumnock, Ayrshire. He early became well known as a speaker on labour and in advanced Democratic and Socialistic circles. He is President of the Ayrshire Miners' Union, and of the Independent Labour Party, a political body which seeks to exist independently of the recognised political parties, only supporting one or other of them when the cause of the workmen can derive benefit from so doing. At the elections of 1892 Mr. Keir Hardie was returned to Parliament for the Southern Division of West Ham, and has sat in the House as the representative of Independent Labour. He frequently speaks in public on labour questions.

HARDING, Sir Robert Palmer, late Chief Official Receiver in the Bankruptcy Department of the Board of Trade, was born in 1821, and after practising as a solicitor for some years, was appointed in 1864 a Commissioner to inquire into the working of the Bankruptcy Act; and, when the new Act was passed in 1883, he undertook the reorganisation of this department in conformity with it. He was knighted in Jan., 1890, and resigned his post as Chief Official Receiver three months later.

HARDY, Iza Duffus, only daughter of Lady Mary Duffus Hardy and of the late Sir Thomas Duffus Hardy, was educated chiefly at home, and began writing stories at a very early age. Sketches and tales of hers have appeared in Tinsley's Magazine, London Society, Belgravia, and the Gentleman's Magazine. Amongst the many novels she has published are "A New Othello," (1890) (2nd ed. 1894), "Glencairn," "Only a Love Story," "A Broken Faith," "Love, Honour, and Obey," "Hearts or Diamonds?" "The Love that He Passed By," and "Love in Idleness;" the last three being stories of American life. She accompanied her mother to America, and has produced two volumes of Transatlantic reminiscences, "Between Two Oceans," and "Oranges and Alligators," the latter being an account of life amongst the orange-groves of South Florida." "A Woman's Loyalty" was published in 1893.

HARDY, Thomas, novelist, was born June 2, 1840, at a secluded homestead in Dorsetshire, and educated in the same county. He was destined for the architectural profession, and in his 17th year was articled as pupil to an ecclesiastical architect practising in the county town. He devoted the greater part of his time, however, during the ensuing four years, to classical and theological literature, which he continued to read with two friends of like tastes. On taking up his residence in London, Mr. Hardy allied himself with the modern school of Gothic artists, and acquired additional experience in design under Sir Arthur Blomfield, A.R.A., F.S.A., son of the late Richard Blomfield—meanwhile entering as a student of modern languages at King's College. His first literary performance was an essay on "Coloured Brick and Terra-cotta Architecture," which received the prize and medal of the Institute of British Architects in 1863; he also was awarded in the same year Sir W. Tite's prize for architectural design. He then returned to literature, confining his attention to poetry, and writing much unpublished verse; but at last tried his hand on a work of fiction called "Desperate Remedies," which was published in 1871, and was equally praised and condemned. In 1872 he published the rural tale entitled "Under the Greenwood Tree," and in 1873 "A Pair of Blue Eyes," both which were well received. These were followed, in the Cornhill Magazine for 1874, by his first widely-known novel, "Far from the Madding Crowd," dramatized by the author in 1879, and acted in a modified form at the Globe Theatre in 1882. He has written also "The Hand of Ethelberta, a Comedy in Chapters," 1876; "The Return of the Native," 1878; "The Trumpet-Major," 1880; "A Laodicean," 1881; "Two on a Tower," 1882; "The Mayor of Casterbridge," 1886; "The Woodlanders," 1886-7; "Wessex Tales," 1888; "A Group of Noble Dames," 1891; "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," the same year (one of the most extensively read and keenly discussed of recent novels); and "Life's Little Ironies," 1894. A short play, based on one of his Wessex tales, and entitled "The Three Wayfarers," was written and successfully produced by him in 1893. Many of these novels have been published simultaneously in England, America, Australia, and India, and have been translated into Continental languages. The majority have a picturesque country district, vaguely spoken of as "Wessex," as their common scene, this being an application peculiar to the author, of the ancient name to the modern life and conditions of that part of England. Mr. Hardy married, in 1874, Emma Lavinia, daughter of J. Attersoll Gifford, Esq., and niece of the late Archdeacon of London. He is a Justice of the Peace for Dorsetshire. In the autumn of 1894 Messrs. Elkin Matthews and John Lane published "The Art of Thomas Hardy" by Lionel Johnson, which contains some hitherto unpublished pieces by the novelist.

HARE, Augustus John Cuthbert, the youngest and now the only surviving son of Francis George Hare, was born at the Villa Strozzi, in Rome, March 13, 1834, and was adopted, as an infant, by the widow of his uncle, Augustus William Hare. He was educated at Harrow, and at University College, Oxford. He has published "Epitaphs for Country Churchyards," 1856; "Murray's Handbook for Berks, Bucks and Oxfordshire," 1860; "A Winter at Mentone," 1861; "Murray's Handbook for Durham and Northumberland," 1863; "Walks in Rome," 1870; "Wanderings in Spain," 1872; "Memorials of a Quiet Life," 1872; "Days near Rome," 1874; "Cities of Northern and Central Italy," 1875; "Walks in London," 1877; "Life and Letters of Baroness Bunsen," 1879; and "Cities of Southern Italy and Sicily," 1882; "Sketches of Holland and Scandinavia," 1885; "Studies in Russia," 1885; "Paris," and "Days near Paris," 1887; "South-Eastern France," and "South-Western France," 1890; "The Story of Two Noble Lives," 1893; "Sussex," 1894. Mr. Hare resided formerly at his family home of Hurstmonceaux, but now lives at Holmhurst, near Hastings.

HARLEY, George, M.D., F.R.S., was born at Haddington, East Lothian, in 1829, entered the University of Edinburgh when 17 years of age, and graduating there as Doctor of Medicine in 1850, then studied scientific medicine for five years in the Universities of Paris, Würzburg, Berlin, Vienna, and Heidelberg. On returning to London in 1855, he was immediately appointed Lecturer on Practical Physiology and Histology in University College, London. In 1859 he was appointed Professor of Medical Jurisprudence, and, in 1861, Physician to University College Hospital. Dr. George Harley is Corresponding Member of the Academy of Sciences of Bavaria, of the Academy of Medicine of Madrid, and of several continental scientific and medical societies; he was in 1853 President of the Parisian Medical Society; and in 1861 he received the Triennial prize (fifty guineas) of the Royal College of Surgeons for an Essay on the Suprarenal Bodies. The published writings of Dr. George Harley are numerous. Twenty-five scientific papers bearing his name are in the catalogue of the Royal Society, which goes up only to 1873, and since then he has published several others on germ diseases, &c. His chief medical works are on Histology, Healthy and Morbid; on Diabetes; Albuminuria; Jaundice; Kidney Derangements; and Liver Diseases, the latter being a large work of 1,200 pages, with 38 illustrations. Dr. George Harley has invented various contrivances for facilitating medical, physiological, chemical, and microscopical research; and has also powerfully advocated a reform of our spelling. In 1877 he published a book entitled "The Simplification of English Spelling," and in 1878 printed a letter addressed to the late Lord Beaconsfield, entitled "A Conservative Scheme for National Spelling Reform." In 1886 he published a work on some Indian Diseases, entitled "Inflammations of the Liver, and their sequelæ Atrophy, Cirrhosis, Ascites, Hæmorrhages and Abscesses;" and, in 1890, one on "The Extrusion of Gallstones by Digital Manipulation."

HARLEY, Rev. Robert, hon. M.A., Oxford, F.R.S., F.R.A.S., a mathematician, was born at Liverpool on Jan. 23, 1828. He is the third son of the late Rev. Robert Harley. In his fourteenth year he developed a taste for mathematics. His progress in the study was such that before he was sixteen he was appointed mathematical master in a good school at Seacombe, near Liverpool, and within twelve months he returned to be head-assistant in the school at Blackburn where he had received the chief part of his education. He then became a regular contributor to various mathematical journals. In 1846 he answered a question relating to the general quintic equation which had been proposed in the Lady's and Gentleman's Diary by the late Sir James Cockle, M.A., F.R.S., late Chief Justice of Queensland. Through this answer he was brought into correspondence with the proposer, and the friendship which originated led to joint labours which have not been without their influence on the subsequent course of algebraic investigations in this country. Mr. Harley received his theological training in Airedale College, Bradford, and in 1854 was ordained Pastor of the Congregational Church at Brighouse in the West Riding of Yorkshire. This position he held for fourteen years, during the last four of which he also occupied the Chairs of Mathematics and Logic in the College where he had been trained for the ministry. In 1868 he was elected Pastor of an important Congregational Church at Leicester. Here he devoted much of his time to public work. He was elected a member of the first School Board of Leicester, and turned his thoughts and energies to the determination of statistical and other questions connected with the public elementary education of the town. He was also a member of the Executive Committee of the National Education League, until that body, soon after the establishment of School Boards, having accomplished its main objects, was dissolved. In 1872 he was appointed Vice-Master of Mill Hill School, and Minister of the Chapel. Three years later he built a large boarding-house in connection with the school, which was full almost from the first. He also erected, for the use of the village, an iron hall for lectures, &c., which was opened by his friend, the Earl Stanhope. In 1882 he became Principal of Huddersfield College; and in 1886 he undertook charge of the leading Congregational Church at Oxford, which he afterwards resigned in order to devote himself to scientific research. Mr. Harley is one of the very few Nonconformist Ministers who have been admitted to the Royal Society. He was elected a fellow when only thirty-five; he is also a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society; a Member of the London Mathematical Society (on the Council of which he sat for some years); a Corresponding Member of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester; an Honorary Member of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Leicester; and an Honorary and Corresponding Member of the Philosophical Society of Queensland. At the meetings of the British Association at Norwich and at Edinburgh he acted as Secretary of Section A; and at the meetings at Bradford and at Bath he was appointed a Vice-President of the same Section. In November, 1886, the University of Oxford conferred upon him the degree of M.A., honoris causâ. He is the author of numerous papers, chiefly on questions in pure Mathematics or Symbolic Logic, published in the transactions of learned bodies and in journals devoted to mathematics or philosophy, inter alia, "On the Method of Symmetric Products," "On Circular Functions," "The Theory of Quintics," "The Theory of the Transcendental Solution of Algebraic Equations," "Differential Resolvents," "George Boole, F.R.S., a Biography and an Exposition," "Boole's Laws of Thought," "The Stanhope Demonstrator; an Instrument for performing Logical Operations," "Sir James Cockle's Criticoids," "The Explicit Form of the Complete Cubic Differential Resolvents," and "The Umbral Notation."

HARPER, The Right Rev. Henry John Chitty, D.D., Bishop of Christchurch, New Zealand, was born at Gosport, Hampshire, in 1807, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford (B.A. 1826, M.A. 1840), where he obtained the Michel Fellowship. After having been private tutor to the sons of Sir Charles Coote, he officiated for many years as "conduct" or chaplain to Eton College, by which society he was presented in 1840 to the vicarage of Stratfield Mortimer, Berkshire, whence he was appointed, in 1856, first Bishop of Christchurch. He resigned in 1890, and was succeeded by the Rev. Churchill Julius, D.D. The diocese was reconstituted in 1869, and made metropolitan over the sees of Auckland, Wellington, Waiapu, Nelson, Dunedin, and Melanesia.

HARPER, William Rainey, Ph.D., D.D., American educator, was born at New Concord, Ohio, July 26, 1856, and was graduated from Muskingum College, Ohio, in 1870. From 1875 to 1876 he was Principal of Masonic College, Macon, Tenn.; 1876–80, instructor in Denison University; 1879–86, Professor of Hebrew in the (Chicago) Baptist Theol. Seminary; 1886–91, Professor of the Semitic Languages in Yale University (also 1889–91 Woolsey Professor of Biblical Literature in Yale); and since 1891 has been President and Head Professor of the Semitic Languages and Literatures in the recently established Chicago University. He received the degree of Ph.D. from Yale University in 1875, and that of D.D. from Colby University in 1891. He is editor of the Biblical World and of Hebraica, and has published several Hebrew text-books.

HARRIS, Sir Augustus Glossop, Kt., theatrical manager and dramatist, was born 1852, and has been lessee of Drury Lane Theatre since 1879, where he has produced many successful pantomimes, and certain dramas written in collaboration with Messrs. Pettitt, Hamilton, and others, viz., "The World," "Youth," "Human Nature," "Run of Luck," "Armada," "Million of Money," "Prodigal Daughter," "Life of Pleasure" (1893), &c. He was first member of the Strand Division of the London County Council, Sheriff of the City of London (1891), and Deputy-Lieutenant of the City of London. He revived Grand Opera at Drury Lane in 1887, and at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, since 1888. The honour of knighthood was conferred on him after the visit of the German Emperor in 1891.

HARRIS, Lord George Robert Canning Harris, fourth Baron, was born at St. Ann's, Trinidad, Feb. 3, 1851, and educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1874. He is J.P. and D.L. for Kent, and Deputy-Chairman of the East Kent Quarter Sessions. In Lord Salisbury's Government of 1885 he was Under-Secretary for India, and in 1886 he held the post of Under-Secretary for War. He is a celebrated cricketer; has long been captain of the Kent County Club; and has taken an eleven to Australia. He has been Governor of Bombay since February, 1890.

HARRIS, Joel Chandler, American writer, was born at Eatonton, Ga., Dec. 8, 1848. His early education was limited to a brief attendance at a local school, and, at the age of 12, he was apprenticed to a printer. His fondness for books enabled him to overcome the deficiencies of his schooling, and he soon rose from the printer's case to an editorial desk. He was employed on various papers in Macon, New Orleans, Forsyth, and Savannah until 1876, when he went to Atalanta (Ga.), and secured an engagement on the Constitution, of which he was in 1890 the principal editor. It was his negro dialect stories, contributed to the Constitution, that first drew public attention to him, and that have won for him his literary reputation. In addition to his editorial labours, he has been a frequent writer for American magazines, and has also published "Uncle Remus, his Songs and his Sayings," 1880; "Nights with Uncle Remus," 1883; "Mingo and Other Sketches," 1884; "Free Joe," 1887; "Daddy Jake the Runaway," 1889; and "Balaam and his Master, and other Stories." A "Life of Henry W. Grady," his predecessor as editor of the Constitution, and a popular Southern speaker, was published by him in 1890.

HARRISON, Miss Jane E., the Hellenist, was born in 1850. Her father was Mr. Charles Harrison, of Cottingham, near Hull. She was for a time educated privately under a governess in a village near Scarborough, and at the age of thirteen began to learn Greek, her teacher undertaking the same task at the same time. Subsequently she passed the Cambridge Higher Local Examinations, and won their Language Scholarship. She continued her education at Cheltenham, where she studied mathematics and science, and, after passing most honourably several difficult examinations at Newnham, where she spent three years, was informally examined in 1879 by the Examiners of the Classical Tripos and declared by them to have attained the honours standard. At Cambridge, and afterwards at the British Museum, Miss Harrison studied Greek vase-painting and marbles under Professor Colvin, and, during a tour through Europe, she visited and carefully inspected every important collection of Greek sculpture. On her return from her first residence abroad Miss Harrison, in 1882, was invited to form classes for the study of Greek sculpture and the minor classical antiquities at the British Museum, which were formed and continued until 1887. At the Museum only thirty auditors could listen to her as she conducted her party round the Greek Galleries, but at South Kensington her audiences were large. She has lectured on Greek art, and especially on Greek vase-painting, at many public schools and ladies' colleges, at Toynbee Hall, at the Midland Institute, Birmingham, for the University Extension Society, and for the Association for the Higher Education of Women. She is a frequent contributor to magazine literature, and her most recent published works are "Greek Vase-Painting: Select Examples," and "Introductory Studies in Greek Art." She has also written a preface to the "Gods of Olympus," by various writers. So thorough is Miss Harrison's mastery of her subject, that in applying some years ago for the Yates Professorship of Archæology at University College she received the support of such men as Professor Sidgwick and Sir E. Burne Jones.

HARRISON, The Hon. Benjamin, LL.D., twenty-third President of the United States, grandson of the ninth President, was born at North Bend, Ohio, Aug. 20, 1833. He graduated from Miami University (Oxford, Ohio), in 1852, studied law and began its practice in Indianapolis, Ind. (1854), where he has since resided. The first official position held by him was that of crier in the Federal Court at Indianapolis, to which he was appointed shortly after his removal to that city. In 1860 he was elected, by the Republican party, reporter of the Indiana Supreme Court, but resigned the office in 1862 to enter the Union Army in the Civil War. He assisted in raising the 70th Indiana Regiment, of which he was made Colonel when it went to the field. During the war his regiment was chiefly engaged in the West, guarding railways and in guerilla warfare. In Jan., 1864, Col. Harrison was placed in command of a brigade, and made the campaign from Chattanooga to Atlanta with Gen. Hooker's corps. His first engagement of importance was that of Resaca, May 14, 1864. Subsequently he took part in the capture of Cassville, the actions at New Hope Church and at Golgotha Church, and in the battles of Kenesaw Mountain and Peach Tree Creek. "For ability and manifest energy and gallantry in command of the brigade," the brevet of brigadier-general of volunteers was subsequently conferred upon him, to date from Jan. 23, 1865. When mustered out (June, 1865) at the close of the war, he returned to Indianapolis and resumed the duties of the office of reporter, to which he had been re-elected in 1864. At the expiration of his term (1868) he declined another renomination, and took up again the practice of his profession. Though actively interested in the presidential canvasses of 1868 and 1872, he did not hold any official position, nor was he a candidate for any office, until in 1876 he accepted the Republican nomination for governor of his State, but that year was unfavourable to his party, and he was not elected. In 1879, President Hayes appointed him a member of the Mississippi River Commission, and in the following year he was made chairman of the Indiana Delegation to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, which nominated Mr. Garfield for the Presidency. He was a prominent speaker in the campaign of Mr. Garfield, and on the election of the latter was offered a portfolio in the cabinet, but he declined it. On March 4, 1881, he took his seat in the United States Senate, to which the legislature of Indiana had previously elected him for a full term of six years. While a member of that body he spoke frequently, and was known as an advocate of protective duties on imports, of a reform in the civil service, and of a restoration of the American Navy. He was again a delegate of his party to the National Convention in 1884, and his name was there mentioned in connection with the Presidency, as indeed it had been at the preceding Convention. At the next Convention (1888) he was among the leading candidates from the start, and on the eighth ballot was tendered the nomination, which he accepted on a platform of a maintenance of the protective tariff. This became the controlling issue in the ensuing contest between Mr. Cleveland (renominated by the Democratic party) and himself, and the result was a Republican victory and the election of Mr. Harrison, who was accordingly inaugurated President on March 4, 1889, for a term of four years. In 1892, he was nominated by his party for re-election, and was again opposed by Mr. Cleveland, who, for the third time was the Democratic party's choice for President. The campaign, as in 1888, was conducted mainly on the tariff question; which was (and still is in 1894) the principal political issue before the American people. Owing to the unpopularity of what is known as the McKinley Bill (a protective tariff measure passed by Congress and approved by Mr. Harrison in 1890), the Republican party was defeated, and at the end of his term of office in March, 1893, Mr. Harrison left Washington, and returned to his home in Indianapolis. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Miami University, and the College of New Jersey in June, 1889.

HARRISON, Frederic, M.A., was born in London, Oct. 18, 1831, being the eldest son of Frederic Harrison, Esq., of London, by Jane, only daughter of the late Alexander Brice, Esq., of Belfast. He was educated at King's College School, London; was elected Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford, 1848; and took the degree of B.A. 1853 (when he was in the 1st class in Classics). After residing for some time as Fellow and Tutor of his College at Oxford, he was called to the Bar in 1858. He has since practised as a Conveyancer, and in the Courts of Equity. Mr. Harrison was a member of the Royal Commission upon Trade Unions, 1867-69; Secretary to the Royal Commission for the Digest of the Law, 1869-70; and in 1877 was appointed by the Council of Legal Education, Professor of Jurisprudence and International Law, which office he held until 1889. He has given much attention to the questions and institutions relating to working-men. He was one of the founders of the Positivist School in 1870, and also of Newton Hall in 1881. He is the author of some articles in the Westminster Review between 1860 and 1864, of numerous essays in the Fortnightly Review from 1865, in the Nineteenth Century from its commencement, the Contemporary Review from 1875, and in the Forum of New York, 1890—1894. He has published "The Meaning of History," 1862; "Order and Progress," 1875; an English translation of "Social Statics, or the Abstract Theory of Human Order," being vol. ii. of Comte's "Positive Polity," 1875; "The Choice of Books, and other Literary Pieces," 1886; "Oliver Cromwell," 1888; and "Annals of an Old Manor House," 1893. Mr. Harrison was the editor, and in part the author of "The New Calendar of Great Men," 1892, a collection of 558 biographies of worthies of all nations and ages. He is a follower of Auguste Comte, whose philosophical, social, and religious doctrines he has presented in various articles, lectures, and published addresses. Mr. Harrison has been since 1880 President of the English Positivist Committee, and has given continuous courses of Lectures in Newton Hall, many of which have been published separately. He has also been a constant writer in the Positivist Review, edited by Professor Beesly, from January, 1893. Mr. Harrison has declined to enter Parliament, except that at the General Election of 1886, he stood for the University of London against Sir John Lubbock, and was defeated by 516 votes against 1,314. In February, 1889, he was elected an Alderman by the London County Council, and resigned that office in October, 1893.

HARRISON, Right Rev. William T., D.D., Bishop of Glasgow and Galloway, is the son of the Rev. T. T. Harrison, M.A., Rector of Thorpe Morieux, Suffolk, and was educated at Marlborough College and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was curate at the parish church, Great Yarmouth, 1861-68; rector of Thorpe Morieux, 1868-75; vicar of Christ Church, Luton, 1875-83; vicar of St. James's, Bury St. Edmunds, 1883-88; and rural dean of Luton; and subsequently rural dean of Thingoe. He was consecrated Bishop in 1888. He is an Hon. Canon of Ely; and married, in 1870, Elizabeth B., daughter of Col. John Colvin, C.B., Leintwardine, Herefordshire.

HARROWBY, (Earl of), The Right Hon. Dudley Francis Stuart Ryder, is the eldest son of the late Earl of Harrowby, K.G., by Lady Frances Stuart, fourth daughter of the late Marquis of Bute. He was born at Brighton, Jan. 16, 1831, and received his education at Harrow and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1852. After leaving the University he accompanied the present Earl of Carnarvon on a journey to the East, visiting the sites of Nineveh and Babylon, and exploring the country between Mesopotamia, the Black Sea, and Persia. He served as Captain in the 2nd Staffordshire Militia when that regiment was called out for garrison duty at the time of the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny. In 1856 he was elected M.P. for Lichfield, which city he represented as Viscount Sandon till 1859; and for some time he was Private Secretary to Mr. Labouchere at the Colonial Office, 1856-8. He unsuccessfully contested Stafford in 1860. Viscount Sandon was first elected for Liverpool in Jan., 1868, and was elected three times for the borough. At the general election in Feb., 1874, his lordship was returned for that borough at the head of the poll, no fewer than 20,206 votes having been recorded in his favour—the largest number given to any candidate in the United Kingdom. He came into Parliament as a supporter of Lord Palmerston, but gave up his connection with that party and his seat in the House of Commons on account of Lord John Russell becoming a member of Lord Palmerston's Government, and has been ever since a steady supporter of the Conservative party. At one time he took an active part in the private business of the House of Commons, and served on several select committees, including those on the Euphrates Valley, Hudson's Bay, and the Diplomatic and Consular Services; and he was also member of the secret committee appointed to inquire into the Westmeath Ribbon outrages. His name was associated with the Parochial Councils Bill, which he brought forward in two sessions, with the object of giving to the laity a larger share in the management of Church affairs. His lordship took a leading part, conjointly with Mr. W. H. Smith, in founding the "Bishop of London's Fund," and took an active share in all the details of its management for about nine years. To the First London School Board he was returned for Westminster (1873), and he presided over the statistical committee appointed by that body to investigate the educational wants of the Metropolis. In Feb., 1874, he was appointed Vice-President of the Council of Education, and for four years he represented that Department in the House of Commons. He brought in the Education Act of 1876 and various Revised Codes. In 1877, when the office of Chief Secretary for Ireland became vacant, and a second time in 1878, the Earl of Beaconsfield offered it, with a seat in the Cabinet, to Viscount Sandon, who, however, for family reasons refused it on both occasions; but shortly afterwards his lordship accepted the post of President of the Board of Trade, with a seat in the Cabinet, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Adderley, who was raised to the House of Peers, April, 1878. Viscount Sandon went out of office with his colleagues in April, 1880. He succeeded to the title of Earl of Harrowby on the death of his father (Nov. 19, 1882). He was appointed Lord Privy Seal in the Marquis of Salisbury's Government in 1885, and went out of office with his colleagues in Feb., 1886. He was appointed a member of the Royal Commission on Education in 1886, and served on it for the nearly three years of its existence. He became President of the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1886. In 1888 he was elected as one of the representatives of the Diocese of Lichfield in the first House of Laymen. He was elected a member of the first County Council for Staffordshire in 1888, and has been its Chairman from the commencement. He has given special attention to colonial matters, and to questions affecting the empire generally, speaking frequently on these subjects in both the House of Commons and House of Lords, and also to subjects affecting the religious, social, and material progress of the working-classes. He married, in 1861, Lady Mary Frances Cecil, eldest daughter of the second Marquis of Exeter.

HART, Ernest, born in 1836, was educated at the City of London School, where he became Captain and Lambert Jones Scholar at a very early age. Subsequently he entered the school of medicine attached to St. George's Hospital, where he attained the position of first prizeman in every class. He then obtained the post of Ophthalmic Surgeon and Lecturer on Ophthalmology at St. Mary's Hospital Medical School, practising for some years as a surgeon, and he was the author of a method of treatment of aneurism. For several years Mr. Hart was co-editor of the Lancet, and in 1866 was selected as editor of the British Medical Journal by the council of the British Medical Association. For several years Mr. Hart has devoted himself to public work in connection with questions of social and sanitary progress. He is editor of the Sanitary Record and the London Medical Record, Chairman of the National Health Society, Chairman of the Smoke Abatement Committee, and Chairman of the Parliamentary Bills Committee of the British Medical Association. As Honorary Secretary of the Workhouse Infirmaries Association in 1866-7, he rendered great public services in exposing, in concert with others, the defective arrangements for the sick poor in workhouses; and in an article on the "Hospitals of the State," published in the Fortnightly Review of that year, Mr. Hart laid down a series of propositions for the creation of asylums for the sick, which were subsequently embodied in the Metropolitan Asylums Act (1867). He has also established societies for the Protection of Infant Life, the Abatement of Smoke, and the establishment of cheap concerts for the poor. The concerts at the Victoria Theatre are the outcome of the last of these. As Chairman of the Parliamentary Bills Committee of the British Medical Association, Mr. Hart has taken part in promoting the better organization of the medical departments of the army and navy, and in shaping the Public Health Acts. Among sanitary investigations Mr. Hart has especially examined into the various epidemics which have been due to the pollution of milk, has established the necessity of safeguarding the milk supply of towns, and has devised a series of regulations to this end, which are widely adopted in London, Glasgow, Clifton, &c. After investigating the condition of the peasants of Galway, Donegal, and Mayo, he published in the Fortnightly Review proposals for favouring the creation of a peasant proprietary, and reclaiming waste lands, which were adopted by the Government, and are published in the "Migration Clauses" of the Tramways Act (Ireland). Mrs. Hart has established the Donegal Industrial Fund, which has largely developed the home industries of the cottagers, and in 1886 employed upwards of 1,000 persons.

HART, James McDougal, landscape painter, was born at Kilmarnock, Scotland, in 1828. When a child he went with his family to America and lived at Albany, New York. In 1851 he went to Düsseldorf and studied painting for about a year. He returned to Albany in 1852, and in 1856 removed to New York city, where he has since resided. He was made an Academician in 1859. His pictures are admired for their harmony of colour and quiet peacefulness of tone. The best known among them are:—"Moonrise in the Adirondacks," "A Summer's Memory of Berkshire," "The Drove at the Ford," "By the Brookside," "Peaceful Homes," "Coming out of the Shade," "On the March," "Among Friends," "Threatening Weather," "Indian Summer," and "A Misty Morning." Two of his pictures—"In the Autumn Woods" and "The Rain is Over," painted in 1881 and 1887 respectively—were exhibited at the Paris Exposition of 1889, for which he was awarded a bronze medal.

HARTE, Francis Bret, was born at Albany, New York, Aug. 25, 1839. He went to California in 1854, and was successively a miner, school-teacher, express messenger, printer, and finally editor of a newspaper. In 1864 he was appointed Secretary of the United States Branch Mint at San Francisco, holding the office until 1870. He contributed many poems and sketches to periodicals, and in 1868, upon the establishment of the Overland Monthly, he became its editor, and contributed to it several notable tales and sketches. In 1869 appeared in it his humorous poem "The Heathen Chinee," which suddenly made him famous. In 1871 he went to the Eastern States, and took up his residence first in New York, and subsequently in Boston. He was appointed United States Consul at Crefeld in 1878, from which he was transferred to Glasgow in March, 1880, where he remained until July, 1885. Since then he has resided in London. His works, most of which originally appeared in periodicals, include "Condensed Novels," 1867; "Poems," and "Luck of Roaring Camp, and other Sketches," 1870; "East and West Poems," and "Poetical Works," illustrated, 1871; "Mrs. Skaggs's Husbands," 1872; "Echoes of the Foot Hills," 1874; "Tales of the Argonauts," 1875; "Gabriel Conroy," and "Two Men of Sandy Bar," 1876; "Thankful Blossom," 1877; "Story of a Mine," and "Drift from Two Shores," 1878; "The Twins of Table Mountain and other Stories," 1879; "Flip and Found at Blazing Star," 1882; "In the Carquinez Woods," 1883; "On the Frontier," 1884; "By Shore and Sedge," and "Maruja," 1885; "Snowbound at Eagles," and "The Queen of the Pirate Isle," 1886; "A Millionaire of Rough and Ready" and "Devil's Ford," and "The Crusade of the Excelsior," 1887; "A Phyllis of the Sierras" and "Drift from Redwood Camp," and "The Argonauts of North Liberty," 1888; "Cressy," and "The Heritage of Dedlow Marsh," 1889; "A Waif of the Plains;" "A Ward of the Golden Gate," 1890; and "A Sappho of Green Springs," "Sally Dows," 1892; and "Susy," 1893.

HARTING, James Edmund, F.L.S., F.Z.S., eldest son of the late James Vincent Harting, of Harting, in the county of Sussex, and Kingsbury, Middlesex, was born in London April 29, 1841. He was educated at Downside College, near Bath, and at the University of London, where he matriculated in 1859, and the following year passed the first examination for the degree of B.A. He followed the profession of a solicitor until 1878, when he retired from practice. Being from youth devoted to the study of zoology, and more especially ornithology, he began in 1866 to publish the results of his observations, and since that date he has written several works, of which the titles and dates are given below, as well as numerous papers in the "Proceedings" and "Transactions" of scientific societies and in journals devoted to natural history. In Jan., 1871, he began to edit the natural history columns of the Field, which he has continued to do ever since; and in Jan., 1877, he was appointed editor of the Zoologist, in which capacity he still acts. Elected a Fellow of the Zoological Society in 1864, and a Fellow of the Linnean Society in 1868, he has served on the council of the latter, and on various committees of the former society and of the British Association for many years. He took an active part in procuring the passing of the Sea Birds Preservation Act, 1869, and drafted the Bill for the Protection of Wild Fowl, which was passed in 1872; and in 1873 he was examined before a Select Committee of the House of Commons, appointed to take evidence on this subject with a view to further legislation. Elected an honorary member of several county Natural History Societies, he was in 1882 awarded a first-class silver medal of the Société d'Acclimatation de France "for scientific publications." In January, 1888, he was appointed Librarian to the Linnean Society, with an official residence at Burlington House. The titles of his works are:—"The Birds of Middlesex: a Contribution towards the Natural History of the County," 1866; "The Ornithology of Shakespeare critically examined, explained, and illustrated," 1871; "A Handbook of British Birds," 1872; "Our Summer Migrants," 1875; a new edition of "White's Natural History of Selborne," 1875; another edition, with additional "Letters of White," 1876; "Rambles in Search of Shells," 1876; "Ostriches and Ostrich Farming," 1879; "Rodd's Birds of Cornwall, edited with an Introduction, Appendix, and Memoir of the Author," 1880; "British Animals Extinct within Historic Times," 1880; "Glimpses of Bird Life," 1880; "Essays on Sport and Natural History," 1883; "A Perfect Booke for Kepinge of Sparhawkes or Goshawks: Printed for the first time from the Original MS. of 1575, with an Introduction and Glossary," 1886; "Bert's Treatise of Hawks: for the first time Reprinted from the Original of 1619, with an Introduction," 1891; "Bibliotheca Accipetraria: a Bibliography of Falconry, with Illustrations," 1891.

HARTLEY, Sir Charles Augustus, K.C.M.G., F.R.S.E., was born at Heworth, co. Durham, 1825, being the son of W. A. Hartley, Esq., iron merchant of Darlington, by Lilias, daughter of A. Tod, Esq., J.P., of Borrowstowness, N.B. In 1845, after a practical course of instruction in mining and railway engineering at Bishop Auckland and Leeds, he was appointed one of Messrs. Stevenson, Brassey, and Mackenzie's district engineers on the Scottish Central Railway, and held that post till 1848, when he was nominated Resident Engineer at Sutton Harbour, Plymouth, under Mr. J. Locke, M.P. In June, 1855, on the completion of the Sutton Harbour Works, he accepted a commission as Captain in the Turkish Contingent Engineers, and served at Kertch with that force until the end of the Crimean war, for which he received the Turkish war medal. In Dec., 1856, he was elected Engineer-in-Chief to the European Commission of the Danube, on the recommendation of Major (now Lieut.-General Sir John) Stokes, K.C.B., and General Sir John Burgoyne, Bart. In March, 1861, he inspected the early works of the Suez Canal, and reported favourably on that scheme to the English Government. In Sept., 1862, he received the honour of knighthood. In 1867 he was awarded the Emperor of Russia's "Grand Competition Prize" of 8,000 silver roubles, for which there were twenty competitors, for his plans for enlarging the harbour of Odessa. In 1872, when the depth at Sulina had been increased, by natural scour only, to 20½ feet, and many important river improvements had been effected, he ceased to reside at Sulina, and became Consulting Engineer to the Danube Commission, a post which he still retains. During his residence abroad he was also employed by the Austrian Government to report on various schemes for improving the port of Trieste; by the Turkish Government to report on dock accommodation at Constantinople; by the Russian Government, to survey and report on the mouths of the Don; by the British Government, to report on an international question of engineering connected with the Scheldt; by the Indian Government, to report on the Hooghly; by the Khedive, to report on the "Barrage" across the Nile; and by the Roumanian Government, to prepare surveys and drawings for a harbour on the coast of Bessarabia. In Jan., 1874, he was the first engineer to recommend the improvement of the South Pass and Mouth of the Mississippi in preference to either of the other Mouths. In Aug., 1875, he visited the South Pass as a member of Mr. J. B. Ead's Advisory Board, and remained in constant communication with that distinguished engineer till the summer of 1879, when Mr. Ead's well-planned operations to deepen the South Pass and Mouth, by means of parallel jetties, as at Sulina, were crowned with complete success. In 1875-77 he acted as Consulting Engineer to the Cattewater Commissioners for the Cattewater Breakwater at Plymouth. In May, 1879, he was appointed a member of the Panama Congress, but abstained from voting in favour of M. de Lesseps' Panama-Colon project, as he considered that the engineering data collected up to that time were insufficient to determine satisfactorily the best route for a ship canal across the isthmus. In 1881 he prepared detailed surveys, plans, and estimates for the enlargement of the harbour of Kustendjie, in Roumania, and, in 1889, for the construction of a commercial harbour at Bourgas, in Bulgaria. In 1884 he was created a Knight Commander of SS. Michael and George. In 1884-85, on the recommendation of H.M. Government, he acted as one of the English members of the International Technical Commission appointed by the Suez Canal Company to report on the best means of improving the Suez Canal. He is the author of papers on the "Delta of the Danube," on "Public Works in the United States and Canada," and on "Inland Navigations in Europe." He has been decorated with the orders of the Medjidieh and the Star of Roumania, and has received the Stephenson Prize, the Telford medal, the Watt medal, the Telford premium, and the Manby premium from the Institution C. E.

HARTMANN, Alfred, a Swiss author, was born Jan. 1, 1814, in the castle of Thunstetten near Langenthal, in the Canton of Berne, and attended from 1827 to 1831 the schools of Solothurn. After the latter date he studied law in the universities of Munich, Heidelberg, and Berlin. During a prolonged visit to Paris, however, he lost all taste for jurisprudence, and devoted himself to literary pursuits. On returning to his native country he permanently fixed his residence at Solothurn, where he formed a close friendship with the well-known painter Disteli, and where (from 1845) he published a comic periodical called Postheiri. But Hartmann became best known through his Helvetic romance, "Meister Putsch und seine Gesellen," 1858; and, in the department of biography, by his sketch of his friend "Martin Disteli," 1861; "H. J. Von Staal," 1861; "Galerie berühmter Schweizer," 2 vols., 1863–71; and "Hory, Kanzler-Denkwürdigkeiten," 1876. Among his other works may be mentioned "Kiltabendsgeschichten," 1853–55; "Erzählungen aus der Schweiz," 1863; "Junker und Bürger," 1865; "Schweizernovellen," 1877; "Neue Schweizernovellen," and "Fortunat," 1879.

HARTMANN, Karl Robert Eduard von, philosopher, was born in Berlin, on Feb. 23, 1842. He entered the Prussian army in 1858; but lameness obliged him to leave the service in 1865, and he took to literature as a profession. His first work, "Philosophie des Unbewussten"—The Philosophy of the Unconscious—at once raised him to fame. It was published in 1869, and in thirteen years passed through nine editions. An English translation, in three volumes, is published in Trübner's "English and Foreign Philosophical Library." This has been followed by "Phänomenologie des sittlichen Bewusstseins," 1878; "Zur Geschichte und Begründung des Pessimismus," 1880; 2nd edit., 1892; "Das religiöse Bewusstsein der Menschheit im Stufengange seiner Entwickelung," 1881; "Philosophie des Schönen," 1887; "Des Grundproblems der Erkenntnisstheorie," 1889; "Die Geisterhypothèse des Spiritismus," 1891; besides numerous less important works.

HASTINGS, Thomas Samuel, D.D., was born at Utica, N.Y., Aug. 28, 1827. He graduated at Hamilton College (Clinton, N.Y.) in 1848, and at the Union Theological Seminary (N.Y. City) in 1851. He was pastor of Presbyterian churches in Mendham, N.J., in 1852–56, and in New York City in 1856–82. He then became Professor of Sacred Rhetoric in the Union Theological Seminary, of which, in 1888, he was made the President, succeeding the late Dr. R. D. Hitchcock, who died in 1887. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by the University of the City of New York in 1865, and that of LL.D. by the College of New Jersey, 1888. In conjunction with his father he edited "Church Melodies," published in 1857.

HATTON, Joseph, born at Andover, Feb. 3, 1839, is the eldest son of the late Francis Augustus Hatton, founder of the Derbyshire Times, one of the first penny newspapers, for which his son began to write at an early age. He first came to London in 1868 to edit and reconstruct the Gentleman's Magazine, which he conducted for some years with a staff that included Tom Taylor, Shirley Brooks, Mark Lemon, "The Druid," "Luke Limner," William Jordan, Blanchard Jerrold, and other well-known writers. For many years he was the special correspondent in Europe of the New York Times. He has filled similar positions for the Sydney Morning Herald, New South Wales, and the Kreitz Zeitung in Berlin; and has intimate relations with more than one great American newspaper. His "Cigarette Papers: For After-Dinner Smoking," appear in a selection of high-class journals at home and abroad. He has written for the leading magazines, has contributed special articles to the Illustrated London News, and has been professionally associated both with the Standard and the Daily Telegraph. His "Journalistic London" shows an intimate knowledge of Press life and methods, and among the subjects he has in hand at the present time is a work entitled "Pens and Pencils of the Press." He has frequently crossed the Atlantic; once on a mission from the Standard, during which time he exploited the Irish question and described for that journal, in one of the longest messages ever despatched by cable, the assassination of President Garfield. He collaborated with the Rev. M. Harvey in the latest "History of Newfoundland," and his name is well known in the eastern seas as the author of "The New Ceylon," the pioneer volume on North Borneo; since which time, through the death of his son in those regions, he has given to the world the story and work of the young life, which is perpetuated in Borneo by the naming of a mountain near the scene of his death "Mount Hatton." Mr. Joseph Hatton is even better known as a novelist and miscellaneous writer than a journalist, though he has edited several leading papers in London and the country. His principal works in fiction are "Clytie," "Cruel London," "Three Recruits," "The Old House at Sandwich," "The Queen of Bohemia," "The Valley of Poppies," "By Order of the Czar," "The Princess Mazaroff," and "Under the Great Seal." "Clytie," which had already been translated into German, is now being prepared for publication in Swedish, following the success of "By Order of the Czar" in that language. This latter work was prohibited by the Russian censor from circulation in Russia on account of its exposure of the treatment of the Jews in the Czar's dominions. Among his miscellaneous works are "Irving's Impressions of America," "Toole's Reminiscences," "To-day in America," "Captured by Cannibals," "Old Lamps and New," "Cigarette Papers," "In Jest and Earnest," "The Gay World," "The Abbey Murder," and "John Needham's Double." A dramatic version of the latter story, with Mr. E. S. Willard in the dual rôle of John Needham and Joseph Norbury, has been played in America, as also a version of "The Scarlet Letter," under the direction of Mr. Richard Mansfield.

HATZFELDT, Count von, was born in 1831. His mother was the Countess Sophie von Hatzfeldt, the patroness and companion of Ferdinand Lassalle, the Jew philosopher and social democrat. In 1862 Count Hatzfeldt went to Paris with Prince Bismarck as one of his secretaries, and when the Foreign Office was mobilised on the outbreak of the Franco-German War he was one of the select workers who formed the Chancellor's diplomatic suite. In 1874 he was appointed Imperial Minister at Madrid. Soon after the signature of the Treaty of Berlin he was sent to Constantinople in succession to Prince Reuss, with the special object of preserving the ascendency which Germany had acquired in the Councils of the Porte. After a three years' residence at Stamboul he was recalled to Berlin to succeed Herr von Bülow as Foreign Secretary, and in Nov., 1885, he succeeded Count Münster as German Ambassador in London.

HAUR, Dr. Franz Ritter von, was born in Vienna, Jan. 30, 1822. His education was obtained partly in Vienna and partly at Chemnitz. In 1846 he was appointed to assist Haidinger at the Imperial Museum; in 1867 he became Director of the K.K. Geologischen Reichsanstalt; and, in 1885, Intendant des K. K. Naturhistorischen Hof-Museums. Besides numerous papers on geology, in the periodical publications of the Austrian Geological Survey Office and of the Vienna Academy, Dr. Haur has written several large works on geology, and is responsible for the Geological Map of the Austro-Hungarian Empire published between 1867 and 1873.

HAVELOCK, Sir Arthur Elibank, K.C.M.G., Governor of Ceylon, was born in 1844. He was President of Nevis, in 1877; Chief Civil Commissioner of the Seychelles in 1879; Governor of the West African Settlements in 1881; Governor of Trinidad, in 1884; Governor of Natal, in 1885; and has been Governor of Ceylon since 1890.

HAWEIS, The Rev. Hugh Reginald, M.A., was born at Egham, Surrey, April 3, 1838, being the son of the Rev. J. O. W. Haweis, M.A., rector of Slaughan, Sussex, and Mary Davis Haweis. He received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge. (B.A. 1859; M.A. 1864.) He was first appointed curate of St. Peter's, Bethnal Green; next, in 1863, curate of St. James-the-Less, Westminster; and, in 1866, incumbent of St. James's, Marylebone. He took great interest in the Italian Revolution under Garibaldi, and was present at the siege of Capua, where he had several narrow escapes. He afterwards published in the Argosy an account of those events and a memoir of Garibaldi; and subsequently wrote, at his request, other memoirs of his life for Cassell's Magazine. He has lectured at the Royal Institution, on violins and church-bells. He is the author of "Music and Morals," "Thoughts for the Times," "Speech in Season," "Current Coin," "Arrows in the Air," "Pet, or, Pastimes and Penalties," a book for children; "Ashes to Ashes," a cremation prelude; "American Humorists," "Homeland," a hymn; "Unsectarian Family Prayers," and "Christ and Christianity," "The Broad Church; or What is Coming?" In June, 1893, he published his "Life of Sir Morell Mackenzie." During the Chicago Exposition he visited the Parliament of Religions, and lectured at many places in the U.S.A. on "Music and Morals."

HAWKINS, Frederick, son of the late William Hamilton Hawkins, of the Times, was born in 1849, and from an early age has been connected with literature and journalism. His first work was a biography in two volumes of Edmund Kean, brought out in 1869. He assisted in establishing The Theatre, one of the few periodicals exclusively devoted to the literature and art of the stage. Begun in 1877 as a weekly newspaper, it appeared in the following year as a monthly review and magazine, and at the end of 1879 was sold by its original proprietors to Mr. Clement Scott. Mr. Hawkins had edited it from the outset. His "Annals of the French Stage from its origin to the death of Racine," came out towards the close of 1884. It was generally felt to meet a want long felt in English literature; the Athenæum expressing a "doubt whether any single French work supplied so animated, and in the main accurate, a picture of the establishment of the stage and the progress of dramatic literature in France." In 1888 Mr. Hawkins produced a continuation of the history to the Revolution period inclusive, under the title of "The French Stage in the Eighteenth Century." Mr. Hawkins acted as dramatic critic for the Times during the last illness of Mr. Oxenford, and has for some time been a member of the editorial staff of that journal.

HAWKINS, The Hon. Sir Henry, Judge of the High Court of Justice (Queen's Bench Division), son of John Hawkins, Esq., of Hitchin, Herts, by Susannah, daughter of Theed Pearse, Esq., of Bedford, was born at Hitchin, Sept. 14, 1817, and educated at Bedford School. Adopting the law as his profession, he entered the Middle Temple, and was a very diligent special pleader before his call to the Bar, in 1843. After a year or two he rapidly acquired a very large practice as a junior. He attached himself to the Old Home Circuit, and after he obtained his silk gown, in 1858, he was for many years one of its leaders. He also became a Bencher of the Middle Temple. As a junior, Mr. Hawkins was one of the Counsel (with Serjeant Byles) for Sir John Dean Paul, in 1855; and (with Mr. Edwin James) for Simon Bernard, who was tried as accessory to the conspiracy against the life of the Emperor Napoleon, in 1858. After he became a Queen's Counsel he was engaged in nearly every important case that came before the Superior Courts. He was associated with the late Lord Chief Justice Bovill in the great Roupell cases against the claims advanced upon the evidence of Mr. Roupell. In the famous convent case, "Saurin v. Star," tried in 1869, Mr. Hawkins led for the defence; and he was leading Counsel for Mr. W. H. Smith, whose seat for Westminster he successfully defended before Mr. Baron Martin. He was associated with the present Lord Coleridge in the first Tichborne trial, when he particularly distinguished himself by his exhaustive cross-examination of Mr. Baigent. In the prosecution of the Claimant for perjury, Mr. Hawkins led for the Crown, and the skill he displayed in this trial—one of the most protracted and the most remarkable in the annals of jurisprudence—greatly increased his reputation as an advocate. In the Probate Court Mr. Hawkins led the case in support of the will of the late Lord St. Leonards, which he established both before the Judge Ordinary and the Court of Appeal. The Gladstone and Von Reable cases were among his victories in the Divorce Court. Mr. Hawkins was Counsel in numerous election petitions; was engaged for many years in every important compensation case; acted for the Crown in the purchase of lands for the National Defences, for the Royal Commissioners in the purchase of the site for the new Law Courts, for the City of London, and for the Metropolitan Board of Works in the purchase of property required for the Holborn Viaduct, the Thames Embankment, and various new streets; and was Standing Counsel for, and held the general retainer of, the Jockey Club, of which he is now a member. He was appointed a Judge of the High Court of Justice (Queen's Bench Division) Nov. 3, 1876, and transferred to the Exchequer Division, when he received the honour of knighthood. He married Miss Jane Louisa Reynolds, daughter of the late Henry Francis Reynolds, Esq., of Hulme, Lancashire.

HAWLEY. Hon. Joseph Roswell, American journalist and statesman, was born at Stewartsville, North Carolina, Oct. 31, 1826. A.B. (Hamilton College), 1847. His parents were originally from Connecticut, and when he was eleven years of age they returned to that State where he studied law and began to practise in Hartford (1850), but abandoned law in 1857 for journalism, connecting himself with the Evening Press, a newly established Republican paper. When the Civil War broke out he was the first citizen of his State to volunteer, and was appointed Lieutenant and afterwards Captain in the Conn. Infantry, rising before the end of the war to the rank of Brigadier-General and brevet Major-General. In 1866 he was elected Governor of Connecticut. He served one term, to 1867, and then resumed journalism. He was a Presidential Elector and President of the Republican National Convention at Chicago in 1868; and has been a Delegate to those held in 1872, 1876, and 1880; was Member of Congress in 1873-77, and in 1879-81; President of the Centennial Commission in 1876; and since 1881 has been U.S. Senator from Connecticut, his present term expiring in 1899. He is the owner and editor of the Hartford Courant, with which the Press was consolidated in 1867.

HAWTHORNE, Julian, son of the eminent novelist, Nathaniel Hawthorne, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, June 22, 1846. He was prepared for college at Concord, Massachusetts, and entered Harvard in 1863, where he remained until 1867, but he took no degree. He then entered the Scientific School to study civil engineering, but left it to go to Germany, in Oct. 1868. He spent two years at a "Real-schule" in Dresden, still studying engineering. In the summer of 1870 he visited the United States, intending to resume his studies at Dresden in the autumn; but the Franco-German war interfered with his plans, and he joined the staff of hydrographic engineers in the New York Dock Department under Gen. McClellan, to which he remained attached until the summer of 1872. During 1871 he contributed a number of short stories and pieces to the American magazines, and they met with so much success that he determined to give up engineering for literature. He sailed for Europe in 1872, and after a short stay in England, proceeded to Dresden, where he remained two years, during which time he published in England and America his first two novels, "Bressant," 1873, and "Idolatry," 1874. In Sept. 1874 he left Dresden and settled at Twickenham, where, in 1875, he published in the Contemporary Review, and afterwards in book form in England and America, "Saxon Studies." His novel of "Garth" was issued in 1877. From 1875 until Oct. 1881 he remained in or near London, writing and publishing "The Laughing Mill," a collection of short stories previously contributed to English magazines; "Archibald Malmaison," a novelette; "Ellice Quentin," another collection of short pieces; "Prince Saroni's Wife," also a collection of tales; and "Yellow-Cap," fairy stories, none of which have appeared in America. His novel, "Sebastian Strome," was published both in England and in America in 1880; and two other novels appeared afterwards serially, "Fortune's Fool" and "Dust." In 1882 Mr. Hawthorne went to the United States, and is now residing at Sag Harbor, L.I. While in England he wrote considerably for the periodicals, and for two years was connected with the staff of the Spectator. Since 1882 have appeared "Nathaniel Hawthorne and his Wife, a Biography," and several novels and short stories. He was literary editor of the New York World in 1885. In the summer of 1889 he visited Europe in connection with a delegation of fifty American working-men, sent to examine the condition in Europe of the industries which they represented at home.

HAY, George, R.S.A., was born in Leith Walk, Edinburgh, and educated at the High Schools of Leith and Edinburgh. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1869; an Academician in 1876; and was unanimously elected to the Secretaryship of the Academy, Nov. 9, 1881, in the place of the late William Brodie, F.S.A. At an early age he showed indications of his future skill as an artist. He studied modelling in the School of Art, and drawing and painting from the antique in the Board of Trustees' Gallery of Casts. At the age of 17 he was induced to enter the architectural profession; but after some years he abandoned it for the more congenial one of the artist. Among his pictures are:—"A Barber's Shop in the time of Elizabeth," 1863; "A Street Incident in the Sixteenth Century," 1864; "The Jacobite in Hiding," 1865; "Shopping in the Sixteenth Century," 1867; "Devotional Art," 1867; "Richie Moniplies in Fleet Street," 1868; "Teatattle," 1871; "A Visit to the Spaewife," 1872; "Caleb Balderstone's Ruse," 1874, engraved; "The Haunted Room," 1875; "The Warrant," 1875; "In Days of Yore," 1877; "The Spinners," 1879; and "Secret Aid in '45," exhibited in 1881.

HAY, The Right Hon. Sir John Charles Dalrymple, Bart., K.C.B., D.C.L., F.R.S., Admiral, Vice-President of the Institution of Naval Architects, eldest son of the late Sir James Dalrymple Hay, Bart., of Park Place, Wigtownshire, by his first wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Heron Maxwell, of Springkell, Dumfriesshire, was born Feb. 11, 1821, and educated at Rugby. Entering the Navy in 1834, he served in 1835 and 1836 on the Cape of Good Hope station, where he was landed with the seamen and marines for the defence of Fort Elizabeth in the first Kaffir war, and was present at the capture of five slavers in the river Bonny, on the West Coast of Africa. He then served in the Channel Squadron on the North Coast of Spain, on the South American and Pacific station; and in 1840-41 in the operations on the Syrian coast. He was at the capture of Beyrout and of Acre, and was specially gazetted for gallantry in the boat attack on Tortosa. He then served in the East Indies and China, and was flag-lieutenant with Admiral Sir Thomas Cochrane in the operations in Borneo in 1845-46. He commanded the Wolverine and Columbine in China, and was senior officer in the operations against the pirate fleet of Chinapoo, which he destroyed with the squadron under his orders in Bias Bay, on Sept. 26, 27, 28, 1849; and with the same squadron he destroyed the fleet of Shap'ng'tzai in the Tonquin River on Oct. 20 and 21, 1849. He received the thanks of the Admiralty and his promotion for these services; and it was acknowledged by the merchants in China by thanks and a service of plate. He commanded H.M.S. Hannibal in the Black and Mediterranean Seas during the Russian war of 1854-56, and took part in the capture of Kertch and Kinburn, and in the bombardment and fall of Sebastopol. He commanded the Indus in North America and the West Indies from 1857 till 1859; was one of the Greenwich Hospital Commission in 1860-61; and Chairman of the Iron Plate Committee from 1861 till 1864. He succeeded his father as third Baronet, March 19, 1861; was elected in 1862 for Wakefield in the Conservative interest; lost his seat at the general election in July, 1865; was defeated at Tiverton the same year, and elected in May, 1866, for Stamford, which constituency he represented till the general election of April, 1880, when he was an unsuccessful candidate; but in July of that year he was returned for the Wigtown Burghs. He was made a rear-admiral, and was placed on the retired list of that rank in April, 1870. He was a Lord of the Admiralty from June, 1866, to Dec., 1868, has received three war Medals and the Medjidieh 4th class. He is the author of "The Flag List and its Prospects;" "Our Naval Defences;" "The Reward of Loyalty," being suggestions in reference to our American Colonies, 1862; a "Memorandum on his compulsory retirement from the British Navy," 1870; "Remarks on the Loss of the Captain," 1871; "Ashanti and the Gold Coast, and what we know of it; a Sketch," 1874; and "Suppression of Piracy in the China Sea," 1889. Sir John married, in 1847, the Hon. Eliza Napier, third daughter of William John, eighth Lord Napier.

HAY, John, journalist, author, and diplomatist, was born at Salem, Indiana, Oct. 8, 1838, and graduated at Brown University, 1858. He was admitted to the Bar in Springfield, Illinois, in 1861, but almost immediately went to Washington as Assistant Secretary to President Lincoln, and subsequently was his Adjutant and Aide-de-Camp. During the Civil War he served for a time under Generals Hunter and Gillmore, attaining the rank of Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General. From 1865 to 1867 he was Secretary of Legation in Paris, and from that time to 1868 was Chargé d'Affaires at Vienna. He was appointed Secretary of Legation in Madrid in 1869, where he remained until 1870, when he returned to the United States, and became one of the editors of the New York Tribune. This position he resigned in 1876, upon his removal to Cleveland, Ohio; but he has continued occasionally to contribute to its columns to the present time. During the absence of the editor, Mr. Whitelaw Reid, in Europe, from April to November, 1881, Colonel Hay returned to New York to take entire editorial charge of the Tribune. From 1879 to 1881 he was Assistant-Secretary of State. While on the Tribune he obtained considerable celebrity by his dialect poems of "Jim Bludsoe," "Little Breeches," &c.; which were afterwards published in book form under the title of "Pike County Ballads," 1871. In the same year he also issued "Castilian Days," a series of sketches of Spanish life and character. He represented the United States at the International Sanitary Congress held in Washington in 1881, and was chosen President of that body. He was subsequently engaged (in collaboration with John G. Nicolay) in writing a Life of Abraham Lincoln, which was published as a serial in the Century, from 1886 to 1890, and was printed in 1890, with extensive additions, in 10 vols. 8vo., by the Century Co. In the same year he published his collected "Poems."

HAYMAN, The Rev. Henry, D.D., was born in 1823, and entered Merchant Taylors' School in 1832, whence, after gaining the chief prizes in Greek verse and Latin prose, he proceeded as scholar to St. John's College, Oxford, in 1841. He became a Fellow of his College in 1844, and in the following year was placed in the second class both in classics and in mathematics. He then came to London, and was successively curate at St. Luke's, Old Street, and at St. James's, Piccadilly, when the late Bishop of London, Dr. Jackson, was rector, and in 1853-55 one of the assistant-masters at the Charterhouse. In 1854 he was appointed assistant preacher at the Temple Church, and in the following year head master of St. Olave's Grammar School, Southwark. Subsequently he became head master of Cheltenham Grammar School, and in 1868 of St. Andrew's College, Bradfield. When Dr. Temple was promoted to the See of Exeter, Dr. Hayman was elected his successor as head master of Rugby School, Nov. 20, 1869, a post which he retained until 1874, when Mr. Disraeli appointed Dr. Hayman to the Crown rectory of Aldingham, Lancashire, where he has since resided. Dr. Hayman's published works consist of occasional essays contributed to the Saturday Review; also to the Christian Remembrancer, and more lately to the Church Quarterly, Edinburgh, Dublin, National, Fortnightly, British Quarterly, Contemporary, and other Reviews, the Cornhill, St. James's, Temple Bar, and Clergyman's magazines, the Churchman, Antiquary, Bibliotheca Sacra (U. S. of America), and other serials; also of a volume of selections from the above, entitled "Why We Suffer, and other Essays," 1889. He is a member of the Cambridge Philological Society, and has contributed several papers to its Journal and "Transactions." He is the author of "Exercises in Greek and Latin Verse Composition;" numerous articles in the "Dictionary of the Bible," edited by Dr. W. Smith, and has since published in three volumes an edition of Homer's Odyssey; and "Rugby School Sermons," with an introductory Essay "On the Indwelling of the Holy Spirit," 1875. In 1884 he became Hon. Canon of Carlisle, and in 1885 was one of the first elected Proctors for the new archdeaconry of Furness, a post which he has since resigned.

HAYTER, Sir Arthur Divett, Bart., is the only son of the late Right Hon. Sir William Goodenough Hayter, Q.C., and was born in 1835. He was educated at Eton, and at Balliol and Brasenose Colleges, Oxford; he graduated in classical honours in 1857. In 1856 he obtained a commission in the Grenadier Guards, retiring in 1866 with the rank of captain. Sir Arthur Hayter was M.P. for Wells from 1865 till 1868, when he unsuccessfully contested East Somerset. In 1873 he was elected as member for Bath, in the Liberal interest. He succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his father in 1878. In 1880 he was appointed a Lord of the Treasury, and in May, 1882, he succeeded Mr. Campbell-Bannerman as Financial Secretary at the War Office. In 1885, and again in 1886, he stood for Bath, but was both times defeated. He, however, returned to Parliament as member for Walsall in 1893. Sir Arthur Hayter married, in 1866, Henrietta, daughter of the late Mr. Adrian John Hope, a lady who was for long one of the best-known of London hostesses, her salon being the rendezvous of leading Liberal politicians.

HAYTER, Harrison, Civil Engineer, a Vice-President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, Honorary Fellow and Associate of King's College, London, and F.G.S., was born near Falmouth, on April 10, 1825, and is the son of the late Henry Hayter, Esq., of Eden Vale, Wiltshire, and nephew of the late Right Hon. Sir William Goodenough Hayter, Bart. After receiving a classical and mathematical education, he entered (in 1840) the Applied Science Department of King's College, London, and went through the prescribed three years' curriculum with distinction. Upon leaving King's College he commenced his professional training on the Stockton and Darlington Railway (now a part of the North-Eastern system), and was afterwards engaged in the construction of the Great Northern Railway. In 1857 he joined Sir John Hawkshaw, Past President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, as his Chief Assistant, and, in 1870, he became his partner—a long professional association which was severed only by the retirement of Sir John Hawkshaw from business, at the end of 1888. During the time he was with Sir John Hawkshaw, he was engaged in the construction of the following works:—Railways: Lancashire and Yorkshire; Charing Cross and Cannon Street Lines; the East London Railway; the completion of the Inner Circle of the Metropolitan and District Lines; and the Severn Tunnel Railway, in England; the Madras; the Eastern Bengal; and the West of India; Portuguese Railways in India; and the Jamaica and Mauritius Railways in the Colonies; the Riga and Dünaburg, and Dünaburg and Witepsk Railways in Russia; and the Madrid and Portugal Direct Railway in Spain. Harbours: Holyhead, Alderney; Ymuiden (Holland); and Mormugao (India). Docks: The South Dock of the West India Docks; and Docks at Hull, Penarth, Maryport, Fleetwood, and Dover. Bridges: The Charing Cross and Cannon Street Bridges; and a bridge nearly a mile long over the river Nerbudda, in India; the Londonderry Bridge; a bridge over the Tees at Stockton-on-Tees; and the Clifton Suspension Bridge. Other works: The Amsterdam Ship Canal; the Foundations of the Spithead Forts; the Middle Level, the River Witham, and the Thames Valley Drainages; and the drainage of Brighton. The principal work he is now carrying out, in conjunction with his present partner, Mr. J. C. Hawkshaw, is the large system of Docks at Buenos Ayres, with a dredged channel fourteen miles long, the works occupying a river frontage of three miles, involving an expenditure of about £5,000,000; this being the largest dock system that has ever been carried out at one time. Besides the above works he has acted as arbitrator in many cases; has had to report on, and prepare designs for, many undertakings; and is a frequent witness before Parliamentary and other tribunals. He is the author of an account of Holyhead Harbour, of the Charing Cross Bridge, and of the Amsterdam Ship Canal, presented to the Institution of Civil Engineers, and published in their Minutes of Proceedings.

HAYTER, Henry Heylyn, C.M.G., was born in Oct., 1821, at Eden Vale, Wiltshire, and educated at a private school and at the Charterhouse. He emigrated to Victoria in 1852, and in 1857 joined the department of the Registrar-General, where he was for many years at the head of the statistical branch. Whilst in that position he brought the official statistics of Victoria to a high state of perfection. In 1870 he was selected to fill the office of secretary to a Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the working of the public service of Victoria. Mr. Hayter's labours on the Commission did not prevent him from attending to his ordinary official duties, which were much added to by the Census of 1871. These labours together with domestic losses affected his health, and in 1872 he obtained leave of absence for a short period, which he spent in New Zealand, where, at the request of the Government of that colony, he investigated the working of the Registrar-General's department. In May, 1874, the statistical branch, over which Mr. Hayter had so long presided, was erected into a separate department, he being placed at its head under the title of Government Statist. In 1875 he was deputed by his Government to represent Victoria at a conference of the Australasian Colonies held in Tasmania, for the purpose of establishing a uniform system of official statistics. In 1889 Mr. Hayter represented his Government at, and was unanimously chosen President of, an intercolonial conference, held in Tasmania, whose object was to arrange for the collection and compilation of the Census of 1891, upon a uniform principle throughout Australasia. Soon after Mr. Hayter assumed the office of Government Statist, he originated the work by which he is best known, the "Victorian Year-Book," which he has carried on for many years, and still edits. He is also author of "Notes of a Tour in New Zealand;" "Notes on the Colony of Victoria, Historical, Geographical, Meteorological, and Statistical;" "School History" and "School Geography" of Victoria; a "Nosological Index," which is used in the statistical departments of all the Australasian colonies, a volume of poems, many papers read before scientific societies in different parts of the world, and a large number of statistical reports and other official documents. In 1887 he edited, at the request of the Victorian Government, and wrote the greater part of, a "Précis of Information on the Colony of Victoria, and of its Capabilities for Defence," for the use of the Intelligence branch of the Imperial War Office. He is an Honorary Member of the Statistical Societies of London, Manchester, and Paris; of the Statistical and Social Inquiry Society of Ireland; of the Statistical Associations of Boston (United States) and Tōkiō (Japan); of the Royal Societies of South Australia and Tasmania; of the Society of Arts, London; of the Commercio-Geographical Society of Berlin; and of the Geographical Society of Bremen. He is also a Fellow and the Honorary Corresponding Secretary for Victoria of the Royal Colonial Institute; and the representative member for Victoria of the International Statistical Institute. He was created a C.M.G. May 24, 1882; an Officer of the French Order of Public Instruction on July 14 of the same year; and a Chevalier of the Order of the Crown of Italy on June 8, 1884.

HAYWARD, Charles Forster, F.S.A., architect, born at Colchester in Jan., 1831, received his education at University College, London, and professionally studied in the offices of Mr. Lewis Cubitt, Mr. P. C. Hardwick, and the late Professor Cockerell. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1861, Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in 1867, and appointed District Surveyor by the Metropolitan Board of Works in 1871. Mr. Hayward was elected Honorary Secretary of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1862, and held the appointment for many years. He was also Honorary Secretary to the Institute's Architectural Committee for the Exhibition in Paris in 1867. Mr. Hayward is the architect of the Cathedral at Zanzibar, and has erected many buildings in London and the provinces—including the Duke of Cornwall Hotel at Plymouth, the Sanatorium, the Science Schools, and other buildings for Harrow, Schoolhouses for Charterhouse, Mill Hill, &c. He is also a well-known furniture designer and art decorator. He is an occasional contributor to professional and Archæological journals, and was one of the founders of the Arts Club, Hanover Square, London.

HAYWOOD, William, Lieut.-Colonel, M.I.C.E., F.R.I.B.A., was born in Surrey in 1821, and was educated professionally in the office of Mr. George Aitcheson, Resident Architect and Surveyor to the St. Katharine's Dock Company. In 1846 he became the Engineer and Surveyor to the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London, which post he now holds. In that capacity his official duties are very varied, the Commissioners combining the functions of a Highway, Sewerage and Improvement Board, a Local Board of Health and Burial Board, and in fact controlling all the physical conditions of the City which affect the health and comfort of the inhabitants and the vast traffic within the Municipal area. In 1851, in conjunction with Mr. Frank Forster (then Engineer to the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers), he designed the main drainage and sewerage interception scheme for the northern side of the Thames; and in 1854, with Sir Joseph Bazalgette, enlarged that scheme, which has subsequently been carried out by the Metropolitan Board of Works. He constructed the City Cemetery at Ilford, the various wharves and depôts of the Commission, the Artizans' and Labourers' Dwellings within the City, and various other works. He has constructed more than half of the sewerage of the City; and to him is mainly due the introduction of asphalte carriageway pavements into England; and from his plans more than one-third of all the public ways in the City have been widened and improved. The Holborn Viaduct and approaches were carried out from his design for the Corporation of the City of London. The Viaduct was opened by her Majesty Queen Victoria in Nov., 1869. He joined the London Rifle Brigade in 1859, ultimately became its Lieut.-Colonel Commandant, and retired from his command in 1882. He is a Member of the Institute of Civil Engineers; a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and of other Scientific Societies; a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour; Knight of the Ernestine House Order; Officer of the Order of Leopold of Belgium, and Commander of the Portuguese Royal Military Order of Christ.

HAZLITT, William Carew, born Aug. 22, 1834, the eldest son of the late Mr. William Hazlitt, was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, entered the Inner Temple as a student in 1859, and was called to the Bar in Nov., 1861. But he did not follow his profession, and has either written or edited a large body of literature both on archæological and popular subjects. Mr. Hazlitt is the author of "The History of the Venetian Republic: her Rise, her Greatness, and her Civilization," 4 vols., 1860. Among the works edited by him are the poems of Henry Constable, 1859; Richard Lovelace, 1864; and Robert Herrick, 1869, 1890, 2 vols.; "Old English Jest-Books," 3 vols., 1864; "Remains of the Early Popular Poetry of England," 4 vols., 1864-6; "The Works of Charles Lamb" (anonymous), 4 vols., 1866-71; "Memoirs of William Hazlitt," 1778-1830, 2 vols., 1867; "Bibliography of Old English Literature," 1867; "English Proverbs and Proverbial Phrases, with Notes," 1869, 1882; "Popular Antiquities of Great Britain" (based on Brand and Ellis), 3 vols., 1870; an entirely new edition of Warton's "History of English Poetry," 4 vols., 1871, in which last work he had the cooperation of several eminent antiquaries; an edition of Blount's "Tenures of Land and Customs of Manors," 1874; and "Mary and Charles Lamb: Poems, Letters, and Remains; now first collected, with Reminiscences and Notes," 1874; "The Poems and other Remains of Sir John Suckling," 1874, 1892; "Dodsley's Old Plays," 15 vols., 1874-6; "Fairy Tales, Legends, and Romances, illustrating Shakespere and other Early English Writers;" "Shakespere's Library," 6 vols., and the "Works of Thomas Randolph," 1875; "Fugitive Tracts (written in verse), which illustrate the Condition of Religious and Political Feeling in England, and the State of Society there, during two centuries, 1493-1700," 2 vols., 1875; "Bibliographical Collections and Notes," three series and two supplements, 1876—82; "Poetical Recreations," "The Baron's Daughter, a Ballad," and "Essays of Montaigne," 3 vols., 1877, and 1893; "Catalogue of the Huth Library," 5 vols., 1880, &c. Mr. W. C. Hazlitt has of late years produced several works connected with his special studies in numismatics, freedom of religious thought, early English literature, and the City Livery Companies. A volume of Collected Papers in prose, originally contributed to All the Year Round, &c., appeared in 1884, and is to be reprinted, with a new and enlarged edition of the author's poems.

HEAD, Barclay Vincent, D.C.L., Ph.D., Keeper of the Department of Coins and Medals in the British Museum, was born at Ipswich in 1844, and educated at Queen Elizabeth's School in that town. He entered the British Museum in 1864. In 1868 he accepted the Hon. Secretaryship of the Numismatic Society of London, and the joint-editorship (with Sir John Evans) of the Numismatic Chronicle. In 1871, on the resignation of Mr. W. S. W. Vaux, at that time the Keeper of Coins, he was appointed Assistant-Keeper of the Coin Department in the British Museum, and shortly after this was chosen a Corresponding Member of the Imperial German Archæological Institute. In 1893, on the retirement of Prof. R. S. Poole, Dr. Head was appointed Keeper of Coins, simultaneously with the removal of the Coins and Medals into the new west wing of the Museum, and the reorganisation of the Department in its present quarters was then entrusted to him. Dr. Head has made a special study of the origin and development of the art of coinage among the ancient Greeks, and he was the first to methodise the science of Greek Numismatics by introducing a strict chronological system of classification throughout the various series of Greek coins in the National Collection, in place of the now obsolete system of arrangement according to metals. His first work on this subject, "History of the Coinage of Syracuse," 1874, was couronné by the French Institute, an honour which was on three subsequent occasions again conferred upon him for his "Coinage of Lydia and Persia," 1877; his "History of the Coinage of Bœotia," 1881; and his "Guide to the Principal Gold and Silver Coins of the Ancients," 1881. Dr. Head's most important work, entitled, "Historia Numorum," published by the Oxford University Press in 1887, is a complete illustrated historical manual of the whole science of Greek Numismatics, which will probably long remain the standard textbook on the subject. The publication of this work gained for the author the honorary degrees of D.C.L. (Durham), and Ph.D. (Heidelberg). Among Dr. Head's other works may be mentioned his volumes of the magnificently illustrated Catalogue of Greek Coins in the British Museum, which was begun in 1873, and which has now reached its 17th volume. The sections of this great work contributed by Dr. Head himself comprise the "Coinage of Macedon," 1875; of "Central Greece," 1884; of "Attica, Megaris, and Aegina," 1888; "Corinth and the Corinthian Colonies," 1889; and "Ionia," 1892. Dr. Head's minor works are his article "Numismatics," in Chambers's Encyclopædia; his "Ancient Systems of Weight," 1879; his "Young Collector's Handbook of Greek and Roman Coins," 1883; and his numerous contributions to the pages of the Numismatic Chronicle. Dr. Head also took an active part in the organisation of the "Egypt Exploration Fund," of which he was one of the original founders, and to the publications of which he was a contributor.

HEADLAM, Rev. Stewart Duckworth, was born on January 12th, 1847, at Wavertree, near Liverpool, and was educated at Wadhurst, Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He read for ordination with the Rev. Herbert James, at Livermere, Bury St. Edmunds, and with Dr. Vaughan at the Temple. He was curate of St. John's, Drury-lane, from 1870–73; St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green, from 1873–78; St. Thomas's, Charterhouse, 1880–81; St. Michael's, Shoreditch, 1881–84; and he is now Warden of the Guild of St. Matthew, and member of the London School Board for Hackney. Mr. Headlam had to resign his Bethnal Green curacy on account of a lecture on theatres and music which he delivered in a working-man's club in the parish. The lecture gave grave offence to the late Bishop of London, whose successor still refuses Mr. Headlam a licence in the diocese on account of his support of stage dancing, which the latter considers a form of high art capable of the greatest development. Mr. Headlam is founder of the "Church and Stage Guild," and has published an essay on "The Function of the Stage," besides editing part of Carlo Blasis' work on dancing, under the title of "Theatrical Dancing." He is also author of some volumes of sermons and lectures, entitled "Priestcraft and Progress," "Lessons from the Cross," "Christian Socialism," etc. He edits and writes for The Church Reformer, a monthly Christian Socialist paper. He lectures frequently for the Guild of St. Matthew, the English Land Restoration League, and the Fabian Society, and has worked hard on the London School Board in behalf of educational reform.

HEALY, Timothy Michael, M.P. for North Longford, born May 17, 1855, at Bantry, co. Cork, was educated at the Christian Brothers' School, Fermoy. In Oct., 1880, he was arrested for a speech at Bantry, and indicted under the Whiteboy Acts; and the following month was elected unopposed for Wexford Borough; and in Dec. was tried and acquitted. During the passing of the Land Act in 1881 he carried several important amendments to that measure, the "Healy Clause" enacting that no rent shall be allowed to the landlord on the tenant's improvements. In Nov., 1881, he attended, with Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., the Land League Convention of America, at Chicago, which voted £50,000 to assist the Irish movement. He returned to London in March, 1882, having spoken for the League in all the principal American cities. In Jan., 1883, he was cited before the Queen's Bench, Dublin, for a public speech, and having refused to give bail to be of good behaviour, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment, but released at the end of four months. In June, 1883, he resigned his seat for Wexford, and was elected for Co. Monaghan. In Nov., 1884, he was called to the Irish Bar. Mr. Healy published in 1881 some works on the Land Act, and afterwards two pamphlets: "Loyalty plus Murder," an exposure of Orange methods, and "A Word for Ireland," being a history of the Irish Question. In Nov., 1885, he was elected for North Monaghan and also for South Derry, and sat for the latter after the rejection of the Home Rule Bill. He was defeated in South Derry in July, 1886, but in Feb., 1887, was re-elected for North Longford. He was one of the "accused persons" charged before the Special Commission, 1888-90. In December, 1890, he took a leading part against Mr. Parnell, and was one of the founders of the Dublin National Press newspaper (the organ of the Irish Party), which was amalgamated with the Freeman's Journal on that paper adopting the policy of the majority of Irish Members in March, 1892. He married, in 1882, Erina Kate, daughter of T. D. Sullivan, M.P.
